Mr. Wright: If the Court please, do you wish us to proceed with the opening statement? I had understood there was a motion. I did not know whether that was to be disposed of first.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, we cannot hear a word you say. It may be important at some stage of the case to hear you clearly.

Mr. Sherman: If your Honors please, and with Mr. Wright's permission, I represent the American Civil Liberties Union. On its behalf, I ask for an order granting leave to intervene in this case for the purpose of presenting argument and the filing of briefs as amicis curiae at a time to be fixed by this court following the close of the evidence in the trial herein.

The pivotal issues of this case relate to an extraordinary medium of theatrical art and communications in the form of motion pictures. They are, therefore, of paramount sociological importance and vitally affect the constitutional rights and interests of the general public. Accordingly, I respectfully submit that the American Civil Liberties Union, as representative of the general public, should be granted an opportunity to be heard on the merits.

Mr. Robert L. Wright of the Department of Justice has already indicated his consent to the granting of this motion. (4)

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I was waiting to hear whether the Government had anything to say on this motion. If it has not, on behalf of the defendants and all the defendants, we object to any such intervention. We take for granted, and we think we may safely take for granted, that the public interest is adequately represented by the Department of Justice.

With great respect to the Civil Liberties Union, which I understand is a body of worthy gentlemen, whose intent is to protect the constitutional rights of those who have no other advocate, I suggest to the Civil Liberties Union that they had better devote their energies to their main purpose instead of standing forward as a substitute or auxiliary in a Government suit such as this.

Judge Hand: We will reserve decision on this motion.

Mr. Caskey: On behalf of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, we wish to file a preliminary brief, in answer to the brief which the Government submitted on September 20th. I ask leave to hand it up.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Seymour: I also have a short preliminary memorandum on behalf of the Paramount defendants which has been handed to the Government, and I would like to file it.

(5)

Judge Hand: All right. Mr. Wright.

THE GOVERNMENT'S OPENING.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, this suit is the twelfth in a series of fifteen cases brought by the United States against the major motion picture companies, charging them with violations of the antitrust laws. All of these suits were filed during the period from 1928 through 1939. This was filed in 1938.

It charges that five integrated groups of corporations engaged in production, distribution and exhibition of films, exercise arbitrary control over the entire industry through agreements with each other and with the other major distributors, and that each of these producer-distributor-exhibitor combinations is illegal in and of itself.

The other Federal suits that were filed before and after this one dealt with specific film distribution abuses practiced on a national scale, or with local exhibitors in particular localities.

This suit is the first and only one of the series which attacked the legality of the basic nation-wide control over the production, distribution and exhibition of films which the five principal film distributors enjoy through their ownership of the five largest theatre circuits in the country.

The determination of the issue of the legality of that control was postponed in 1940 when these five theatre owning distributors, known in the trade as Fox, Loew, Paramount, R.K.O. and Warner, respectively, consented to the entry of a decree against them in this case which went into effect for a three-year trial period. That decree set up a nationwide arbitration system to handle trade practice complaints brought by small exhibitors. It left these defendants in control of their theatres, with the proviso that they should not engage in a general program of expanding their theatre holdings during this period, and that the Government would not press its demand for the dissolution of these integrated units during the same period.

At the end of the three-year period the defendants' control——

Judge Hand: What do you mean by the integrated units?

Mr. Wright: The five companies, combinations referred to in the complaint as producer-exhibitors—Fox, Loew, Paramount, R.K.O. and Warner.

At the end of this period the defendants' control over all three phases of the business remained substantially untouched by the relief granted in the consent decree. There were prolonged negotiations for a new decree, which broke down over this theatre divorcement issue, and that issue is now again before the court for disposition, together with (7) the issue as to what injunctive provisions are necessary to give relief against such specific practices by or of the distributor defendants—that is, including Columbia, United Artists and Universal, which do not own theatres—such practices as the court may find to be illegal.

The amended complaint filed in 1940 and the trial brief filed by us last month, I think sufficiently describe the practices that are brought into question, and the existing combinations that are alleged to be illegal per see, and the general theory of the plaintiff's case.

All that I shall attempt to do here is to outline the proof that plaintiff will offer and the general plan of procedure that will follow in offering it.

Now first, let me say that the plan tentatively announced last J[illegible]t the pre-trial hearing, of presenting the Government's case in documentary form, will be followed. We shall not call any complaining witnesses as part of our prima facie case, although it may be necessary in some instances to call a witness to identify and describe certain tabulated material if its anthenticity is disputed by the defendants. However, the major part of our case will consist of documents prepared by the defendants themselves for the purpose of this case, or documents kept in their files in the ordinary course of their business; and, of course, as to those documents the only question for the court as to admissibility is relevancy and materiality.

This method of presentation has been made possible by very comprehensive use of discovery procedure, supplemented by information voluntarily supplied by the defendants and their counsel. As the court was previously advised by letter, we supplied counsel for the defendants on September 1st with a list of identified documents on which we would rely. I believe the court already has mimeographed copies of that list which were furnished at that time; and I should like to now submit a printed copy, which is a copy of the mimeographed list with some supplementary material added, and which also has——

Judge Hand: Haven't we got those?

Mr. Wright: You had that before in mimeographed form only.

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Wright: This contains in addition to what was in the mimeographed copy a table of contents at the beginning, and also an index at the end; and then beginning at page 111 we added a supplemental list of data which was identified after the September 1st list was served, and that supplemental list of documents appears at pages 111 through 116, and the index is found at page 117, at the end.

Now you will note that that list carries a detailed description of each identified document opposite the exhibit number for identification listed largely in numerical order. However, I think the table of contents and the index alone are sufficient to indicate the general character of this documentary proof and its general relevance to the issues that are raised.

We shall offer first the interrogatory answers of the defendants which were filed in 1939, as supplemented by further answers and admissions of fact filed in 1946. The 1939 answers give a detailed account of the corporate structure of the defendants, their principal stockholders and creditors, and the corporations in which they own stock interests; and answers of this type are grouped generally under the heading "Organization" in this list of exhibits. They also contain data as to the corporate history of each of these defendants, which is listed in the interrogatory answers and in this list under the general heading "History."

At that time they also supplied data on their production activities designed to show the extent to which production talent of various kinds and equipment was interchanged among the defendants, and the extent and character of the physical production facilities that were possessed by each. Those are contained in answers grouped under the general heading "Production."

Then under the heading "Distribution" each defendant (10) supplied data as to each feature picture released by it during the 1936-1937 season, which was the last full motion picture season preceding the filing of the suit. That data shows the national gross film rental received for each feature released and the total number of domestic exhibitions for each feature.

The individual film rentals paid for these features by all of the theatres in selected cities—New York, Philadelphia, Kansas City and Atlanta—is also found in these answers, together with the actual dates that the pictures played. Those four cities were selected to give a variety of so-called metropolitan areas from the standpoint of both size and location, and to cover areas of which one or more of the major distributors have held a dominant theatre owning position.

Thus, in New York, the prior run theatres are principally controlled by R.K.O. and Loew. In Philadelphia they are controlled by Warner; in Kansas City by Fox; in Atlanta by Paramount. So that the four cities cover the activities of the five producer-exhibitor groups.

These answers also contain a detailed statement of the names and locations and seating capacities of all the theatres in which each of the defendants had a financial interest, and those in which they had pooled interests with other defendants or outsiders.

In the four cities just referred to, information was also furnished as to the particular runs—that is, the playing positions—of the affiliated theatres in those areas. By "affiliated theatres" I mean those in which one or more of the producer-exhibitor defendants had a financial interest.

And the data in those interrogatories also shows the extent to which the pictures of each other and of the other distributors were used in these theatres, together with data as to the admission prices charged, the program policies, and the clearance provisions which were applicable to those theatres.

The principal purpose of that detailed information in those four cities was to show the pattern of feature film distribution in metropolitan centers where the defendants operate theatres, in full detail.

I have some charts here which give a better picture of the kind of information that is contained in those detailed answers than I can supply orally; and if the court will take time to examine them, I think an understanding of this data will be helpful.

Mr. Proskauer: May we inquire what is being tendered to the court?

Mr. Wright: There are copies which will be given each of you.

(11-A)

I think you have before you a chart headed, "The Record of Exhibition of Warner Brothers The Singing Marine" in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. That is a chart which was prepared from data in these interrogatory answers which is intended to give a picture of the manner in which films are played off in a metropolitan area of that kind.

On this chart, for the purpose of locating the various theatres, you can see that the city has been divided into nine areas, which are shown on the map at the bottom of the fourth column, and it has a letter designation for each area, beginning with South Philadelphia in the first column, then downtown, which I think in Philadelphia is referred to as the central city, and then the various suburban areas in the town.

We have attempted to show the approximate size of the theatres involved by the length of the bar which bears the theatre's name. The depth of the bar indicates the period of time during which the picture was played, and you will see the dates in the lefthand column show the time of the year; and each weekly interval is broken by these double lines, which indicate Saturdays and Sundays. Those days have a special significance in this business because they are the preferred days of the week and exhibition on those days generally means as much in terms of gross revenue as the rest of the week together.

Down in the lefthand corner of these blocks you will find the film rental paid by the theatre and in the righthand corner the evening adult admission price appears. The shading on the blocks indicates affiliation or non-affiliation, that is, those which are shaded are all theatres of Warner and those which are unshaded are the theatres of independent opposition.

This pattern of distribution in the town, that is shown for this one picture here, is fairly characteristic of the exhibition of all pictures in that normally you have an exclusive first-run in the area in a downtown theatre, such as you have here of the Fox, for a substantial period of time, usually a week or more, and then the continuation of the exhibition, perhaps, in another theatre in what is termed a move-over or continued first-run. Then when the film, after an interval of usually three weeks from the conclusion of the first-run in Philadelphia, moves into the neighborhood theatres, you find the so-called key theatres in each of the neighborhoods playing the film simultaneously. And then it moves on into the remaining theatres in the neighborhood, usually with an interval elapsing between each of the ensuing runs.

Of course, these intervals that appear on here are not haphazard. Those are fixed by the clearance provisions in the licenses which the distributor makes with the owner of the prior run theatres.

The admission prices, of course, are also regulated to the extent that a minimum is usually provided in the license agreement. Of course, the film rental that any of these theatres can pay is dependent on the length of time that the picture plays, and the seating capacity, and the admission price charged by the theatre, and you will note from the chart that the admission price is very generally a function of the playing position, that is, the first-run house that has the earliest exclusive run charges the highest price, and the prices decrease as the freshness of the film decreases.

And you will note from this that, in terms of film rental, the first-run pays many times what the next succeeding runs pay and that, under this system of distribution, your total film rental that comes out of the area—total film revenue—is largely concentrated in the early runs of the film.

Judge Hand: Is this film something produced by Warner or by any of the people?

Mr. Wright: This film happens to be one that was produced by Warner, that is to say, "The Singing Marine," and, of course, in the case of a Warner film, you will have a higher concentration of film revenue in the Warner theatres than you would in the case of any other distributors, but the general pattern remains the same.

For the purpose of comparison, I have another chart here of the RKO film of "Shall We Dance?" which was also a generally high-grossing picture, and you can see that there are differences in the particular theatres which play, although substantially the same general pattern of prior run exhibition (15) in the Warner houses is maintained. You have your downtown first-run there in the Stanley; then what is known as a move-over or continuation of the run in the Carlton; and then it moves into the Earl for another five or six days; and then goes out into the neighborhood first-runs which play the film——

Judge Hand: This "Shall We Dance?" starts in a Warner theatre?

Mr. Wright: Yes. Again, all of the shaded theatres there are Warner theatres, and the white, the unshaded, theatres are independent. And you will note the same general pattern occurs, in that your admission prices constantly become less, the playing time in the particular theatre, that is the length of the run, becomes less and, of course, the film rentals also become less. So that you have a similar concentration of revenue in your early runs, and again those intervals of runs are fixed by the clearance and run provisions of the license agreements which the exhibitor, in this case RKO, made with Warner as a theatre operator.

We have a number of these charts but none of them is really evidentiary material; that is, the evidence is really contained in the interrogatory and will be tabulated, but I merely offer these for purposes of illustration.

There is one other, I think, for Philadelphia that might be of interest to the Court, which shows what happens to 16 a film which is not a first class box office attraction, that is, a low-grossing film.

I remember in the argument of the Goldman case, one of the judges wanted to know what happened to a film in Philadelphia that did not get a first-run in one of the downtown theatres. Well, the answer given was that it always gets a first-run somewhere, which is true, but this shows that where your film gets its first run, not in a downtown house, but in the neighborhood, such as here, of course, the possibilities of realizing film rental almost vanish. For example, this particular film, which was a low-grossing film nationally, not a good box office attraction, found its first run in this neighborhood house, which paid a rental of $250 as compared with the five or six or eight thousand dollars paid by those first runs in the downtown houses.

And then, of course, it did not have the benefit of the first-run clearance that your downtown houses have and simply went into the remaining neighborhood theatres at extremely low rentals, so that the performance in town was comparatively negligible in terms of box office return and film rental return to the distributor, which in this case happened to be Universal.

These contrasting charts merely illustrate the importance of first-run playing time in the downtown first-run (17) theatres. You see, those downtown theatres play films for periods of anywhere from a week to five or six weeks, with the result that they use a comparatively small number of films each year and there are always more films available for exhibition than there is available playing time in your downtown first-run houses, with the result that a selection has to be made by the first-run exhibitor as to which films get into the downtown houses and which are sloughed off into the neighborhood theatre, such as this one does.

Of course, the effect of this system of release is to make the position of the first-run exhibitor in an area of this kind of extreme importance in determining the success or failure of the films that come into the town.

Mr. Proskauer: Would your Honors permit me to ask Mr. Wright to speak louder so that we may hear him a little better? We have, really, very great difficulty in following him.

Judge Hand: Yes, speak louder.

Mr. Wright: I will do the best I can. Perhaps if I face this way a bit it might help.

Mr. Caskey: Thank you.

Mr. Wright: This same pattern that is illustrated by those charts generally prevails down through smaller communities, the main difference being that you do not, of course, have as many theatres and you do not have as (18) many simultaneous runs in your neighborhood houses, but you still have your first-run downtown and then a second or third. In the case of Kansas City, one of the other towns studied, I believe both the second and third-runs are exclusive.

We have a chart for Kansas City here which will show the essential difference.

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright, who suffers if one of these films does not get into the downtown theatre?

Mr. Wright: Why, I don't suppose anyone suffers but—principally—but the distributor. In the most cases, they are films which are not as good, not as generally attractive to the public, although, of course, there is no way we can evaluate. In this case we cannot attempt any evaluation of these films in any other terms than what they actually produce at the box office. There are no standards, I think, by which any of us can judge them accurately esthetically and, of course, what they do at the box office is inextricably wound up with what happens to them in these situations.

Judge Hand: The person that would suffer in these Philadelphia cases would be Warner, if the film, did not get a good run, I mean in a downtown theatre?

Mr. Wright: No, Warner, of course, is in a position to take care of its own films very nicely by control of the downtown in the first two or three runs in the town. I don't (19) think that Warner has any problem in Philadelphia. The distributor who faces the difficulty there is principally the distributor who has no theatre interests of his own, is in no position to exchange reciprocal advantages with Warner.

Judge Hand: If he wants to put some other film on of his own.

Mr. Wright: I think perhaps your Honor may be confusing the terms distributor and exhibitor. The distributor is the party who rents the film for exhibition; the exhibitor is the person who operates the theatres and pays the distributor the film rental.

Of course, as far as Philadelphia is concerned, Warner is in the dual position of exhibitor, which controls the prior-run theatres, and a distributor which, of course, distributes many first-run films.

Judge Hand: That is what puzzled me.

Mr. Wright: Well, that is a characteristic situation in the great majority of the metropolitan centers of the country, that is, one or more of these producer-exhibitor combinations does have operating control of the prior-run theatres and, of course, also distributes films in the area as a distributor and, of course, the essentially monopolistic character of the arrangement, in so far as the distributors are concerned, that is, your non-theatre-owning distributors, is the arbitrary ability that that situation gives to the producer-exhibitors to exclude the films of the non-theatre-owning distributor, to favor the films of each in so far as——

Judge Hand: That is the injury or the principal injury or one of the principal injuries that you are talking about——

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand:—that the independent cannot get in his film?

Mr. Wright: Well, he gets it in only to the extent that he is able to make an adjustment with his producer-exhibitor competitor and if he lets him in, to the extent that he lets him in, he has a right; if he chooses to exclude him, he is out.

That is, of course, only one aspect of the kind of exclusion that we are dealing with. In so far as the independent exhibitor in the town is concerned, his playing position of his theatre, that is, the kind of theatre he can determine, or kind of theatre he can operate, is, in large part, a product of the agreements that the distributors make with him—in Philadelphia, Warner, for example, that is a producer-exhibitor, operating theatres there—because his playing position is dependent upon such clearance and other run terms as any distributor makes in his agreements with Warner as a theatre operator. And he finds himself frequently excluded, as these charts indicate, from the prior, earlier runs which are the lucrative part of the exhibition business as well as the most lucrative part of the distribution end.

There is another aspect of the producer-exhibitor's control over the independent theatre operator situation, which we have emphasized in the brief there, and that is the fact that his admission prices are also controlled by the agreements that are made by him with the distributor whose films he licenses and also by the agreements which the same distributor makes with Warner because, in fixing his playing time, if he has to play, let us say, seven days or fourteen days behind a Warner house, which is charging 25 cents or 30 cents, that, if course, puts an automatic ceiling on the price he can charge because he cannot get more and probably not as much for a later exhibition of the film in the same area as Warner has gotten for the prior exhibition. So, the maximum price restriction in his contract, simply virtually puts him at a fixed admission price level, and your whole price structure, your admission price structure, in any particular area is, of course, closely geared to the run and clearance structure which, in turn, is determined by your license agreements between all the distributors and the operators of the prior-run theatres.

As I say, the pattern, of course, varies from city to city but I think you will see that on this—you have there the record of exhibition of "Road to Glory" of Twentieth Century-Fox in Kansas City?—you will note there, of course, you have your long first-run downtown of a week or more, then you have a considerably greater interval before the second-run. In that case there is, I believe, a 39-day lapse between the time it went into the Plaza for a second-run and then to the Appollo for a third-run, and then, about four weeks later, the film went into the independent houses.

Again, generally speaking, as the size of the town decreases the length of the clearance of the first-run over the succeeding runs tends to increase and that is illustrated by what happens at Atlanta.

That is a chart of two pictures that were placed on one chart. There is no attempt there to divide the town into areas. You will note that the chart, on the right, is one of a popular picture which had its first run for a week in the Grand Theatre, an affiliated theatre there, paying a rental of $3000-odd and then, on the second-run, an independent house paid film rental of $75 and there was an interval of clearance there between the first and second run of a little more than 60 days.

Judge Bright: That $3190 is a fixed rental or percentage?

obviously one which was determined on a percentage basis, and the majority of your first-run film rentals will be computed that way.

And in the Atlanta situation the only affiliated houses are the first-run theatres there, that is, they control no other runs, but in terms of what comes out of the town, even though they have only one run, the first run in that town, the tabulations of the figures for all the theatres and all the features show that they still took out of Atlanta about 70 per cent of the total film rental that came out of the town—came out of the first-run theatres which were in affiliated hands. Generally speaking, you get about the same figure for all these towns in which the producer-exhibitor defendants operate theatres. The same would be true of Philadelphia, Kansas City and New York, somewhere between 65 and 70 per cent of the total rental coming out of the area will go through the affiliated houses.

Of course, in each case the control of that much rental, the larger the city the more of the earlier runs that you have to control in the form of theatre operations but, as is shown here, even a city as large as Atlanta, it is possible to control 70 per cent of the film rental in the town simply by the operation of the first-run theatres alone.

True, of course, the use of your clearance provisions is (24) as shown. In this case you have a 60-day clearance before any of the independent theatres in town can show the film. The result is there is very little value in the films when they get them.

As I say, we obtained in the '39 interrogatories very elaborate data of this character covering all the runs of the particular features in these five selected cities, but on the basis of that experience we found that you could account for the great majority of the film rental in these towns by merely either first-run, in the case of smaller towns, or first and second in slightly larger ones, or perhaps the first five in the large centers, such as New York. So that in securing additional information this year, in preparation for the trial of the case, we sought to cover the last motion picture season preceding the trial, which was the 1943-1944 season. I don't know whether I mentioned it, but a motion picture season ordinarily begins at September 1 and lasts for a year. In covering that season for the trial, we served additional interrogatories, in which we attempted to cover all the cities over 25,000 population. We got four selected features, one from each of these distributors, the first-run rentals in all towns over that size, then in cities over 50,000, the first and second-runs; in cities over 200,000, the first, second and third runs; and in Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit and Los (25)
Angeles and in each of the five boroughs of New York City, we picked up the first five, or the first four runs.

Then, instead of using a city by city comparison, we got the national gross rentals for each of these pictures for the 1943-1944 seasons broken down by exchange areas. There are about 31 or 32 of those in the country for each distributor. So that we were able to make comparisons between the total revenue that came out of the prior runs in these cities of more than 25,000 with the total revenue and the total number of exhibitions in the areas in question.

Now, of course, we are able to make comparisons as to the first-runs with the 1936-1937 data, and I think the results may be generalized by saying that at least as much of a concentration of revenue in prior affiliated runs occurred then as before the suit was filed, if not more. For example, if you chart these early runs for which we got data on the 1943-1944 season, here is what the Warner picture for that season in Philadelphia looks like.

This trial is limited to the first four runs, because that was all the data we got in the 1943-1944 answers, but you can see by running the film at the Mastbaum, which appears to be misspelled on there—it is spelled with one "u" in it—for a period of almost six weeks, a very large theatre which had formerly been closed but was reopened, a $35,000 film rental was realized, which was about thirty times as much as it got in any of those succeeding neighborhood runs, which are, of course, much the same as they were during the prior season.

For comparative purposes we made a 1943-1944 chart of Kansas City and Atlanta. I believe you have there the record of exhibition of a picture released by Loew's, "As Thousands Cheer", in Kansas City. In that case, in the Kansas City chart, on Loew's, you will note—

Mr. Caskey: Just wait a minute, Mr. Wright. We don't see, to be furnished with what you are talking about.

Mr. Wright: I think you are one chart behind.

Judge Hand: You said Loew's Kansas City, didn't you?

Mr. Wright: Yes, "Record of Exhibition of Loew's 'As Thousands Cheer', Kansas City, Missouri."

Judge Bright: You may have one in Philadelphia and one in Kansas City.

Mr. Wright: I am sorry our number system seems to have gone wrong. But you have there the "Record of Loew's 'As Thousands Cheer' in Atlanta, Georgia"?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: No.

Judge Bright: And in Philadelphia.

Mr. Wright: The Philadelphia chart shows I think substantially the same pattern as the chart for the Warner picture there. You have a long first-run in the Stanley with about $35,000 rental, in this case ten or twelve times as much as what was paid by the neighborhood runs, and in this case you have a first-run in Germantown by an independent theatre, the Erlanger, playing simultaneously or what is called day and day with the Warner Brothers Orpheum Theatre, but otherwise substantially the same pattern as in the case of the Warner picture.

And I think you also have there the same picture, Loew's "As Thousands Cheer," in Atlanta. There you will note again that it has its first-run in an affiliated house for more than a week, then a move-over at what is called the Grove Theatre there, and after a lapse of about sixty days goes into a second-run at the Independent Plaza, and at the affiliated Gordon again with your first and move-over run rental totaling about a thousand dollars, and your second-run paying $425 and $280—I should not have said a thousand; I should have said $10,000 for the first-run and move-over, and a (28) total of about $700 for your second-run.

Of course, we again obtained for the 1943-1944 season total revenues of each of the things that the distributor defendants released during that season, and for comparative purposes we set up in a table called Appendix A of the trial brief at page 35—you have our trial brief there, by the way?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: If you will turn to page 35, if the court please, you will see a tabulation at the bottom of the page for the 1936-1937 season which gives the various numbers of features released by the defendants classified in accordance with total gross returns from all domestic theatres, and you will notice there that for the most part less than fifty per cent grossed more than $500,000.

Now if you will turn over to page 36, at the top of the page is a similar tabulation for the 1943-1944 season, in which you will see that the total number of features released by most of the defendants is substantially less, but the number in the higher grossing brackets substantially increased, so that the net result of the change during the period was that you had an even greater concentration of revenue in relatively few features than you had before, although even in the 1936-1937 season it was true that perhaps half of the total film rental you get from all your features would come from less than twenty-five per cent, those in the higher grossing bracket.

So the effect of your whole system of release is one which tends to concentrate film rental in a relatively small number of features, and again to concentrate the returns in your prior runs in metropolitan communities. These selected cities, for example, New York, I think contributed 12 or 13 per cent of the total revenue that came out of the United States—considerably more, of course, than its population proportion would suggest; and the same thing is true of Philadelphia and down the line.

Judge Hand: Now, in Philadelphia, does Warner own these downtown theatres, as you call them?

Mr. Wright: Yes, own or lease. That is, they operate them.

Judge Hand: Yes?

Mr. Wright: Yes, with the exception of, I think you will find, the Arcadia on one chart, a downtown theatre which is in independent hands, but which plays on a second-run basis.

Judge Hand: In that way they determine what films may be shown at them?

Mr. Wright: Yes. They, of course, control the program policy of the theatres.

Judge Hand: Whether they are their own or somebody else's?

Mr. Wright: That is right, your Honor. Now, in order to demonstrate the stability of the prior run preference that the defendants exchange among themselves in the metropolitan theatres—in the metropolitan centers where they operate theatres, we obtained additional data in 1945 in the form of admissions of fact which show the first-run distribution of the theatres released by all of the defendant distributors during four selected seasons in the 92 cities with populations of more than 100,000. The seasons selected were the 1936-1937 season, which was the last full season before the suit was filed; the 1939-1940 season, which was the last full season before the decree was entered; the 1941-1942 season, which was the first season in which the new method of selling provided by the degree was used—that is, in that season sales in small blocks were used instead of in season groups as in prior years; and the 1943-1944 season, which is the last one before the trial.

Now the information that is contained in those admissions has been summarized at pages 17 to 19 of the trial brief. You will find that in tabular form. That is the brief itself, not the appendix.

Now that table of tabular material which you see at pages

17, 18 and 19, I do not think is quite adequately explained in the brief itself. The cities in the lefthand column are the 73 cities which we claim in our complaint were those in which the defendants had theatre operating monopolies and are listed in the descending order of size. The names at the head of the column will be each of the defendants as a distributor. That is, in the column opposite "Chicago," for example, the Warner films had their first-run in Paramount Theatres; the Fox films in the first-run theatres of Paramount; Paramount in Paramount; Loew in Paramount; RKO in RKO; United Artists in Paramount; Universal in RKO; Columbia in Paramount, and so forth. The footnotes are also misplaced in that column. The number 6 should be up above where it is after the words "Fox & Independent." Where we have the symbol "&" it means that first-run pictures were split. Then the footnote 7 should be one space above where it is, and where we have a dash it indicates that the first-run theatres were pooled between the exhibitors named. That is, they are operated under a common management arrangement.

Judge Bright: Well, what is a first-run theatre?

Mr. Wright: What is a first-run theatre, of course, is determined as a matter of agreement by the licensing agreements that are made with it, by the distributors' pictures (32) which it shows. That is, the agreement between the operator——

Judge Bright: Does the distributor determine which is the first-run theatre?

Mr. Wright: For his particular pictures, yes, he makes of course agreements with whatever exhibitor he deals with to show his pictures first-run in the town.

Judge Bright: Does some higher authority than the distributor determine which is first-run?

Mr. Wright: Nobody does it alone. It is only done by agreement between the distributor and the operator of the theatre that is used as his first-run outlet. That is, the thing that gives the theatre a first-run status is, of course, an express agreement between the theatre owner and the distributor that the exhibitor in that area will have the first and exclusive showing of the picture in that particular area, with a specified clearance over the subsequent exhibition of the film in other theatres in the area. That, of course, is always a matter of express agreement between the distributor licensing the film and the first-run theatre operator.

Judge Bright: Is there anybody over the distributor who determines which are the first-run theatres?

Mr. Wright: Well, if you mean any administrative or (33) other trade authority, no. They are determined by agreement between the distributor and the first-run theatre operator.

Now of course under your system of distribution here, the status of your theatre as a first, second, subsequent run, is a function of the agreements that are made between the distributors whose pictures are played there and the owner or the operator of the theatre, in every case. And your first-run exhibitor, however, exercises a substantial control over the other operators in the town because the agreement he makes with the distributors, which gives his first-run status, also controls the terms under which the picture is going to be made available to subsequent run competitors.

As I say, we obtained this data of first-run distribution which is reflected in these tables for the 1943-1944 season for four seasons covering that period from 1936-1937 through 1943-1944, and it will appear from an examination of that data that there was a considerable degree of stability in this first-run distribution pattern. There were some changes during the period but not very many, and the net effect of the bringing of the suit, of course, and the decree did to some extent loosen the control of the major producers as demonstrated by that pattern, but it left it essentially and substantially the same in 1943-1944 as it was in 1936-1937.

Now we think the interrogatory answers and the admissions of fact that are described, give a very comprehensive picture of the extent of the actual control of the domestic film market exercised by the first producer-exhibitor defendants. That, however, is of course only a part of o[illegible]ase, which is concerned with the quality of that control as well as its quantity.

Now in order to show the quality or character of the control, we shall offer the various forms of agreement under which and by which it is maintained. Of course of primary importance are the printed forms of license under which the films of all the defendant distributors are generally made available for exhibition in theatres. Those are the agreements which fix the terms I have just discussed with your Honors.

Now we have printed a set of those sample forms in this Appendix B. We took the feature form that each distributor used for the 1935-1937 season and printed it in full. The principal reason for doing that is that they cannot be read otherwise. These agreements are one-page agreements in which the back page is covered with type much finer than you will find in the ordinary insurance policy. It takes about 25 of these pages to print one of those.

Now we took one form for each distributor for that 1936-1937. and printed it in full here; and then we also took a sample form for the 1943-1944 season, and instead of printing it in full just printed a summary indicating changes, if any, from the former 1936-1937 agreement; and then we also added in this appendix, in addition to the table of contents, a schedule of similar provisions showing where they will be found in the appendix.

Now we have provided an analysis of those forms at pages 9 to 12 of the trial brief, and I am not going to attempt to repeat that analysis here, except to point out that there have not been any substantial changes in the basic provisions of these forms concerning run, clearance and minimum admission price-fixing during this period, and, of course, those are the provisions by which the extensive control of film revenue that I have just been referring to, and illustrated in these charts, is maintained.

We will also supplement these general forms of agreement with specific examples of executed agreements under which the defendants, distributors, have licensed their films in the so called affiliated or producer-exhibitors' theatres. Some of these have been summarized in Appendix A of the trial brief, but we shall offer additional agreements covering similar situations for both the 1936-1937 and 1943-1944 seasons, so (36) that the court will have a basis for determining or for comparing agreements of that character for those two seasons.

In general, we believe that a comparison will show that their courser has been a tendency on the part of the defendants since the filing of this suit, to be somewhat less explicit in the later agreements as to the minimum admission price fixing and in the clearance restrictions, but essentially they are similar to the earlier agreements and contain the same profit-sharing features and privileges which tend to give each of these defendants vested interests in promoting the business of these affiliated theatres as against independent opposition.

Now the extent of what we call cross-licensing among these defendants is, we think, well covered by the admissions of fact, and the only purpose of these representative agreements is to indicate the general character of the agreements by which the cross-licensing pattern is established and made effective.

We have also covered the extent of the use of express clearance and minimum admission price provisions in the licenses among the defendants in the answers we got to the 1945 interrogatories.

Interrogatory 6, for example, asked them to set forth such provisions which had been expressly incorporated in their (37) license agreements that they made in all the towns of over 25,000 population for the 1943-1944 season. So it will be unnecessary, of course, to introduce the agreements themselves for that purpose. And interrogatory No. 48, I believe, of the 1939 answers, gives similar clearance data in interrogatory form for the four selected cities of the 1936-1937 seasons for comparative purposes.

Now in addition to that license agreement material, we will also offer agreements now in effect or recently terminated between the defendants with respect to the operation of theatres owned by one and operated by another, under which there is generally a profit-sharing arrangement. In this case we expect to offer agreements in substantially all possible combinations of two or more producer-exhibitor defendants, whereby either one leases a theatre to another or else they operate all the theatres in a certain situation through a corporation in which they each own stock interest, or where they simply have an agreement where they pool the operating policies and profits of the theatres in a particular area.

Now we have also, of course, shown in the admissions of fact, the situations in which the films released by one or more of the defendants are split between the theatres operated by two or more upon an arbitrary basis, which amounts to a pooling of the product rather than a pooling of the (38) theatre operations or pooling the profits. Of course agreements of that kind are not significant in themselves except as evidence of an intention of the producer-exhibitor defendants to operate upon a non-competitive basis vis-a-vis each other. Of course in any event, the profit-sharing provisions of their film licenses make competition between them for each others films without point.

Now the interrogatory answers and admissions of fact are largely limited to data as to the extent and character of these defendants' control in towns over 25,000 population. Of course they do operate in several hundred towns of smaller size; and in order to complete the picture of their control of theatre operations, we had the Federal Bureau of Investigation make a survey this summer of approximately five hundred of these smaller towns in which the defendants operate theatres, primarily to determine in which of those towns they owned or operated all of the theatres, those in which they owned or operated all of the first-run theatres, and the number of theatres which were being kept closed in those towns.

This data, together with the additional information as to the general character of those theatres in the towns, and their program policies and admission prices was tabulated, and a separate form for each town made, and those forms were submitted by us to counsel for the respective defendants who operated in the town.

We have not yet been advised as to the extent to which the defendants are willing to concede the accuracy of this data. Some of them, I understand, are still engaged in checking it. But since all of these facts in this survey are of an objective nature, and about which there obviously cannot be any real dispute, we think any corrections in these reports that the defendants desire to make, can be made by stipulation, and the court can have the benefit of this survey without the necessity of calling as witnesses the agents who made them.

This data, we believe, will show that more than 300 of these towns where they operate, one defendant owns all or has an interest in all the theatres in the town; that in 70 or 80 more of them they had all of the first-run theatres, and that there were a substantial number of theatres at least owned by these defendants which were closed at the time of the survey and which had been kept closed for substantial periods of time. That data, of course, does not prove the existence of monopoly power by itself, but it does show the extent to which the power demonstrated by other proof has been used to achieve what are known as "closed situations." That is, theatre operating areas where there is no theatre operating competition of any kind. And it also shows the extent to which that control has enabled them to maintain idle excess theatre capacity in those so-called closed towns.

We also have additional data as to prior periods as to closed theatres in the 1939 interrogatories, but, of course, this is the survey which furnishes the up-to-date material in that regard.

Now we expect to show through this data described, the interrogatory answers, the admissions of fact, the express agreements that the defendants made with each other and their general forms of licensing and this F.B.I. survey, that each of these defendants has violated the act, and that the five producer defendants are illegal price-fixing combinations in and of themselves.

However, we shall also bring to the court's attention additional data which we believe is primarily relevant on the issue of the form that relief from these violations should take. This is largely in the form of administrative and judicial decisions and public records. For the most part it simply records the past performance of the defendants themselves in various situations where the restraint of trade was charged and proven, and is reflected in administrative and judicial decisions and proceedings to which they themselves or their predecessors were party defendants or respondents. (41)

In the cases where the proceedings are officially reported, there is, of course, no occasion for us to offer the reports in evidence. However, in such matters as decisions of the arbitration of the appeal board, and the arbitrators' awards under the consent decree, which are matters of public record but are not officially published or kept as a part of the records of this court, we shall offer a record of these decisions in evidence to be sure that they are properly incorporated in the record that is before the court. As to these decisions of the appeal board, we shall offer all of those, even though we will call specific attention to only a part, as that body of decisions represents the official record of complaints made against the defendants since the suit was filed which have been considered both by an arbitrator and by the board of review of the arbitrator's findings. In our view that is usually reliable data as to the general scope and character of the specific competitive problems which are continuously arising in the industry, and forms a concise and informative record of such problems for the use of this court, and relieves this court of the necessity of performing the detail fact finding functions that have already been performed by arbitrators and the board in considering such complaints.

We think the material that we shall offer concerning the past attempts made to control competitive abuses in the (42) industry by various judicial, administrative procedure, while at the same time permitting the producer-defendants to retain joint control of it, will show that there are no adequate judicial means for permanently regulating the exercise of such control in the public interest.

Now, if it should be thought desirable merely to regulate that control instead of abolishing it, the decision to undertake a program of that kind is probably one for Congress rather than the courts. The only final judicial solution of this problem that is permissible under the Sherman Act is one which will create or attempt to create, an industry structure in which the forces of competition, rather than a system of administrative control, will be used to protect the public interest. The justification for the rather radical departure from the ordinary judicial procedure as represented by the arbitration system set up in the consent decree is that it was expressly given a temporary status and was placed under ultimate judicial control, so that it could be used as a means of aiding ultimate judicial solution of the problem.

Therefore we submit the arbitration experience to the court primarily as a guide to relief, although it does also show the existence and continuance of illegal practices by the defendants since the decree was entered.

Now in conclusion I should like to say that we will do everything we can to speed judicial determination of this theatre divorcement issue. Since the last decree was entered there was an expansion of theatre holdings by Fox and Paramount in, I believe, about to the extent of five per cent, between eight and ten per cent of the holdings of each, and the situation has become particularly urgent again by reason of the relaxation of controls over new theatre construction which has resulted in renewed threats of expansion by affiliated circuits in areas where they now operate. We do not want to jeopardise an early decision on the merits by devoting the court's attention to a preliminary motion for an order prohibiting further theatre acquisitions by the defendants during the pendency of the trial. And if reasonably expeditious procedure can be followed here, I do not believe that will be necessary. We think the divorcement issue may be disposed of rapidly, as its determination depends, as we see it, simply on an estimate of the legal consequences of facts which are essentially beyond dispute, and that the applicable legal principles are well established.

It seems to us that whatever factual defense is offered will necessarily take the form of confession and avoidance, in which the defendants offer additional facts by way of explaining rather than rebutting the facts offered by us which, of course, have been largely furnished by them.

We, of course, appreciate the extent to which the defendants have cooperated with us in enabling us to make a documentary presentation of this case. We shall, of course, cooperate with them in return in any way that we can to relieve them of the necessity of calling witnesses to establish facts which nobody is interested in disputing in any event. A large part of the testimony that they will offer will probably be regarded by us as irrelevant and immaterial, but we do not propose to take up the time of the court with any extensive arguments over their admissibility, and it probably ought to be in the record for purposes of final disposition in appeal, and we can, of course, protect our legal position simply by formal motion to strike, and that is the course that we shall probably follow. In short, we shall do everything that we can to expedite the presentation of the defendants' case as well as of our own in order to see that there can be a prompt disposition of this extremely vital issue.

Judge Hand: Judge Goddard suggests that you talked about the five defendants here. What about the others?

Mr. Wright: You mean the non-theatre owning defendants? I do not think we have neglected them entirely. In our brief you will find we have summarized agreements that (45) they have made. They are parties here, as we point out in the brief, not because we regard them as integral parts of any of these five combinations but because they have made illegal agreements with those five principal defendants which have the effect of discriminating against independent theatre operators, and that is why they are in the case.

Mr. Seymour: Do your Honors want to proceed now with the defendants' openings, or do you want to recess?

Judge Hand: I should think we had better proceed with the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, it is the unanimous feeling of counsel for the defense here that if we could open now, it would make very much clearer to your Honors what the issues are really to be and would greatly facilitate you in passing on the plaintiff's case.

Judge Hand: All right, go ahead, Mr. Seymour.

DEFENDANT PARAMOUNT'S OPENING.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, because the Paramount defendants are named first, I am going to make the first opening on behalf of defendants, and because so much of the Government's case is torn from its context—they point to charts and figures but they do not tell you anything about the industry or these practices, or how they grew up, or (46).

how these defendants became owners of theatres—that it seems to us essential to supply that context. It is true that many of these facts are undisputed. It is also true that all the inferences are disputed, and so as the first counsel to open I must give your Honors some detail of the industry, and I hope you will be patient with me if I take a little longer. My distinguished colleagues won't take as long, and therefore you can look forward to hearing them.

This is the trial of certain issues in this case reserved by the Government in the Consent Decree signed by Judge Goddard in 1940 after extensive negotiation between the defendants and the Department of Justice and full hearing before the Court. By that decree the Government agreed not to institute proceedings for divorcement of the theatre interests of the five defendants who were parties to the decree until three years after the entry of the decree. That period expired in 1943, and the present proceedings are brought to try the issues and to procure such divorcement. It is useful to note, however, that certain of the provisions of the decree are still in effect. One of the practices in the industry originally complained of was the granting of clearance between theatres. Clearance is defined in the decree (footnote 1, Sec. VIII) as "the period of time, fixed by agreement (47) between a distributor and an exhibitor, prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres." At this time the Government apparently still questions some aspects of that practice. You will note that there was a good deal of reference to clearance in Mr. Wright's opening, and many of these charts are constructed with reference to periods of clearance. Yet in the Consent Decree it was expressly recognized that clearance was essential in the business of distributing and exhibiting motion pictures, and the decree set up an elaborate arbitration procedure under which theatre operators could obtain redress where they objected to the clearance theretofore granted over their theatres by one or more of the consenting defendants. Provision was made for arbitration tribunals, set up under the supervision of the American Arbitration Association and the Court, and an appeals board to which appeals from these tribunals would go. Under the decree there have been over four hundred arbitrations and over a hundred appeals. The appeals board has been continuously constituted of distinguished members of our Bar who have rendered a great service to the industry and the public. Apparently the Government plans to offer the decisions of the appeals board (48) and to refer to certain of those decisions. At one time Government counsel indicated that they would be offered for the purpose of showing law violation through granting unreasonable clearances since the date of the decree. When the offer is made, counsel will have occasion to point out that the decisions are not admissible on any such theory, that they are only relevant to questions as to the sufficiency of the arbitration procedure provided in the decree to redress alleged grievances. Of course, as the decree shows, the arbitrators and appeals board were not deciding questions of violation of the Sherman Act. The criteria in the decree for their determination were quite different. We shall be glad to have the Court examine all of the opinions for the limited purpose for which they are relevant, because it will become apparent from them that the arbitration procedure set up under the decree was a most progressive development in providing a forum for the relatively prompt settlement of disputes in an area which is necessarily the subject of much difference of opinion.

As we discuss this subject of clearance, it will be readily apparent to the Court that this matter is one peculiar to this industry and that it cannot be dealt with properly or adequately by court proceedings, and that courts are not equipped to deal with it, certainly not as well equipped as the arbitration machinery that has been set up under the decree. It will become apparent, furthermore, that the broad remedial provisions have been generally effective and that very slight modifications would meet the few observations about it which have been made by the appeals board in their decisions. We believe the Court will thus find it unnecessary to concern itself with questions of clearance, that matter having already been adequately dealt with in the decree entered upon the consent of the Attorney General and the defendants who are parties to it. This being so, much that is said in the Government's brief and opening seems irrelevant. It is clear that the propriety of agreements for reasonable clearance was definitely determined by the decree. It was not an issue reserved by the Government for later trial. By the decree the Government conceded that some clearance is essential—there were no "ifs" and "buts" in the concession. Similarly, the decree recognizes the relevancy of admission prices to clearance since they are taken into account by an arbitrator determining its reasonableness. It cannot now be properly claimed that clearance agreements are per se illegal as price fixing devices, and that all such agreements must therefore be outlawed. Yet, as we shall see, the Government relies heavily upon clearance, not simply unreasonable clearance, but all clearance granted to affiliated theatres, to bolster its claim of nation-wide monopoly of exhibition.

Your Honors may have noted on some of these charts that Mr. Wright handed up, that many of them deal with a period prior to the date of the decree. They deal with pictures in 1936 and 1937 and clearances then prevailing. Of course the decree since that time has provided the forum in which the propriety or reasonableness of any of those clearances could have been determined.

Certain other provisions of the decree will be mentioned during the trial but it is unnecessary to comment on them now.

In its present presentation—

Judge Hand: Is it a fact that much of the litigation before this Appeal Board is over clearances?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, that is the bulk of the work of the arbitration machinery and the Appeals Board. And the theatre comes in and says that it wants to get clearance changes and is heard, and sometimes they win, sometimes they lose, and then it goes to the Appeals Board where the results are as expected with an Appeal Board of review, sometimes they win, sometimes they lose. But the point is that they have a forum and they resort to it.

In its present presentation of the reserved issues upon which the Government asks the Court to grant the drastic relief of severing the defendants' interests in exhibition from their interests in the production and distribution of motion pictures, the Government has chosen to rest its case on relatively narrow grounds. In its request for divorcement against Paramount, the Government asks the Court to direct that Paramount dispose of its investments in exhibition companies carried on Paramount's books at over $63,000,000. The sole basis of this severe and perhaps fatal amputation is a claim that the defendants which have an interest in motion picture theatres have combined and conspired to monopolize the domestic motion picture market. This claim is not based upon any assertion of an agreement or conspiracy made at any particular time by any of these defendants. No such proof is even hinted at. It is based rather upon a melange of unrelated facts, unjustified additions of unrelated theatre holdings, unrevealing statistics and isolated examples of license agreements which we will show are clearly authorized by the copyright law and essential to this business.

By taking the largest and most successful producers, who also own interests in theatres, the Government isolates large units for attack but, since none alone is large enough, or powerful enough, for its purposes, they are arbitrarily lumped together and then their separate and independent operations are submitted to statistical analyses of dubious quality as if they were all one. This is the fatal weakness in the Government's case. For when the case is over the Court will be completely satisfied that the defendants' operations are independently conducted under conditions of most vigorous competition from the beginning of production to the last exhibition.

No artful labelling of completely independent transactions as "cross-licensing" can serve to manufacture a combination or conspiracy where none exists. It will, I think, (53) be undisputed that any of the contractual arrangements which are woven together to make the Government's case, stem from lawful practices in the industry adopted independently long before any of the defendants had any interest in theatres, and, furthermore, that precisely the same practices occur in the dealings of these defendants and other producers and distributors of motion pictures with operators of theatres in which the defendants have no interest at all. In other words, the licensing procedures which are here challenged are precisely the same in dealing with theatres in which the defendants have no interest and whether or not the licenses are made by these defendants or by producers and distributors which are not defendants in this suit. So there is no genuine relationship between the practices challenged and affiliation of theatres with any of the defendants which could possibly justify the extinction of each defendant's right to own and operate or to have financial interest in the operation of theatres. We believe that the Court will be satisfied not only that the charge of combination or conspiracy is without substance, but that this industry is competitive in the highest degree, that these defendants—far from combining and conspiring together—are and always have been engaged in the most vigorous competition with each other. It will be apparent, furthermore, that the public has benefited enormously through the independent competitive operations of these defendants in the constant development of better motion pictures, and that the relief demanded by the Government would confer no public benefit but on the contrary be most injurious to the interest of the public. Examination of the Government's brief shows no concern for this large public interest but only a response to the complaints of some exhibitors and producers who hope to obtain competitive advantages over these defendants. Attempts to fit the competitive facts in this infinitely complex industry into the traditional compass of a monopoly or of a price fixing combination or conspiracy must fail.

Since the Government rests its case on the claim of combination or conspiracy between the defendants who own interests in theatres, it is hardly necessary to say that of course it could not be claimed that the mere ownership of interests in theatres by any one defendant alone was in itself a violation of law. The right to integrate the various functions of a business from manufacture to sale of the product (in the absence of illegal steps or a result of running afoul of such decisions as that in the Aluminum case) was established as long ago as the decision in the United States Steel case and in other decisions following it.

It is beyond question that no defendant with an interest in theatres has more than a very small fraction of the total motion picture theatres in the United States. For example—and I don't remember that Mr. Wright even told your Honors this morning the total number of theatres in the United States—for example, out of about 17,000 theatres in the United States Paramount has some interest in under 1,600, or about 9 per cent, and out of this number Paramount has stock control amounting to more than a majority in corporations operating only about 500 theatres, or something less than 3 per cent of the total theatres. The percentage of theatres in which other defendants have interests is still smaller. Thus it is apparent that the mere size of any of these defendants or the position in the exhibition field of any of them standing alone is not subject to attack. It is only by the wholly unjustified tacking together all of the various and varying interests of all of the defendants who have any conceivable interest in theatres that the Government is able to arrive at anything more than a very small percentage. But even taking all the theatres in which all the defendants together have any interest whatsoever, the total number is only approximately eighteen per cent of all of the theatres in the United States. Whatever the statistical approach to this unjustified conglomeration, the percentage of the exhibition business actually enjoyed by all the theatres in which the several defendants are interested, falls far short of any percentage which could represent monopoly of motion picture exhibition.

Despite allegations of the complaint of monopoly in production and distribution, the Government does not now press those claims. And indeed it could not, for it will become apparent as the case proceeds that in production as well as in exhibition, and indeed in all phases of the motion picture business, the defendants are in intense competition with each other, as well as with the several producer defendants who do not own theatres and a great number of so-called independent producers. As a matter of fact there has been and continues to be a consistent growth of both independent producers and independent exhibitors. Not only has there been a growth in the number of independent producers and independent exhibitors, but each of them has been earning more and more profits. It is perfectly apparent that the Government cannot claim that the activities of these defendants stifle the entry of new talent and capital in the production, distribution or exhibition of pictures. The developments in this industry are inconsistent with any theory of monopoly.

We are dealing here with an infinitely complex industry, serving an enormous number of people every day with a product of superlative excellence. It is estimated that more than 85,000,000 people see exhibitions of motion pictures weekly in approximately 17,000 theatres located in 9,000 different communities. American films lead not only in this country, but in most of the countries of the world where in normal times over $100,000,000 was paid annually for the privilege of exhibiting American films. The importance of a strong industry to the United States in the period of international affairs which lies ahead needs no emphasis. The amputation proposed by the Department of Justice is hardly conducive to that end.

It has long been recognized how important are pictures in educating all the peoples of the world to our democratic way of life and how important our pictures are in international commerce. It has been said that trade follows the motion picture. Foreign governments have recognized this and have not only placed trade barriers against our motion pictures but have subsidized their own producers in efforts to offset our supremacy in the world markets.

For a proper appraisal of the Government's claims it is necessary to examine the history of the industry and the background of its present structure and practices. The outstanding fact in this industry from its beginning has been the intense competition which prevails in it. This industry has grown from the most primitive sort of entertainment thirty-five years ago, to its present superb service without the air of a protective tariff or other Government assistance and solely as a result of talent and enterprise in the various companies and in the several phases of their activities, and the intense competition that has steadily improved the quality of pictures throughout the history of the industry. In order for the industry to supply the necessary pictures to the 17,000 theatres in this country, to assure the widest access of the public to their exhibition, it has been necessary for each of the companies to set up or arrange for most elaborate machinery to assure each theatre of continuous service. This service must punctually supply motion pictures on precisely the day on which they are to be exhibited in each theatre throughout the United States, so that the exhibits may, with reasonable certainty, plan their play dates, their programs and their advertising. The competition offered by each of the distributors, whether a defendant or not, to supply this demand by licensing as many of its pictures to as many of these theatres without exception at such prices as it may receive is tremendous. Under the spur of this competition producers have spared no effort to perfect the quality of the dramatic productions which they produce.

The best pictures often cost several million dollars to produce and additional amounts to distribute, and the constant increase in the cost of pictures, responsive to public demand for constant improvement, is a basic economic factor in this industry which explains many of the practices questioned by the Government and the reasons why those producing such expensive pictures must have at their disposal means for assuring adequate returns to make such productions feasible and profitable. One of the summaries to which the Government referred this morning indicates the increasing return of the more expensive pictures and it would be rather natural to assume, I should suppose, that better pictures and more expensive pictures brought a larger return than what those charts indicate. Most of the things of which the Government now complains are simply methods, which we will show to be proper, of assuring such returns.

The Government seeks to make much of the fact that admission prices charged by exhibitors usually vary with the run or time when the picture is shown in a community and of the fact that a provision for minimum admission prices is generally found in license contracts made between the defendants and exhibitors. It will become apparent that these admission prices in reality are but a normal consequence of the economics of the exhibition business, that the actual prices charged are determined by the exhibitors themselves and not the distributors; that the public benefited rather than injured by the provisions for minimum admission prices, and that those provisions in no way offend the Sherman Act. (60)

At the outset, the business of production and exhibition of motion pictures must be distinguished from the business of selling gasoline, cardboard or any other ordinary commercial product. This business is primarily theatrical. It is not concerned with mere transactions in celluloid films; they are only the means of providing dramatic productions. The success of those productions depends not only upon the quality of the pictures but upon the public fancy and taste when the pictures are exhibited. This taste is subject to frequent changes affected not only by domestic and world events, but by many more intangible things. The films are merely mechanical instruments, conveying dramatic performances to the 85,000,000 people who see them weekly. The performances are staged and directed in a studio with the hope that their effective presentation to the public will return a profit to all those concerned in production, distribution and exhibition. Such a business is highly speculative, just as the legitimate stage is. Those concerned in producing extremely expensive pictures of this speculative character necessarily require the full protection which the law allows. Counsel for the Government this morning neglected to mention the crucial fact in this business, the fact which is at the bottom of the licensing procedures and practices which he complains of, the fact that these films are all copyrighted. (61)

The first and crucial stage is copyright protection which covers the presentation of the dramatic performances recorded on films precisely as it covers other dramatic performances. Without such protection no one could afford to expend the effort or cost involved in dramatic production either for the stage or the screen. The copyright statute clearly protects the exclusively right to copy the film and to use all or any part of it in the presentation of the dramatic performance so copied, and the statute also protects the exclusive right to that performance itself, and makes that right exclusive by whatever means it may be reproduced. Thus motion pictures are copyrighted and are exhibited in theatres under license agreements. There is a grant of a limited right to exhibit in each license contract, a right to exhibit the dramatic performance recorded upon the film upon specific days and to return the film immediately so that it may be licensed and exhibited by others in a most elaborate and complex method for providing all the theatres licensed with the films when they require them. So we are not dealing here with the sale of goods, but with licenses to perform copyrighted dramatic productions and bailment of positive prints which are the mechanical means for presentation of those productions upon the screen.

In striking contrast with the process of distributing ordinary articles of commerce by the sale of as many units as possible to as many customers as can be found willing to buy, the distribution of motion pictures without exception is only possible by licensing the single dramatic production for performance in one theatre in a community after another, the exclusive right of exhibition always being retained except as limited rights are granted out of it. That is a basic fact in this industry; it is a fact that has existed from the very beginning; it is a fact which applies not only to the activities of these defendants as distributors of motion pictures but to the activities of all distributors of motion pictures. The Government suggests that somehow there is something peculiar about the fact that all motion picture licenses proceed on the theory of copyright, and it seems not surprising that copyrighted articles are treated as such. The problem of providing the films by which such dramatic production are produced on the screen, is at the basis of the practice in this industry of granting so-called runs. The prints of these films are expensive. It is this expense added to the expense of the original production which must be recovered before the producer can realize any profit, so it is essential for a producer to so handle the prints of these films as to assure that return and profit. In any exhibit of a motion picture in a theatre a positive print of the film must be furnished to the exhibitor and returned to the distributor for subsequent license after it has been exhibited. The cost of each print in black and white runs from $150 to $200 per print. Prints in Technicolor cost from $700 to $900 each and sometimes more. The average film rental paid by a small theatre covers but an infinitesimal fraction of the cost of a single print. Whereas a large and well appointed theatre showing a picture on first run at an admission price of $1.00 or more may pay a rental of $150,000 or more, the same picture will later be licensed to another theatre for as little as $10 or $15 for a three day run at an admission price of only 10 cents.

The number of prints required for national distribution of each picture depends upon the number of theatres which must be served. Since these prints are fragile and are worn out in use they must be inspected after every exhibition. The slightest distortion of the sound track on the film will impair the sound effect.

The number of prints each film requires varies from 200 to approximately 350 per picture. The average print cost of every picture ranges between $30,000 and $40,000 and is often much higher. It is usual for all well managed companies to keep cost as low as consistent with good service and it is apparent that such cost can only be kept down by using each available print in successive exhibitions in different theatres as often as possible.

The number of shipments required of the prints of the films produced by all producers runs into many millions a year. It would obviously be impossible to operate such a business by providing a separate print for every exhibition. The cost of such prints alone would be prohibitive. So it is necessary for the prints to be distributed in successive runs and for each exhibition, whether first run or subsequent run, to realize the largest possible revenue for the distributors. It would be utterly impracticable for competing theatres to show the same pictures at the same time, as there would not be enough prints for that purpose and the value of the picture would be almost completely destroyed. Such a practice would drastically reduce the number of people who would see the pictures because the time of their exhibition in any community would be thus restricted. At the same time the respective values of each successive exhibition would be reduced and the distinction between them would be wiped out. Maintenance of this distinction, as we shall show, has definite advantages to the public.

The value of a picture to an exhibitor depends upon its freshness and its element of freshness determines the terms which the exhibitor is willing to pay to the distributor. The first-run exhibition ordinarily produces the highest revenue to the producer because the picture is then first available to the public, and it has the highest element of freshness. But the first-run exhibition is of great importance to subsequent-runs as well. Theatres showing the pictures first in the large cities spend large sums in advertising the films which they exhibit, they are commented upon in the newspapers and by word of mouth. Such publicity redounds to the benefit of all subsequent-run exhibitors by stimulating popular desire to subsequent runs. There is some analogy to dramatic producer and the exhibitor, but is also of great value and benefit to subsequent runs. There is some analogy to dramatac productions on the stage where the Broadway run is the most valuable, but the subsequent road runs are of importance. The success of the road run depends to a large extent upon the advertising and popularity of the Broadway showing. But the analogy is not perfect because whereas the stage production on the road ordinarily has different and less prominent players, the motion picture is the same and provides identical entertainment for the public whether it is shown first-run at a relatively high admission price or at a later run for 10 cents.

In view of the importance of the first-run to a producer and exhibitor it is natural to find that the first-run of a picture goes to the best, most expensive and most luxurious theatre in the community. The Government attaches weight to the fact that in many of the large cities of this country (66) theatres in which one of the defendants has an interest license the right to show many of the best pictures first-run. The evidence will show that this is because these theatres are the best available theatres in their communities. But the Government's picture of the situation as presented to the Court is by no means complete. In many of the cities where a defendant's theatre enjoys some product first-run there are theatres owned by independent exhibitors which have the right to the first-run of comparable product and in some communities all of the theatres showing films on first run are owned by independent exhibitors.

Whether or not a theatre has any affiliation with a defendant, it is equally necessary for the distributor to protect his revenue from each successive exhibitors so that he will be able to realize the largest possible revenue from first as well as subsequent-run exhibitions. The terms of the license contracts for first-run exhibition and subsequent-run exhibition are generally the same whether the exhibitor is affiliated with one of the defendants or not. There is nothing in the contractual provisions, of which the Government complains, related peculiarly or specially to the nature of any relation of any exhibitor with a distributor. The whole process of distribution and exhibition and the respective interests of the distributor and exhibitor therein are precisely the same whether the exhibitor is a so-called affiliate or a so-called independent.

The success of any theatre (whether affiliated with a defendant or not) depends not only upon the right to exhibit during the period alloted for exhibition, but also upon assurance that the value of the right to exhibit shall not be destroyed by unfair competition of subsequent-run theatres charging lower admission prices. This assurance must extend for a reasonable time after the prior exhibition is ended. Obviously a theatre, operating at high cost and spending large amounts to exploit a picture first-run, cannot operate successfully and profitably exhibit pictures, for which it pays the higher license fees and charges higher admission prices, if theatres in the immediate neighborhood in competition with it, are able to advertise or show the same picture at the same time or a few days later for much lower admission prices. The same need for assurance against this type of unfair competition exists between subsequent runs. This so-called protection of the right to exhibit in an agreed sequence and under agreed conditions is known as clearance. Both the distributor and exhibitor have vital interests in reasonable clearance. The distributor provides for it in order to assure payment of the agreed license fees. The exhibitor must have it in order to enable him to meet the competition of subsquent-runs at lower admission prices and to pay the fees he has agreed to pay.

Judge Hand: What has Appeal Board done about these clearance cases? Can you give us a little statement of it to show they handle them?

Mr. Seymour: I do not know that I can give your Honors the precise information, but my brother Caskey can because he studied this particularly, but what happens is that an exhibitor complains that clearance over his theatre is too long and he vouches in the other theatres that have clearance over his theatre and then, in accordance with the terms of the decree, which provide the various considerations which the Arbitrator is taking into account, the Arbitrator proceeds to decide whether his clearance ought to be reduced or whether it is all right, and then that decision can be appealed by either side to the Appeals Board.

Judge Hand: What sort of things do determine in the form of the decree?

Mr. Seymour: The decree lists the various considerations, such as admission price, character of the theatre, character of the operation, so on. They are all set forth in the decree. Those are the business considerations.

Judge Goddard: I would like to ask Mr. Wright, if I may, what is the Government's position as to clearance now? Before, the Government seemed to recognize that clearance was an essential feature of the business. The next question—perhaps I am ahead of it—is how the Government would regulate clearance, a matter that is determined by so many different elements?

Mr. Wright: Answering the questions one at a time, there is quite an important qualification, I think, that neither your Honor nor Mr. Seymour stated there. What we conceded was that reasonable clearance was essential.

Judge Goddard: You concede that?

Mr. Wright: At that time. And I would say that as of today, we still would not object to reasonable clearance as such, although there may be a difference in our concept as to what is reasonable and what is unreasonable. But that qualification was always there and still remains.

In so far as this question of how the problem of regulating clearance should be approached, as I say, the consent decree was an experimental effort to regulate it by a fairly complex administrative procedure, which was set up within the limits of that consent decree.

Judge Hand: Do you think they have done it badly?

Mr. Wright: Within the limits that we imposed, and that are inherent in such a system, I think they have done it well, but the job, in our opinion, just cannot be done effectively that way; that is, the only way in which you have a genuinely competitive film distribution system, in our view, is to leave the determination of clearances to free competition and not have a system in which these producer-exhibitor defendants essentially administer it. Imposed on top of their administration was this consent decree system but, for reasons which are too complex to discuss here, the net result was—and which are discussed fully in the preliminary briefs that we filed on the motion for preliminary relief—the result of this arbitration system was simply to intensify clearance competition as among the lower runs, who follow the runs of the producer-exhibitor defendants, but it had no effect whatsoever in so far as disturbing the dominant run positions that these producer-exhibitors and defendants maintain in the cities referred to by our statistical data.

Mr. Seymour: I have the copy of the decree before me. Does your Honor want to have me read the various criteria? I mentioned some of them. The others are set forth—the business considerations which enter into the decision. What the Arbitrator did was to proceed to review the business judgment of the producers and exhibitors and correct it, as they thought differently about it. They were an objective method of review.

The precise amount of clearance is fixed by negotiation between the exhibitor and distributor, although of course once it is agreed to and in the absence of changed conditions, it is likely to remain substantially the same in succeeding seasons during which the exhibitor uses the product of that distributor. The arbitration system created by the Consent Decree is designed to and does provide ideal machinery for reviewing the business judgment exercised in agreeing upon such clearances.

The license fees charged by distributors for the exclusive privilege of limited exhibition granted in license contracts are ordinarily expressed in terms of a flat rental or a percentage of the gross receipts of the theatre from exhibition of the picture. No exception can possibly be taken to either method of assuring compensation for the privileges granted by the producer pursuant to rights conferred upon him by the copyright law. Distributors, generally, believe that percentage rentals are the fairest method of obtaining a fair share of the rewards attributable to their products; they are also fair to exhibitors who thereby avoid high rentals on pictures whose box office results are disappointing. The terms of such percentages are matters of negotiation between the distributor and exhibitor, as are the terms of flat rental fees. Where a percentage return is provided for, the contractual provision giving the distributor the right to inspect the exhibitor's books is a necessary precautionary measure to assure full payment of the distributor's agreed fee. In the Government's brief, I want to comment on it briefly, although (72) it was not mentioned in argument, they make some criticism of the reservation by the distributor of the right to make sure he is not cheated by the exhibitor. No evidence can be offered of abuse of such provisions which are universally used by distributors solely for their own benefit and protection and not for exchange of information with others. It is merely fanciful to suggest, as the Government does, that such provisions are used to exert pressure upon exhibitors for the sale of their theatres. If percentage arrangements are permissible, as we think they clearly are, it is surely not improper for the distributor to arrange assurances that the provisions are lived up to. It is hard to imagine a more proper provision than one for inspection of the books of the exhibitor.

Thus it is apparent that licensing according to runs with clearance provisions protecting the right of exhibition granted, are the necessary by-products of the copyright law and of the economics by which exhibition of pictures is carried on. The fact that Government counsel, unfamiliar with the practical problems of distribution and exhibition, think that the business might be conducted in another way hardly justified interference with or penalties for the exercise of clear legal rights.

Of course, like all contracts, these license agreements (73) may be said to involve restraints, but they are plainly reasonable and well within rights given by the copyright law as well as the general law. They lend no support to the claim of combination to monopolize which is the Government's case here.

It is the object of the distributor to select the best theatre whose operator is willing to deal for his product for first-run and to license it as widely in subsequent-runs as possible. In choosing its customers for first and subsequent-run, the distributor naturally tries to select the theatre for each run which he believes will best serve his legitimate business interests. In this process the distributor is exercising his normal and proper right to select his own customers for the presentation of his copyrighted dramatic productions. And I understood Government counsel to concede this morning, in answer to Judge Bright, that it was the distributor acting alone who made the decision on selection of first-run. The same thing applies on subsequent-runs. One of the complaints of the Government appears to be that the defendants who own interests in theatres often select the theatres of other defendants for the first-run exhibition of their pictures. The proofs will show that this selection is due to the superiority of the theatre selected and that it is not the product of conspiracy or agreement. Precisely the same criteria are used in selecting first-run outlets where no defendant owns (74) any theatre or only some of them. If no defendant owned any theatre anywhere, precisely the same criteria would be applied and there would be precisely the same need for the same provisions of the license contracts, the arrangements for clearance, etc., to protect the distributor's revenue from each successive run. Indeed, it will become increasingly evident as the case proceeds that basically Government counsel want to see this business conducted in some other way despite the fact that the very nature of the business requires precisely the methods which are here challenged. And it will, furthermore, be evident that those methods are quite unrelated to the interests of the defendants in theatres, and that these theatres are treated the same by other distributors as though they were owned by independents.

Whether owned independently or by defendants or by corporations in which defendants have a small or a large interest, all theatres exhibiting motion pictures in area are in competition with each other. The first-run theatres, how- defendants' several interests in theatres having first-run theatres but with all theatres in the community. A member of the public is always free to choose when, where and at what admission price he chooses to see a particular picture. It is the same picture whether exhibited first-run or at the last run. This competition is constant, goes on in the minds of the public every time they desire to see a picture. Thus defendants' several interests in theatres having first-run must be compared with the total theatres of all kinds and not considered as an unrelated market.

Although the Government now appears to abandon claims which it made in its Amended Complaint with respect to conspiracy to monopolize production, an appraisal of even its present case makes desirable some understanding of methods of production and of the intense competition which exists between all of these defendants and other producers at the production level as well as at the final level of exhibition.

I am sorry to be so long, but I think if I give you this background now it will save time later on, if you will bear with me. I think Judge Goddard may recognize that some of the material he is now hearing he heard from my distinguished colleague, Judge Thacher, five years ago. And I regret that other engagements prevent him from presenting this himself today.

The production of a motion picture does not begin in the studio. It begins in the acquisition of the story which is to be dramatized. There is the most intensive competition between each of these defendants with other producers for the acquisition of such stories, as has been repeatedly (76) attested by newspaper accounts of bidding between various producers for desirable stories. When the story has been acquired, the script must be written. This task is performed by highly paid experts skilled in dramatic art. When the script is prepared, problems of casting begin, with emphasis upon the leading roles and consideration of the stars who can best fill the parts to the public's satisfaction. Occasionally, stars are borrowed or loaned to other producers to enable them to complete the desired cast. This is done where it is believed it will forward the interest of the star and benefit the producer, but the ultimate pictures produced are competitive. The practice is relatively universal and there is not the slightest basis for assuming that it affects the competitive relationship between the producers involved. After a cast is selected, the work of production begins; settings, costumes and stage properties must be produced with detailed historical accuracy. When all this has been done, rehearsals start. The production of silent pictuers was simple compared with the rehearsal of sound pictures. The latter involve the greatest perfection in speech, music and sound effects. Each day's work must be scrutinized during the night and only accepted as perfect when no flaws can be discovered.

No effort is spared in striving to produce the best picture. Each competitor strives to excel with varying degrees of (77) success. Naturally, in the course of such competition some pictures of some producers do better than others. But it will become apparent that this fact, as well as the respective box office receipts, bear a direct relationship to the quality and showmanship of the production and the critical ability to gauge the public taste at the time of exhibition. It has become the fashion, to which Government counsel and even defendants' counsel may occasionally succumb, to speak of the defendants in this case as if they were in one group and to call all other producers independents, as if they are somehow in a different category. The only sense in which that is true is that other producers, not defendants here, are independent of the Government's attempt to shackle their competitive abilities and destroy essential parts of their businesses. Each of these defendants is an independent producer, whether or not it has any interest in theatres. Outside of the defendants in this suit, there are many successful producers. They have produced a number of fine pictures in recent years, pictures which they have exhibited in theatres in which these defendants are interested as well as others. The non-defendant producers are amply financed and equipped to produce fine motion pictures. No one with talent and sufficient capital is excluded from production in this industry. Of course, there are failures in this as in any other industry. Absence of adequate talent or adequate capital may produce a failure. But nothing in the conduct of these defendants or in their interests in theatres operates to exclude or limit the opportunity of producers with the necessary talent and capital.

Some outline of the nature of the production and distribution organization of Paramount may be desirable. I am about to go into a treatment of this Paramount as a separate organization in this discussion. Would your Honors like to have me continue or would you rather recess now? I cannot finish before lunch, I assure you.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess until 2.10.

(Recess to 2.10 p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Seymour: I am now going to discuss for a little bit the organization of the defendant Paramount so that your Honors will see how that company does its business.

The production department is located in Hollywood and is in charge of a vice-president of the company. Paramount is also presently planning to produce certain pictures abroad as it did before the war. There is a branch of the producing organization at the Paramount office in New York. At the present time there are approximately 3,349 people on the payroll in the West Coast studio. Paramount makes approximately 36 feature pictures a year. It has made a greater number in the past. War conditions compelled it to make a smaller number than theretofore. After a tentative program of production for a motion picture season (which begins September 1) has been set out, individual production is assigned to producers and producer-directors in the studio. The studio employs normally about 15 directors. A large staff of writers is retained from time to time. The program of pictures for any one year is released at the rate of about one picture a week starting September 1. To see the amount of planning which must go into an annual program and taking the program for 1945-6 as an example the normal process of production of that program would be as follows: In November, 1944, a meeting was held in Hollywood between the heads of the studio and the top executives of the company in New York, including the president and the heads of the foreign and domestic sales department, at which time the studio heads presented on paper the material available for the 1945-1946 program as to producers, producer-directors, directors, stars, players and writers. It was then determined how many pictures and plays would be needed for that program and the amount of money that could be expended in that production. The material on hand would be analyzed.

Out of this discussion there would be evolved a group of pictures totalling the number required, estimated to cost what would be spent and this would constitute the tentative program for 1945-1946.

Following this meeting, the schedule of production which I have outlined would be followed, with many changes during the course of production. The normal process of evolution of an individual motion picture is as follows: Paramount is continuously combing all sources of story material in all parts of the world for satisfactory stories. In its New York production department the company has a story staff of specially trained men and women who are working in connection with the Paramount studios and combing all story sources, outside of Hollywood. These include books, magazines, stage plays and hundreds of original stories. In Hollywood the story staff combs the sources of stories there. The stories so accepted are synopsized and analyzed. Upwards (81) of 7,500 stories are thus handled annually. Stories which seem to have a germ of a picture in them are sent to the Hollywood studio's story head and the studio story head submits them to the head of the production department to be produced if they are recommended. Studio heads make the final decision. Once the story is bought it is turned over to the producer, whose duty it is to turn it into a picture. The studio writing department obtains a trained writer to adapt the story to the screen. When the script is completed the players are chosen and a director is selected. The financial department head estimates the cost. Then all the elaborate procedures for casting, costuming, settings and supplying music are invoked. After the picture is completed it is tried out in Hollywood. After the trial, changes are sometimes made. Thereafter a final "master" positive print is made and allotments of the prints are made to each Paramount exchange for release to each Paramount customer. The Paramount exchanges are wholly independent of those of other companies. It is through the exchanges that the distribution of prints is made.

Every other producing company has a production organization somewhat similar to Paramount in the respects mentioned. Competition between these efficient business units is extremely keen all along the line from the search for story material to the evolution of the final picture. It is a continual race to secure good story material. There is the most intense bidding between companies for good story material and successful stage plays. There is, furthermore, the most intense competition for motion picture talent. Each company is feverishly hunting for new talent. A new player who makes a success on Broadway is immediately sought after by picture companies on competition. Actors' agents stir up the competition, keep it going. Once a player is signed up, there is constant competition to take him away from the studio which has him under contract. The competition for writers, directors and skilled technicians is keen.

The technical and other difficulties of production are enormous, quite aside from the highly speculative nature of the business. Weather, temperamental difficulties of stars, are among the daily problems in producing a picture.

Success in this industry is not merely dependent upon the ability to make fine pictures, but it is primarily conditioned upon an uncanny judgment in the selection of pictures which will appeal most strongly to the patrons of theatres at the time when the pictures are released for exhibition many months after they have been selected for production. The ability to anticipate public taste in a picture is the only way to success, although, of course, the expenses incurred in this procedure are also of importance. The genius of successful showmanship is the best guide to success and sucessful producers do not neglect any possible indication of trends in the public taste and interest and in the types of motion picture plays which audiences most enjoy. Actual box office receipts in typical theatres located in representative communities record the results of success and failure in producing pictures months before their exhibition and it is of the utmost importance to the producer to have intimate and accurate knowledge of the general public reaction to the various pictures as soon as they are shown upon the screen.

The integration of theatres with production affords an accurate teaching experience as the basis for evaluating future products. It makes the producer directly responsible to the audiences for whom the pictures are made.

The judgment of executives long experienced in wrestling with this problem in all three branches of the industry is brought to bear upon it; public taste in current news, in types of fiction, in plays and in the personalities on the stage and screen are important materials to be considered in determining the trends in public taste in these dramatic performances. Sensing these trends involves an intimate understanding of human nature and long experience in judging the feelings, thoughts, tastes and desires of people; it is the one essential quality of successful showmanship. Thus the most vital problem of all is to decide what pictures to produce in order to capture the interest and satisfy the general tastes of the theatre-going public. These are the qualities which each company seeks to have in its executive leadership. These are the qualities which enable companies to compete successfully with each other. These are the qualities which cannot be monopolized.

Prior to the consent decree, pictures were released for exhibition during annual seasons commencing in September, but the program then released had been under consideration and in production for many months. The interest of the public was under constant consideration. By May or June the program of production proceeded to a point at which it fairly evaluated the pictures that were to be offered for exhibition. A convention was then held of those who were to engage in the distribution of the pictures for the coming season to commence the following September.

The purpose of these Conventions was to furnish all available information regarding the pictures to be released and to inspire enthusiasm in those who were to distribute them. Theoretically, the selling campaign commenced immediately after the convention, but under the spur of competition, pictures were often licensed for exhibition several months before the convention was held.

Each distributor endeavored to hold its convention and to commence its selling campaign before its competitors. (85)

These efforts among distributors to begin the licensing of pictures for exhibition at the earliest possible moment evidenced the sharpness of the competition in which they were engaged. When the conventions were over the salesmen returned to their firm exchanges and solicited exhibition contracts within the territories of their exchanges. The salesmen in the ordinary case negotiated directly with the exhibitor and endeavored to arrange the best possible contracts. If the exhibitor was willing to license the pictures on terms the salesmen approved, the exhibitor signed an application which, if ultimately approved by the branch manager, the district manager and the home office, was accepted and executed by the company and a contract thus executed was returned to the exhibitor. In this process of distribution there was intensive competition between all of the distributors in licensing the pictures to exhibitors.

Since the consent decree, that is, since the selling season of 1941-42, pictures have not been licensed by a season's output but instead, pictures have since that time been licensed in groups not to exceed 5. Under this system of selling, national annual conventions became not only unnecessary but meaningless, for the problem of selling became more intensified and the competition greater, since the selling job had to be done, not once a year to an exhibitor, but the exhibitor had to be sold each group of not to exceed 5 pictures as they (86) were finished, and were trade shown in the respective exchange districts.

Instead of holding annual conventions, therefore, it has become necessary to hold frequent sales meetings regionally throughout the country, several times a year, in order to acquaint the sales personnel with the character of the motion pictures in each group as they were produced, and the policy of the company in licensing them to the exhibitors. Paramount has independently continued this practice of trade showing despite the fact that the provisions of Section III and IV of the consent decree lapsed by their terms several years ago.

As I have already indicated, this method of selling under the consent decree has not lessened competition between the various motion picture distributors but has in fact intensified that competition, and the keenest competition and rivalry exists with each group of pictures.

The process of providing necessary prints to the 10,000 or more theatres which Paramount supplies requires the maintenance of a national system of distribution through which Paramount competes with other distributors in its effort to license theatres.

And your Honors will have in mind that this figure of 10,000 theatres is to be compared with the figure I gave you this morning, the 200 to 350 prints which have to serve the 10,000 theatres in a series of runs.

Paramount's distribution department has under its supervision 31 film exchanges covering varying amounts of territory which are selected for convenience in servicing the customers in an area. These exchanges are located in the most important centers. The Paramount exchanges are wholly independent of the exchanges of other distributors and compete actively with other exchanges. Each film exchange is under the direct supervision of a branch manager who is directly responsible to the district manager in whose district his exchange is located. There are four division managers and the general sales manager who have their offices in New York. Prior to the consent decree, there were three division managers, however, under the method of selling under decree which required sales in groups of not more than five, the sales force was augmented and also a fourth division manager was added because the number of transactions was multiplied many times. It is impossible for the general sales manager personally to approve or reject every license contract that is made. Such authority is delegated to the division managers within their respective divisions. The task of solicitation is primarily imposed upon the salesmen of each of the film exchanges.

In their effort to sell Paramount pictures these salesmen constantly meet competition of all other distributors, including the other defendants in this action. Each company publishes in various forms advance announcement of its pictures and pursuant to a practice which arose in conformity with the provisions of the consent decree which have now lapsed, pictures are trade shown by most of the defendants. Competition in licensing pictures has always been vigorous and each of the companies jealously guards all information with regard to their own negotiations with exhibitors. There is no limitation whatever on the freedom of any one of them imposed by any others by agreement or otherwise, and there is no exchange of information between them which can influence their individual action as competitors in the business of licensing pictures.

It is natural since all of the distributors are dealing in the same type of business with similar problems and having similar rights under the copyright laws that many of the contractual provisions used by them should be similar. As the proper amount of clearance between given theatres became established and each exhibitor became accustomed to a certain amount and to insist on the same clearance that he was able to secure in his dealings with each distributor, it was natural that the clearances which he obtained from those that he dealt with should generally be similar. Obviously no exhibitor would willingly subject himself to a shorter clearance in favor of a competitor than he had before or than he could get from any distributor. Conversely no subsequent run new exhibitor would accede to a longer period of clearance in favor of his competitor than he bargained for and received from another distributor. Such similarities cannot be regarded as significant of conspiracy. Under the circumstances, they are entirely consistent with independent dealing which we shall show is the fact.

With respect to the provision in contracts fixing a minimum admission price for exhibition of the particular pictures licensed, these provisions are indispensable to the protection of the revenue of the distributor. They apply only to the showing of the copyrighted pictures licensed to an exhibitor by the distributor with whom the license is made.

And I want to explain that a little more fully, because Government counsel have simply seized upon it as an alleged price-fixing scheme without any reference to the economics of the business or to the fact that we are dealing here with a copyrighted product.

The license fees which any exhibitor pays for a picture licensed are predicated upon the conditions then in the area in which the theatre is located, and the minimum admission prices inserted in the contracts are, as the Government concedes, generally those which are then currently being charged by the exhibitor and those which he fixes.

Obviously if, while the license agreement is in effect, the prior run exhibitor lowers his admission price below a certain figure, he thereby affects the admission prices which a subsequent run exhibitor is able to obtain, for, as the Government concedes, the later run usually must and usually does charge a lower admission price. If the prior run admission price is lowered, the subsequent run must lower his admission price and cannot afford to pay that which he has agreed to pay, and will in consequence be obliged to ask the distributor with whom he has contracted for a reduction in the license fees which he has agreed to pay.

Conversely, if the subsequent run reduces his admission price below the minimum specified in the contract, he thereby injures the prior run as well as those who have runs subsequent to his own and all are therefore obliged to lower their admission prices, and they in turn are unable to pay the licensee fees which they have contracted to pay.

Therefore it is abundantly clear that for the protection of the distributor's license fees, the distributor must insist that the rules of the game shall not be changed during the game—that is, during the relatively short period covered by the sequence of exhibitions of a particular picture in a particular competitive area.

It is essential to the satisfactory operation of the exhibitor's own business to have an established admission (91) price. No exhibitor would on ordinary bookings have a different admission price for the pictures of one company from that of any other. He, not the producer, really fixes the admission price. The inclusion of the same price in license contracts from different producers is no evidence whatever of agreement or concert between the producers. It merely reflects, of course, the standard procedure of the particular exhibitor.

The economics of the business which require and justify the provision for minimum admission price are simple. The producer wishes to receive the highest possible revenue from each run, and is, of course, entitled to try to receive it. The exhibitor must have reasonable assurance against unfair competition in lower admission prices from subsequent runs. If an exhibitor who pays, say $5,000, rental for a film and whose admission price is 75 cents, does not have reasonable assurance that a subsequent run exhibitor will not be able to exhibit at the same time or shortly after him at such a lower price as will entice away his patronage and make it impossible for him to pay the higher rental which he has agreed to pay. Accordingly, the exhibitor is interested in making sure that the subsequent-run exhibitor will not exhibit at a cut-throat low price. Only by knowing that the (92) producer will deal with the subsequent-run on a basis of a reasonable minimum price consistent with the customary practice and the relatively lower value of the subsequent-run, can he with confidence undertake to pay the rental asked by the distributor. Incidentally, it must be noted that in all cases the license contracts merely fix the minimum price. No contractual provision inhibits any maximum which the exhibitor desires to charge. Furthermore, as in the case of other license provisions, the existence of defendants' interests in theatres have nothing whatever to do with this requirement. The same requirement is contained in license contracts to exhibitors unaffiliated with the defendants. If the defendants owned no theatres at all, the economics of the business would require that the exclusive rights granted by the copyright law be protected, by such reasonable provision, against destruction.

It is argued by the Government that provisions in first-run license for minimum admission fees and clearance enables the theatres somehow to control the admission prices and business of subsequent runs, and by tacking the business of independent theatres to the business of affiliated theatres, the Government seeks to inflate the percentage of business actually enjoyed by affiliated theatres. Such an attempt must fail for it is bottomed upon specious reasoning. Theatre operators determine their own admission prices. They do (93) so, whether they are affiliated or not, and whether they are operated first or subsequent-run, with an eye on what their competitors customarily charge. The price charged by a subsequent-run operator is not fixed by any agreement between the distributor and the first-run operator, but is fixed by the subsequent-run exhibitor himself with the view of making it low enough to induce patrons to wait until they can see the picture in his theatre. Ordinarily this price will be less than charged by the first-run but under some circumstances a subsequent-run operator can and does charge as much as, or even more than, a first-run. No ceiling prices are fixed by contract. The only real ceiling that may be said to exist is due to the economic fact that an exhibitor showing the product after it has lost some of its initial freshness and drawing power, ordinarily must charge less for the opportunity to see it. The only floor on prices is determined by the copyright owner in the lawful exercise of his right to license his product upon such terms as will ensure him a reasonable reward for his copyright. These are some of the considerations which point up the fallacy of the Government's claim that first-run theatres control more than their own business, and which show the futility of the Government's attempt to inflate the alleged monopoly of affiliated theatres to include independently owned and operated subsequent runs.

In addition to negotiating license contracts, it is the function of each film exchange when the release dates are known to book the pictures for exhibition on specific dates in each of the theatres where they are to be exhibited. Because of the limited number of prints which can be made available to each of the film exchanges, and because of the necessity of spacing prior and subsequent exhibitions, the booking procedure becomes highly technical and it is the function of the film exchange to arrange these bookings in theatres with which they have contracts so that these contracts may be fulfilled in all details with respect to the length of runs and clearances. The booking schedules must be so arranged and delivery dates so fixed that the exchange will be able to deliver the picture on the date fixed for its exhibition and to carry out fully the arrangements for the delivery of the prints and for their immediate return to the exchange after exhibition for repair and inspection before delivery to another exhibitor. There is no time for any print to be idle, they are constantly in motion, on exhibition or under repair.

Having dealt with production and distribution it is now appropriate to describe the theatres in which Paramount has some interest (which investments the Government asks the Court to strip away) and to review briefly the history of this integration between production, distribution and exhibition. In the course of this review it may be noted that not only is there no justification for the Government treating the theatres in which Paramount has some interest as lumped together with the theatres in which other companies have an interest, but it is even improper to lump together the theatres in which Paramount has an interest. The Government sometimes describes such theatres as if Paramount owned or controlled a vast circuit of over 1,500 theatres. This is completely contrary to the fact. In the following history it will become apparent that Paramount got into the exhibition business as a competitive measure and that when the Government urges that it should now be forced out of that business it is seeking not to advance competition, but to stifle Paramount's ability to compete.

As of March 31, 1945 Paramount had some financial interest in companies having interests in approximately 1,500 theatres. They are located in approximately 44 states. Of the theatres in which Paramount has any interest, there are only about 500 in which it has an interest representing more than 50 per cent of the voting control. The theatre investment is of very substantial importance to the company, being carried on the books at approximately $63,000,000. Paramount's return from its investment in the companies operating theatres is important as well as is its revenue from production and distribution. This business fact requires of this company miscellaneous services in the operation of theatres if the company is to survive. These theatres are not maintained or operated as instruments of monopoly. They are business responsibilities in which the stockholders of Paramount are intimately concerned. The executives of the operating companies are bound to so operate and manage these properties that they will produce the largest revenue by providing the best entertainment in competition with theatres of comparable quality, many of which are owned by other defendants in this case, but others of which are owned by those in no way connected with the case. The Court will recall that the total number of theatres in which Paramount has any interest amounts to less than 9% of the total theatres in the United States.

It might be well to say here again that the Government's attack on theatre ownership is not based upon any concern for the general public for whose entertainment or edification pictures are produced. It is based solely on the relatively unimportant segment of theatre competitors of the theatre-owning defendants who would like to see these defendants out of exhibition competition. It must be apparent that such a result would very surely deny to the public pictures (97) of the quality now produced for which the theatre-owning defendants now have some assurance of a market, justifying such substantial speculations.

Paramount has recognized from the start the necessity of procuring the most able and competent showmanship in the management of theatres in which it is interested and has been keenly aware of the fact that the successful operation of a modern picture theatre is primarily dependent upon the showmanship and ability of the local managers and co-owners to operate their theatres in the manner most satisfactory to their local patrons. Since Paramount emerged from its reorganization in this Court in 1935, and even before that time, beginning in 1932, the activities of the home office in respect of the operation of theatres have been completely decentralized and placed in the hands of local managers and operators. In most cases, these local operators own substantial financial interests in the owning or operating companies, or having profit sharing management contracts which give them incentive to produce results from their operations without regard to what other Paramount associates do. There are only two theatres, the Paramount Theatre in New York, and the Nawman Theatre in Kansas City, which are managed and operated from the New York office. All other theatres, including those in which Paramount owns the entire interest, are operated by local operators who are responsible for the operating policies of the theatres under their control. These men are given entire freedom in negotiating exhibition contracts with the salesmen of the various distributors including those of Paramount and are permitted to buy pictures for their theatres quite independently of each other and of the home office, predicated upon their local needs and the public tastes in their communities, and their ability as business men to make the best bargain for the pictures they need in order to operate their theatres successfully. This fact is persuasive evidence that no such combination or conspiracy as the Government suggests would or could exist.

The wholly owned theatres, that is, the theatres operated by companies which are wholly owned, unquestionably assure Paramount an important outlet for its product. The circumstance that other producers license their pictures to these and other theatres in which Paramount has an interest can give rise to no inference of monopoly or conspiracy. Every producer attempts to license his pictures for exhibition in the best theatres, and where Paramount or another defendant has the best theatre it is natural that other producers should license their pictures to them just as they license to the best theatres owned by non-defendant exhibitors.

With respect to the theatres operated by companies in which Paramount owns not more than a 50 per cent interest, the management of those companies is, in fact, controlled not by Paramount but by the local men, usually those owning the remaining financial interests. This results in many cases from the continuation of the same management which had made the operation successful before Paramount invested in it, and it is a part of the Paramount policy of assuring successful local operation. In such cases the responsibility for management usually falls upon one who may be fairly described as in a position like that of a managing partner, active in preserving his own interests, knowing the demands of the local community, interested primarily in local operation. Such operators conduct their business with little regard and almost no consultation with Paramount and the policies of local exhibition, including the negotiation of license contracts, are in such cases left entirely to the managing partner. Of course, Paramount pictures are usually shown in such theatres, and the favorable opportunity to show Paramount pictures was undoubtedly a consideration in Paramount's acquisition of an interest. But such local managers, deeply concerned with their own economic interests, would have no motive for participating in a combination or conspiracy with other producers of which Paramount and not they would be the beneficiaries. Indeed, their separate interests are quite inconsistent with any such combination or conspiracy. Nor are they interested in the operation of other theatres in other areas in which Paramount may have an interest. It is apparent, therefore, that such theatres cannot be lumped together with other Paramount theatres in which still others have interests, let alone lumping them with theatres of other defendants. We shall show that, in fact, there is no relationship between the licensing policy of theatres associated with Paramount in different sections of the country, that only the business interests of the theatres and their actual operators dictate the degree to which and the terms on which the pictures of other producers are licensed. There is no discernible nor possible pattern of conduct which can give rise to an inference of combination or conspiracy among the defendants.

Of course, in such cases, Paramount maintains a general fiscal supervision of the companies in which it has less than a majority interest, through its theatre department. The New York office of Paramount has a statistical department, an auditing department, tax department, real estate and insurance departments, and other similar departments unrelated to management of the theatres. In some cases an executive in the theatre department is an officer or a director of the theatre-operating company or an intermediate holding company. They, of course, sometimes attend meetings of stockholders and directors. But their function is not one of intimate control of management. It is one of advice and such financial supervision as is necessary to protect Paramount's investment against loss. While the theatre department often receives summaries of exhibition contracts which the local operators have made for the films of other distributors, it does not receive the contracts as such. Information regarding the contracts of such theatres with other distributors is confidential and is not made available to the distribution department. This is because of the keen rivalry between the departments in the Paramount organization.

The Government says it is not concerned with and will offer no proof of how any defendant interested in theatres came to have any of its present interests, and seeks this decree of divorcement without regard to any elements in that history. We think it important to indicate in a general way how the present business units organized. When that history is examined, it will be found that Paramount's interests in theatres were acquired in competition and for competitive purposes, and that throughout its history it has been, as it is today, engaged in most vigorous competition with its co-defendants all along the line.

The Paramount organization was not planned or created in advance; it is a natural business growth considered essential to business success, developing as a result of the various vicissitudes through which the business has passed.

I am going to save your Honors, if you will permit me to, the reading of a number of pages of the manuscript, which I would like to hand to the reporter, so it may be in the record, which deals with the early history of the Paramount Company and traces the development of feature pictures in the United States. Mr. Adolph Zukor, who at one time was president of Paramount and who is now chairman of the board, was the father of feature pictures in this country, and I have devoted a few pages here, which I will be glad to save your Honors listening to at this time, by putting them in the record, as to the development of feature pictures and the early history of Paramount, if I may have the Court's permission to hand four or five pages to the reporter. You will be able to take them in more painlessly at a later time.

In 1906, following early developments of "peep-shows" and nickelodeons by Edison and others, Mr. Adolph Zukor, former President and now Chairman of the Board of Paramount, and the organizer and creator of its predecessor, acquired his first interest in a theatre in association with William A. Brady. Brady and Zukor acquired a store on the south of Union Square and constructed a Pullman car inside, charged admission to people who came in and were privileged to sit in the observation end of the car and observe on a screen, about 20 feet beyond, pictures of passing scenery as if they were moving through the country. Zukor tried to interest producers in supplying similar travelogues, but they were too busy making inferior product. By 1907 or 1908, the so-called "chase" pictures had lost their appeal.

At that time Zukor and Brady had leases on about 14 nickelodeons and faced the necessity of going out of business or procuring better pictures. As none were available in this country, but better ones were made in Europe, Zukor procured from abroad a three-reel picture consisting of a hand-colored film of the Passion Play at Oberammergau. This film was exhibited in Newark and ran successfully for four months, and thereafter ran in the Zukor and Brady theatres in New York. As a result of this experience, Mr. Zukor was persuaded that people would be interested in novels and plays and stories on the screen. He had no experience in production and no thought of producing pictures, but when he approached the American producers he could not arouse any enthusiasm. They uniformly expressed the belief that people would never sit through pictures that ran three, four or five reels.

After futile efforts to persuade them that they were wrong, Zukor then went into the vaudeville theatres where chase pictures were then used to empty the theatres. As a vaudeville operator, he was associated with Mr. Loew, who at that time had a number of vaudeville theatres. In 1910, the Zukor and Brady theatres and the Loew theatres were merged in what was then known as Loew Enterprises, in which Mr. Zukor obtained a stock interest. He then devoted himself to a study of motion pictures, traveling through Europe, and observing audiences to verify his judgment of their interest in long, better-quality film.

In 1911, he determined to present successful plays in motion pictures. Sarah Bernhardt had in the meantime appeared in Paris in a stage play called "Queen Elizabeth", and Zukor was informed that she would be willing to sell the picture rights for $35,000. Although the price was considered almost prohibitive, Zukor paid it, procured the picture, and booked it for exhibition. He had to book it in a legitimate theatre because there were no ways of distribution then which were not monopolized. He booked it at a theatre in New York and one in Chicago. It was a great success. The first successful feature picture in America. At that time what there was of this industry was completely monopolized by the Motion Picture Patents Company, a patent pool, and its affiliate General Film Company, neither of which had any connection with the present defendants or their predecessors.

The system was that there was a patent pool which licensed the patented projector, refusing to license unless films were also licensed from it. There was a group of all the producers at that time operating, and there was a distributing company, the General Film Company, and the arrangements were such that no one could produce a picture, no one could distribute it, and no one could license it because of these illegal tying clauses to each step in that process by which every exhibitor who dealt with the General Film Company was restricted to the exhibition of those pictures alone which were distributed by the distributing company. This monopoly was so secure that it resisted all initiative in the improvement of pictures. It refused to distribute the new and superior films introduced by Zukor. Thereupon Zukor set out to improve the art against the resistance of monopoly and he broke it down, and eventually they could not do without his pictures. His first act was to organize a company which is a predecessor of the defendant Paramount. A brief history of this company shows that on June 1, 1912, Famous Players Film Company was organized by Mr. Zukor in association with Daniel Frohman and Edward S. Porter. Frohman was a well known producer and Porter was a director of motion pictures who had been associated with Edison. The plan of this company was to present successful plays with famous stars on the screen. The first picture was "The (106) Prisoner of Zenda" with J. K. Hackett. General Film Company at first declined to license this picture, but when it was shown at the Lyceum and was a great success, General Film Company changed its tune and sought to license the picture. The license was granted which permitted such exhibition by exhibitors using patented projectors and Zukor distributed the picture not through the General Film Company but through states rights' distributors for a flat sum in each territory. Thus you see the breaking of a monopoly by the sheer quality of the product.

The company continued to make pictures in which were starred James O'Neill, Mrs. Fiske, Mary Pickford, William Farnum and John Barrymore, among others. These pictures were all distributed in the same manner through state rights' buyers. Several other companies followed his example and commenced production and distribution of similar pictures. The influence of the General Film Company was still present. Many exhibitors were fearful that the General Film Company would refuse to supply them with any pictures if they leased from other companies, and it was only by virtue of the policy of the new producers who had entered the field to supply a sufficient quantity of pictures to meet their cus- (107) tomers' needs that the more progressive exhibitors were encouraged to break away from the General Film Company and contract for the better pictures which its competitors were offering. These companies were able to furnish a dependable supply of 52 pictures a year, which was only sufficient for a few theatres which ran the same picture for a week. A much larger group of theatres could only be won by better pictures if they could be supplied with two pictures a week, since their neighborhoods would not support the same picture for an entire week.

It became increasingly evident that a comprehensive and coordinated distributing organization was necessary.

In 1914 Paramount Pictures Corporation which was organized by State Right Distributors but was not connected with the present defendant or its predecessors, was organized as a distributing company because of dissatisfaction with existing methods. In May, 1914, this distributing company entered into individual contracts with Famous Players, the Lasky Company and the Bosworth Company for a five-year period whereby the distributing company distributed their product through the United States. Each of the producers was obligated to supply a specified number of pictures, in all totalling 80. It was contemplated that the distributor would make up the difference from other producers, so that there would be a full program of 104 a year by acquiring pictures elsewhere.

On March 1, 1915, these contracts were extended for a period of 25 years, but there had been a considerable amount of friction between the producing companies and the distributing company. As a result and in order to bring about a closer union in the interests of the producer and distributor and to protect the interests of the former, Famous Players in 1916 agreed to purchase 50 per cent of the stock of the distributing company. As the business developed and particular stars obtained a large following, some of them refused to permit their pictures to become a part of the distributing program. The distributing Paramount organization required exhibitors to take all its product, good, bad or indifferent, and stars, such as Mary Pickford, were unwilling to make pictures to be distributed by Paramount because the method of leasing 52 or 104 pictures annually at a flat price per picture prevented payment to them measured by the box office receipts of their own pictures. The most prominent stars at that time were insisting upon a share in these receipts. Furthermore, they felt that their own dramatic performance if sold as an item of a program for which the exhibitor paid a flat sum per picture regardless of merit would be impaired in sales value.

To meet this situation, Famous Players organized Artcraft Pictures Corporation. Its object was to create a trade-mark denoting pictures of the highest grade which should be released to exhibitors without requiring them to take any other pictures. Among the Artcraft stars besides Mary Pickford were Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, George M. Cohan and others.

About this time, Famous Players-Lasky was incorporated and acquired the stock of Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and Bosworth, Inc. and its affiliate Morosco Photoplay Company. The reasons for the organization of this corporation were numerous. Its constituent units were not in competition with each other in the distribution of pictures but were severally under contract with Paramount Pictures Corporation to furnish the latter with a certain number of pictures a year. Each company was independently operated, whereas the best interests of the producers and distributors required that their activities should be coordinated to the end that pictures provided by them would as a whole constitute a diversified and balanced program.

On the artistic side, consolidation appeared to offer great possibilities by giving the directors, scenario writers, camera men, and others, a greater field of selection and a maximum use of the talent of each individual. The consolidation did not have the effect of lessening competition between the companies since they were not in competition.

Famous Players purchased the remaining stock of Paramount Pictures Corporation, the distributing company, in 1916, and by early 1917 had acquired all of it. The companies were formally merged in December, 1917. During 1916, in addition to Paramount, there were many other companies engaged in distribution.)

Mr. Seymour: Now I am going to pass to the conditions which gave rise to the entry of Paramount into the exhibition business. From the very beginning of this industry the tendency to organize chains of theatres was prevalent. This movement developed greatly in 1910, 1911 and 1912, and was very general by 1919. Not only was there concentration of theatre interests in chains, but a number of theatre owners consolidated their purchases by entering into booking arrangements for a whole group of theatres. Thus we find that the concentration of theatre ownership through chains and booking arrangements antedated the acquisition of theatres by any of the defendants and it cannot be doubted that this method of theatre organization would have persisted even if the defendants had acquired no theatres or if they were now to dispose of them. There are now approximately 100 chains of theatres in the United States in which defendants have no interest. Their existence is recognized in the Consent Decree. Nothing which happens in this court can affect these chains.

When these consolidations and combinations of theatres were well established in all principal cities in 1917, First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. was formed. It was to enable Paramount's predecessor to survive this competition, that compelled Mr. Zukor to put it into the theatre business.

The First National organization was composed of 29 signatories, representing 23 distinct interests, which among themselves controlled the purchase of film by a very large number of the leading theatres throughout the United States.

The activities of this organization and its original franchise holders were not long limited to a combination for cooperative purchasing of pictures for exhibition in the best theatres in the principal key cities throughout the country and general distribution through exchanges located in these cities of the pictures so purchased. As a matter of fact, the First National group actually purchased but two finished pictures in the open market, soon finding that that method would not supply its theatres even when those pictures were combined with other state rights pictures. It would not supply these theatres who joined in this combination with a satisfactory program of good pictures on a reasonably definite schedule. This group, representing all of these theatre outlets, thereafter, within three months after its organization, began an aggressive program of negotiation for contracts with well-known stars and directors then in the employ of other producers for the exclusive production of numbers of pictures to be delivered in schedules extending over a period of years.

As Paramount pictures were then generally recognized to be the best on the market, its stars and directors had come to be best known. Accordingly, representatives of First National began to negotiate with most of these stars and directors notwithstanding their unexpired contracts with Famous Players-Lasky (Paramount's predecessor). The stars were told that they would make more money and have greater freedom if they formed their own distributing companies and distributed through First National. Offers of substantial financial assistance were made to them. Among the stars of Famous Players with whom such negotiations were had were Mary Pickford, Jack Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Tom Meighan, Cecil DeMille and Wallace Reid. Mary Pickford, Famous Players' greatest star and then the outstanding star in the industry, was enticed away by First National. Other stars were also taken away by fantastic inducements.

The purchase of pictures in the open market as well as the making of the contracts with stars and directors for the production of pictures was in each case submitted to a vote of the First National theatre owners who were franchise holders, and the approval of two-thirds was required for purchase. When such approval was obtained all franchise holders were bound to take all the pictures purchased and to bear their proportionate share of the cost of production. The cost was distributed among the several franchise holders in proportions agreed upon the time of organization. Such franchise holders then had the right, within his territory to do what he saw fit with each picture. In practice each holder ran the pictures in his own theatres and then distributed them among other distributors in his territory who paid him for the privilege. So not only the member theatre owners of this group were bound to take all the pictures that the group produced, and to share the cost of them, but that was spread down through these leading theatre owners into the territories in which they individually operated, 23 of them covering the whole of the United States and the movement began to tie up not only the members of this group but to bring into it every other important theatre that they could get to take a sub-franchise. Eventually a central office was organized and the distributing offices of the group came under centralized control. A system was developed for making sub-franchises and requiring the sub-franchise to assume part of the cost.

In 1917 the First National distributed two pictures, in 1918, sixteen, and in 1919, twenty-five. Its various members (114) had in their exchanges many additional pictures which when added to the First National pictures by the end of 1918, furnished a program of at least one picture a week and by 1919 the First National Company itself had announced that it had contracts indicating that with the aid of the outside pictures purchased by its several members, it would be able to distribute a program of approximately sixty pictures in 1920. The program was actually released by it. Its avowed intention was to distribute enough pictures to supply all the time of all the theatres of its members which changed their program once a week.

Many of the theatres owned by First National franchise holders had for a long time prior to 1918 exhibited a large number of Paramount pictures. While many of them continued, even after the organization of First National, to endeavor to purchase some Paramount pictures, substantially all the First National members gave preference to the First National pictures in which they had made a considerable investment. The natural result was the gradual cutting down of Paramount pictures in those theatres. This was furthered by vigorous, hostile attacks upon Mr. Zukor and Famous Players (Paramount's predecessor).

A few of the members while giving First National pictures preference continued to take a substantial number of Famous Players-Lasky pictures and paid reasonable prices (115) therefor. Many others while continuing to take Paramount pictures insisted upon prices which Famous Players were not satisfied with and on which it could not make a profit. Others refused to accept the prices which Famous Players deemed fair, then failed to play the pictures contracted for and ultimately boycotted them, actively engaging in propaganda to spread the boycott to all the pictures in their territories. Thus by 1919 Famous Players faced this situation: a group of owners of the best theatres in the large cities of the United States, many of whom had been its best customers, had combined together for cooperative buying and had expanded into an organization at first loosely knit, but rapidly growing more centralized, distributing throughout the United States a substantial number of pictures pursuant to a publicly announced policy and had threatened to distribute sufficient pictures to take the entire time of the former Paramount customers. The inevitable result was to exclude all Paramount pictures from their previous market in the first-run theatres owned or controlled by First National. In addition to the direct loss of revenue from rentals, the indirect loss of rentals of smaller theatres in surrounding territory, due to a failure of adequate exploitation, was inevitable unless Paramount took steps to protect its market.

Within a comparatively short period of time after its organization, the twenty-nine franchise holders of First National, subfranchised about 3,300 exhibitors controlling more than 4,000 theatres throughout the United States.

Mr. Zukor early saw this result and in 1917 endeavored to make a working arrangement with First National as a booking office to book cooperatively pictures in its several theatres, including Paramount pictures. He continued in this effort and endeavored to persuade First National to cease trying to steal his stars and directors. Not only had they taken away some, but they were destroying the morale of the rest, whose demands for higher salaries very much increased the cost of the pictures and therefore increased film rentals which had to be secured. These efforts were unavailing. First National boasted publicly that they had Famous Players-Lasky whipped and up a tree. Mr. Zukor was opposed to Famous Players expanding into the exhibition field, feeling that it was better for each element of the industry to specialize, but he and his directors nevertheless saw that unless the exhibitors took a similar view, Famous Players would be compelled against its will to enter the field of exhibition as a means of self-preservation. At this time outside of small interests in two theatres in Ohio, Paramount had no interest in theatres. But the First National movement was growing, the propaganda against Famous Players-Lasky (Paramount) was growing, and faced with this situation Paramount between 1919 and 1923 acquired an interest in theatres and theatre circuits involving some 300 theatres in order to secure an outlet for its pictures. The purpose of this acquisition was not to monopolize, but to survive in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures. Thus the very integration now attacked had its origin in competition and not in monopoly.

I am going to be through in about five minutes.

In 1921 the Federal Trade Commission instituted proceedings against Famous Players (the predecessor of Paramount) and its affiliates and officers, charging a conspiracy to unduly hinder competition in production, distribution and exhibition of motion picture films and to control, dominate and monopolize the motion picture industry. The petition sought an order from the Commission directing the Famous Players group to divert themselves of all interests either direct or indirect which they might have in theatres or to divest themselves of interests in producing companies. After an investigation which continued for over four years and upon a record consisting of over 17,000 pages, the Commission issued an order directing the respondents to cease and desist from acquiring theatres and also prohibiting certain trade practices. The Commission filed a petition for enforcement, but withdrew its complaint as to theatre acquisition and in considering that case the Circuit Court of Appeals in this circuit held:

"1. That there is free competition among producers and distributors for the distribution and marketing of their pictures;

"2. There is a lack of monopolization by the respondent, and in fact lack of ability to achieve a monopoly;

"3. There is a state of free competition in the industry sufficiently shown to negative the finding of the Commission that the respondent dominates the industry."

Thus it has been judicially determined in this circuit that at least as late as January 1, 1926 Paramount's predecessor was not guilty of the matters principally charged in this suit. Following this initial acquisition Paramount's predecessor acquired other interests often in competition with other defendants or independent chains. The purpose of these acquisitions was to assure further outlets for its product to enable it more effectively to compete with other producer-exhibitor defendants, to prevent its being frozen out from the acquisition of theatres by its competitors and to furnish an additional source of revenue for the stockholders. There was no purpose to monopolize, there was no monopoly and nowhere is there evidence that as a result of this acquisition a conspiracy or combination to monopolize was created. The acquisitions made down to the year 1930 were considered by Judge Caffey in the Quittner case, in this District, involving a charge of national conspiracy to monopolize, and he there found, and stated in his oral opinion dismissing the complaint, that there was a complete absence of evidence of conspiracy to monopolize and ample evidence of intense competition. Evidence of such conspiracy or combination is equally lacking now, and it will be abundantly clear that there is intense competition in this industry.

Under its former name Paramount Publix Corporation, Paramount was adjudicated a bankrupt in this court early in 1933. Its affairs were placed in the hands of trustees in bankruptcy and thereafter upon the enactment of Section 77B a petition was filed under that section and reorganization proceedings were instituted. The corporation was finally reorganized under the present name and its assets were turned back to it in June, 1935. Many of the theatres of the Paramount Publix Company were integreated and were also reorganized during this period and many of the theatres belonging to these theatre companies were dropped during the process of this reorganization. In such situations the trustees under the supervision of this court determined what action should be taken to protect the interests of Paramount in its theatres and such steps as were taken with the approval of the court after proper proceedings for their consideration by creditors and others interested. Since Paramount has emerged from the reorganization there have been some changes in the theatre holdings, none of which have resulted from any attempt to monopolize and the aggregate of which, through no stretch of the imagination, can be called monopoly.

It is Paramount's position that there is and has been no combination or conspiracy to monopolize, that the Government's proofs will fail completely to show law violation and that, at the end of the case, the court should find that Paramount and its competitors are free to continue the competition which has created so many public benefits. That result will continue to assure the public of increased improvements in pictures, any other would seriously prejudice Paramount's ability to continue to do so. There will be found to be no basis whatever for hamstringing Paramount in its competitive position or denying to it the opportunity to exhibit its pictures in its own theatres or to continue its interest in the theatres through which it is rendering the public distinctive service.

I must thank the Court for its great patience, and I am sorry I had to read and be so long about it.

DEFENDANT LOEW'S OPENING.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, may I inquire at what hour the Court is going to adjourn, so I may cut my cloth accordingly?

Judge Hand: Half-past four.

Mr. Davis: I appear in this case for Loew's, Inc. and for the subsidiary corporations who, by the bill of complaint, are identified with it. These are, chiefly, Marcus Loew Booking Agency, which is a 100 per cent owned corporation and a mere operating department and some 50-odd minor corporations which hold title to real estate, on which are situated theatres that the Loew's Incorporated owns and operates. It is a corporation organized under the laws of Delaware and has 22,600 stockholders, more or less, and something like thirteen or fourteen thousand employees.

So far as the major corporation knows, no officer and no stockholder owns any stock in any of the other corporations here at bar; nor, so far as Loew's, Inc. knows, do any of the officers or stockholders of the other corporations here at bar own any stock in Loew's. There are no directors in Loew's who are common to any of the other defendants at bar. There are no officers of Loew's who are common to any of the other defendants at bar. So far as corporate organization, ownership and identity are concerned, there is no contact whatever between Loew's and the other defendants at bar.

For that defendant, I propose, without wearying the Court more than may be necessary, to state what I believe the charges the Government brings against us, and the answers to those charges which we will undertake to support by proof. I say the charges which I believe the Government brings against us. Ever since this suit was brought, there has been a constant effort on the part of these defendants, by motion, by interrogatories, by argument, to get from the Government a clear-cut statement of what it was we were charged with and what the Government believed we were guilty of. I say that has been continuous. It has. His Honor, Judge Goddard, knows that we have pounded on the door of the Court more than once on that subject.

Therefore, I confess I have a feeling of disappointment that my brother Wright, in his opening statement this morning, did not help us to clarify these issues by a succinct statement of just why the Government thought the Act had been violated. Instead, he threw himself back upon the trial brief after reading and re-reading the trial brief, through.

Confessing my own obtuseness, I find myself still in doubt as to just what the concrete issue is that the Government wishes to lay before your Honors.

I shall have something more to say about that trial brief in a moment, but it is perfectly obvious that certain, fundamental fallacies underlie the Government's position, and the first is the one referred to by my brother Seymour. The Government builds up a statistical monopoly here by a process of addition, and having added together all the corporations that all these defendants own, it says, "Look what a large block of corporations there are embraced in this monopoly!" Having added together all the revenues that all of these corporations receive from all their activities, he says, "Look what a preponderating monopoly there is in this industry!"

The same basis of addition could build up a charge of absolute monopoly in any industry, if you took all of its units and brought them into your equation.

If United States Steel, the Bethlehem, the Republic, Youngstown, the National and whatever, were all added together as to output, as to revenue, as to customers, you could prove by that simple process of addition that they had a one hundred per cent monopoly in the United States. If they were combined, that testimony might be relevant. But if they are wholly independent and separate units, that total means nothing on earth. It is only fit for statistics in the National Year Book to prove what the national output is.

I object also to the implication which the Government attaches to the word "independent." It speaks throughout its brief, its statistics and its argument, of the five defendants here at the bar and the independents. Now we contend that if the word "independent" is to be applied according to its meaning, every one of these defendants is just as much an independent as Joe Zilch, who owns a theatre down the street; and unless the word "independent" is understood in a purely symbolical and hypothetical sense, as indicating those who are outside of the bill of complaint and those who are within it, we shall object to its use.

I object also to the use of the word "affiliates" in the Government's brief and in much of its statistical tables. Corporations are spoken of as affiliates. Affiliates of whom? Affiliates of Warner's? Affiliates of Loew's? Affiliates of (125)
Paramount's? We are not told that. If they had contact with anyone of the corporations named in the bill of complaint either by ownership, either by contract, either by license, they are identified as affiliates not of the affiliator, if I may coin that word, but of this entire group at which the complaint is aimed.

And before I get to the trial brief, I want to say one more thing. I really do not understand the easy and somewhat cavalier method in which counsel for the Government brush aside the consent decree in this case as a mere three-year experiment which has outlived its life, and which he would lead the court to believe is no longer a subsisting order of this tribunal. Now nothing could be more mistaken than that. In June 1940 we began the trial of this case. It was opened in solemn form, and I fancy that most of the counsel at this table will run the risk of repeating some of the things they said on that occasion.

In November 1940, after a long and protracted and very diligent conference between counsel for the defendants and counsel for the Government, a consent decree was offered to the court. It was signed. It became operative and is just as alive today as it was when his Honor, Judge Goddard, put the judicial signature on it. It is going to crop up again (126) in this case from time to time; and perhaps digressing from the discussion of my particular and individual client would not be a waste of time, if we stop and think what that consent decree had in it, I will make that summary just as brief as I can.

It had 23 paragraphs. The first was a declaration of jurisdiction. The second was an announcement of the consent of the parties. The third was a paragraph requiring trade showing which was to be inoperative, that requirement, if there were no decree against the three without—what we without reflection call the minors—within a specified time; for the minors feeling themselves wrapped around with a robe of perfect innocence that no charge could penetrate, refused to consent to anything, and left the five majors who are represented up and down this table to make a consent decree which put upon them certain requirements as to the conduct of their business, not shared by any other person in the industry. We consented to that, and we did so for the obvious reason that we wanted peace. We wanted peace from the Government if we could get it; and we also wanted peace from the multitude of claimants in these seventeen thousand other theatres who were bombarding us with their complaints of mistreatment of this sort and of that. (127)
We wanted peace from them by giving them a tribunal to which they might resort without any other formality or delay attendant upon a trial in court. I venture to say that no decree was ever negotiated with a more earnest effort on the part of the parties to it to solve the difficulties attendant upon the industry and to quiet the complaints by which it was beset.

Clause three, requiring a trade showing of films expired when there was no decree against the non-assenting defendants.

Block booking, say more than five features at one time, expired for the same reason, there having been no decree against the minors within the time specified.

Section 4, forbidding the forcing of shorts, so-called—and I take it your Honors at this time are sufficiently expert in the industry to know what that means—that is still in force. We cannot force the purchaser of our films to take undesired shorts, and any contract to that effect is arbitrable.

Section 5 of the decree forbids overall contracts which cover a territory larger than the individual exchange by which they are negotiated. Each of these producing companies has exchanges throughout the country who are really their sales agents. We have 32 such in Loew's, Inc., and this provision makes it mandatory that contracts made by those exchanges shall not run outside their territorial limits. (128)

The obvious effort was to forbid a nation-wide sale of film. That is still in force.

Clause 6 of the consent decree commands the defendants to sell to anybody, everybody, any applicant, on some run. We can no longer say to a theatre, "We won't sell you at all." Some run on the film we must give him. That is still in force. And if we decline to offer him the run to which he might fairly aspire that is an arbitrable question.

Section 7 of the decree deals with offensive films and gives the purchaser the right to return them if they are found to be offensive to public morals or taste in the locality in which they are exhibited. That is still in force.

The provision for the arbitration of clearance in paragraph 8 is still in force, and the declaration of this court stands today as firmly as when it was first given, that clearance reasonable as to time and area is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. What is reasonable as to time and area is made arbitrable, but the practice of clearance, I respectfully submit, is the law of this case.

Section 9 of the consent decree forbids the arbitrary refusal to deliver films in order to expose the unfavored purchaser to discrimination, and the refusal is made arbitrable. (129)

Section 10 of the decree forbids the refusal of a requested run unless after arbitration it is shown to be properly requested.

Section 11 forbids new acquisitions of theatres within the three-year limit, which has expired by lapse of time.

Section 12 provides for a conditional release of these earlier clauses as to trade showing and block booking if prior to June 1, 1942. Universal, United Artists and Columbia are not brought under the same restriction.

Section 13 declares that the operation of the decree covers only the Continental United States.

Section 14 preserves to the producer the right to road show his pictures.

Section 15 declares that the decree shall not relate to franchises entered into prior to June 6, 1940, all of which have practically expired now by lapse of time.

Section 16 provides that nothing shall be a violation of the decree unless a refusal to arbitrate or perform.

Section 17 preserves to the defendants the right to license their own theatres for the exhibition of any or all pictures which it may distribute.

Section 18 gives to the Department of Justice the fullest right to inspect the books, records, correspondence and so forth of the defendants, and to interview their officers and (130) employees. The learned Attorney General was kind enough to praise us for the cooperation we have given the Government in its preparation of this case. No request which they have made for information has ever been refused, and at considerable cost and expense to ourselves. We have assembled all of the statistical information they might desire. But perhaps we should not assume too holy an attitude in that respect, for we have signed a decree which gives the Department of Justice entire right at its discretion to demand just that thing.

Section 19 of the decree gives us the right, unhampered, to select our own customers and make our own trades with them. That is still in force.

Section 21 of the decree is a self-denying ordinance by counsel for the Government and on its behalf which provides that for the period of three years it will bring no action for divorcement of the defendants' theatres. That is not a limitation on the life of the decree. It does not make it a purely experimental decree to operate for three years and no more. It is a self-denying ordinance by the Government for that length of time, and obviously the time has expired.

Section 22 sets up an arbitration system with complete machinery, an administrator, local arbitrators, a court of appeals for arbitration, which the Government to the contrary notwithstanding, we believe—and in that we think we would be supported if there were any way to canvass (131) them—the vast majority of the industry we believe, have been a helpful and a wise and a prudent solution of the individual problems with which this industry is surrounded.

And then finally we come to Section 23, where jurisdiction is retained enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the court at any time more than three years after the date of its entry for any modification thereof.

Now manifestly the Government does not choose to take that route. Manifestly it does not want to endeavor to improve this decree. Manifestly it does not want to inquire what imperfections, if any, are to be found in the machinery it sets up. Not at all. The Government has a hobby here and it is determined to ride it to the end, no matter what may be the effect upon the industry; and with great respect, no matter what distortion of fact may be necessary to support it. The Government's hobby is that a cure-all for all the troubles with which this industry has been afflicted is to cut off production of films from their exhibition, and when that panacea has been applied, then peace is to reign. And the 17,000 theatres throughout the United States are going to find (132) themselves treated with such equal justice that there will be nothing left to complain about, and theatres A, B and C on the same street will cheerfully accept whatever they are able to bargain with the defendants for, and there will be no longer a complaints that theatre A gets the film before theatre C.

Well, I don't know of any similar instance, if your Honors please, where a Sherman Act case has been brought against a whole industry with a blunderbuss charge that everything is so wrong that the structure of the industry, as my brother Wright says, must be compulsorily altered.

In the steel industry, if you please, to go back to that for an illustration, the United States Steel Company may produce as much as it pleases. It must not be permitted to have its own showrooms and sell. Henry Ford may pour out automobiles as fast as his striking workmen will permit, but he must not have his own showrooms and he must not make his own retail sales. All that must be committed to somebody else, otherwise you would have a monopolization in the industry.

Loew's, Incorporated may turn out, as it believes it does —and I suppose all of our clients have the same feeling—the best films that are produced in the United States. They cost us about $1,700,000 now on the average to produce. But it (133) must not show them. It must take that film and announce that on such a day this film is going to be ready for public exhibition. I don't know whether my brother wants competitive bids for it; I don't know whether he wants it sent to every city in the country so that everybody may exhibit it at the same time; but the one thing that Loew's must not do is to show that film in its own theatres.

And the second thing which is almost equally reprehensible by the Government's standard is that it must not permit any of these other defendants to show it in their theatres; and about that I want to have something to say in a moment. That is the panacea, the mustard plaster, if I may become colloquial, that the Government wants to apply to this industry, in a sincere effort—and we give them credit for sincerity—in a sincere effort to protect the country against monopolistic practices.

Now I say we have got to go back to the trial brief for our idea of the Government's theory. As I read that trial brief—and I have read it and reread it and read it again, in an earnest effort primarily on my own behalf, then on behalf of my clients, and now, I hope, on behalf of the court, to see if I could get at the skeleton of this thing. What were the specific issues concerning which the Government had accumulated this vast amount of literature and statistics with (134) which it now promises to regale the court? They say in opening that the main question—and they say this again in closing—Can the requirements of the Sherman Act as applied to the producer-exhibitor defendants be satisfied without divesting them of their theatres?

Now what are the respects in which it goes on to describe the Sherman Act as violated? The first appears early in their brief. A concerted monopolization by the five majors and the three minors which justifies divorcement. Now the word of course there that is material is the word "concerted." It is concert of action at which the Sherman Law aims. It is combinations, contracts, conspiracies, at which the Sherman Law is aimed, and if we are going to prove a concerted monopolization it must be not a matter of accident but a matter of will and intent participated in by these accused defendants.

We deny it. We say there is no such concerted monopolization; we say there is not an industry in which the units are more at large or freer, or less subject one to the will of the other; that the Government on that point must utterly fail. Even if it prevailed there is still a vast gulf between their complaint of monopolization and their proposed remedy of divorcement between exhibition and production. (135)

They must show at some stage of the case that production on the one hand, exhibition on the other, and the two combined are the source of the monopoly which, in the second place, they must prove to be the result of some concerted action.

Now the next thing which I extract from this trial brief is the alleged existence of certain local monopolies. Having charged a concerted monopolization industry-wide and the country over, they then charge local monopolies. They say that these occur in 73 cities of over one hundred thousand population, and that in those 73 cities this monopolistic combine has taken to itself all of the first-run theatres with their large revenues. I pause a moment at that charge, because unless I am mistaken as to the future progress of this case, it is just there that the largest draft is going to be drawn upon your Honors' time and patience. If these monopolies are to be considered one by one, it is as one by one that they must be proven, for the proof of a local monopoly in Bangor, Maine, affords no room for inference, much less proof, of the existence of one in San Antonio, Texas; and therefore we shall demand that instead of confronting us with a mere catalogue of towns, the situation in each of these towns shall be inquired into to determine whether the Government's statistics which are confined to these five defendants, do or do (136) not exhibit a monopoly in that area.

Let me say in passing, as far as Loew's Incorporated is concerned, we have exhibition theatres in but 26 of these 73 cities, and in not one of those cities in which we are exhibiting do we exhibit without active competition. In twelve of the cities out of our twenty-six we are confronted by first-run theatres from anywhere from one to three of our co-defendants, and in 14 of them we are confronted by first-run theatres owned by wholly independent—meaning extra suit—owners.

Now, how can it be said that we monopolize 73 cities? And if we are going to be charged with that, we shall ask the Government to come forward city by city and prove it.

Then we come to the question of trade practices. That is the third thing which I extract from this trial brief. Trade practices—and I have catalogued 7 of them which are mentioned in the brief. They object to our license agreements, and call attention to the fact that in many of their clauses—the clauses in the license agreements—are with many of the corporations very much the same. So they are. I don't know of any industry which does not show a marked tendency to formalize and standardize particular contracts. Indeed, in some industries it is commanded by law, as in the insurance (137) industry, railroad shipments, and there is hardly an industry where the tendency—and I think it may be ascribed either to the astuteness or to the indolence of their lawyers, I don't know which—but for one reason or another they have a tendency to standardize forms. But when your Honors come to look at those of these defendants, you will find that in material respects there is no harmony between them at all.

Then the objection is that we fixed prices. Of course we do. We have something to sell. I go into my shoemaker's and ask the price of a pair of shoes, and it is five dollars. He has fixed the price on that pair of shoes and I pay it. It is a price-fixing transaction, and, indeed, I know of no commercial transaction which is engaged in for profit and gain that has not an element of price in it. And so as copyright owners we say to these licensees, "We expect to receive such a percentage of your gross receipts, and because we expect to take our profit out of your gross receipts, we want some sort of a governor as to the way in which those gross receipts shall be earned and computed." We have a perfect right to say, "We will take so much of the gross receipts provided it is based on a charge of 75 cents per head of the people who come into the theatre." And on that we are willing to stand with the Government in dispute and controversy until—well, we know what the longest time is. That is the time to which I was referring.

Now they next object to the practice of first-runs, and they say that that is an evil. The value of the films, says the Government's trial brief, inevitably decreases in proportion to its lateness. One would think so. It is not at all surprising. There is more money made in the first-run theatre than there is in the tenth, because human nature has that indescribable curiosity that makes it want to see something as soon as it is out, and before anybody else has shown it. But I wonder if my friend has forgotten the original complaint, not the amended complaint, but the original complaint filed by the Government in this action. Let me read paragraph 120 on page 61 of that complaint:

"Metropolitan first-run theatres, sometimes referred to in the industry as metropolitan de luxe theatres, supply a market for motion pictures which is of vital importance to their profitable exhibition and subsequent exploitation. By their exhibition in these theatres, coupled with the various forms of advertising that accompany such exhibition, such theatres promote and control the value of pictures to subsequent run exhibitors. The owners of subsequent run theatres as well as the public are thereby made conscious of the existence of particular motion pictures. The reaction of audiences to the exhibition of pictures in metropolitan de luxe theatres is largely determinative on the popularity and success of pictures on subsequent run. Furthermore, a large part of the gross revenue from the exhibition of a picture is derived from the first-run exhibition in metropolitan de luxe theatres."

And so say we all of us.

Clearance I have touched on. Minimum admission prices I have touched on; and the price-fixing I have alluded to.

Now they say there are certain interparty agreements. To show you the sort of—it is very hard for me to pare down my vocabulary to the limits of parliamentary etiquette—to show you the sort of shall we say facts and figures which are presented by my friend's schedules in his trial brief: I am on the proposition now that there are certain interparty agreements, that these five have grouped together and bound themselves one to another by agreement which destroys the freedom of action in the motion picture field. And in the Government's trial brief, page 17, there are three pages, or is it four, devoted to a catalogue of towns in which some of these malicious defendants had licensed films to each other. It bears the flaming legend: "The division of major first-run (140) films during the 1943-1944 season among the theatres of the producer-exhibitor defendants and independents in the 73 cities with over a hundred thousand population in which the defendants are charged with monopolizing theatre operations is shown in the following table."

Well, I am not going to go over this. I just want to start with the top line. New York, New York. When we get to Loew's, Loew's is charged with a division of major first-run films in New York with Loew's, itself, and Paramount and an independent. Now, if Loew's had made a bargain with Paramount and an independent that nobody else should get any of its films, and it would whack up on the even, that would be one thing. But when we get to the facts of that particular entry, the division with Paramount, listed, solemnly listed, here as a division of films and evidentiary of master agreements, is one single film of Loew's leased to the Paramount Theatre in the past ten years.

Now is it any wonder that we want to look at these tables our friend is presenting with so much aplomb and so much assurance?

And then they close with the assertion which brings me to the last thing I want to say, that all defendants are parties to a general price-fixing combination, which, of course, we deny, and that each producer-defendant is an illegal monopoly per se. Well, that puts us to our trumps. The Government having failed hypothetically to prove that there is any contract between us, then proceeds to attack us on the theory of divide and conquer, and hang us one by one. Well, if we are to be hung one by one, and are to be tested, each one of us as a monopoly per se, then it does impose upon the defendants, as your Honors can see, a very considerable responsibility to detail their history, to describe their practices, to exhibit their assets and to show just what they have individually done. I regret to say that is going to take time. We might perhaps stand on the proposition that the Government could not prove it. It may be at some stage of the case we will urge that proposition on your Honors. But if we are not successful in our initial approach, it stands to reason, of course, that we will take no chances, and your Honors may be confronted by a good deal of proof on that subject.

What will it show as to Loew's, in brief? And I am not going into detail. It will show that it sprang from Marcus Loew's Penny Arcades in New York which began in 1903. It was not until 1920 that it went into the making of pictures, when it bought the Metro Corporation. By common consent, the corporation was making very bad pictures. Then it bought the Goldwyn Corporation and the Mayer interests. It now conducts its own studios in Culver City, California.

How many theatres does it own? Remember that the primary charge here is a monopolization of first-run theatres. There are in the United States, according to the last figures from the Government's trial brief, exactly 17,640 motion picture theatres. Loew's owns 129 the country over. The greatest concentration of ownership is in the City of New York where it owns sixty theatres. The historical result of the origin of Loew's was when Marcus Loew began buying up derelict legitimate theatres, and by the time he went into production had 56; and I might say in passing we have fewer theatres today than we had when this suit began. We own 129 theatres. Sixty of them are in New York City, quite a large group. How does it compare with the total of the theatres in New York City? There are in New York City 658 motion picture theatres. And if your Honors do not believe that there is competition in motion pictures in New York City and in the motion picture business, I must respectfully invite you to imitate the late and beloved John Finley and take a voyage on foot around the Island, then I think you will answer by perversion of the Christopher Wren motto, "Si quaeris testimonium circumspice."

I was amazed to hear my friend say that Loew's and RKO monopolize the first-run pictures in New York. That was certainly an inadvertence. He could not have meant that.

Mr. Wright: I think what I said was prior, not first.

Mr. Davis: Prior to what?

Mr. Wright: I think the word I used was prior rather than first.

Mr. Davis: All right, make it prior. I will accept prior. I do not stiggle at the adjective at all: Go up Broadway some nights when the lights are bright. What do you see on this matter of monopolization? You will see burning brightly the lights at Loew's Capital, Loew's Criterion, at RKO's Palace, at Fox's Roxy and Rivoli in which it owns an interest, at Paramount's large Paramount, and a share in Rivoli; at Warner's Hollywood and Strand; at the Rockefeller Music Hall; at the Globe, the Gotham, the Victoria, the Rialto, the Ambassador, the Winter Garden, and the Republic, owned by so-called independents, and every one of them first-run theatres on Broadway. And if your Honors are willing to accept the theory that there is no competition between them, then I can only say that you would not agree with the ordinary Broadway visitor. Out of that sixteen, Loew's owns two. Two out of the sixteen. Yet we are charged with a monopoly in the first-run theatre business in the City of New York.

How about production? According to the Government's trial brief, seven of these defendants, Universal not being yet tabulated, produced in 1943 and 1944 211 feature pictures.

Loew's produced 33 out of that 211, or something like ten per cent. I don't know how much the figures of Universal would deflect that.

I have noted the local monopoly, and I shan't repeat what I said there about joint ownerships. There are 11 theatres in Buffalo, in which we own 43⅓ per cent interest. We took it in payment for an overdue debt for films. There was one in New Orleans, in which we own only 66⅔ per cent, and one in Denver, in which we have 50 per cent. Those are our joint ownerships the country over. I haven't in my note before me the name of the owner of the remaining interest. That is what is charged to us, joint ownership of theatres.

If your Honors please, I could go on and talk at greater length.

What is the nexus between the Government's complaint and its proposed remedy? On what does it rely to prove the sort of combination and conspiracy that the statute denounces? There is but one bond among these defendants, and that the bond of a common industry and nothing more. There is no contract between the so-called offensive trade practices, theatre ownerships, because if these theatres were owned, every one of them, by a single as yet unnamed individual, the same questions, distribution of films, clearance of films, first run of films, of payment for films, would be exactly what they are today, and there is no possible contact between the revenues derived by one of the defendants and the revenues derived by any other or the reveune derived by the industry

There is an old saying, "Common danger draws people together." We have seen that in the national and international political world. It is just as true in the judicial world. And, for the moment, there is a good deal of solidarity among these defendants, and sympathetic feeling, if you please, but there has not been, until this common danger descended upon them, and there won't be tomorrow or, at least, after what we hope will happen, a dismissal of the Government's complaint. It is only that sort of common interest that draws them together in the slightest, and we shall defy the Government to prove anything more than that in the nature of a combination, conspiracy or contract.

And I want to say one word more. I speak for Loew's now, and without any desire to disturb this harmony to which I have alluded or to cast any reflection upon any of my co-defendants, we shall demand to be judged for ourselves alone and we shall insist that the vague charges against us cannot be supported by attempted proof of actions by others unless the prerequisite of a combination between us is supplied. We don't want to make of this case simply an exercise in the law of evidence, and I hope we shall not be called upon to weary the Court with too many objections, but we shall, I respectfully submit, sternly insist on the observation of the rules, that testimony is admissible only against those to whom it applies.

DEFENDANT TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION'S OPENING

Mr. Caskey: If the Court please, I and my associates represent Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation.

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures. It is a publicly-owned corporation, its three classes of stock being traded in on the New York Stock Exchange. No individual or corporation owns any considerable percentage of any class of stock. So far as we know, no one interested in the ownership or management or profits of any other motion picture company has any interest in its stock. It has no managing officials in common with any other company. Its board of directors is not interlocking with any other company's.

It has three principal subsidiaries: First, Movietone News makes and distributes the Fox Movietone News, two issues each week, and a number of short subjects; second is Roxy Theatre, Incorproated, of which it owns all the common stock and a minority of the preferred stock, and that corporation leases and operates the Roxy Theatre at 50th Street and Seventh Avenue, in New York; the third subsidiary is National Theatres Corporation, subsidiaries of which are engaged in operating motion picture theatres in the western states of the country. It has some seven principal operating subsidiaries and, all told, has approximately 550 operating theatres. Twentieth Century-Fox, as (147) its name implies, was founded by William Fox. Mr. Fox had been engaged in the show business in New York since at least 1905. By 1912 the feature motion picture had been imported into the United States, when Mr. Zukor, with Louis Marcanton brought Sarah Bernhardt's picture to this company, the first four-reel picture.

By 1915 a substantial number of feature length motion pictures were being made in this country and Mr. Fox, who then had three relatively insignificant companies, decided to combine them into one. He had, first of all, a corporation called "Box Office Attractions Film Rentals." The significance of that title is that that exactly described what it was doing, it was renting motion pictures made by others to exhibitors in and around New York. He had a company called the William Fox Vaudeville Company, which was operating certain small and not deluxe vaudeville theatres in which motion pictures were also exhibited. And he had a company with quite an impressive name entitled, "Wonderful Plays and Players Company." He merged those three and formed Fox Film Corporation in 1915.

He sent an agent to Europe, where the art of making motion pictures was then more highly developed than it was in this country, and that agent, Mr. J. A. Gordon Edwards came back to this country and produced the first Fox picture. It was entitled, "Life's Shop Window," and it cost $4,500 to make. It was a success. And with the money (148) which he made on that picture, he made a picture based upon Kipling's "Vampire."

So much for that point. The fact is that commencing in Judge Hand: I don't want to foreclose you, but—

Mr. Caskey: I will be glad—

Judge Hand: (Continuing)—but it seems to me you are getting genealogical, and I warned everybody against that. We are not going to listen to a lot of genealogy.

Mr. Caskey: No, but I think it is important to show; and the point I want to make is that in the early days of the motion picture industry, when Mr. Wright has said there was prosecution, charging monopoly, and has referred to the Motion Picture Patents case, I think it is important to show, as we will by evidence, that this company was not a part of any such combination but was an opponent and an enemy of that combination and that it succeeded in developing into one of the major companies in the country in a competitive manner, and that is the sole point, showing that in this period from 1915 to 1929, when the financial crisis stopped the expansion of the theatre acquisitions by these companies, that this company grew by intense competition.

So much for that point. The fact is that commencing in 1915 until the present time, the company has annually produced a considerable number of motion pictures, some of high quality but not all. Its annual production is approximately 10 per cent of the total number of pictures which are produced in any year. Its volume of revenue, which it derives (149) from licensing those pictures, is probably somewhat higher than that percentage, but is not substantially greater.

It occupies a position in the industry which is substantially proportionate to the number of pictures which it produces.

As to its theatre ownings: As I have stated, in the very beginning Mr. William Fox had an interest in motion picture theatres, and in the early twenties, after the war, Fox Film Corporation commenced to acquire theatres. It had these few in New York. It next went to Philadelphia, then to Oakland, California, and then to Chicago, acquiring a few theatres in those four important cities of the United States, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Oakland.

In 1925 it purchased an interest in a California corporation, West Coast Theatres, which had been formed by others and which at that time was an existing group, or, if you will, circuit of theatres. I emphasize that because the acquisition at that time was of a minority interest in an already existing circuit of theatres.

In due course, Fox lost the theatres in Chicago because it could not successfully operate them and pay the rather large acquisition cost which had been insecurely financed.

When Fox acquired the minority interest in West Coast Theatres, the majority of the stockholders banded together prevent any of them selling out to Fox, lest it gain control. And their organization was a corporation known as Wesco Corporation.

In 1928 that corporation was acquired by Fox and it thereby acquired all of the stock of West Coast Theatres. During those years, in which it had only a minority position, and in which the majority had banded together, that circuit had grown so that it had approximately 200 theatres. From 1928 until Christmas of 1932 there were continued acquisitions of theatres in that group, so that by that time there were nearly 500 theatres in that circuit of theatres.

But by that time it had become extremely unprofitable. During the year 1932 the company lost seven million dollars, and, in addition, was forced to borrow several million dollars to meet capital charges. The result was that in 1933 each of the principal subsidiaries went into bankruptcy and there they remained until 1935.

In 1934 Wesco was reorganized. Its creditors decided to take stock for their indebtedness, and since there were only two, all the other claims having been acquired, Fox Film Corporation became a 42 per cent stockholder and the Chase National Bank the majority stockholder with 58 per cent.

And then Wesco changed its name to National Theatres Corporation, and proceeded to acquire from the various trustees in bankruptcy certain desirable assets either in the form of individual theatres or in the form of stock of operating companies.

Thus, from the summer of 1935 down until the summer of 1943, Fox had a 42 per cent interest and the Chase National Bank had the majority and controlling interest of 58 per cent, and all of the theatres in which Fox had any interest were in this corporate organization except the Roxy Theatre in New York, which was first acquired in 1937.

In 1943 Fox acquired all of the Chase Bank's interest and National became a wholly-owned subsidiary.

Inasmuch as the charge, as I read it, is not only a combination to monopolize, but a consummated monopoly as to the individual defendant, I think it important to discuss briefly, and it will be brief, the three divisions of the industry, and to show that this company has neither monopoly nor the capacity to achieve such a monopoly.

I think it conceded, although it was once otherwise charged, that standing alone the company has no monopoly of production. That it can have none becomes self-evident when you inquire into what is required to produce a motion picture.

Judge Hand: Well now, I thought,—perhaps I am wrong,—that was conceded—

Mr. Caskey: If it is conceded—

Judge Hand: (Continuing)—as you say:
(152)

Mr. Caskey: If it is conceded on the record by Mr. Wright—

Judge Hand: —that the evil was in the combination which he says exists because of certain inferences that he draws from certain facts, I do not see now how this growth of Fox Film in 1920 or some other time—what it had years ago—has anything to do with the case. I always suspect the genealogical treatment as cumbersome and useless. I do not see what it has to do with the case as presented by anybody. If it does, why, of course, we want to hear anything you have to say, but we don't want to mix ourselves up and waste time in the case with this kind of remote stuff. It seems to me remote. Maybe I am wrong about it.

Mr. Caskey: Well, sir, we, of course, defer to your judgment. It has seemed to us that we should not leave the case simply in the posture of these statistics which have been complied and make no reference to the circumstances under which these theatres have been acquired and the manner in which they are being operated and the effect of that operation upon the public interest.

As has already been pointed out, the combination, so far, is sought to be established, not by evidence, but by addition, and we are met with the proposition that we have combined to monopolize in New York City because we have the Roxy Theatre, which is in competition with Loew's Capitol and (153) with Paramount's Paramount, and with Warner's Strand and RKO's Palace, as well as a large number of independently-owned theatres. It is to meet that suggestion, that the mere fact that there are in the United States these cities where two or more of us operate and that there are some situations in smaller communities where our theatres are either all of the first-run theatres or of all the theatres, that we thought it important to call to the Court's attention how it was that these theatre circuits came into existence; that they came into existence in the natural evolution of the business and not by any agreement, division of territory or even deliberate choice, but just as the business grew.

It is our understanding that if the acquisition of theatres was by a lawful means and if there has been no exclusion from competition, then their ownership is not illegal, whether that owner be also engaged in other aspects of the motion picture business or not.

But coming now to the question of production, I understand now from Mr. Wright's muted words that it is conceded on the record that this company, at least, has itself no monopoly of production of motion pictures and no capacity to monopolize that business, and that that issue, therefore, is out of the case.

Certainly if that is true, if, as far as production is concerned, there is no claim of individual monopoly, it must be true as to the distribution of motion pictures.

As it has been explained to you, motion pictures are distributed in the sense that the positive prints, which are shown in the theatres, are kept in offices located in the principal cities of the country, sent to the exhibitor and returned. The facilities are readily available to anyone: There is nothing peculiar about them. The exchange itself is merely an office, like any other industrial corporation would have. There are in this country 11 corporations, eight of which are defendants, which have such a system of national distribution.

In the distribution of motion pictures, Twentieth Century-Fox serves more than 13,000 theatres in the United States. There are various statistics given as to the number of operating theatres, fluctuating somewhere between 16,500 and 17,500. Of those, at least 13,000 regularly show pictures made by this defendant, and not more than 550 of those 13,000 are theatres in which it has any financial interest.

The word "integration" has been used in argument today, but the fact is that 90 per cent of the people who go to motion picture theatres to see a Fox picture, see it in a theatre which is not owned or operated by any Fox interest. There is no vertical integration, as that phrase is sometimes used. There is, however, and only that, the ownership of these 550 theatres. In these 73 cities which are listed, Fox has a theatre in only 15. In one City, Detroit, it has only one theatre. It has all the first-run theatres in only one of these 73 cities, and that is in Wichita, Kansas, which is getting pretty far down the list. It does not have all the theatres, of course, in any of the cities. In these 14 cities in which it has theatres, first-run, it is in direct and active competition. In some of those cities that competition is from others of these defendants. In others, the competition is from some one or more of these defendants and an independent theatre operator. The situation in New York has been described. It follows the pattern throughout the country. For example, in Kansas City. Fox has a theatre, first-run—two theatres, first-run—one a little one and one a big one. Loew's has a theatre. Paramount has a theatre in which it has an interest. RKO has a theatre in which it has an interest. Those theatres directly compete with each other for the patronage of the people in Kansas City and surrounding country. Each tries to get the person who wants to go to the movie to come to its theatre and that, as we understand it, is the essence of competition.

There was handed to your Honors this morning a chart—the copy of which I have has a 25 in the upper righthand corner—showing the record of exhibition of "Road to Glory" by Twentieth Century-Fox in Kansas City. I think it typical of the method of distribution of motion pictures in that city.

The first thing that is to be noted is that there are 30 theatres listed on the chart—this one had 25 in ink—there are 30 theatres in Kansas City which played the picture "Road to Glory". The last exhibition, in the National Theatre, was the identical picture shown in the first exhibition at the Uptown theatre. I call your Honor's attention to the progression of the picture through the town. At the Uptown, and it is called the Uptown, because it is not in the business part of Kansas City, but is out at 35th and

Broadway, the picture paid a film rental of $1,600 and the public paid 40 cents to see the picture. Five weeks later the picture played for two days in the Plaza Theatre. The Plaza Theatre is one of the outstanding theatres in America. And then it played for five days in the Apollo Theatre and the film rental was considerably less. From the Plaza, however, it was $123 for two days, and at the Apollo $141 for five days. The admission price to the public was less. And then as we go down, we see that it was exhibited in so-called independently-owned theatres and in theatres affiliated with Twentieth Century-Fox at progressively lower film rentals and at progressively lower admission charges. And it is of the utmost significance that the film rentals which these independent exhibitors paid for the privilege of exhibiting this (157) picture were in almost every instance less than the affiliated theatre. Thus, the Lindbergh Theatre, paid $45 for the privilege of exhibiting the picture and the affiliated Rockhill Theatre, which showed it six weeks later, paid a higher film rental, and so on down the list.

The chart shows that there is a fair decrease in film rental paid as the exhibition becomes later and as the admission price charged the public becomes less.

This case involves, in addition to the assertion that there is no competition among the affiliated theatres where they operate, a consideration of three practices. The first practice is called cross-licensing, although these words have nothing to do with the practice. It is a fact that most of the theatres which National operates, in addition to showing the pictures produced by Fox, show pictures made by others of these producers and distributors. The reason for that is simple. Fox itself does not make enough pictures of a sufficient quality to occupy 365 days of screen time anywhere except in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, certainly not in the smaller cities, and so, the theatre operators must get motion pictures from other producers.

It is also a fact, of which there can be and should be no dispute, that they pay a large share of the money which they pay in film rental to the eight defendants. That, of course, is because in 1938, when this case was started, the plaintiff joined as defendants every one who was in the business, but it is also true that they pay to the five companies which have motion picture theatres a large percentage of their film rental. The reason for that is not because the pictures of other companies are excluded, but because the pictures of the five pictures at the box office are capable of running for the longest period of time and bringing in the most money.

As has already been said, most pictures today, certainly in the key centers, in the larger cities, are licensed on percentage and they are exhibited as long as they can be properly exhibited. And so it is the picture, the quality of the picture, that determines how long it will run and what moneys it will bring in and not the name of the company which produced it or the fact that it does or does not have any theatre affiliates.

I have about ten minutes more and I will be finished.

Judge Hand: All right, go ahead and finish.

Mr. Caskey: But there is no conditioning of the licensing of pictures of other companies in the theatres of National and with the other affiliates of these producers licensing the picture. There will be no proof whatsoever on that. The fact is that as far as National is concerned, its pictures are licensed or bought, if you will, in the seven regional division offices in Kansas City, in Milwaukee and so on. The buyer, when he sits down to negotiate with a salesman from Loew's has no knowledge of whether the Loew Theatres have or have not bought Fox pictures, and if he did have any knowledge it would be that they had not bought very many because the fact is, as we set it out in our brief, that National has paid Loew's year in and year out, 7, 8, 9 and 10 times as much money as Loew's Theatres pay Fox.

Now, there is a very simple explanation for that, and that is that the Loew Theatres play their own pictures in their first-run theatres throughout the country and that they do not use Fox pictures in New York, but, nevertheless, it is conclusive proof that there is no form of conditioning. National does not buy or refrain from buying dependent upon what the theatre affiliates of the other producer does or does not do. They buy pictures in order to exhibit them, in order to serve the public and make a profit.

This word "cross licensing" is just an epithet; it has nothing to do with the motion picture industry.

The second charge is the charge of price-fixing. It is perfectly true that in the ordinary practice there is an agreement between the distributor and the exhibitor as to the minimum price that will be charged to the public for admission during the exhibition of the picture. We think it perfectly lawful, because the film rental is predicated upon those receipts, whether it be expressed in terms of actual per cent, 30, 35 or 40, as it frequently is, or whether it be commuted into a fixed flat rental of $1,000 or $2,000 or $5,000. It is also undoubtedly true that the price fixed for the first runs affect the price which other theatres in the community may charge. As the chart on Kansas City indicated, when the first-run theatres back in 1936 were charging 40 cents, the price of the other theatres tended to be lower, but there is not to our knowledge any agreement that fixes the maximum price that any subsequent-run theatre may charge. There is no ceiling, as the word was used, imposed by contract. If there is any ceiling, it is a ceiling imposed simply by the economics of the situation, and there are innumerable exceptions to that. The ceiling, as we will establish, if evidence is required, is pierced in many, many situations because fundamentally the capacity of the patrons to pay is what determines the film rental.

We are all familiar with the example here in New York of the Plaza Theatre which is, although a subsequent-run theatre, a theatre which charges a very high admission price because it caters to a group of patrons who can pay that price.

In addition to this, and this is the final charge, plaintiff has made the charge that there is a profit-sharing arrangement in the exhibition of motion pictures. The charge has no factual support. Motion pictures, when licensed on percent (161) age are licensed for a percentage of the gross receipts, not of the net. It is true that in many instances the contracts provide that the higher the revenue the greater the percentage, just like income taxes; but it is, still just like income taxes, a tax on the gross. The revenue comes out of the box office dollar, of course, but it is not profit, and there can be no reason for the plaintiff to use the word "profit" or to use the word "partnership," except to try to spell out by the use of that word a combination which does not in fact exist.

We think that on the whole case, there will be no proof of conspiracy or combination to monopolize. We think that the individual situation of the company engaged in production and distribution and in the ownership of these comparatively few theatres is no violation of law. * * *

New York, October 9, 1945;
10.30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Leisure will speak next for the defendants.

Judge Hand: All right.

DEFENDANT'S RKO'S OPENING.

Mr. Leisure: I do not know how many of the defendants are going to make opening statements. I know that my associate, Judge Proskauer, is going to follow me, and in order that they may better regulate the schedule, I may say now that I intend to take less than thirty minutes of the time of the Court.

If the Court please, we represent the following RKO defendants. These defendants is named in the complaint are Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, which is solely a holding company; RKO Radio Pictures, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, engaged in the production and distribution of pictures; RKO Proctor Corporation and RKO Midwest Corporation, both subsidiaries of RKO, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, engaged in the operation of motion picture theatres.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, named as a defendant in the complaint, was dissolved in June 1944. At that time it distributed its assets, consisting of stock in certain theatre operating companies, to B. F. Keith Corporation, a theatre operating corporation which is 99 per cent owned by the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation.

I shall confine myself to outlining briefly the position occupied by RKO in relation to the Government's charges in this case. These charges are, first, that the RKO Company, as an integrated unit, is an illegal monopoly. Second, that the RKO defendants have combined and conspired with all the other defendants, but principally with the other four integrated defendants, to monopolize the domestic theatre market and to discriminate against independent exhibitors in violation of the Sherman Act. Third, that RKO and the other defendants have combined and conspired to fix the admission prices in motion picture theatres throughout the United States in violation of the Sherman Act.

Now taking up the first contention of the Government. RKO is both the youngest and the smallest of the integrated companies. In its conception it was envisaged as a medium for bringing to the public a varied amusement program, to include motion pictures, radio and television. Like many other enterprises launched in the late 1920s, RKO perhaps has not wholly materialized all the visions of its founders; (164) but the suggestion that in 18 years against the keen competition of larger and older companies it has achieved a nation-wide monopoly, is incredible.

As this Court knows, the United States Supreme Court had decided that whether an integrated combination unreasonably restrains commerce in violation of the Sherman Act depends, first, upon the purpose for which it was formed; and, second, upon the results of its operation. Unless the Government can show that RKO merely as an integrated company was organized to restrain and monopolize commerce, or has, in fact, unreasonably restrained or monopolized commerce, it must fail in its first charge. I have reference to the Appalachian Coal, the Standard Oil and the American Tobacco Company cases.

Now, what does the history of this company show was its primary and controlling purpose?

RKO was formed in 1928. It was not formed primarily to secure theatre outlets for a production company nor to secure a film supply for a group of theatres. It was formed by Radio Corporation of America, which at that time was engaged in the keenest of competition with Western Electric Corporation for customers in the field of sound motion pictures. Both RCA and Western Electric had developed and were heavily interested in competing devices for recording sound on motion picture films, and for its reproduction in theatres.

Western Electric, through its subsidiary Erpi, had obtained a head start on RCA by licensing its recording equipment to virtually all the large motion picture producers, and by licensing its reproducing equipment to most of the motion picture theatres in the United States. So that by 1928 there were virtually no motion picture producers left to which RCA could license its recording device, and very few motion picture theatres to which it could sell or license its sound reproducing device.

To meet this well established competition, it acquired a small producing and distributing company, known as FBO. This company, by change of name, is the present RKO Radio Pictures. As an outlet for its sound reproducing equipment, and also for its sound pictures, RCA acquired the Keith-Albee-Orpheum's circuit of vaudeville theatres. This circuit was made up of large, well equipped vaudeville houses located in a number of the larger cities throughout the country. Each was feeling the competition from motion picture houses, however, in the cities where it was operating. The following year the newly formed RKO acquired the fine vaudeville houses of the Proctor group and others in New York City, and in certain of the larger cities in upper New York State.

In the following year, 1930, it acquired a few vaudeville and motion picture theatres in Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton, Ohio.

During this early period, the primary hope of RKO in the operation of these theatres was the promotion of a successful circuit showing a combined program of vaudeville and pictures.

The exploitation of motion pictures was used primarily as a means of increasing the patronage of the vaudeville houses. Gradually, however, it became apparent to the executives of the company that the success of this theatre chain was going to depend more and more upon the motion pictures offered to the public.

The effort to keep vaudeville alive finally failed and today RKO's circuit is a motion picture circuit.

The facts which I have very briefly outlined cannot be disputed. Contrary to the Government's contention that the (167)
RKO theatre chain was built up for the purpose of monopolizing the exhibition of motion pictures, these facts will clearly establish beyond any dispute that the basic chain upon which RKO still depends was built up as a vaudeville circuit, and was acquired by RKO in the hope that such a circuit could remain in existence when its vaudeville presentation was supplemented by the exhibition of motion picture films.

Clearly, the purpose in integrating these theatres with a production company was not to obtain a monopoly either in the production, distribution or exhibition fields. Nor was that its effect. On the contrary, it brought a small production and distribution company into competition with the larger and already established production companies, and in the exhibition field it brought a group of finely equipped theatres in the larger cities into competition with motion picture theatres then existing in those very same cities.

The result of this integration was to promote rather than to restrain competition in the production and exhibition of motion pictures.

Let us see what has become of this integration as of today, seventeen years later. We have the same production and distribution company, now re-named RKO Radio Pictures.

It has no monopoly of the production of feature pictures. (168)

In the 1943-1944 season it produced only seven per cent of the features produced in the United States. And it has no monopoly of stars or feature players. We shall show that it has extremely few such persons under contract to it. It relies principally on those stars and feature players which it obtains in competition with all other producers.

What about the distribution of motion pictures? Neither has it any monopoly in the field of distribution. It distributes only seven per cent of the feature pictures offered by all distributors. It has not, as the Government charges, closed its own distribution facilities to those producers who have no distribution outlet of their own. On the contrary, independent producers, both large and small, avail themselves of the distribution facilities of RKO.

The Government's figures will show that in the 1943-1944 season 18 per cent of the pictures distributed by RKO in that season were independently produced pictures, and these pictures accounted for 30 per cent of the domestic revenue received from all features distributed by RKO in that season.

We shall show that not only is RKO dependent on independent producers for a substantial part of its business but that it is and for years has been engaged in the keenest of (169) competition with the other distributors for the right to distribute feature pictures produced by independent producers. For example, RKO, after intense competition with other distributors, secured the distribution rights to Walt Disney's famous technicolor animated cartoons. A few years later one of these defendant distributors secured the distribution rights of a Disney picture from RKO. RKO now has the Disney pictures back again.

Again, RKO was the first to distribute the independently produced March of Time, but Twentieth Century-Fox has now outbid RKO for these distribution rights, and now distributes that feature picture.

But what of the Government's charge that RKO, as an integrated company, has a monopoly of first-run exhibition? Twelve years ago, starting after RKO became an integrated unit, it operated approximately 150 theatres. Today it operates but 107 theatres. The net effect of the last twelve years of RKO theatre operations has been a decrease in its theatre holdings of approximately 30 per cent. This fact alone, it seems to me, refutes the assertion that RKO now has or ever has had a monopoly control of exhibition.

Of these 107 theatres which RKO owns or operates today, 72 are the very same theatres that it purchased from the Keith-Albee-Orpheum and Proctor and other vaudeville in- (169-A) terests between 1928 and 1930. Acquired at that time to afford a show case for RKO's product in 34 of the major population centers, they continue today to serve that purpose.

Of these 107 theatres, 32 are subsequent run. So that from the standpoint of any alleged nation-wide first-run theatre monopoly, RKO owns and operated but 75 first-run theatres in 18 of the 48 States, and the District of Columbia, in the territory between here and San Francisco. (170)

These theatres represent less than 4 per cent of the total of theatres claimed by the Government to be affiliated with all of the defendants. They represent less than three-tenths of one per cent of the total of theatres in this country.

Now the Government has selected 73 cities which it names in its complaint having a population of 100,000 or over as its testing ground of nationwide monopoly. According to the Government's figures, RKO has no theatres whatever in 46 of these 73 cities. It has theatres in but 27. In 10 of these 27 cities RKO operates in first-run competition with an independent exhibitor or exhibitors. In 21 of these 27 it operates in first-run competition with theatres affiliated with one or more of the other defendants. In every one of the 27 cities it competes with other theatres operating on some run.

And from the viewpoint of dollar business done by RKO theatres, the picture is no different. During 1944 RKO theatres collected admissions of $35,000,000. Compared with the Government's estimate of a total of one billion dollars in theatre admissions paid in 1944, the RKO theatres' percentage of 3.5% certainly does not look like a monopoly of the exhibition business.

Judge Hand: What do you understand to be the Government's theory on which they assert there is a monopoly? Of course, the case is not as simple as your argument would indicate. They have some other theory based on conspiracy, or something else, being responsible; in other words, for the acts of all the others.

Mr. Leisure: That is one of the points, if your Honor please. I am addressing myself now to the complaint and the trial brief and the statement in Mr. Wright's opening. I have not come to the other two points yet, and I will endeavor to answer your Honor's questions in those two points.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Leisure: Mr. Wright's statement yesterday was that each of these producer-exhibitors is a combination illegal in and of itself. I am addressing myself as to that with respect to RKO in discussing this first point.

To summarize briefly, we will show, that RKO as an integrated company came into existence through force of competition; that the effect of its coming into existence has been to bring about greater competition in all three fields in which it is engaged. It has no monopoly, nor has it the power to effect a monopoly in any one of these three fields.

As a producer and distributor it produces and distributes but 7 per cent of all the features produced and distributed. It has not used its control of its own distribution facilities to bar independent producers from access to the market. On the contrary, a substantial proportion of the pictures which it distributes are independently produced, and a still more substantial proportion of the annual return on the features which it distributes is represented by independently produced product,—product for which it actively competes in the open market.

In the exhibition field its 78 first-run theatres constitute less than one per cent of all the theatres in the country. It participates in the total theatre receipts of the country to the extent of less than 3.5 per cent.

RKO has not in fact eliminated or restrained, nor as a single integrated unit has it the power to eliminate or restrain competition in any of the three fields in which it is engaged. So much for the Government's first charge against RKO.

I now turn to the Government's second basic charge, namely, that RKO has combined and conspired with the other defendants to restrain and monopolize the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. The Government does not claim that it has any direct evidence of such combination or conspiracy. There is no suggestion in the trial brief or in its appendices that there is any actual overt combination or conspiracy between RKO and the integrated defendants. It is not claimed that RKO has at any time combined or conspired with any other defendants in any conferences, meetings or agreements to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce. And the complete absence of any corporate connection between RKO and the other integrated defendants is clearly demonstrated by the plaintiff's description of the corporate structure of the integrated defendants in the Government's trial brief, at pages 5 and 6, and the Appendix A, pages 1 to 8.

RKO is not asserted to have any interest in Fox, Loew's, Paramount or Warner. None of these companies is asserted to have any interest in RKO. So far as their corporate structure is concerned, therefore, each of the integrated defendants is a separate and distinct entity and should be treated as such. The most that the Government claims is that certain conduct claimed to be both common to and unique with the five integrated defendants will support an inference which it will ask this Court to draw, that these defendants have agreed to combine and conspire together.

Thus, the Government asserted that the defendants have conspired to monopolize the production of motion pictures. It asserts that the integrated defendants have tied up the majority of stars, feature players, outstanding stories and other items essential to production; that while they have freely exchanged such stars, stories, etc., among themselves, they have refused to make them equally available to non-intgrated defendants or producers.

The Government has admitted, however, that it intends to offer no proof of any such activities, but instead intends—and I quote—"to argue from all the facts" that such a conspiracy exists. But in its trial brief the Government appears to have receded even further from this original position, because nowhere in the trial brief does it so much as mention, much less argue, about a monopoly of production or distribution.

So far as RKO is concerned, we do not expect to rest merely on the Government's failure of proof. We intend to show affirmatively, first, that independent producers have increased and prospered, and that their product is in active and unrestrained competition with us. Second, that RKO does not rely for its production activities upon any engrossment of its own of stars and feature players, or upon any understanding with the other producers. On the contrary, RKO obtains the stars and feature players necessary to its production in competition with other producers, both integrated and non-integrated, both defendants and non-defendants in this case.

As to distribution, as I have already indicated, RKO distributes a substantial proportion of the pictures of producers who have no distribution outlets of their own, and is in active competition with all of the other defendants to secure the right to distribute such pictures.

Let me summarize: RKO is in active and unrestrained competition in both the production and the distribution of motion pictures. No inference of combination should be drawn in light of that competition.

In its original complaint, paragraph 86, the Government spoke of this as a "nationwide monopoly". In its amended complaint, paragraph 163, it describes this as a monopoly in 80 per cent of the cities with populations of over 100,000. But in its trial brief, page 21, it redefines it as a monopoly in 80 per cent of the towns where the integrated defendants control two or more theatres.

Basically the Government's theory of concert of action as to exhibition is this: The theatres affiliated with each of the integrated companies need product. As to this the defendants are surely no different from other theatres in the United States. But since each of these theatres is affiliated with a company which has product to offer, the Government argues that an RKO theatre, for example, can and does obtain a Paramount or a Warner product in competition with a non-integrated theatre by being able to assure Paramount or Warner that when Paramount or Warner need product in theatres, they may count on RKO to give their theatres preference over non-affiliated theatres competing with them. This is the same theory, let me state, that the Government applied to alleged monopoly of production but which charges, in that field at least, it has now apparently abandoned.

Originally the Government flatly asserted that one producer-exhibitor defendant licensed its films in theatres of another such defendant on the condition that the latter would in turn license its films in theatres affiliated with the former. In reply to interrogatories, however, the Government admitted that it had no such proof, and it refers to no such proof in its trial brief. Instead it now relies on what it calls "cross licensing" as showing concert of action between these defendants. It admits that this—and again I quote—"is not cross licensing in the usual sense." And indeed it is not. The Government charges that when Paramount, for example, licenses an RKO theatre, it does so under a contract whereby Paramount receives a percentage of the RKO theatres' gross receipts. When RKO licenses a Paramount theatre it is under a like form of contract. This, according to the Government, gives each licensor "a share in the theatre operating profits" of the other, with the result that each of these integrated units has a "vested interest in promoting the business of the theatres affiliated with each other at the expense of independent competitors."

To put it in plain English, the Government now charges that since a percentage contract gives each integrated defendant an interest in the "theatre operating profits" of the other, it is to the interest of each to deal with the other rather than with non-integrated exhibitors.

As to this charge we expect to show that RKO's license contracts give it no interest whatever in any theatres' operating profits. We shall also show that RKO's use of percentage contracts is by no means confined to theatres affiliated with its co-defendants, but that it employs the same form of licensing no differently and to no less extent in licensing unaffiliated theatres.

Again the Government seeks to infer concert of action from the asserted tendency of theatres affiliated with these several defendants to exploit from year to year the same lines of product. We shall show, in the case of RKO, that precisely the same pattern is followed by independent theatres. Beyond this, however, we shall show that the desire of every theatre operator to retain the same product lines from year to year is not attributable to conspiracy or agreement between competitors but is the inevitable result of competition between those engaged in supplying the public with any service,—in this case, regular entertainment at an established price.

Then, finally, the Government charge that RKO has conspired with the other defendants to fix admission prices in theatres throughout the country. As to this last and final charge by the Government, we flatly deny the charge. We expect to show affirmatively that RKO fixes the admission prices of no theatre either acting individually or otherwise.

DEFENDANTS WARNER'S OPENING.

Mr. Proskauer: May it please your Honors, it falls to me to be the anchor on the team of the five theatre-owning defendants. Your Honors have been so patient in listening to Mr. Davis and my other youthful colleagues in their clear presentation of a large area of this case, that I realize that that throws on me an obligation to this Court to be brief and to be non-repetitious. I assure your Honors I shall endeavor to carry out that obligation to the Court.

The interruption by Judge Hand of my colleague, Mr. Leisure, leads me to grasp the metal. I suppose no one within the sound of my voice would contend that there is the slightest suggestion on the Government's part here that any one of these defendants individually is engaged in an illegal monopoly. The gravamen of the Government's case—and I like to meet situations head on, with your Honors' permission—is in this charge that collectively we have in some way conspired to make ourselves jointly a monopoly; and the two big issues in this case are, first, whether there is the slightest tangible proof of the existence of that conspiracy without which the Government's case must totally fail; and, second, and no less important, whether this so-called integration—which is nothing but a high-falutin phrase meaning that we all own theatres and produce pictures—whether that is a contributing cause to any alleged monopoly, and whether its removal is necessary and useful, or, on the contrary, destructive of a great industry and absolutely destructive of a great public interest. And it is to those fundamentals that I shall address myself.

In the few remarks that I shall make I take for my text these words of Justice Holmes: "General principles do not decide concrete cases. The decision will depend on a judgment or intuition more subtle than an articulate major premise." And when I heard my good friend, the Assistant Attorney General, yesterday mouthing these platitudes from a series of charts, statistics—and I must respect the amenities as Mr. Davis did, and I won't refer to blankety-blank statistics—but I will show your Honors in the evidence that we shall adduce not only that those statistical statements are in themselves half-truths when one put flesh on the skeleton which the Government has produced in this courtroom, but I will show you further, and the evidence of the defendants will show you further, that when you look at this whole picture and disassociate yourselves from the spell of the legalism which characterizes the ardor with which the Government advances what Mr. Davis characterized as a fad or a hobby, and bring to this case that experience, that knowledge of the subject matter which you will get from oral evidence, and that common sense which we have every right to believe will be exercised by this Court,—that no matter whether you find an abuse here or an abuse there, in 25 years of the history of the most complicated and difficult industry that any court has even had to examine into, you will never say that a sound judgment requires you to strike down that industry by throwing it into chaos with a decree that wrecks the whole structure of the industry as it has existed with the approval of the Government for a quarter of a century.

Now I shall advance these theses: there is no combination or conspiracy here. On the contrary, this so-called integregration is necessary, appropriate and beneficial to the public in the production of moving pictures, in exhibition and in distribution. I shall respect Judge Hand's aversion to genealogy, but to some extent I will refer to it merely to demonstrate certain definite propositions of fact which have legal significance. I shall use it to point a moral, not to adorn a tale. And let me say at the outset for what purpose I shall refer briefly to the history of the Warner Company. My friend Mr. Leisure referred to the Steel case. There the great issue was whether integration was illegal per se, and the issue that arose between the minority and the majority of the court was whether that integration came into being as a benevolent and natural evolution or whether it suddenly sprang into being as an instrument of oppression. That was the dividing line between the majority and the minority opinions, and I propose, by reference to the history, to show you that we come in the prior category.

Secondly, I shall refer to the history because it is a part of the Government's bill that we fall within the ban of Section 2 of the Act. Judge Hand will recall, and I am sure you others will, that in the Aluminum opinion Judge Learned Hand wrote, in order to fall within Section 2, the monopolist must have both the power to monopolize and the intent to monopolize.

Therefore, I address myself first to the question, did we get these theatres, we producers, to get the power to monopolize? Did it give us the power to monopolize? Did we do it with the intent to monopolize?

As I review these facts briefly, which I shall show, I shall claim to have demonstrated to your Honors that integration was born not in agreement, not in conspiracy, it was born in trade warfare and has remained to this day an element not of agreement but of dissension, of fight and of competition.

Let me point that briefly from the history of the Warners. They started back in 1915 running a couple of Nickelodeon theatres in a small Pennsylvania town. When it got to 1916, they began to produce pictures in a small way. There were giants in the land in those days, my friend's client here, Famous Players and all those other great companies which had reached enormous stature in the production and exhibition of motion pictures, and exactly the same structure existed with one possible exception, that the theatre owning had not yet reached the proportions which it has reached today, but as to clearance, as to run, as to all those other factors of the industry which are utterly indispensable, and the Government recognized it in the consent decree, to the (183) administration of this industry, the conditions were the same.

And Warner nearly went on the rocks. And what saved them? The same thing that saved every competent competitor that entered into this field, showmanship, vision and ability, which can no more be monopolized than can the free air of heaven.

We reviewed this history in a trial before Judge Nields —not an antitrust suit, a different type of case. And I shall read one or two of his observations on this as the most summary way of putting it to your Honors. They had the showmanship to show a picture at the right time in the right place to get the public imagination, and that was the dramatization of Judge Gerard's book, his years in Germany, and from the moment they did that, all the powers of Famous Players Lasky, all the power of Fox, all the power of these giants in the industry could not keep them down, any more than today you can keep down Walt Disney, or Selznick, or Monogram, or Republic, or all of these independents, and I am using that word with the same apology which Mr. Davis made for it, the apology for the Government, any more than you could keep down these companies that, while this suit has been pending, have invaded the field as competitors to us in the production line and given us the fight of our lives to hold on.

Those non-theatre-owning three defendants! Why, if the Government proceeded on the theory today on which it joined them before, we would have a number of other defendants who follow exactly the same practice in the administration of the distribution and production of pictures other than ownership and who, your Honors, the records will show, and I shall refer to some of the figures very briefly, knowing your Honors do not want to carry a lot of statistics to your chambers with you, they will show that these companies, so far from being ruled out as competitors in the production field, have waxed strong until there are new giants in the land.

How did we come to get these theatres? And did we get them as a means of monopoly? Or, to use Judge Learned Hand's phrase, "with the intent to monopolize"?

We got down into the '20s and then Warners did another one of those things which makes monopoly or conspiracy to monopolize an impossibility in this industry. They made practicable, commercially, the scientific investigations which were the basis of the talking picture. And on a night in 1926—I am not going to refer to many pictures by name, but one will stand out—there was thrown on the screen in the City of New York "The Jazz Singer," the first talking picture. And how did our giant friends receive that? They had stars used to making silent pictures, they had machinery for making silent, not for making talking pictures. It cost, in those days $2,500 to install in any theatre the necessary apparatus to exhibit a talking picture—$25,000 I should have said, your Honors, a little zero does not make much difference; it is nothing—$25,000 to put the apparatus in any one theatre, and here were these Warner Brothers, who literally had given their life for this, because it is of record that Sam Warner, who developed it, died as the lights were flashing on the screen of the "Jazz Singer." With this priceless contribution to the public, they were unable to show it because they did not have any theatres in which to show it.

Now, your Honors, to show you that I am not talking rhetoric, we got an opportunity to buy the Stanley chain of theatres—the Stanley Company. The Stanley Company owned a chain of theatres, the most important of them chancing to be located in the City of Philadelphia. The Stanley owned a third of that First National Pictures Company, that my friend Mr. Seymour told you about, that again was born, not in conspiracy, but in warfare, started on the producers by the theatre owners of the country. And First National had a studio of decent proportions where the Warners had not, and an overture was made with us to go into the chain of operations by which we ultimately acquired the Stanley stock including those theatres and this studio, and I leave it by giving your Honors just these words of Judge Nields, which I shall prove, "this company had to enter the theatre business or retire to a subordinate position." There was only one large chain of theatres not controlled by competitors and we bought it, and that, says the Government, is conspiracy to monopolize. And Judge Nields said, to save ourselves from destruction, we bought this chain of theatres, used it to fight those who were fighting us in our endeavor to put talking pictures on the screen, and ever since have been engaged in active, open and bitter competition with every one of the other defendants in this case.

That is all the genealogy in which I shall indulge.

I say to your Honors that there is no monopoly of production. I shall not indulge in any lengthy diatribe about what we do individually, because I have recognized, frankly, that the gravaman of this is conspiracy; but in passing, I remark that in the years 1943-1944, the last for which statistics are available, we produced 4 per cent of the 442 features released, 7 per cent of those released by all the defendants, 14 per cent of those released by the five producer-defendants, and all the defendants together produced but 60 per cent of the features released in the United States. And these five alleged malefactors—malefactors because they own theatres—produced what? Just 35 per cent of the features released in the United States, and yet my friend puts in these charts, which until you get them in perspective, are just as misleading as though they were actually false.

I have told your Honors of little men who have been able to rise to the top in this industry, and I illustrated it, and I am now talking to the legal proposition that whether you take us alone or as alleged conspirators, it is not only not a fact that we monopolized in production but we cannot.

Where do we get the material of production? We go to the stage and get a play. Anybody else can. We go to the street. Stars? Do we pick them from heaven when they have risen at their zenith? We get them the way anybody else gets them. We got Bette Davis, now getting thousands and thousands of dollars a week, when she was an actress getting $400 a week. We got Errol Flynn, whom I think even this sedate court must know of—I am at a little disadvantage because, when I tried that case before Judge Nields, I found he was a moving picture expert, he knew who the stars were, and who the producers were, and the date of production of every picture that was ever referred to, and I am shifting my point of approach—these people talk as though you could go and make an agreement that you are going to corner the star market—we picked Errol Flynn out of a place where he was getting $150 a week. If my recollection serves me, even Mr. Davis client had the astuteness to go to a litle music hall somewhere on the continent of Europe and pick Greta Garbo from a vaudeville stage. That is the way the star system is made, and that is why people like Selznick and Disney—perhaps I have got the wrong ones for the particular point, but that type of independent producer—could always go and break down any alleged monopoly in the stars who go so much into the importance and the profitability of these moving pictures.

I am a little confused at times by the variances between Mr. Wright's bill and his mild utterances in this courtroom.

This bill is replete with allegations of improper trade practices, muzzling competitors, and there are just little references to them in his brief. I do not like to be wholly silent about them and yet I don't want to burden your Honors with meeting a man of straw, so I refer to but one of them. He talked at some length that we built up this monopoly on production, and I am talking about production now, by a process of exchanging stars and exchanging materials. Well, your Honors, the practice of exchanging actors is as old as the theatrical business. My astute young partner here dug out for me last week, and wanted me to urge it on you, but I won't, the fact that Covent Gardens and Drury Lane exchanged players back in the eighteenth century, but we don't have to go that far back on the ox. But what is the truth here? We have a lot of players under contract, and each of them has some kind of specialty. At one moment we are not showing a screen play which requires that particular man, and we exchange actors. When I say "we", whom do I mean? Do I mean Paramount, and RKO and Loew's? Not at all. I mean everybody in the industry.

And I just give you this much figure to point my statement, that there isn't the slightest discrimination against the so-called independents in this practice, that they participate in it and are the greatest gainers by it. Of 66 players that we had under contract in 1931, and I am going back to the time when these allegations were made, and the figures are about the same up to now—in the four years from August 31, 1938, we asked the loan of 79 players from other majors. How many of them do you think we got? Four. In the same period we gave or lent players 44 times out of 184 requests. We asked independent producers for a loan ten times, and we got it once. They asked us 65 times, and we gave them 13.

Now those are not just paper statistics. I am making a distinction between two kinds of statistics. I am showing to your Honors that there is nothing in that of the Government's.

And then my friend talks about the terrible exchange of the use of materials and equipment. Judge Goddard may recall that when we opened this case before, we showed that those things were so important that Universal lent us a pair of pants for $3.75, Selznick lent us a corset for $6.00; we lent Fox a battleship for $.50, and paid Paramount $1.20 for the use of some pushcarts. I am not trying to meet that issue by just ridicule; I am telling your Honors the evidence will show that it is the most arrant de minimis. Let us go on: I have shown you how the little man always comes up. He has come up. "Gone With the Wind," Selznick; Walt Disney; Charlie Chaplin; the screens are alive today with the production of men who have the showman's instinct which, if it is exercised, will build a path to his door despite every alleged conspiracy, alongside of which the path to the man who built the mouse trap is nothing but a rough mountain trail, because never forget, your Honors, that despite what Mr. Wright told you yesterday, there is the greatest shortage possible of high grade features, and everybody clamors for them. I shall say something about that in another connection in a moment, but let me register this point at this moment, (191) that nobody who ever produced a decent picture had the slightest difficulty in getting it shown.

I have been a little harsh, perhaps, and I think not unduly so, in talking about Mr. Wright's charts. I have got some here myself. The chartist movement affects us all. Let me illustrate a litle what I am saying. Here he produced yesterday a chart headed "Exploitation of Universal's Luckiest Girl in the World," and it is a beautiful chart, and what it shows is that that play got no first-run in the City of Philadelphia, about which I shall have something more to say in a moment. And the inference he asks your Honor's to draw from that is that Warners had conspired in some way to keep Universal from showing the Luckiest Girl in the World in Philadelphia, and, therefore, it got no first-run showing. Well, your Honors, I am going to show you the worthlessness of that paper evidence. I am going to show you it is waste paper, because the Luckiest Girl in the World was so rotten that she was lucky to get shown in any ten-cent theatre. I don't mean to be offensive to my friends of Universal over there, but I think they will agree with me that rarely was a worse picture put on the screen than that picture, and yet it is soberly offered here in the form of a grandiose chart to show that the reason it was not shown (192) first-run in Philadelphia was that Warners were conspiring against another one of these co-defendants to not show it first-run when the real fact was that nobody wanted to see the picture.

I have said here in my notes the independent producer has always been given distribution and that competitively. We will show that. Walt Disney! Did we ever shut him up? No, RKO produced his pictures or did—distributes them. Selznick! Did we crush Selznick when he did Gone With the Wind? Not at all. Loew's distributed his picture for him. And when he did Rebecca, did we dominate him? Not at all. He got a better bid from United Artists and he went and distributed it through them. Harold Lloyd through Paramount. Why, your Honors, I won't pile Pelion on Ossa. I will show you that no independent distributor in America, and there won't be any evidence to contradict it, ever had the screen blocked off from him by a refusal to show his pictures. And the reason for that is not that we are so lily white and pure. The reason for it is enlightened self interest. And that enlightened first interest is that we need good pictures so badly that we would be cutting our own throats to close avenues of exhibition to any man who could make a good picture.

My friend is a great manufacturer of categories. This (193) case is built for the Government on the artificial creation of categories that practically and factually do not exist. What do I mean by that? Mr. Davis talked yesterday about the way we are always described in antithesis to the independent, first-run category. What is this first-run business? A moving picture has to have a first-run, and we show this by evidence, in one of these magnificent metropolitan theatres or nobody makes any money out of it, neither the producer nor the little exhibitor for whom Mr. Wright's heart is so profusely pleading. That little man gets the benefit of all the advertising, all the publicity and all the acclaim that comes to a moving picture when it is shown up here at an independent first-run theatre like the Rockefeller Theatre or at one of our own first-run theatres. And so it goes all over the country.

And the real situation, your Honors, is just this: the public gets what it wants to pay for. The little man on the Bowery does not sell a jewel like Tiffany's, and he cannot, and reasonable competition does not require that the Government should intervene and see to it that he should. The analogy is even more favorable to us because the truth is that by this system of using these first-run theatres as media for the exploitation of the picture and as a source of recoupment for us, fairly certain recoupment to us of the enormous outlay for these pictures, whose costs now run up into the millions where they used to be in the hundreds of thousands, the little exhibitor gets the benefit of that and there isn't a man, woman or child in the United States who, during the last twenty years, has not been able to see for ten or twenty cents every moving picture that is produced in the United States, no matter how expensive it was to produce or to exhibit.

There is a public interest in that and I am going to show you in just a few moments how that public interest will be stricken down if the Government in this case should get the extreme of its demands.

So much for production. Exhibition, and I have turned over to exhibition, I am talking about these first-run theatres: we have no monopoly either alone or in combination.

We own 3.2 per cent of the theatres in the United States, 6 per cent of the seating capacity; we own no theatres in 29 States; we have a concentration of theatres in one local area that is, as I explained to you in our genealogy. We happened to get these Philadelphia theatres. And we own 23 per cent of the theatres in New Jersey and 16 per cent of the theatres in Pennsylvania. Others have given you the statistics, which I will not repeat, showing that in combination we are not a monopoly, but again I want to grasp the metal. Let us go right ahead on this Philadelphia situation (195) about which my friend makes a great deal. When we acquired those theatres, the Government brought a Clayton law suit against us back in 1929, I think it was, or somewheres thereabouts. It must have been a little later because I was retained in it and I came back to practice in 1930. It was somewhere around there. They investigated the situation, and what did they do? They discontinued the suit. What have we done with those theatres? Have we increased them? Not at all. We have got fewer theatres in the area now than we had then, and the competition that arose has been enormous and successful.

My friend is going to say, "How about the Goldman case?" And your Honors will be referred to the opinion in the Goldman case. The record in this case will not be the record in the Goldman case. For myself and for my colleague, I say, peccavi, we made a great mistake in the Goldman case. We believed there was still such a thing as stare decisis, and we found there wasn't. The District Court in an exactly similar case held that on that kind of showing there could be no inference of conspiracy from the failure to take the stand, and Judge Kilpatrick decided that case in our favor. The Circuit Court reversed, basing its reversal substantially on the ground that the inferences undenied gave a basis for a claim of conspiracy.

Conspiracy to what? I will show you in this case that those inferences will be squarely denied. It was a most peculiar situation, which I will not take your time to go into now, but to assure you that when it is explored you will find that it has no relevance to a general nationwide conspiracy such as here alleged; and even then, if they call my friend Goldman to the stand, I will show from his lips that under the conditions of alleged monopoly which he claimed existed, he had an open fight with us, built up a chain of theatres in Philadelphia and in the surrounding country out of which he was making approximately a quarter of a million dollars a year net profit. That is the kind of monopoly we have been running over there. And all these Philadelphia figures which are thrown in our teeth because of that coincidence that this Stanley Company happened to be concentrated in that area, all of them are subject to the inexorable course of events which there is no conspiracy or agreement either to block or which any such conspiracy or agreement could block.

To Goldman we have already lost the key theatre, the Carlton Theatre, in open fight. He has taken it away from us, and two important second-run theatres. He is operating a first-run theatre, and the Fox Theatre, which is one of our old first-run theatres which we had under lease, that is gone too; so that nature is taking care of this situation, I respectfully submit, much better than the Government or a court decree can take care of it.

Now, I want to address myself to this conspiracy thing for a moment: What are the Government allegations? What are the Government allegations of fact from which it wishes you to draw the inference of conspiracy? They say, "You are cross licensing." I am not going to repeat what my friends have said on that subject, but I am not content to let it go at that. When Whitney Seymour told your Honors yesterday that his local theatre managers, when they had pictures had no idea in the world what Paramount was leasing to anybody else, perhaps it sounded incredible. It happens to be true. More than that is true. Warner's theatre department, the department that operates theatres, is run as a completely separate entity from the department which leases films to other people. They have no connection with each other whatever. That sounds incredible. Well, let me give you, as a member of this chartist movement, one or two figures which demonstrate that it is true. If Mr. Wright could show that there was, in the vulgar parlance of us non-Government attorneys, what is called back scratching, and that we share profits in the sense that we say to Paramount, "You license this to us and we will license this to you," and there is some proportion between them, then I would have something to fear; but if I can demonstrate that is utterly (198) untrue, I have knocked the props out of the whole basis of the Government's contention.

Let me give you just one or two figures out of a great many here. There is no pattern whatever in the film rental paid by Warner from which a combination can be inferred. Last year we paid Mr. Davis's client $3,800,000 for film rentals for our theatres. How much do you suppose Loew's paid us? $200,000. Here in the year 1931 we paid Paramount 5.6 per cent of our film rentals. In another year we paid them 16 per cent; and it varies year by year so that there is no relationship whatever or uniformity in the pattern.

Nowelet us put another acid test to it. There is no pattern from which combination can be inferred in film rentals by a comparison of what one company pays us and what we pay them in any year. I am just going to take one or two of a whole mass of these things to illustrate what will be indubitably proved here. In 1944 we collected from Paramount 17 per cent of the billings. In 1934 and 1935 we collected from them only 9.8 per cent. I read this. The percentage of Warner theatre films rental paid to Loew's in 1937—I take that not as a typical year but as an extreme year to make my point, assuring your Honors that it shows the lack of pattern for every year—we paid Loew's 19.8 per cent of our film rentals. We got from them 7/10ths of one per cent. And you can take that—and I want to make this clear not in the specific figures but in its real import—you can take that by seating capacity, by film rental; you can weight it any way you please; and I said to your Honors that we shall show without fear of the slightest possible contradiction that there is no relationship whatever in any one year between the film rentals we paid in to our competitors and the film rentals they pay us. And when I have shown that the base is gone from the inference sought to be drawn from these tabulations of Mr. Wright's.

There is no uniformity in the method of sale. We sell in certain blocks. They sell differently.

There is no uniformity in the time of the contracts for exhibition we make. We may make a contract with Loew's to get their product for a year; and they make one with us for three years. I do not state that as a fact, but merely as an example of what the facts themselves will demonstrate when I put these contracts in evidence before you, and I leave that subject with the assurance to your Honors that there is a complete absence of any lack of pattern from which this inference of conspiracy can be drawn.

Mr. Davis wants me to make it clear this matter of gross payments for the aggregate on individual films licensed and not arbitrary percentage splits. I think that has been made abundantly clear to your Honors, and I state it in quotation from my young friend.

Now, something has been said about these Appeals Board decisions, and I am going to talk about them as bearing on this evidence of conspiracy and as bearing also on this question of the character of relief which is the sole issue in this case—I overstate that—which is by far the chief issue in this case. I have never known any judicial adventure to result so successful as has the machinery to which Judge

Goddard affixed his signature in that consent decree. We are told that there were certain defects in it, and perhaps there were, and we were hopeful that when those hearings were ordered by Judge Goddard before the Appeals Board, that any little defects or any big defects, if you please, could be corrected. Certainly we stood ready to correct them to put this industry on a practicable basis. But we are met by the suggestion that nothing will do excepting to kill the goose that lays the golden egg, strike down the industry. And one reason for that, as suggested by Mr. Wright's opening yesterday where he referred to these Appeal Board decisions, was that they showed us to be somewhat infamous, when nothing is further from the truth.

I will just give you in about two sentences the experience of Warner before those Appeal Boards. We were parties to 75 complaints as distributor and about 10 as theatre exhibitors. In the 10 cases we were charged with unreasonable (201) clearance. In one of those cases the reduction of clearance ordered was two days, and the maximum reduction ordered in any case was seven days.

Now, Mr. Wright said that showed we were still engaged in illegal clearance. What the decree says is that reasonable clearance is recognized as valid, and because honest men may differ as to whether clearance is too long or too short by two days, and the Appeal Board finds against us to the extent of two days or seven days, Mr. Wright says that that shows you are criminals because you are indulging in unreasonable clearance.

Your Honors, I do not have to labor that proposition to this Court. The mere statement of it shows the utter confusion in deciding in a complicated situation that most difficult of questions—what is reasonable? What on the one hand, and on the other hand that quasi criminal, utter disregard of the decencies which inhere in a charge of violation of the Sherman Act.

Now, how did we fare in these other cases? We sell to 14,000 theatres in the United States. There were reductions against us in 50 cases in four years out of 14,000 theatres. Does that show this criminal, this quasi criminal approach which Mr. Wright asks this Court to infer from a series of papers that your Honors when you come to consider them, (202) in the light of these facts you will regard most of them as wastepaper.

Now, I see Judge Hand looking at the clock, and I do not blame you. I am going to come to a speedy conclusion. I want to talk about this ultimate relief of the Government's. These theatres provide a sure outlet for pictures and thus make it possible for us to spend these millions. What is going to happen if you take that away from us? But Mr. Wright says we will have a fine competitive system. Well, that fine competitive system, I will show you by evidence, is not necessary to competition, and in the form in which he puts it will strike down necessarily the quality of these pictures. What does that mean from the public point of view?

There is one phase of this case that has never been referred to. The evidence in this case will show that these companies break about even on their domestic business. I do not mean that to be taken literally, but by and large. The profit comes in the foreign trade, and in a normal pre-war year these companies brought into this country an average of $100,000,000 a year—in return for what? Materially a few pieces of film. There is not another industry that the imagination can conceive of that has fed into this country so much money for so little. And today we are standing with our backs to the wall fighting discriminatory legislation in Great Britain, in France, in Czechoslovakia particularly, (203) and practically in every country in the world whose governments are trying to drive out the American film. And what is it that enables us, if anything, to hold the fort? It is the quality of our pictures. It is the ability that the ownership of these theatres gives us to take the risk of putting $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 into a production like "Gone With The Wind." And strike that down and this industry—your Honors, this is not rhetoric—strike that down and this industry is sunk.

I shall show you many another public disadvantage. It is through the ownership of these theatres that we put out what I will call for want of a better word public relations pictures, like Disraeli, Pasteur, Zola, Mark Twain. It is through these theatres that we are able to test the popular imagination, and these theatres gives us no domination as to what should be shown. Your Honor asked the question yesterday, Who determines what should be shown? The answer to that question is the public determines it. We can no more flaunt public opinion and live than we can jump in the middle of the sea and survive. We are responsive to public taste, and these theatres give us the opportunity to feel that out, to test out and to produce these picures which has made this industry one of the greatest national assets in America in relation with the foreign world, and given to the American public for nominal cost the greatest possible (204) development of an amusement industry that the mind of man can conceive of.

And why does he want to strike it down? I use a phrase that has the tang of the street but is made respectable by Dean Wigmore's use of it. In referring to a certain rule of evidence he used the phrase "mumbo-jumbo." I should like to link that to what my brother Davis said yesterday. We get this lingo about an integrated industry, about the evils of integration. And when you ask yourselves what is the practical good to come of this, is it going to cure clearance evils, is it going to cure the problems of distribution, is it going to do anything to ruin these companies, forcing them to sell their theatres to people who never buy them, unless they can tie up with contracts for exhibition on any fair terms? What is the good of it? If you find, as we think you will not, but as we concede you may, that in this area or in that, either geographical or industrywise there is some evil to be corrected, correct it. Correct it directly by the power of this Court. But when my friend Mr. Davis said yesterday in answer to that motion to intervene of that Civil Liberties Union, that the Attorney General represented the public here, the thought flashed across my mind that in a very real sense, your Honors, we represent the public here. We know the public. We have served the public. And I leave this case for evidence with your Honors with the assurance that as surely as I stand here no decree of a court would ever work more irreparable public injury than if ou yielded to the wiles of the Government's proclamations based on this paper case.

DEFENDANT COLUMBIA'S OPENING

Mr. Frohlich: May it please the Court, I represent the Columbia Pictures Corporation and a number of subsidiaries which I shall refer to throughout as Columbia. Columbia has a unique position in this suit, because it owns no theatres. It has never owned a theatre and never proposes to own a theatre. There is no need for going into the genealogy of Columbia. It is a producing company. It came along in 1920 on a shoestring, and by the genius, the ability and the industry of its executives it found its place in the sun and embarked upon an activity that has been successful for over twenty years.

It first did nothing but produce pictures. And it found out after a few years that if any company in this industry proposes to produce pictures in quantity it must acquire a distributing organization. There is no such thing as producing pictures in quantity without your own distributing organization. In the old days, when Columbia was in its infancy the practice was to sell your pictures by state rights. There were men and corporations who divided up territory between themselves; they purchased your picture for X dollars; and if you were very fortunate you could get the balance of your purchase price after the picture was shown. There was a group of them down on 45th Street, they occupied the whole building, which was known as the House of Forty Thieves. That is the way the distribution of pictures was being done in the old days, and necessity and business requirements compelled Columbia, as it had compelled all these other companies, to finance itself and to open its own distributing organization. And it did so in 1929. It opened up thirty-odd exchanges throughout the country, hired exchange managers, salesmen, and embarked upon the distribution of these pictures.

It today is engaged in the production and distribution of its pictures and nothing more. And when the Government brought this suit in 1938 there was no doubt that the Government intended to seize the entire industry and reorganize it upon its own conception of what should be done. It brought the suit against eight defendants, five defendants who owned theatres, three who did not. For some reason that I can't understand, it excluded two other companies that, like Columbia, also had their own distributing organizations. It excluded all independents, although for many years there have been important and successful independent producers in America. Sam Goldwyn has been nothing more than an independent producer, distributing one year through one organization, one year through another, and a producer of marvelous pictures. Selznick is another. Chapman is another. I could give you names here by the dozen. No one was brought in but these eight companies.

Well, perhaps the Government needed these eight companies because the complaint as originally drawn was most comprehensive. It alleged a monopoly in production, in distribution and in exhibition. And if your Honors will be good enough to look at page 61 and page 75 of the amended bill of complaint you will find those pages replete with allegations of monopoly in production and distribution.

Mr. Wright was asked yesterday twice whether he proposes to pursue those allegations in this case, and he was silent. If I can take that silence on Mr. Wright's part as evidence that he will produce nothing in this case on the question of monopoly in production or monopoly in distribution, then why, I ask, is Columbia Pictures in this case? Why is the United Artists in this case or the Universal, three companies that own no theatres?

Even under the complaint as drawn there was no attempt to allege a monopoly against Columbia in production. The charge was that Columbia, a reluctant conspirator, had lent itself to the other defendants in enabling them to carry out a monopoly in production. But that is out of the case now. (208)

There is no claim here, as I see it, of monopoly in production, nor is there any claim of monopoly in distribution. So, so far as Columbia is concerned this company is forced to come into court and go through the expense and burden of a long trial, when the opening statement of counsel and the trial brief of the Government clearly indicate that there is nothing on which Columbia can be held.

Now, Judge Hand yesterday asked Mr. Wright, What have you got against Columbia here? And he was told there were some contracts that were illegal. Well, let us see from the Government's own documents what is alleged to be illegal on the part of Columbia. The Government in its trial brief, which apparently has completely abandoned the complaint, lays a great deal of stress and importance on this schedule that Mr. Davis picked apart yesterday on pages 17, 18 and 19. And that schedule purports to show that in 73 large cities in the United States of over 100,000 in population these defendants in the years 1943 and 1944 rented their pictures for the most part to each other, to so-called affiliated theatres, theatres owned by the five theatre-owning corporations.

Now, if we are going to have a trial by statistics, it seems elementary to me that we ought to have a trial by honest statistics, and this schedule which was very artfully drawn purported to show that a large percentage of Columbia pictures were rented to affiliates, thereby proving, according to the Government's theory, that Columbia was a co-conspirator and had lent itself to whatever conspiracy it proposed to prove.

Well, to begin with, the Government's arithmetic is bad. It computed the number of instances where Columbia had sold to the independents in those 73 cities as 19. Actually there are 22. And in one instance it had sold to both an affiliate and to an independent, supplied its product. Actually there were 23 instances out of 73 in these large cities—and mind you they are large theatres, large seating capacity—and Columbia is entitled to get whatever revenue it can from its pictures, the best revenue it can—about 31½ per cent. But that is not the truth in this statistic. Here is what actually happens. In these 73 cities 33 are closed cities. We call them closed—and your Honors will get that definition throughout the trial—a closed town, a closed situation, because the affiliated company's theatres are the only first-run theatres in those cities. I have either got to show my picture in an affiliated theatre in those 33 cities or I can't show it at all as a first-run. The other remaining 40 cities are competitive. There is an independent and there is an affiliate theatre. I have my choice.

Now, what did Columbia do? Those 23 instances that
I talked about were in the 40 cities where the showing is competitive; so out of 40 competitive cities this company showed its product in 23, or 57½ per cent. Now, that is far from a showing of conspiracy. If Columbia is to be charged with being a conspirator on the brief of the Government certainly a showing that it exhibits 57½ per cent of its product in these competitive situations, where it should get the largest revenue, has great significance, because it shows that Columbia was not aligned with any group; it was free to do as it pleased; if it preferred to sell the independent, it did so; and it did do so, and the Government's figures showed that it did do so.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Frohlich, what do you mean by "independent" here?

Mr. Frohlich: Well, as I gather in this case—the Government may mean one thing and I may mean another—but I am using the word independent in contradistinction to a theatre which is owned by one of the five defendants in this case. Any theatre not owned by them I have to call an independent, and it is an independent. Call it what you will. I call it independent. But the point is that theatres which are owned by people not interested in this litigation, no defendants here, these theatres have been given opportunity to receive pictures from Columbia.

So far from showing Columbia to be a conspirator, the (211)

Government's trial brief shows that Columbia has behaved as well as any company in this business has behaved, and the proof will bear that out.

And I will show you how the proof will bear that out, because this is not the first time that Columbia has been subject to trial by the Government. Your Honors will recall that Mr. Wright in his opening statement pointed out that when this suit was brought in 1938 three companion suits were brought against large circuits of exhibitors. One was down in Tennessee against the Crescent Circuit; one was in Oklahoma City against the Griffith Circuit, and one was in Buffalo against the Schine Circuit.

Now, those cases came to trial. The Crescent case was tried before Judge Davies in Nashville in the Summer of 1941. Columbia was one of the defendants in that case. And after the consent decree had been signed, the Government was kind enough to eliminate the five theatre-owning defendants out of that case. They were in all the cases; all eight were in all these cases. So there remained no one but these three so-called minor defendants, Columbia, Universal and United Artists and the local circuit.

Now, in the Crescent case there was proof taken the entire Summer, and Columbia was dismissed at the end of the Government's suit, and Judge Davies in his findings said some very interesting things about Columbia that I think this Court ought to know, because so far as Columbia is concerned the picture is a healthy one and has been throughout these twenty years, and now has received judicial sanction, and I think it will have some bearing upon Columbia in this case.

And Judge Davies said in the Crescent towns, including towns in which indepndent operators were in competition with some of the independent exhibitors that the defendant Columbia invariably leased its product to such independent exhibitors. And further on he finds: The course of conduct of the defendant Columbia during the period in question showed a willingness on the part of such defendant to rent or lease its product freely to independent exhibitors in all of the Crescent towns, including all competitive towns in the States of Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Arkansas, Mississippi and North Carolina upon a fair competitive basis as between independent exhibitors themselves and independent exhibitors and defendant exhibitors.

Here is a case where the court took testimony for an entire Summer and came to the conclusion that Columbia's treatment of exhibitors throughout these States mentioned, at least, was fair and honorable and decent.

Now, the Griffith case has been tried. The Government of its own volition dismissed Columbia, United Artists and Universal out of that case. The Griffith case is still being tried.

In the Schine case Columbia was dismissed by the Government's own volition, its own motion, dismissed out of that case; and we must assume, your Honors, that if the Government dismissed Columbia, Universal and United Artists out of those remaining two suits, it could reasonably anticipate that the same result might take place there as took place in Tennessee.

Now, so far as the figures are concerned on income, I have obtained these figures for one year, 1943-1944, because Mr. Wright has said that in that year these defendants in their income from the leasing of product apparently got so much from the affiliated that surely there must be a conspiracy, and he is trying to have this Court draw that inference. Now let me give the actual figure in Columbia. Here in that season in 1943-1944 Columbia's domestic gross income was $23,154,292. Almost 24 million dollars. Its income from all of the five theatre-owning defendants in this case was $5,836,000, or about 25 per cent. Is that a showing of a conspirator? Is that a showing of a company brought in charged with a violation of the Sherman Act? I have never seen anything like it, and I am going to ask this Court at the proper time to dismiss Columbia out of this case, because no proof can be offered under the pleading, under the trial brief, and no proof can be offered that he has any force or probative value (214) here to show that Columbia belongs in this case.

DEFENDANTS UNIVERSAL'S AND UNITED ARTISTS' OPENING.

Mr. Raftery: May it please your Honors, I want to speak for the remaining two defendants: As regards Universal, there have been some changes in the corporate structure since we were here in 1940; so in line with Mr. Wright's suggestion Mr. Schimel and Mr. Wright or his associates may sit down and straighten out the new names and the changes in the Universal defendants.

United Artists Corporation, the other defendant, remains the same corporatewise.

Following up what Mr. Frohlich has said, we do not know why we are here. In 1941 or 1940, at the time of the consent decree, we meant so little then to the Government that they went on with this elaborate consent decree and this arbitration system and all the other things and were very happy to leave us out of it. They did, however, keep us in Nashville for eight weeks, and at the close of the trial, as Mr. Frohlich says, Columbia was let out; Universal was let out; United Artists was held in in Rogersville, Tennessee, a town of 1600 population, over some pictures that involved, I think, exactly $72. They were held in in Athens, Alabama, on a transaction that involved a theatre that had a large (215) pot-belly stove at the end of it and it ran like a bowling alley back and forth in a store. The Court did not even assess costs against United Artists. So that entire litigation resulted when the Schine case came on, they dismissed at the opening, and then they dismissed out in Oklahoma, the remaining case.

Now, what is the situation regarding these two defendants? Mr. Wright in his opening stressed divorcement. Your Honor asked him the question as to what he had against the other three defendants. And he stated some illegal contracts. In his trial brief he refers to us once on page 8. He then goes on to talk about the type of exhibition license agreement that is used by all the companies. That is, that we license pictures to theatres; we receive a percentage of the gross or a flat rental; we give clearance; we license a specific run. In other words, that all eight companies, and the companies that Mr. Frohlich referred to who are not parties here —and I presume he referred to Republic and to Monogram and to P.R.C., three other national distributors—license pictures the same way.

Now, the licensing of pictures is show business. You are dealing with an article that the public taste and fancy ultimately is going to determine as to its success. There is no difference today in the licensing of a motion picture than there was in the handling of legitimate shows in the days when all of us knew the theater a little better. When the Ziegfeld Follies played on 42nd Street where you now have flea circuses and a few other things, Mr. Ziegfeld would book his show into the New Amsterdam Theatre; he would possibly receive 75 per cent of the gross receipts; he would determine the admission price that all of us paid to go in that theatre, whether we sat on the lower floor or sat up on the top balcony. On Saturday night he took out of the box office his percentage of the receipts; he determined the advertising that appeared in the theatres; he was a real joint venturer with the theatre owner in the operation of that theatre while his play was at that theatre, and the same with every other play in the City of New York. That play played in no other theatre in America while it played at that particular theatre. Mr. Seymour hinted yesterday it might go out on the road. Well, it might go out with the same cast, or possible Will Rogers' horse could not travel and would not go with it. Its admission prices were determined when they ultimately got out there. Its advertising was handled, and ultimately the percentage of the receipts came. Of course, it might strike a theatre somewhere along the line where the owner of the theatre would say, instead of giving him his 80 per cent which he got on the road, I will give you $5000 for the two performances Wednesday matinees and evening flat.

(217)

Now, what happens with a picture? Now, all this comes to whatever charges there are of price-fixing and everything else. Mr. Ziegfeld took the entire risk of loss in the production of that play. David O. Selznick takes the entire risk of loss when he produces a picture. Universal takes the entire risk of loss when it produces a picture. So when the picture is available, if you have got three or four million dollars invested, or got a million dollars invested, you go out and book your picture in exactly the same way. These exhibitors that own theatres, whether they are the big five or some of the group that belong to some of the trade associations that I have seen representatives of sitting in the back, they not one of them assume any part of the risk of loss in the manufacture of that picture.

So what happens? You have a distributing organization. And that distributing organization, once it gets the print starts with that first run whether it is New York or Minneapolis or San Diego, or wherever it opens. Now, you just can't let that picture go into that theatre. You have got to put it in, and you have got to service that picture from the day it gets in there until you are able to take your percentage out of the box office at the close of the engagement.

The distributor has an elaborate advertising department. (218)

It has road men, field men that go out and publicize the picture in the locality where the picture shows. It contributes by contract to the advertising of the particular engagement; and as Judge Proskauer said, you can't live without this first run. That is where you get back the big revenue that makes it possible to spend the amount of money to give quality at the theatres.

Now, United Artists right now has two pictures coming in, each with a negative cost in excess of four million dollars. You just can't by any rule of thumb send those pictures out. You have got to send them out the same way you send a road show, the same way you send any attraction, whether Barnum & Bailey Circus, or anything that caters to the public taste and fancy. We are dealing with one of the most perishable items of merchandise known, and that is the type of merchandise that you have got to put out to the public, and you have got to advertise; you have got to stay with it; you have got to control, and your control is to see the proper advertising in the newspapers, the proper billboards, the proper ballyhoo in order to bring out your percentage. And what good is your percentage if you don't have a box office price that the picture is going to be exhibited at? For instance, Gone With The Wind was mentioned a half a dozen times today. When that picture went out it had a box office price of $1.10, which was a higher price than the prices before.

The same thing applied in the vaudeville days. In vaudeville you had the B. F. Keith theatres which showed the best vaudeville. The vaudeville that was shown at the Palace Theatre had the same exclusivity that has resulted in run, in clearance, in every practice that is found in these contracts that Mr. Wright says are predatory practices.

Now, what about United Artists and Universal? Each company is entirely different from the other. United Artists Corporation produces no pictures. It is a mere distributing organization. United Artists Corporation founded in 1919 has never produced a picture. It is a mere distributing organization and has offices throughout the world and is engaged in that practice everywhere. When I was down here with Judge Goddard in 1940 we had 13 producers. Today we have 19. In addition to taking on a great deal of British product, which is now playing at the Winter Garden on Broadway, and which up until two weeks ago was a legitimate theatre and is now a motion picture house again.

The United Artists Corporation under contracts that have all been submitted to Mr. Wright does not control the product it handles for the 19 producers except in part. We solicit one of Mr. Seymour's client's theatres. We bring the contract back. We then have to submit it to the owner of the picture for his approval or rejection. All our pictures are sold individually one at a time, and each picture is owned, as a rule, by a different producer at the time solicited. Very rarely do we have two pictures with one producer to offer to any customer. So we have instead of any suggestion of conspiracy, you have a theatre owner, a middle man distributor, and in the last analysis, the producer. The owner of the picture decides whether he wants it to play in that theatre or not. There are 19 of those producers at the present time, and they have 19 representatives, and we have to go through that formula in handling that particular type of business.

United Artists, so as to have the record clear, does own some stock as an investment in one theatre in San Francisco and two in Los Angeles. But the independent—and I am using "independent" in the Frohlich sense—that operates those theatres has a contract where we have nothing to say about the management, the booking, the operation, and further, there is no obligation on his part to play our pictures. It is an investment.

Universal, on the other hand, is an entirely different type of distributor. In these mechanical things that I have talked about—that is, making the pictures and the prints and the selling and whatnot—there are many things in common of necessity, just like we have a number of things in common with the other defendants here. That company is the oldest defendant here. It was in the theatre business once about 1925. We went into greater detail about it on the other hearing. It got out of the theatre business in 1929. It had the same management from 1912 to 1938 and since 1938 it has had an entirely new management. That company either produces or has produced for it by independent producers—again no affiliation—a group of pictures every year. Since 1938 its success has been phenomenal. It had very, very trying times before 1938 but under the new management it has prospered and continued to prosper.

As regards these charts that are to be offered, I say you can prove anything you want to prove with charts in this lawsuit; but the one thing that is fundamental in this business is the quality of the merchandise you are handling. I remember at a meeting where one man said there is nothing in the motion picture business that can't be cured by good pictures.

I won't go as far as Judge Proskauer to admit that Universal picture was the worst picture ever made. I think there have been many more just as bad. However, there is another chart he brought up on United Artists. On one side he had a very successful picture and on the other he had another picture, I forget the name, something about an elephant, but there it was and he put them both on the same chart. I guarantee that we can take that chart and we can offer it for some purpose that will be very helpful to every defendant in this lawsuit.

The charts prove nothing.

You will remember, particularly Judge Goddard, on the day the consent decree was offered here, practically all the independent exhibitors were here in one form or another, protesting against it. They were not interested in clearance, they were not interested in run. It all went back to the same bugaboo we have heard from the beginning. We start out to sell the pictures to get the highest prices that we can for our commodity. They start in to buy them as cheaply as possible. They also want to be relieved of the obligation of playing what they think are bad pictures, and they want to play only the good pictures on terms that they like.

If this Court, or some omnipotent court, could solve that problem, then instead of them making a lot of money as they are today, they would all make a lot of money quicker and all the producers would go broke sooner. That is the real, underlying economical principle that is behind this flood of complaints that I know Mr. Wright gets from the disgruntled in the industry.

I read in some paper here of the industry not long ago that they had a meeting of one of the exhibitor associations. They said, "Let us definitely go on record and not pay percentage anymore to any of these distributors."

Again, and finally, this is the position that we are in: We are brought down here to court; we have had to prepare information that high (indicating), which we have done, and we didn't do it because of anything in the decree, as Mr. Davis said yesterday. We do take a bow for having done it. We did it without any compulsion. We have tried to cooperate with the Government in every respect, yet I am very much afraid that we will have to sit here for weeks and weeks without being mentioned even as defendants. We are not interested in the divorcement issue, and the Government does not want any divorcement against us.

Now, I know it is a late date, but if there could have been some kind of a severance or agreement worked out so that the group here would only be required to come down here on the one day when they intend to put in their case against us, for about 30 minutes, it would be a tremendous help to us in this instance.

We sell the market as we find it. Mr. Frohlich said, we sell these theatres because they are closed and the only customers. We sell every theatre we can possibly sell, whether it is affiliated or unaffiliated. That is the sole crime the Government charges us with here. If we had refused to sell them we would have been in conspiracy of some kind; having sold them, we are condemned.

We submit that the Government should be required, before they go into their proof in this case, to state the issues as far as the three non-owning-theatre members are concerned. If they will give us those issues, which they never have, not even in this trial, we will meet them and gladly.

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright, what do you say about these three independents? It seems to me it is pretty slim. That is just my own individual attitude in the matter without much information, I admit.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, they are unquestionably in a dual position in the suit, where they do exactly as Mr. Raftery says, they sell this market, which we say is a monopolistically controlled one, as they find it. However, in the course of selling that market, they have made agreements with the affiliated companies which we say control that market, which are, in and of themselves, we say, an unreasonable restraint of trade. And on the basis of those dealings they are clearly not entitled to a clean bill of health in the case, that is, they have persistently violated the Sherman Act in our view in the course of their dealings with these other defendants, and that, of course, we propose to show by showing what that course of dealing was over a period of time and samples of the agreements by which it was carried out.

I might say that none of them is quite as lily white as this presentation here would have led you to believe. In the Goldman case, for example, there is what Mr. Frohlich referred to as a closed market, all the first-run theatres in Philadelphia being owned by Warner. What happened when somebody tried to come into that closed market with an independent theatre suitable for first-run theatre? Did United Artists or Universal or Columbia sell it? No, they refused, along with the other five theatre-owning distributors, to make any first class films available for his theatre in exactly the same way that the five theatre-owning distributors did. And it is on the basis of conduct of that sort that they clearly cannot be split out of the case prior to a full hearing, if the ultimate relief that is granted in the case is to give proper regard to all of the elements in the industry.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess until 2.10.

Mr. Proskauer: Could we take up with the Court this suggestion of—— (226)

Mr. Wright: I think it is a little premature. Wait until we get into our presentation.

Mr. Proskauer: Pardon me, your Honor.

Judge Goddard: What is that? Is that anything for us?

Mr. Proskauer: There has been some talk between Government counsel and ourselves about advising the Court that we would probably unite in asking for a recess of the trial after the Government's direct case is in, and I was asking my distinguished adversary whether he wished to bring that subject to the Court's attention now.

Mr. Wright: I think it is a little premature at this time, before we actually outline our presentation.

(Recess to 2.10 o'clock p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, before actually offering the documents I would like to outline how I think we can best use this list of exhibits.

Do each of your Honors have your copy there? If not I have some extra ones here.

Mr. Davis: I can't hear you, Mr. Wright, I am sorry.

Mr. Wright: I will stand over here.

The caption on the document is "Government's Exhibits for Identification."

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that document that you have in your hand is a printed copy of the mimeographed list that was served on September 1st in accordance with the arrangement that was made at the pretrial hearing in July with some supplementary material added. That is, the numbers 1 through 323 are those which were on the mimeographed list, and then you will note that a supplemental list has been added of material which was identified after the September list was served.

Now, in connection with physically incorporating this material in the record, I had suggested by letter to counsel for the defendants that in so far as material furnished by them was concerned that the most expeditious way would be for each of them to have a copy of the documents referred to which represented a document produced by them for marking and physical incorporation in the record, so that they would be satisfied that the copy that went in was a true copy of the record in question. And as I see it, the actual marking of the documents in inclusion in the record need not be done in the presence of the Court at all. That would largely be, I suppose, a clerical task that can be performed outside the courtroom. As I see it, the function that will have to be done here is the actual ruling on the admissibility of the exhibits as they are outlined. We, of course, have brought down copies of all the exhibits referred to, and if there is a controversy that arises as to the accuracy of our description here, or as to what is in the exhibit, of course, they are here and available for the Court's examination. But it is not my intention to hand these up back and forth, document by document, because I think this list does contain a sufficiently complete description to enable the Court to rule from the list itself.

Now, in order that the list shall be most useful to the Court and to the defendants as an index and digest of the Government's case, I think the numbering that appears on the list here should be preserved. That is, when the document goes in evidence, simply leave the same number on it and strike off the marks for identification, so that this will (229) continue to be an accurate index and list of the Government's exhibits in evidence. In the event that anything is withdrawn or excluded, it can simply be marked off here accordingly, and it may leave some gaps in numbering, but I think that we will still have a much more accurate and convenient record of identification if it is done that way, rather than trying to fill in the gaps by re-numbering subsequent exhibits. And I should like to proceed in that fashion if that is agreeable to the Court.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I have every sympathy with Mr. Wright's desire to expedite the manner in which he introduces his proof. I do not think I understand what it is he wants to do. Exhibit No. 6 on his list here, for instance, is interrogatory 50-A addressed to Loew's. Now, if that is to be in evidence I think it must be put in the record right now in the presence of the Court. I do not understand that we propose to build up out of the presence of the Court a synopsis of exhibits which the Court will then treat as having been introduced before it. It seems to me clearly the basis for anything he wants to extract from these interrogatories is the tender of the interrogatory and the answer to it, which, of course, pro tanto, constitute an admission on the part of the answering defendant, and is admissible in evidence against it. But we shall do very much, I think, if we will proceed in the customary order than if we try to short-circuit it. (230)

Mr. Wright: I was not suggesting any short circuiting in the offering. I think what I am trying to do will be perfectly clear as soon as I start to do it.

We shall follow the order of the outline in my opening statement of offering the documents, and, for example, we shall first offer now the documents that are identified on this list as answers to interrogatories by the defendants and their admissions of fact. Those are described on the list here at pages 1 through 97, and the numbers that they carry for identification are 6 through 150 inclusive. I shall, of course, offer these at this time, and I assume that the court will make a ruling on each of the identified exhibits.

All that I am merely suggesting is that, in order to make the ruling, it is not necessary to pass the exhibits back and forth physically at this time or even to have them physically marked simultaneously with the ruling; that that may be done outside the presence of the court.

Judge Hand: Why isn't that so?

Mr. Davis: I do not see that that is possible at all. I think the exhibit has to be separately offered and has to be separately marked. If there is an objection it will have to be ruled on as such. I do not think the court, if an exhibit be offered before it, which bore the number 9 and which pur- (231) ported to be a list of Paramount theatres, would, in such a contingency, rule thus and thus. I do not know any way in the world in which these exhibits can be made part of the record unless they are offered seriatim; not that "I offer exhibits identified as number 6 and number 123," but offer it seriatim. It may not require any of this deprecated passing backwards and forwards. We won't ask counsel to turn around and show them to us one by one. I really don't know any way to try a documentary case except to tender the document and have it marked in or out of the case, as the case may be.

Judge Wright: Have the defendants copies of all these?

Mr. Caskey; No, sir.

Mr. Wright: Now just a minute. As far as the interrogatory answers that I have just offered, the defendants all have copies of those, because those are copies of answers that they themselves furnished.

Mr. Davis: Wait a moment. You mean they have answers of their individual responses?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Davis: We have no answers of each others responses, which is what I take it Mr. Caskey means.

Mr. Caskey: That is correct.

(232)

Mr. Wright: As to that, that is true.

Mr. Caskey: We have never seen them.

Mr. Wright: I think the thing will shake itself as we actually proceed.

Judge Hand: You proceed.

Mr. Wright: With reference to item marked number 6 for identification, listed on the first page, and number 7, those may be marked as withdrawn because we find on checking that they are duplicated in Exhibit 48, that is, they appear later on as a part of another exhibit. So 6 and 7 may be marked withdrawn.

Mr. Davis: Are they withdrawn or simply not offered?

Mr. Wright: That is a distinction that escaped me. They are both, I should say; they are withdrawn and not offered.

Exhibits 8 and 9 we offer in evidence. What they are is apparent on the description there.

Mr. Caskey: May we see them, please?

Mr. Raftery: May it please the Court, when Mr. Wright says they are offered, they are offered against which defendants?

Judge Hand: They are offered against which defendants?

(233)

Mr. Wright: Today, if the Court please, everything that we offer will be offered against all defendants. Of course its admissibility as to those who did not furnish it will depend, I suppose, on an ultimate decision as to whether or not there is a conspiracy, but the only determination that needs to be made now is whether it is admissible against anybody for any purpose.

Mr. Seymour: What about exhibit 1? I assume that will be the first one offered.

Mr. Wright: I said in my opening statement we would proceed to offer first the interrogatory answers and the admissions of fact, and that is why we are proceeding in this way.

Mr. Raftery: On behalf of the defendants Universal group and United Artists Corporation, we object to the offer just made as not binding on either.

Mr. Frohlich: The same objection is made with respect to Columbia.

Mr. Caskey: May we have an opportunity to examine them?

Mr. Wright: Certainly. Examine them at any time.

The Court (Judge Hand): We will admit it and give you an exception. Of course, if it is not connected, if it really is not connected in the end, there is no proof of this conspiracy, why, it won't count.

(234)

Mr. Proskauer: May it be understood—

Judge Hand: We are not really going to have all these different objections. It seems to me it would be intolerable.

Mr. Proskauer: In line with what your Honor is saying, may it be understood that these objections inure to the benefit of all the defendants, so that we won't have to repeat them.

The Court (Judge Hand): I don't see why not.

Mr. Proskauer: And that we are reserving our objection to all of these things on the fundamental ground that there is no proof of conspiracy which makes them relevant or competent against any other defendant than the one who is claimed to have made the admission.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: And in that connection may I also suggest to your Honor that, of course, the alleged description of these interrogatories appearing in the copies, "Exhibits for Identification," we do not acquiesce in. They are not the exhibits themselves. They contain language of characterization and I should think we ought to be entitled to have it clearly understood that what is being offered is Interrogatory 50-A and Interrogatory 52.

Mr. Wright: That is quite right.

Mr. Proskauer: And nothing else.

Judge Hand: That is true, of course.

Mr. Wright: The only purpose of the description is for identification only. It obviously does not constitute evidence of any kind in itself.

(Government's Exhibits 8 and 9 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Next, we shall withdraw and not offer Exhibits 10 and 11, as they are contained in Exhibit 118 for identification.

We shall offer Exhibits Nos. 12 and 13 for identification, the National Theatres lists.

Mr. Caskey: With respect to Exhibit 12 for identification, a substitute copy has been submitted to counsel, showing the current position of theatres operated by National Theatres Corporation, and we think that should be offered either with the proposed exhibit or in substitution therefor.

Mr. Wright: In due course, the current list will be offered. This answer gives the picture as it was in 1939. We are offering both.

Judge Hand: Overruled. Exception.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, that is 12 and 13?

Mr. Wright: 12 and 13.

Mr. Davis: May I ask whether the stenographer is mark-(236)
ing these?

Mr. Wright: They are already labeled for identification.

Mr. Davis: No, but they do not bear the stamp of the clerk as having been made a part of the record.

Mr. Wright: The clerk, I suppose, will stamp them as they are laid out here.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, I should like to be heard on this matter. We have been unsuccessful litigants in a case in Chicago in which a controversy arose as to whether or not the document had been admitted into evidence and I feel we would not discharge our duty to our client unless the particular and precise document that is to go into evidence is currently marked by the clerk or by the stenographer, so that there can be no question as to what is in this record and what is not in it; and we are interested in saving time, but we are also intersted in the proper representation of our client and in making a record here that we can understand. I respectfully request that these documents to go into evidence be marked.

Mr. Wright: They all have the numbers marked on there and I think the only further marking that needs to be done is the striking off of the words "for identification."
(237)

Mr. Caskey: They should certainly bear some other symbol than that.

Mr. Wright: We shall withdraw Exhibits 14 and 15.

(Government's Exhibits 12 and 13 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We shall withdraw Exhibits 14 and 15 as they are duplicates contained in Exhibit No. 100 for identification, and will also withdraw Exhibits 16 and 17 because they are contained in Exhibit 97 for identification; and we shall withdraw Exhibits 18 and 19 because they are contained in Exhibit 88 for identification.

And we shall next offer the exhibit number——

Judge Goddard: How many has the clerk marked?

Judge Hand: He has marked only four.

The Clerk: That is all that were admitted.

Mr. Wright: Four are offered and in evidence. We shall next offer Exhibit No. 20 for identification, which is described there on pages 5 and 6, interrogatory answers of Fox, numbered 1 to 20 inclusive, filed in 1939.

Mr. Caskey: Now, with respect to this offer, since the date of the compilation of that answer, the certificate of incorporation has been amended so as to restate the purposes of the corporation, and I hand to Mr. Wright an amended answer and ask that it either be marked as a part of the exhibit or in substitution for it.

Mr. Wright: I would suggest that these two sheets that Mr. Caskey handed me——

Mr. Davis: Mr. Wright, we cannot hear a word you say.

Mr. Wright: I think the best thing to do with these two sheets that Mr. Caskey has handed me is to merely mark them Exhibit 20-A for identification and to have them offered and admitted with 20.

Judge Bright: Why mark them for identification?

Mr. Wright: Well, in evidence as 20-A. Then I suppose a note should be made on the list as to what 20-A is, amended certificate.

(Government's Exhibit 20 and 20-A for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: What is it, an amended answer?

Mr. Wright: it is simply an amendment to the certificate. The charter is only a part of the interrogatory answers that are contained in Exhibit 20.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, how much have you offered, all of 20?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: Is it your purpose that twenty-four documents are to have the same exhibit number?

Mr. Wright: They were given the one exhibit number (239) because they were all given to us as one document. We have marked the interrogatory answers as we found them in this documentary form in which they were filed. That is why those twenty-four answers are given one number, otherwise it would mean tearing the answer apart.

Mr. Davis: They ought to be physically affixed to each other.

Mr. Wright: They are physically affixed.

Mr. Caskey: In that connection, then, we have what we understood to be in pursuance of the Government's request, prepared supplemental answers to these interrogatories, bringing them down to date. I had not anticipated that they were to be offered in bulk, but if they are, we are prepared to hand to counsel the amended answers in bulk.

Mr. Wright: I think we have on this list, if the Court please, both the 1939 answers and then later the 1945 supplementary or amended answers, and I think we can take care of that at the proper time.

Mr. Caskey: This is different material.

Judge Hand: They are under these sub-numbers?

Mr. Wright: They supplement, I take it, the information that was contained in this Exhibit 20 with reference to the (240) matters covered by these interrogatory numbers here. That information was asked for in 1939.

Judge Hand: You mean they are on this page 113 or 114?

Mr. Wright: Oh, no.

The Court: On that list, where are they?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, those 1945 answers occur later on, in the list. We grouped in the list for convenience all of the 1939 answers first. Then the 1945 answers appear in the list substantially further along. I don't think it makes any difference whether or not these 1945 supplements are offered directly following this material or at a later time as long as they are clearly identified.

Judge Hand: You mean they appear on page 10?

Mr. Wright: Page 10 contains the 1945 answers of Fox as to certain distribution data, and then there is an admission of facts but then over on page 14——

Mr. Caskey: Oh, Mr. Wright, you could not have listed it because you never had it. We haven't been able to get it ready over the week-end.

Mr. Wright: Quite obviously it is not on our list then. We did have answers on the National Theatres organization listed on page 14 there.

Judge Hand: It is going to be bad for the stenographer (241) to be taking down all these current remarks here that are qualified by something else. Why don't you straighten out your record?

Mr. Wright: I think the best way to straighten out the record would then be to have these documents he has just handed me marked, and I will read the description into the record as they are marked. This 20-B——

Mr. Davis: You have offered 20, and 20 has been marked?

Mr. Wright: 20 and 20-A have been offered and received. 20-B——

Judge Hand: These are to be 20-B?

Mr. Wright: I was going to mark them as they are physically separated here, giving each one a separate designation. 20-B is a supplemental answer dated September 27, 1945, by Fox to Interrogatory 2.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-B in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 20-C is a two-sheet schedule which supplements the Fox answer to Interrogatory 2.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-C in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 20-D is a three-page supplement dated September 27, 1945, by Fox to Interrogatory No. 3.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-D in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then E will be a two-page supplement bearing the same date, by Fox, to Interrogatory No. 4.
(241-A)

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-E in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: F is a four-page supplement filed by Fox, bearing the same date, to Interrogatories 5, 6 and 7.

(242)

Mr. Wright: And 20-G is a supplement bearing the same date by Fox covering interrogatories 8, 9, 10 and 11.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-G.)

Mr. Wright: 20-H will be a supplement consisting of two pages by Fox to interrogatories 12, 13 and 14, same date.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-H.)

Mr. Wright: 20-I is a two-page supplement by Fox of the same date to interrogatories 15 and 16.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-I).

Mr. Wright: 20-J will be a single-page supplement, same party, same date, to interrogatory 17.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-J.)

Mr. Wright: 20-K, a single-page supplement of the same party, the same date, to interrogatories 18 and 19.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 20-K.)

Mr. Wright: 20-L is a two-page supplement by the same party, same date, to interrogatories 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24.

Mr. Wright: Now, the next item on the list there, 25, 26 and 27, we shall not offer at this time because I think most of the data that is contained there on which we will need to rely is reflected in later supplemental theatre lists that were filed in 1945. You will note that what this is is a series of monthly reports indicating changes, and I do not think it is necessary to show all the monthly changes in the record. We will simply show the situation at the end of the period and at the beginning.

Judge Hand: What are these, 25, 26, 27 and 28?

Mr. Wright: Those are monthly reports on the Fox Theatre position which were submitted pursuant to the consent decree which showed the changes monthly. I say, I do not think it is necessary to encumber the record with the monthly changes because we do have a 1945 list which shows the net results, so I am not offering those at this time. There may be a specific report or so that we might wish to offer later on.

Mr. Caskey: I think your Honor said 28 also. I think the documents not offered only go through 27.

Mr. Wright: That is right, 25, 26 and 27 are the ones not offered.

We will now offer 28 and 29, which are described at the top of the page there.

Mr. Caskey: I have with respect to 28 and 29 the supplemental answers and the same information for the years since 1939.

Mr. Wright: I do not recall that we asked for those.

Judge Hand: 28 is admitted and 29 is admitted.

(244)

Mr. Wright: I take it that this is material to the defendants' desire to have in the record at some point anyway, and if they do we might as well put it in now as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Proskauer: Do not attribute that desire to me.

Mr. Davis: Or me.

Mr. Wright: I think it would be best to defer offering this material that has just been handed to us because it may be that we may not want to use it.

Mr. Caskey: The point, your Honor, is that he is offering answer to interrogatory 25 which shows certain data as to motion pictures produced from the years 1930-31 to 1937-38, and he terminates his offer of proof seven years ago. Now, if it has any relevancy at all, we think that at this time and in the same place in the record there should be evidence as to the relative cost of the pictures which have been produced during the last seven years.

Mr. Wright: If the defendants wish to put it in I will be glad to put it in here. It is simply a matter of convenience.

Judge Hand: Put it in.

Mr. Wright: These, I take it, Mr. Caskey, are supplements to 30, are they not, rather than 28 or 29?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir, they are exactly the same material (245) as with respect to interrogatory No. 25——

Mr. Wright: 28 is the exhibit under discussion.

Mr. Caskey: That is right, feature pictures grouped into four categories by the years, showing the title, stars, and names of distributor.

Mr. Wright: All right. The Fox supplement to interrogatory No. 25 for the 1938-1939 season will be marked Exhibit 28-A.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-A.)

Mr. Wright: And for the 1939-1940 season it will be marked Exhibit 28-B.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-B.)

Mr. Wright: And for the 1940-1941 season, Exhibit 28-C.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-C.)

Mr. Wright: And for the 1941-1942 season, Exhibit 28-D.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-D.)

Mr. Wright: For the 1942-1943 season it will be marked Exhibit 28-E.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-E.)

Mr. Wright: And for the 1943-1944 season it will be marked Government's Exhibit 28-F.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-F.)

Mr. Wright: And for the 1944-1945 season—it seems to me we are getting into the future here—mark that 28-G.

(246)

(Marked Government's Exhibit 28-G.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer also 29, which is the answer of Movietone News, a Fox subsidiary.

Judge Bright: We have had marked 28 and 29 here.

Mr. Wright: 28 is the answer to that interrogatory 26 that was filed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film, the parent; and 29 is the answer to the same interrogatory filed by Movietone News, Inc., its wholly-owned subsidiary.

Judge Hand: You are marking these A, B, C, D and so on under 28, aren't you?

Mr. Wright: Those were the supplements.

Judge Hand: Yes, I know that.

Mr. Wright: But now I am back on the regular list here. 28-G was the last supplementary one.

Judge Hand: That is the last I have got.

Mr. Wright: Well, I am now offering 29, which is the answer of Fox Movietone News to interrogatory 26.

Judge Hand: You also offered 28^1, didn't you?

Mr. Wright: 28 itself, yes. That was offered and received.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, how do we distinguish between the two number 28's?

Mr. Wright: That really should not be. The 28^1 should appear only in the footnote there, and really not with the 29. I think that is an error in the way the list is set up. If you will just strike out 28^{-1} I think you will solve the problem.

Mr. Caskey: Does 29 now consist of both the answers of Fox and the Movietone News showing the number of sound stages——

Mr. Wright: 28 is the answer of Fox to that—contains the answer of Fox to interrogatory No. 26; and 29 contains the answer of Movietone News to the same interrogatory.

Judge Hand: So 28[1] goes out, does it?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I think that notation there, although Fox's answer to 26 is included in 28.

Judge Hand: 29 is received.

(Government's Exhibit 29 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Next we will offer Exhibit 30 for identification; and I should say Exhibits 30 through 39 are all Fox's answers concerning distribution of Fox features filed in 1939, and we will offer those as a group.

Mr. Proskauer: May it please your Honors it is my desire to lodge special objection which will be typical to Exhibit 30. I am embarrassed by the offer of a lot of things together, but I am confining my attention for the moment to Exhibit 30. That purports to be a list of feature pictures distributed by Fox during the 1936-1937 season with total film rentals received and information about five pictures for Atlanta, Kansas City, Philadelphia and New York. (248)

I am objecting to that on the ground of irrelevancy as well as incompetency, as far as we are concerned. It is on that kind of isolated, unrelated information that these charts have been built up, and I am making the point substantively and not technically. A case cannot be built up by that process of selectivity and then base a lot of charts on that kind of partial information.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Caskey: I press the objection with such ability as I have: These pictures and these cities were arbitrarily selected by the Government. As far as the reasons for the selection of the five pictures out of a list of 60 which we distributed that year we don't know. Nor do we know why they picked the four cities. But it must have been in the hope that some picture would be developed out of that material which would then be said to be typical of the whole. We do not believe it is typical of the whole, and we think it should not be received without at least preliminary proof that it is.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Davis: So that I may keep my notes correctly, do I understand that Mr. Wright is introducing as one exhibit what is identified on this list by identification 30 to 37?

Mr. Wright: No indeed, Mr. Davis. I merely offered 30 through 39 together, because they all are Fox's answer to the '39 interrogatories relating to the distribution of its pictures. They are separately numbered and will go in as separate exhibits.

Mr. Davis: I misunderstood you. I thought you were offering them in bulk. And they preserve, do they not, at the hands of the clerk the same numbers that they were given when marked for identification?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Mr. Proskauer: By confining my objection, as I did, to Exhibit 30, I hope it is clearly understood that I am not waiving it as to the remainder of these exhibits which Mr. Wright is offering in bulk. It goes to all of them.

(Government's Exhibits 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we shall offer Nos. 40 and 41, 42 and 43, which are 1945 answers of Fox relating to the distribution of its films for the 1943-1944 season.

Mr. Caskey: I think we will make speed if we go a little slower. 40 is offered?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: Now, there is no objection. But when it comes to 41 there is an objection.

Mr. Wright: Well, let us consider that separately. Then 40, I take it, is admitted.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(250)

(Government's Exhibit 40 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I offer 41.

Judge Hand: Now I understand that 30 to 40 inclusive are offered and we have admitted?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Wright: I am now offering 41, and Mr. Caskey wants to make an objection to that interrogatory.

Mr. Caskey: This is objected to on the ground that—I will state first what it is. This is a chart, a series of charts prepared at the Government's request showing the first-run exhibitors; there are separate sheets for each city in the United States having a population of 25,000 or more, showing with respect to one picture the first-run exhibition in all of those cities, one picture. Then with respect to a portion of the cities, the first and second runs. With respect to another group of cities, the first, second and third runs; and finally with respect to four cities, the first, second, third and fourth runs. Now, we apprehend that from this limited amount of material some inference of pattern of distribution of all of our pictures in the United States, the entire United States, will be made. I think it is not competent for that purpose; there is no basis for the selection of 25,000, utterly arbitrary; there is no basis for the selection as to first runs, second runs, third runs and fourth runs. It is purely arbitrary. It is a purely arbitrary demand made upon us. We think that this material will not furnish any basis for any statistical study that will be trustworthy.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Caskey: And I call attention to the fact that the picture that was selected was deliberately selected as the one which had had the greatest revenue-producing quality; so that on its very face it is an arbitrary selection.

(Government's Exhibit 41 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I will now offer—

Mr. Davis. What is the last tender?

Mr. Wright: 41.

Mr. Davis. That has been admitted?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

We will next offer 42 and 43, which are material of the same class as 41, separately bound.

Mr. Caskey: No. 43 is not.

Mr. Wright: That is correct. 42 we will offer. It is the same class of material as 41, separately bound.

Mr. Caskey: Same objection.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

(Government's Exhibit 42 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I will offer 43—

Mr. Caskey: Just a minute, Mr. Wright. 41 and 42 are exactly the same thing subdivided into two volumes, is that correct?

Mr. Wright: I think so, right.

And we now offer 43, which is information furnished by Fox of a slightly different character. It is described in the exhibit. It deals with film rentals paid during the 1943-1944 season, and receipts from theatre admissions during approximately the same season.

Mr. Caskey: Well, the vice of this printed book—it has an alluring attractiveness but it is just plain wrong. The exhibit, as I recall it, is the film rental paid by National Theatres Corporation during the year 1944. My memory may be at fault. I think not.

Mr. Wright: The description may be inaccurate, but whatever it is it speaks for itself. It states film rental payments made by National Theatres Corporation in respect to theatres in which it or its subsidiaries own a financial interest or in which it or its subsidiaries negotiated film licenses, including shorts and newsreels for 53 weeks beginning December 26, 1943, and ending December 30, 1944; and that (252a) replies to interrogatory No. 12. And interrogatory No. 13 covers the same period; so it is true that that description in the list is incorrect in referring to the season. It should refer to approximately the fiscal year 1944, which is a few months difference on each end from the 1943-1944 season. (253)

Judge Hand: What are you talking about, Interrogatory No. 13 now?

Mr. Wright: 12 and 13, both. The period covered by the answer is actually from December '43 to December '44, instead of as suggested in the description, September 1, 1943 to September 1, 1944.

Mr. Davis: Did I hear correctly that that exhibit was of the National Theatres?

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Davis: If so, then I wonder what is the reason for the substitution of the words "Theatres in circuits affiliated with Fox"? Why don't we use the theatres to which the exhibit refers?

Mr. Wright: I suppose that is a matter of artistic language. Actually I suppose National Theatres may be fairly described as a theatre circuit affiliated with Fox, since Fox owns 100 per cent of it. But obviously we are not offering the description. We are offering the exhibit.

Mr. Proskauer: As I understand it, this column headed "Description" is not going in evidence at all?

Mr. Wright: Of course not.

Mr. Proskauer: It is just a shorthand method of identifying an exhibit, which is the only thing before the Court?

Judge Hand: That is true. (254)

Mr. Wright: Exactly.

Judge Hand: 43 is received.

(Government's Exhibit 43 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then I shall offer No. 44, which are admissions of fact furnished by Fox in 1945 which relate to the distribution of the films first-run in the cities over 100,000.

Mr. Caskey: There again, Mr. Wright, the description—is this only for four seasons?

Mr. Wright: The seasons in question are 1936-1937; 1939-1940; 1940-1941; 1941-1942, and 1943-1944. This is a shorthand description there which is somewhat less accurate than what I just stated.

Mr. Caskey: Well, I can't read shorthand, but the description here would seem to embrace something more than what is being offered.

Mr. Wright: I think it is perfectly clear from the exhibit itself.

Judge Hand: It is received. Now what next?

(Government's Exhibit 44 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will also offer 45, which is the portion of the 1939 answers of Fox which deal with the history of the development of the business.

(255)

Any objection?

Mr. Caskey: None.

(Government's Exhibit 45 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I do not want to be overtechnical here, but Mr. Wright addressed a general question to this table, "Any objection?", and Mr. Caskey answered "No." I do not want to have any misunderstanding about it that I am reserving my objection, which is fundamental, and which the Court has taken under advisement, overruled, and I am not repeating it with respect to each one, but I do not want to be put in a position as though I were waiving it.

Mr. Wright: No question about that.

29, I believe, which appears next on the list here has already been offered and received, the Movietone News answer.

Mr. Caskey: Now, Mr. Wright, when you introduced that I understood you only introduced that much which related to sound stages. We did not see the exhibit you handed up, so I don't know.

Mr. Wright: Well, let us take a look at it. 29 actually contains in it as a single document the answer of the Movietone News Interrogatories 25 through 38.

Mr. Caskey: How much is being offered?

Mr. Wright: We offer the entire exhibit.

(256)

Mr. Davis: This is another 29? Are you still on it?

Mr. Wright: That is Exhibit 29 for identification.

Judge Goddard: You have two exhibits for identification marked 29?

Mr. Wright: No, there is only one exhibit, your Honor; it appears twice on the list because it refers to different interrogatories. I think the reason it was listed twice there was because whoever was making up the list was trying to preserve a sequence of separating or putting the production answers after the history answers, and where he had an exhibit that contained both types of information, he broke the list here, although the single document which contained both types of information was not broken. It just consists of one exhibit.

Judge Hand: Now, Interrogatory 26 has already been offered. Interrogatories 27 and 8 have not been, as far as I can see.

Mr. Caskey: What he has handed me are answers to Interrogatories Nos. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39.

Judge Bright: All by Movietone?

Mr. Caskey: All by Movietone and all in evidence quite unbeknown to me. They are not listed in this book.

Mr. Wright: Well, if there is any objection to any of the other parts of the answer going in, I suppose that can be removed. But, in any event, we are perfectly willing to offer the exhibit as it is containing those answers, and the list here should be corrected to show what it does contain. I think the reason those are not listed is that most of these answers are of a negative character, and that is why I think we listed them the way we did. That is, the answers to 30 through 39 are simply, say, none in each case, and that is why I think they were omitted from the list.

Judge Bright: How about the answer to 29, answer to Interrogatory No. 29?

Mr. Wright: The answer to Interrogatory No. 29?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Wright: As contained in Exhibit 29?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Wright: It simply says, "State the approximate number of persons now employed by defendants and its subsidiaries in the production of motion pictures within the United States." The answer is, "Approximately 150 persons are now employed by defendant in the production of motion pictures."

Judge Bright: Well, are you offering that?

Mr. Wright: We are not offering in evidence any more than the answers which are listed here, but they are of so little significance that it does not make any difference so far as we are concerned for the purposes of the record whether all of the answers go in or not. We simply did not want to mutilate the document as it came to us, because I assume that the defendants might be interested in having that other data in the record that is here. But as far as what we would rely on, we would rely only on the part of the answer that appears in the list here.

Judge Bright. What are you offering?

Mr. Wright: We are offering the exhibit as it now stands with the complete——

Judge Hand: What exhibit, 29?

Mr. Wright: Exhibit 29 which contains the answers of Movietone News to Interrogatories 25 through 39 inclusive.

Judge Bright: Then we will have to change the book to add 29 to 39 inclusive, page 14.

Mr. Wright: Yes, it should be changed to note that it does contain that additional data in it, although, as I say, it was omitted from the description because there is no particular significance in it.

Judge Hand: I do not understand what you are talking about. You are putting in 29, and what does it contain? It has already been put in, hasn't it?

Mr. Wright: 29 contains the answer filed by Movietone News, Inc.

Judge Hand: Just a minute. 26 has already gone in. I mean the answer to Interrogatory 26 has already gone in? (259)

Mr. Wright: That is right. But that is contained in this Exhibit 29 which also contains the answer of the same company Movietone News to interrogatories Nos. 25 and 39 inclusive.

Judge Hand: 25 and 39?

Mr. Wright: 25 through 39 inclusive.

Judge Hand: Mr. Caskey, is this all right as far as you are concerned?

Mr. Caskey: Yes. I was just surprised it was in evidence. We have no objection. Mr. Wright says the answers to the interrogatories show that the company has not engaged in the practices which we are charged with, and for that reason it should go in evidence.

(Government's Exhibit 29 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Before we leave 29 I think this supplementary answer of Movietone News furnished by Mr. Caskey should be marked and is offered as 29-A. That contains supplementary answers by that company to interrogatories 28, 29 and 30 as of September 27, 1945.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 29-A.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer the corporate chart of National Theatres Corporation's holdings, which has been marked as Exhibit 21 for identification. Now, that is the answer to interrogatory 17 of the '39 interrogatories.
(260)

Mr. Caskey: May I see that a minute, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: This is the 1939 list. Now, you have been furnished with an up-to-date one.

Mr. Wright: We are offering with that No. 22 for identification which, I believe, is the list furnished with your letter of June 26, 1945, which states that is correct as of May 15, 1945.

(Government's Exhibits 21 and 22 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we are offering 23 and 24 for identification which are also National Theatre's answers showing the theatres in which it had formerly had an interest and in which the interest had been discontinued. 23 relates to the wholly-owned, and 24 to the pooled theatres.

Mr. Caskey: This is 1939 again?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

(Government's Exhibits 23 and 24 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Now we will begin on the Loew answers to the 39 interrogatories.

Judge Hand: Just a moment, if you please.
(261)

Mr. Wright: I will first offer Exhibit 46 for identification, which contains the answers of Loew to interrogatories 1 to 24 inclusive, largely being concerned with the organization of the company.

(Government's Exhibit 46 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: There is genealogy in this, if the Court please, but we don't object to it.

Mr. Wright: The only reason we offer it is because it is in a very convenient form and would probably be offered by the others anyway.

Judge Hand: I think it will probably be like a great deal of this stuff, like most of the stuff, for instance, in the Aluminum case, covering whole walls of the courthouse, and nobody ever looked at it.

Mr. Wright: Of course we hope that fate won't befall most of this material. We have stripped down this case quite materially to what you see here; that is, we are not offering by any means all the documents that are available.

We will also offer No. 47, which is Loew's 1945 supplement to interrogatories 15, 17 and 18.

Mr. Davis: May I see that a moment? You offer these schedules with the covering letter, I take it?

(262)

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Davis: 15, 17 and 18, is it?

Mr. Wright: 1945 supplement to 15, 17 and 18.

Mr. Davis: Yes.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 47 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer No. 48, which contains interrogatory answers to Nos. 55, 56, 57, 58, 51 and 53.

Mr. Davis: Will you wait just a moment, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Surely.

Mr. Davis: They are all a part of the same answers to interrogatories? You are just offering separate answers?

Mr. Wright: They are all contained in one exhibit, which is marked No. 48 for identification.

Mr. Davis: I understand: You are offering the answers to Interrogatories 55, 56, 57 and 58 in that exhibit?

Mr. Wright: And 51 and 53.

Mr. Davis: 51 and 53.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 48 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will withdraw Exhibit 49, which there again is monthly theatre reports, and will offer No. 50, which covers Loew production answers for 1939.

Mr. Davis: Is that in a separate answer to interrogatories, separate interrogatories, or is it contained in this—— (263)

Mr. Wright: 50 contains the answers to 25 through 39 inclusive.

(Government's Exhibit 50 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we shall offer exhibits containing the Loew answers with respect to distribution, which were filed in 1939 and which are marked 51 through 55 inclusive. I believe all contain similar material. 51, I think, is somewhat—I will offer 51 first. That contains the answers to Interrogatories 40 through 46.

Mr. Caskey: We have the same objection that we urged with respect to the Fox answers, to similar questions, that they are not representative and typical.

Mr. Davis: We join in that motion.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 51 in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: Just a minute, Mr. Wright, will you please. My attention has been called in connection with the tender of Exhibit 50, which, you said, contained answers 25 to 39 inclusive. I am reminded it does not contain all of them; the description is inaccurate.

Mr. Wright: My description may be inaccurate, my oral one, but I see that the list itself does not list a part of it; that the only interrogatories which are in 50 are those which are in the list here. I can check that in a moment. I think the mistake was mine but I will clear it up in a moment.

50 contains the answers to 25, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30, which are not mentioned on our list——

Mr. Davis: You have offered them, nevertheless.

Mr. Wright: 31, 32 and 33 are also contained there. 34, 36 and 37.

In this case our offer is confined to the data, I think, which is listed on the list. If the defendants wish to have the other data that is contained there actually received in evidence, we have no objection. Again, the only reason these answers were listed was because those are the only ones in the exhibit upon which we would rely, but we have no objection to the——

Mr. Davis: I haven't any choice, Mr. Wright, as to what is offered and what is not offered, if I understand distinctly just what is offered. I don't want any dispute hereafter as to what is in and what is out of the record.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Davis: And I am not suggesting to you that you include or omit.

Mr. Wright: I simply wanted to avoid, if I could, physically mutilating the interrogatory in the form in which we got it from you, because I assume that you might wish to have the other data contained in the answers that we do not specify in our printed list.

Judge Hand: Are you offering the answers to 29 and 30?

Mr. Wright: No, we are not. We are only offering the answers that are written on here.

Judge Hand: All right. So you are offering as 50, the answers to interrogatories 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 35, 38 and 39?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Mr. Davis: Very good.

Judge Hand: That is received.

Mr. Wright: 51, I believe, we covered. 52, 53, 54 and 55 are all answers to interrogatories 48, which happened to be separately bound, and each one relates to a different city. We will offer those together.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 52 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We are offering 53, 54 and 55 also.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 53 in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: It is Mr. Caskey's objection, in which we join, that they are selected cities and have no bearing and relevance to the overall picture the Government asserts.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Davis has made an objection to this exhibit, and I want it perfectly clear that any objection made by any defendant will be deemed made by all and the ruling applicable to all, because I should object to this as well as many others.

Judge Hand: I think that will save time and preserve your rights. Of course it is my practice, and has always been, to admit everything in a suit of this sort unless, as they used to say in the elevated railroad cases, it was more than five blocks from the Bowery.

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer 56 for identification, which are Loew's 1945 answers to the 1945 interrogatories 1 through 13—which are, as stated on the list there, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 12 and 13.

Mr. Davis; For the season of 1943-1944?

Mr. Wright: It all relates to 1943-1944.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 56 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer this Exhibit 57, which are also all Loew's answers to the 1945 interrogatories, which have been subdivided into 38 subnumbers in accordance with the volumes in which, I believe, they were furnished to us and which are described here on pages 21, 22 and 23 inclusive.

Mr. Davis: Have you that document before you?

Mr. Wright: Here they are. Each one bears the number 57 and then a dash. Here is 57-1.
(267)

I want to correct the record, if I said 38. There are 49 of those volumes, 57-1 through 57-49. I think there is one for each State and the District of Columbia.

Judge Bright: That covers pages 21, 22 and 23 of your printed book?

Mr. Wright: Yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, there are schedules which apparently were prepared by my clients for our use and for delivery to the Government in answer to its request. They were delivered, I think, with the understanding that any errors which might be discovered on a rechecking could be corrected, and I should not want to be textually bound by them; but I should also say that anybody who wants to go through these particular exhibits and extract the juice from them has quite a few days' work ahead of him.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: As far as any of these exhibits are concerned, at any time that an error appears, they can, of course, be corrected.

Judge Bright: Is there any juice in them?

Mr. Davis: I think most of them, your Honor, are thoroughly barren of juice but I do not want to commit myself even on that.

Mr. Wright: Next we will offer—

Mr. Davis: Where are we now?

Mr. Wright: No. 58.

Mr. Davis: Gone through that schedule on page 22, have we?

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Davis: That is the one the clerk is working on now?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Mr. Davis: Then what about 57-4?

Mr. Wright: That is already covered.

Mr. Davis: That is all in that encyclopedia that you have there?

Mr. Wright: That is quite right.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 57-1 to 57-49 inclusive in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The next exhibit—

Judge Bright: It is 58, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: 58 we are now offering, the admission of facts furnished by Loew, covering the 1943-1944 season.

Mr. Davis: That is 58?

Mr. Wright: That is 58.

Mr. Caskey: Four seasons?

(269)

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Mr. Davis: How many of those are there? The clerk seems to have quite—is that all one?

Mr. Wright: That is all bound in.

Mr. Davis: I noticed the clerk running his fingers through it, counting them.

Mr. Wright: Of course, I do think there is no need to have the marking done here in the presence of the Court. I think maybe that could be handled outside.

Judge Bright: Your printed book covers more than four seasons, doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: The description there says seasons 1936-1937 through 1943. That is not strictly accurate. There are four seasons covered. The first one is 1936-1937, the next is 1939-1940, the next is 1941-1942, and the last is 1943-1944, and that applies to all the admissions of fact for 1945 wherever you see them in the list.

Mr. Davis: That is in this volume which you marked Exhibit 58?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Mr. Davis: Maybe the Court might want to see that and see how illuminating it is.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 58 in evidence.)

Judge Hand: We now come to whatever Paramount may contribute to its destruction.

(270)

Mr. Wright: The first item is No. 59, which details the facts about its organization.

Mr. Davis: What are we on, Paramount?

Mr. Wright: That is one that I do not think can destroy it.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 59 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 60 and 61 fill in, I think, the other organization interrogatories in the '39 answers as described on page 25, and 62——

Judge Bright: You are offering 60 and 61?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we are offering 59, 60, 61, 62 and 63, which cover the Paramount 1939 organization answers.

(Government's Exhibits 60 and 61 received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: I do not know that it is worth wasting time, but I would join Judge Bright in his inquiry as to what in the world we care about the current indebtedness of Paramount?

Mr. Wright: I don't——

Judge Hand: It is a hard question for you to answer, I know.

Mr. Wright: I would say the reason that is in there is because, again, we wanted simply to avoid any questions that might be raised by tearing apart these things in the form that they were given to us and it was data that we had asked for, and it is contained in here with other relevant data, and to us it seemed that we would be less open to criticism if we simply offered it as it had come to us.

Mr. Proskauer: On the contrary, we gave you what you asked for and did not admit it was relevant. I think it is wholly irrelevant.

Mr. Wright: There may be, of course, much of the material which is in here which may never be referred to in the course of argument or briefs.

Judge Hand: That is always so, unfortunately. It isn't true——

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor means it is always so in one of these Government antitrust suits.

Judge Hand: It isn't true only of them, you will admit, in your large experience.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 62 and 63 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer 64, which is Paramount's supplementary answer as to its subsidiary corporations as of 1945.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 64 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 64 and 66, which are also answers to 1939 interrogatories, showing the discontinued theatre interests.

(272)

Mr. Wright: Then we will withdraw the offer of 67, 68 and 69, the monthly theatre reports.

Mr. Davis: Where are we now, Mr. Wright. Pardon me.

Mr. Wright: We are on page 26 and we have just withdrawn offering Exhibits 67, 68 and 69 for identification.

Mr. Davis: I am glad I got there in time. Everything before that has been offered?

Judge Hand: Wouldn't like you to tempt them to offer it, you know.

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer the Paramount production answers of 1939 which are in these volumes marked for identification as 70 and 71 and 63.

Judge Bright: You are offering 63——

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: And 70 and 71?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: If the Court please, I would like to raise a question about some of these three exhibits, because, while I realize your Honors will take the evidence probably, I wondered whether we could not get some little slicing down of the material. These three exhibits relate in whole or in part to production activities, and it was pointed out to your Honors in the opening that, whereas the complaint talks a good deal about a charge of conspiracy with respect to production, there wasn't anything about that in the trial brief. If the Government has abandoned that claim, why should we load the record with exhibits on that subject? If the Government still presses the claim, we need to know that. And may I through the Court ask your Honor to ask Mr. Wright to state whether or not that charge of conspiracy with respect to production is still in the case?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, certainly the evidence of what was done with respect to interchange of talent, equipment and other phases of production material is in the case. We do not claim that that interchange of production facilities is evidence in itself, that these people have together monopolized production. We do think the evidence of interchange of stars, talent and equipment is relevant and significant as showing the essentially non-competitive nature of the relationship between them; that is, it does have evidentiary value on the issues in the suit.

The Court: We will admit it.

Mr. Seymour: There is just one other question that I would like also to raise on Exhibit 63 in this group of three. That contains Paramount answers as to the cost of producing short subjects and newsreels from 1930 to 1938. Now that material was obtained by the Government before the consent decree. The consent decree, in Section 4-B, a provision is still in effect, enjoins these defendants from forcing shorts or news reels. This material was relevant to the original charge. It seems to me to be out of the case in the light of the continuing provision of the decree. And I raise that question only because if that sort of thing could be eliminated at this stage, it would lighten the load a little bit; but if the Government counsel still wants to press it, I simply call attention to the fact that it seems wholly irrelevant in view of that provision.

Mr. Wright: Its only relevance, if the Court please, is this: this material does not prove any forcing of shorts, news reels, in itself. It simply gives a picture of the extent to which that phase of the business figured in the overall Paramount business and how it compared with the feature film business, which is the main subject of the suit.

Judge Hand: It is very hard for the Court safely to rule out things, and safer to let them in, but I do think sometimes, and I think probably in this case, you ought to take a little more risk in your case than you seem inclined to. After all, things that are so remote that we would probably pay no attention to them, and you haven't it in your brief, why (275) should they be in here? I really am putting it up to you. I would think they only cumbered the record.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, as to that Exhibit 63, I do not think that some of this material is particularly vital to the case but it does contain material which we do think is relevant and rather than tear the answer apart, I would rather put it in this way, so that in case it is necessary to rely on it, it will be there. I do not think there is going to be any encumbrance in so far as the work that your Honors will have to perform is concerned.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, not in the form of objection to evidence but following Mr. Seymour's question, I am wholly at sea as to whether the Government is pressing in this courtroom what some of the court and some of my colleagues understood they were withdrawing and that was a claim that there was a conspiracy in regard to production. Mr. Caskey was arguing yesterday and your Honor suggested that was not the Government's claim, yet when the question is put to Mr. Wright here a few moments ago, we don't get an answer to the question which your Honor put to him, and it makes a very great difference in the time we are going to consume in our defense here. I should like to know if the Court thinks it is a reasonable request, whether

Mr. Wright claims that by this evidence of exchange and any other evidence he has, there has been a conspiracy to monopolize production, as distinguished from exhibition? It would seem to me, your Honor, that if he could answer that question yes or no, we would know what we have got to do in presenting our defense. We do not know at this minute.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I can only state what I did before, that we do not argue or won't attempt to prove any conspiracy to monopolize production as such. However, it is perfectly clear that the monopolization of a market, the theatre market, in the distribution facilities, does have an effect on production and does give these people a control over production of films that they otherwise would not have. And we also, I repeat, offer the material as to the interchange of production facilities as merely some evidence of the essentially non-competitive relationships that prevailed between the major producer exhibitors.

The Court: We will receive it. You have gone through to 71, haven't you?

(277)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer in evidence the distribution answers of Paramount filed in 1939, which are contained in volumes marked for identification as Exhibits 72 through 79.

Mr. Caskey: We have the same objection to these as to 41.

Judge Hand: Are you making an objection?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, we think this is the same type of material for Paramount as 41 does for Fox, and we have that special objection.

Judge Hand: Overruled. You are offering 71, 73——

Mr. Wright: 74.

Judge Hand: (Continuing) 75, 76, 77, 78 and 79?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Mr. Seymour: Of course, here is a whole group of exhibits, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, which deal with the matter that I just mentioned before, shorts and newsreels. It seems to me to be taken care of by the decree, and why it should be dumped into the case at this time, when none of it can show any possible violation of the decree, I cannot imagine.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, the question I was going to ask you before Mr. Proskauer spoke was, Do you claim Section 4-B of the consent decree has been violated?

Mr. Wright: No. This material as to shorts and newsreels is not offered to show evidence of forcing of those newsreels. It is offered to show the relationship between (278) the defendants in handling feature films also carries over into shorts and newsreels. It is a relatively unimportant part of the business but still a part of the business which is the subject matter of the lawsuit, that is, the interchange of license fees among these different groups does extend to shorts and newsreels as well as to feature pictures, and we are simply showing here what the general facts are with respect to that phase of the business. It is not an important one, admittedly, but it does have relevance.

Judge Hand: Well, you know, it is a troublesome thing, this attempt to put everything in as background, which is constantly done. Of course, when we are engaged in a jury trial we have to sit up and take notice and rule it out or rule it in and not just slop along, and I am afraid we are slopping alone a good deal here; but if you insist that it is relevant and important, we are going to let it in. I think that is, really, on the whole, mainly your responsibility, as to whether you want to put in a lot of things here which you admit haven't any very direct bearing and probably will not be alluded to or considered. That is what you have almost said to me.

Mr. Wright: That is virtually what the fact is. I cannot tell at this time how much importance ultimately might be attached to some of those figures on shorts and newsreels.
As of now, I think it would be very little, but in making my record, it seems to me that I am entitled to that much protection, provided we can do it without unduly burdening the Court. Where this material is contained in these answers with this relevant material, I do not see any advantage, really, for the Court or anyone else in separating it out physically, as long as we have separated it out here descriptively, so it can be conveniently disregarded.

Judge Hand: There is this advantage, that if you put this thing in, you are certainly tempting strongly the defendants to put in a lot of evidence to answer it. It either has no purpose, or, if the inferences which you intended to give rise to are incorrect, it will be answered by testimony. That is the very sort of thing that makes these cases so horrible.

Mr. Wright: If the Court, please, we have made—

Judge Hand: I do not see why you should put in evidence here which you can hardly see any relevancy to and say, practically, to the judges, "Well, you should worry."

Mr. Wright: We have made, I think, a very sincere and a quite unusual effort, if the Court please, in organizing this material in this form, to make the handling of a record like this as expeditious and as convenient as possible.

Judge Hand: That is very good, and we appreciate it very much, but why should you put in stuff you cannot see the relevancy of?

Mr. Wright: Well, I say that I think it is relevant to show the full relationship among the defendants of the business they do with each other, whether it is done in the form of newsreels and shorts as well as features. In terms of dollars and cents it is a relatively unimportant part of the business but it is a part of it, and if we arbitrarily excluded it, I would always be subject to the charge, I suppose, that I had only given the Court a part of this picture of the relationships between the defendants without giving all of it. It just seems to me it is something that shapes itself down in the end without great inconvenience to anyone providing that the material is so segregated so that it can be dealt with effectively in the briefs.

Judge Bright: Isn't it your main contention that the violation of the Sherman Act is in the licensing, distribution and exhibition of features?

Mr. Wright: That is quite correct, your Honor. That is the backbone of the business.

Judge Bright: These are not features.

Mr. Wright: These are simply these one-reel fill-ins.

Judge Goddard: Shorts.

Mr. Wright: Or newsreels, which are used to supplement a feature program in theatres.

(281)

Judge Bright: There is no subsequent run of these, is there?

Mr. Wright: They do have runs, but they aren't of the same significance as feature runs. There is no question about that.

Judge Hand: What are these things you are objecting to?

Mr. Seymour: Well, I was raising the question, not as an objection.

Judge Hand: The numbers of the exhibits?

Mr. Seymour: I called your Honor's attention to the fact that Exhibits 73, 74, 75, 76 and 77 related to newsreels and shorts, and they also happen to relate to one season, 1936-1937, before the date of the decree, and then some of them run afoul of the other objection made here, that they were selected by cities and they just are samples of the kind of irrelevancy as to which one can almost put one's fingers on the fact that they haven't a thing to do with the case at any stage.

Mr. Goddard: I would let him save it for rebuttal, if he needs it.

Judge Hand: We will exclude 73, 74, 75, 76 and 77. As Judge Goddard says, if you can do anything with those in rebuttal, we may consider them.

It also goes back to some other exhibits. What are they? (282)

To the shorts you mentioned before.

Mr. Seymour: I raised the question first, I think, on Exhibit 63.

Judge Bright: Wasn't Exhibit 40 part of it, too?

Mr. Caskey: 30 is the first one involved, page 7: Answers to interrogatories 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46. I move to strike it out.

Judge Hand: Motion granted.

Mr. Seymour: And the same objection applies to Exhibit 63 with respect to interrogatories 27 and 28, which are in that exhibit—the second Exhibit 63, appearing on page.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, for fear that I might be losing something, I should like to move to strike out Exhibit 51, produced by the plaintiff, Nos. 41, 42 four——

Mr. Wright: Wait just a minute. 51——

Judge Bright: Yes, 51 has features in it in answer to interrogatory 40.

Mr. Davis: Yes, and I am moving to strike out the answers from that exhibit, the answers to interrogatories 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, relating to shorts and newsreels.

Judge Hand: You also include 43?

Mr. Wright: You want to include 43 and 44.

Mr. Davis: Didn't I name 43 and 44?

Judge Hand: No, you skipped them.

Mr. Davis: There is almost as much trouble to picking these out as to let them ride, but I am not going to have it charged that I have fewer objections on this record than anybody else. I amend my motion to read the answers to interrogatories 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46; and Exhibit 56, the answers to interrogatories No. 4, No. 5—I think that's enough.

Judge Hand: Granted.

Mr. Seymour: One of my brethren on the other side says that as to 63, interrogatories 27 and 28, it is not clear that that was within your Honor's ruling, but it raises the same question. It is the second 63 on page 27, interrogatories 27 and 28.

Mr. Wright: Those are stricken out.

Judge Hand: You want to strike out the answers to 27 and 28, do you?

Mr. Seymour: 27 and 28. They fall in the same category.

Judge Hand: All right, granted. Now we come to 78.

Mr. Wright: No; I think the offer under consideration, if the Court please, is Exhibit 72, the answer to interrogatory 40, which deals with features. 41 and 73 were stricken. I don't think 72 has been ruled on yet, has it?

Judge Hand: 72 does relate to features.

(284)

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: That is extant.

Mr. Wright: Then 73 through 77 were excluded, and the next offer is——

Judge Hand: 73 to 77 are excluded.

Mr. Wright: The next offer is 78 to 79, which relate to features.

Mr. Seymour: They are subject to the selectivity objection which has been made before in connection with an earlier exhibit, and I assume that in addition to preserving the objection as to each defendant, where one makes it, that if an objection is once made to a type of exhibit, it may be deemed to continue to the same type later on, so we do not have to repeat them. This objection as to 78 and 79 has already been made to earlier exhibits but not as to these.

Judge Hand: That is overruled.

(Government's Exhibits 78 and 79 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer Paramount '45 distribution answers, which are contained in Exhibits 80 through 83.

Mr. Seymour: The answers to interrogatories 4 and 5 in Exhibit 80 fall under the ruling just made as to newsreels and shorts, and they should be excluded.

(285)

Judge Hand: That is right, they are, and 80 is otherwise admitted.

(Government's Exhibit 80 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: 81 is admitted.

(Government's Exhibit 81 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And then 82, your Honor.

(Government's Exhibit 82 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: 83 will be admitted.

(Government's Exhibit 83 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: 84, too.

(Government's Exhibit 84 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I will offer 85, which finishes up Paramount.

Judge Hand: That is a sad looking sort of exhibit, 85. In what year does that begin?

Mr. Wright: That is an answer to the interrogatories that were served in 1939.

The Court: Well, I know, it might be in answer to anything. What has it got to do with the case, other than a terrific amount of genealogy?

(286)

Mr. Wright: It simply is a history prepared by the defendants of the corporate continuity there, that is, shows how Famous Players-Lasky then became Paramount Publix, and that became Paramount Pictures, and it shows the acquisition of other producing companies and distributing companies going back, I think, as far as 1917. It is simply a summary statement of the growth of these companies and these circuits.

Judge Hand: We will let it go in.

Mr. Wright: I assume it is the sort of thing that the defendants themselves wanted to get in eventually anyway.

Judge Hand: Very well.

(Government's Exhibit 85 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Proskauer: It is genealogy.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, I wonder if I could address the Court for a moment on a question that Judge Proskauer mentioned earlier today? We have gotten through 85 exhibits in pretty good time, and I would like to raise with the Court the question of whether we might arrange to have a recess in this case after the Government has completed its case, to enable the defendants to sift and prepare their case in the light of the case as it has gone in.

Judge Hand: I do not see why you should, as far as I am concerned, at all. The case has been in course of preparation, in a sense, for years and you had an absolute notice of what the Government was going to do. You knew all about this thing weeks ago.

Mr. Seymour: Let me say this, if your Honor please. This is of importance to us, and I would like to lay our problem before you. It was only when we got the Government's trial brief that we had any real indication as to the scope of the case as it would be submitted to the court. True, we had had various versions of the case before, running all over the lot, including this charge of conspiracy to monopolize production, as to which I yet don't know what the Government's position is. Throughout the summer, throughout the period since we appeared before your Honors in July, my colleagues have been largely engaged in preparing this vast amount of material which is being dumped in. Your Honors see that the material consists of answers made in 1939 and then a great series of answers made in 1945. And the fact is, and I am sure this applies to every company that throughout the summer and right up until this very moment, most of the time of defendants' counsel and their associates and their assistants has been taken up in that way, and I think Government's counsel are entirely aware of that situation.

Now, the fact is that it was not until September 20 when we got the Government's brief that the precise nature of the case that we would have to meet became clear. From the opening yesterday of Government's counsel it was not made more lucid for us, and in view of that situation it has been impossible to do the kind of sifting and winnowing of the oral testimony that we would ordinarily have done by this stage of the case.

Now, last week we met with Government counsel and discussed the trial procedure, and at that time it was my understanding that Government counsel indicated that subject to the Court's approval he would have no objection to a reasonable recess at the close of the Government's case to enable us to get our material in shape for expeditious presentation to the Court.

Now, the reason I raise this question is because just as I was required to open first, at great length, and a great burden to the Court, I shall be required also to go forward first with my oral testimony. My witnesses are scattered all over the country, as your Honors can see by the location of the various aspects of the business. Some of the officers of the company who would have to be called are now in Hollywood; and what I should like to ask—and I think Government counsel will not object, and I hope it won't burden the Court—would be a reasonable recess when we get to the end of the Government's case; and at this rate I anticipate the exhibits will all be in within the next couple of days. You see, we are not standing in the way. Indeed, we are doing everything we can toward lightening that load.

Judge Hand: You knew pretty well what you had to meet, and you knew it was going to be documentary, and I think you have had all Summer to do it as well as years before. We cannot give our lives to this kind of a case, and if my life is as long, in spite of my age, as I hope it may be, I have no intention.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, we have no desire to burden you in this respect, and I would not suggest and I do not suggest a long recess; but I suggest——

Judge Hand: What do you mean by "long"?

Mr. Seymour: Well, I would like myself to have, say, three weeks at the conclusion of the Government's case.

Judge Hand: It throws off the schedule of all the Judges here. That is not your fault. The Government got an expediting certificate which made it mandatory for the Court to furnish three judges. Now, how it expedites anything to tie up three judges in this kind of a case I leave to philosophers, casuists, metaphysicians and astronomers. But they are within their rights, and that has been done. Now, we are just not going to break up all our judicial affairs here in the Second Circuit for this case.

Mr. Seymour: Well, we have no desire to do it.

Judge Hand: I knew you have no desire to; of course you are excellent fellows and fine lawyers, but you have a program which leads to that.

Mr. Seymour: Well, I would be hopeful, if your Honor pleases, that the time spent in such a recess would be usefully spent in organizing the material in the light of the Government's case as it actually goes in, in the light of your Honor's rulings on that evidence, which would enable us to put it in more expeditiously than if we have to get rushed into it without adequate time to visualize it; and I think that situation applies to every defendant in this case, and I think the Government understands it.

Mr. Proskauer: Would your Honors permit me to suggest how this matter first came up? In conference with Mr. Berge and Mr. Wright last week when we explained that the elevator strike was the climax of our difficulties in getting ready here, it was suggested by Mr. Berge that the Government would like to facilitate us by stipulating some of our evidence. Now, I do not want to mislead the Court, and I do not know to what extent we will be successful in the endeavor to stipulate evidence. But, personally, I am urging that that be done. I have some sales resistance on the part of some of my clients, and I want to be frank with the Court. But we then had a kind of lawyers' understanding,—not a stipulation—that subject to your Honors' approval we were going to try to shorten this case in the ultimate by taking some such adjournment as Mr. Seymour has suggested to your Honors after the Government's case was in, and that instead of applying for an adjournment at the outset. So we are not coming in here with a situation where we are just asking for delay. We are not. I really believe that keeping in mind your Honor's perfectly sound suggestion that the Court cannot give its life to this case, that we shall be saving some years of your Honor's valuable life if you will give us a short adjournment after the Government's case is in. I am satisfied from our talks with Mr. Berge and Mr. Wright that there is a reasonable possibility—which I can't give the Court as an assurance—that we may shorten some of the oral evidence in this case; and I am sure Mr. Wright will correct me if I have in any way deviated from a very meticulous account of what happened in our conference.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we have told counsel at that conference, and will repeat today that we would agree to any plan of procedure which would shorten the disposition of the case and get a speedy determination of this issue.

Now, at that time we told them that as far as calling witnesses is concerned, particularly when we are talking about their executives, there is no need as far as we are concerned to call any of them here to the witness stand; that if they will put what they want to say in affidavit form we would stipulate that they would testify in accordance with that affidavit, because we know pretty well what they can testify to. They have testified in a number of other cases; they know how far they can go, and we do not need any cross-examination in order to control that sort of testimony. We can, if necessary, of course, in rebuttal, in so far as the defendants' executives are concerned, call them under Rule 43(b) if necessary. But I merely point this out to say that while we have no objection to any continuance which will expedite the presentation of their defense, we do feel that as a condition to the granting of such a continuance there ought to be some kind of definite commitment as to the expedited procedure that is going to follow the continuance. That is, there should be some assurance that the interval will without question be used to streamline the presentation of their defense, and that we just do not have an interval where they come in at the end of the period and they start offering witnesses.

Mr. Seymour: I do not see how such a condition can be well agreed to at this stage. It seems to me, as I have said to the Court, what we want the time for is to get our defense organized so that we can put it in most expeditiously, and we hope that will save a lot of time. To what extent we can work out any dispensing with oral testimony is a matter that would have to be explored during that period. Your Honors will immediately recognize that substantial oral testimony will have to be offered anyway, probably, and it is just a matter of the extent.

Judge Hand: You go on with your offers in the case.

Mr. Wright: The next series of interrogatory answers are those of RKO. The first is numbered 86 for identification and covers their answers to interrogatories 1 to 24, dealing with the organization of the companies, the inter-corporate relationships; and we will offer with that 87, which is the 1945 supplement to that data.

(Government's Exhibits 86 and 87 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer their tabulations of theatre interests which are found in 88 and 92.

(Government's Exhibits 88 and 92 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will withdraw the offer of the theatre reports marked for identification as 89 and 90. Those are both withdrawn. 86 is already in evidence.

(294)

Judge Hand: What have you done with 86?.

Mr. Wright: That is already offered and in under a prior description there. This is really just a note.

No. 91 we will offer, the answer of RKO, the holding company. It is simply necessary to make intelligible the answers of the other defendants referred to there.

(Government's Exhibit 91 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we shall offer the 1945 answer of RKO which takes care of interrogatories 1 through 5 inclusive of the 1945 data. That is contained in No. 93 for identification.

Mr. Leisure: Just a moment. With respect to 93, if the Court please, 4 and 5 in that exhibit have to do with shorts and newsreels. We presume the Court will rule the same.

Judge Hand: Yes. We will exclude 4 and 5.

(Government's Exhibit 93 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will also offer 94 which contains RKO 1945 distribution data furnished in response to the 1945 interrogatories 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11.

(Government's Exhibit 94 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 93 I think is already offered.
(295)

And 95 is the RKO admission of facts.

(Government's Exhibit 95 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we offer the history data contained in 91. That exhibit with reference to the distribution data also contained in the same exhibit was previously offered there at page 37. We offer the data described on pages 40 and 41 which are also contained in Exhibit 91; that is, the answers to interrogatories Nos. 45, 56, 57 and 58.

Then 96 is the answer of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, an RKO subsidiary, which covers interrogatories 1 through 24.

(Government's Exhibit 96 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 97 relating to KAO discontinued theatre interests.

(Government's Exhibit 97 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 98, the answers of KAO to 55, 56, 57 and 58.

(Government's Exhibit 98 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we will also offer 99, which covers the RKO-Midwest answers to interrogatories 1 through 24.
(296)

(Government's Exhibit 99 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 100 which covers its discontinued theatre interests.

Mr. Wright: Then we will also offer the production answers which are listed on page 47 there as contained in Exhibit 99—that is, the answers to 25 to 28 inclusive, interrogatories 31, 35, 38 and 39.

Then we will offer 101 which is the historical data furnished by RKO-Midwest in response to 55, 56, 57 and 58, and contains negative answers on distribution.

(Government's Exhibit 101 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 102, which is another RKO subsidiary, Pathe News, Inc.'s answers to interrogatories 1 through 24—

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, again that has to do with news pictures, and I assume the Court's ruling would be the same. We object to it.

Judge Hand: Where does that appear?

Mr. Leisure: Exhibit 102.

Judge Hand: Yes, I know. But the fact that it does not relate to features.

(297)

Mr. Leisure: It is listed as a Pathe News pictures, and they are listed here on page 48, Exhibit 102.

Judge Hand: Is that right, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I think counsel's statement is correct that Pathe News was primarily a distributor of newsreels. I am not sure, but it is just my recollection at the moment that they did not engage in other production-distribution activities.

Mr. Leisure: You mean a producer, Mr. Wright, I take it. It is a producer of newsreels, there is no question about that.

Mr. Wright: Exclusively?

Mr. Leisure: Shorts. They are not feature pictures, the same as these other shorts you were talking about.

Judge Goddard: In the same class as a short.

Judge Hand: Exclude 102.

Now 103.

Mr. Wright: That can also be wihtdrawn. That refers to Pathe News.

Mr. Leisure: 103, if the Court please, also applies to Pathe News, and 104.

Mr. Wright: I assume the same ruling will apply to 103 and 104 as applied to 102.

Then we will offer 105, the RKO-Proctor answers to interrogatories 1 through 24.

(297a)

(Government's Exhibit 105 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: It has come to adjournment time now, and we shall adjourn to tomorrow morning at 10.30.

New York, October 10, 1945;
10.30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

Judge Hand: We have decided that the public interests are sufficiently represented by the Government of the United States and that there is no reason for the intervention of the American Civil Liberties Union. Therefore, their motion to intervene is denied.

You may proceed.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think when we adjourned yesterday we had offered Exhibit 105 for identification, which is described at page 51 of the list there, and I don't think—apparently it was admitted, so that our next exhibit will be 106, which relates to RKO-Proctor.

Judge Hand: We had not marked the exhibit as admitted. We had admitted it, however.

Mr. Caskey: What was that?

The Clerk: Exhibit 105 is received in evidence.

Mr. Caskey: That is the part described on 51 and 52?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Mr. Caskey: But not the part on 53?

Mr. Wright: The part on 53 is merely a reference to what 105 shows.

(Government's Exhibit 105 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then 106, I take it, is also admitted.

(Government's Exhibit 106 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 107 is next offered, the RKO——

Judge Hand: Have you offered 106?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I understood that had been offered and received.

(Government's Exhibit 107 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 108, the answer of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

(Government's Exhibit 108 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 109.

Mr. Leisure: As to 109, if the Court please, interrogatories 41 and 42, having to do with shorts and news-reels, should come out.

Mr. Wright: I don't believe they are——

Judge Bright: 109 does not mention that.

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Judge Hand: All it says here is that it is not engaged in exhibition.

(300)

Mr. Wright: I think he is referring, your Honor, to the notation at the bottom of page 57, where the answers to 41 and 42 are also in 109, and those, I suppose, will be excluded under the previous ruling.

Judge Hand: Yes, excluded as to 41 and 42.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 109 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 110, described on page 56.

(Government's Exhibit 110 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: As to 111——

Mr. Leisure: Just a moment. 27 and 28 have to do with shorts in that exhibit.

Mr. Wright: Those, I take it, are excluded.

Judge Hand: Excluded, 27 and 28.

Mr. Wright: Then 111, there is a similar exclusion as to Nos. 43, 44, 45 and 46, I presume.

Judge Bright: You offer the balance?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we offer it, what is on here——

Judge Hand: You offered 40?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(Government's Exhibit 111 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we offer 112, which is the RKO answer to interrogatory 48.

(301)

Mr. Wright: And we also offer these four answers relating to historical data which appear in 109, already admitted, I believe.

As to 113, that deals with the activities of the Van Beuren Corporation, which I believe produced only short subjects, is that correct?

Mr. Leisure: That is correct.

Mr. Wright: And I suppose that under the Court's prior ruling that would be excluded.

Judge Hand: Excluded. That is all of 113?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

And the same would apply to 114, 115, all the data described on page 61.

That brings us to Warner. We offer No. 116, which contains the answer of Warner to interrogatories 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13; 15(a), (c)-(g); 16(a), (c)-(g); 17 (a), (c), (e) and (f); and Nos. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23. Those answers are described on page 62 and 63 and the top of 64.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Wright, will you tell me the difference between 116 and 118?

Judge Hand: Has the stenographer got it right?

(Record read.)

Judge Hand: So, everything in 116 is submitted?

Mr. Wright: Yes; those are all listed on those three (302) pages.

(Government's Exhibit 116 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we are offering 117, which is really a supplement to the answer to interrogatory 2 which was separately bound and so was given an additional exhibit number.

(Government's Exhibit 117 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer No. 118——

Mr. Caskey: The document that bears No. 117 contains a great many other things than the answer to interrogatory No. 2(a). Now, the procedure we are following is for the clerk to mark the face of the document, with the result that there is physically handed to the clerk and to the Court papers which apparently are not in evidence, without any indication as to what is in evidence and what is not in evidence; and I am sure there will be no mechanics whereby appropriate page reference in the stenographic minutes can be readily made available when cross-examining as to these physical documents. I submit the orderly procedure is that the only thing that should be handed up is what is offered and to be marked in evidence. As to mutilation of the document, there is nothing to that. Let the Court just have possession of the things that are offered in evidence.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, all that we are offering of this 117 is the answer to 2(a) which is contained in this 117 along with others. Now, I think as to the record of what is in evidence or not, you have that in the record which we are making on the list as we go along, and I do not think that there is any difficulty there at all.

Judge Hand: I should think that was all right. It may take a nationwide survey to find out what is in the physical exhibits, but I think we can probably take care of it.

Judge Goddard: Looking over it how can you tell what is in evidence and what is not?

Judge Hand: It is so stated, as I understand it, that only the part that is in answer to interrogatory No. 2(a) is in evidence; isn't that so?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Haven't you stated that in your offer?

Mr. Wright: I stated that in the offer, and the list will have a record which shows that that is the only part that is admitted.

Mr. Caskey: The difficulty is that the Court may pick up Exhibit 117 with this gray guide book, which we have already demonstrated is full of errors, in order to ascertain what is in the record.

Now, it seems to me the mechanical work of keeping the record correct should be done by the counsel who has the burden of submitting the documents. This is not any surprise. It is not something that the Court has excluded on it. He is offering a document to which there are physically annexed many sheets of paper, and he only intends to offer some. I do not think we are adequately protected.

Judge Hand: I do not think you need fear our over-reading these exhibits.

Judge Goddard: The list shows what was offered.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

We are now on 118, I believe. 117, I believe, was admitted as to the answer to interrogatory No. 2(a). 118 is the answer of Warner which contains its answers to 5, 6, 7, 8 and 14, all of which are being offered, with the answer to 15(b), 16(b), 17(b) and (d), which are also contained in the exhibit and being offered, and which are described on pages 62 and 63; and also the answer to 51 and 53 are contained in the document marked 118, and the offer includes all of those answers.

Mr. Davis: Before that is admitted, if the Court please, may I ask counsel for the Government to what issue in this case is the fixed indebtedness of Warner relevant? 118-5 is the fixed indebtedness of Warner; No. 6 is the current indebtedness of Warner; and I have some curiosity to know what relevancy those data have to the Government's complaint.

Judge Hand: I think your question probably is impossible to answer by the Government.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I am inclined to agree with you. The reason there is because at the time those interrogatories were originally framed they were designed to disclose whatever cross relationship might appear as the result of indebtedness, one to another, or the holding of bond issues as well as stock obligations. Now, the net effect is purely negative, and it is not of great concern whether they go in or not; but we felt that they were a part of this data that they had supplied, and therefore should go in.

Judge Hand: I think you had better leave that out then. The difficulty that we find with your whole position here is that you have practically come in and said that what you objected to was this monopoly in exhibition of pictures. And yet you are fussing around and fussing around with all kinds of things that are so remote that they are apt to encumber the record a great deal on both sides, and neither you nor anybody could definitely point out what bearing they have. You just make general statements that you are entitled to the whole picture, and it is the same kind of talk about background and vague stuff that comes into every long case. I am not criticizing you personally. I think you have done a great deal to abbreviate your part in this presentation of evidence, but I do not see why you are putting a lot of this stuff in. It has not been made clear to the three of us; we do not understand it.

Mr. Wright: Well, I think at any point where we do come upon evidence of that character, then, if your Honors feel that way about it, that it should be excluded. Let us cut it down right now and eliminate those parts.

Judge Hand: Why not exclude those?

Mr. Wright: I assumed it was simply a picture that I thought the defendants would want to get in anyway, and I thought it would expedite things if we put it in along with the other data which we rely on which are contained in the same documents, that is all.

Judge Hand: If the defendants want to put this stuff in you might as well put it in. I do not care anything about the order of proof.

Mr. Davis: If we want to put it in we will do it when we put in our case. I haven't the faintest idea that we will put in any of this.

Now, I suggest if these inquiries are directed to disclose whatever cross interests there might be or cross ownership in these companies, if they disclose anything of that sort the Government doubtless is entitled to put it in for whatever it may be worth. But what in the world is the use of putting in sheet after sheet after sheet which does not disclose anything of the sort?

Judge Hand: I do not understand that they claim, except by your alleged co-action that there is any such interest.

Mr. Wright: I am perfectly agreeable, your Honors, and I am going to point out the items under 118 that are listed there as the answers to 5 and to 6, which takes care of the current indebtedness item, and I am perfectly agreeable to doing that with reference to the similar answers to 5 and 6 in the other material that was offered.

Mr. Davis: Let me ask the next question——

Judge Hand: Just a minute. What are you consenting to have stricken out?

Mr. Wright: Wherever answers to interrogatories 5 and 6 of the 39 interrogatories—that is, where Nos. 5 and 6 appear, I assume they will be stricken.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, will you concede that as to Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation that no fixed indebtedness of either company is held by any defendant in this case?

Mr. Wright: That is certainly my impression.

Mr. Caskey: Well, do you concede it?

Mr. Wright: I would want to look at the particular record. I do not know offhand. I assume that it is the fact. (308).

But, in any event, in so far as these answers are concerned in the 39 interrogatories, 5 and 6, may go out wherever they appear here.

Mr. Caskey: Would you have——

Judge Hand: Just a minute. Let us not have all kinds of interruption here about other things. I want to know about 118. Is it all to go out?

Mr. Wright: No.

Judge Hand: Only 5 and 6?

Mr. Wright: 5 and 6. Those were the points raised as to fixed and current indebtedness.

Mr. Davis: Before we stop at that point, No. 7 calls for the 20 largest stockholders of Warner. I should like to ask the Government whether they contend that any of those 20 largest stockholders of Warner are also in the list of stockholders of the other defendants.

Mr. Proskauer: What is the point of it?

Mr. Davis: Just a minute.

Mr. Wright: I do not think we make any such contention. I think that is largely evidence which would have significance in dealing with the problem of relief. I think it would be a fact that the Court would wish to be aware of in determining what specific kind of dissolution relief there should be in the case. On the issue of liability I do not think it is important.

(309)

Judge Hand: I think that is too vague now. 7 and 8 are excluded.

Mr. Davis: Now may I ask as to 116-9, securities of other defendants held by Warner. Does the Government contend that there are any securities of other defendants held by Warner?

Mr. Wright: As I recall, those answers are negative, and again——

Mr. Davis: If they are negative what is their pertinence here?

Mr. Wright: I would assume that those were facts which they would be interested in showing. If they have no interest in having them in I would say again we can exclude those.

Judge Hand: All right, excluded by consent. What next? 9, 10, 11 and 12; is that true, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: 9, 10, 11 and 12. That I think may also apply to the answers to those same interrogatories by all defendants.

Judge Bright: By all of the defendants? You say that may go out as to all of the defendants in the exhibits previously offered?

Mr. Wright: Yes. They have been offered and received here answers of the other defendants to those same interrogatories which are similarly negative in effect, and in so far as we are concerned they may be stricken.

Judge Hand: I am sorry to spend time doing it, but I think the way to make your record now is to make it right, to have excluded by consent, go right through and find out what they are, and we will mark them.

Mr. Wright: All right. I think they first appear on page 5; if you will simply run a line from 5 through 12, I think that will take care of the situation.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, isn't there a shorter cut here which candor would dictate? Instead of sifting through this haystack, will not the Government concede of record that in these interrogatories there is no showing whatever of joint or partial ownership by one of these defendants, or the officers of these defendants in any other?

Judge Bright: Or any common director or officer.

Mr. Davis: Nor a common director nor a common officer. Now, a concession of that sort would take a lot of this straw off.

Mr. Wright: Surely. That is true as to the various defendant groups. In some cases there are two or more defendant corporations in the same group, such as Fox and National Theatres, both are defendants, and, of course, there are interlocking officials and stock ownership there; but as between the eight groups of defendants, I think it is quite true that there are no common officers; there is no common stock control, although it may be, of course, that executives or officials of one or more of them hold some listed stock in the others.

Judge Bright: Well, do your exhibits show that?

Mr. Wright: Our exhibits do show, I think, the facts that I have just stated, yes.

Mr. Proskauer: I can't hear you, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: The answer is yes.

Mr. Proskauer: Do the exhibits show any kind of common stock ownership?

Judge Bright: Why not take one at a time? Are there any common officers in the eight groups of defendants?

Mr. Wright: No, not that I know of.

Judge Bright: Are there any common directors in the eight groups of defendants?

Mr. Wright: There are not.

Judge Bright: Are there any bondholders——

Mr. Wright: I think not.

Judge Bright: ——common to the eight groups of defendants?

Mr. Wirght: No.

Judge Bright: Now, how about the stockholdings of any character?

Mr. Wright: As to the stockholdings, I assume, while (312)
I am not prepared to state that officials of the various companies may own listed stocks, and probably do, in those of some of the others, I do not think there is any contention that in any event any of them hold a sufficient stock interest to exercise control through that stock interest over the other group.

Judge Hand: Now, you are making a statement, as I understand it, that you do not know anything about it. You think it is possible that it exists. That is the last qualification.

Mr. Wright: I think it quite obviously does, yes.

Judge Hand: Quite obviously does?

Judge Bright: Do your exhibits show it?

Mr. Wright: The reason for my statement is that we have asked the various companies in getting up-to-date data as to executives' theatre holdings, and they have furnished us with letters giving the extent of those theatre holdings. Now, in each case there has been excluded such holdings as they had in listed stocks of corporations which operate theatres. I assume the reason for that exclusion is that there are such holdings. We do not attach any significance to them.

Mr. Proskauer: May we not have it stated, then, with your Honors' permission, that there is no contention on the part of the Government that there is any common stock ownership between these eight groups that has any significance in this case?

Mr. Wright: Well, there is ownership of stock in corporations in which two or more of these groups have a common interest; there is no question about that. Counsel's suggestion goes much farther than the facts.

Judge Bright: You mean in theatres?

Mr. Wright: Theatre-operating corporations also. There are some corporations some of which are listed in our brief in which two or more defendants own stock interest.

Mr. Proskauer: With that exception what is the answer—let me put it to Mr. Wright—what is the answer to my question?

Judge Hand: Well, with that exception he concedes there is no common stock interest——

Mr. Wright: Interlocking stock interest, that is right.

Judge Hand: Interlocking stock interest.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Davis: I assume, of course, that the statement that there is common stock interest will not float out in a void like that; that when he comes to those theatre-owning corporations in which there is some measure of joint interest, that will be definitely proven by the Government.

Mr. Wright: I think the best way to determine what the proof shows is to go ahead with the proof.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Davis: That does not satisfy me, if the Court please. Go ahead with the proof to put in a haystack on the theory that somewhere somebody will find a needle in it? I would much rather have the needle produced.

Judge Hand: He will have to produce it as part of his case. Now go ahead. He has not pointed it out yet.

(315)

Mr. Wright: 118, as I understand the ruling is received with the answers to 5, 6, 7 and 8 excluded, and I think——

Judge Bright: I did not hear what you said, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: As I understand it, 118 has been admitted for the answers that are described on pages 62, 63, 64 and 65 except that the answers to 5, 6, 7 and 8, appearing on page 62, have been excluded.

Judge Bright: I thought 9, 10, 11 and 12 were excluded.

Mr. Wright: And 9, 10, 11 and 12 are contained in one exhibit, exhibit 116. Those are also excluded.

Mr. Seymour: May it be assumed, if your Honors please, that similar interrogatories also admitted will fall under the ruling so that we won't have to worry about those now remaining in the record? There were interrogatories offered before and marked and I am trying to indicate to my clients which ones they were, but I thought, to save time, we would just have it understood they were excluded.

Mr. Wright: That is entirely agreeable.

As to 118—by the way, we are withdrawing the theatre reports listed on 65, numbered 121, 122 and 123.

Judge Hand: Those are withdrawn?

Mr. Wright: That is right, withdrawn.

(316)

Judge Bright: Where is that?

Mr. Wright: Page 65, Nos. 121, 122 and 123. And I should like to call attention to a correction in the list there. For 118 you find interrogatories 51 and 53 listed. Also included there should be 50A and 51, which are the theatres disposed of.

Mr. Davis: What page are you on?

Mr. Wright: And 52. I am on page 65.

Judge Hand: 51 is there, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon. 52. 50-A and 52 are the two that should be added there.

Judge Hand: How about these 1945 answers on page 64?

Mr. Wright: We are now offering 119, which contains the 1945 answers to—— Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, before you get to 119, at the bottom of page 65, there are two interrogatories under 118, one of which includes short subjects.

Mr. Wright: That I assume may go out under the prior ruling.

Judge Bright: Do you wish to have 25 go in? Do you wish to have the answer to interrogatory 25 go in?

Mr. Wright: That goes in.

Judge Bright: And the answers to 27 go out?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

It is also true that the answers to interrogatories 31, 35, (317)
38 and 39, that appear on page 66 as being contained in 118, are also offered, I believe, in evidence. Those relate to production.

(Government's Exhibit 119 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: I thought you said that you regarded that —perhaps I am mixing it up in this complex case—that the loaning of personnel is very small, proving nothing.

Mr. Wright: Well, no, if the Court please, I said I did think it had evidentiary value on the issue of the extent——

Mr. Proskauer: I don't hear that. I cannot hear a word.

Judge Hand: He said he did think that it had evidentiary value on the issue, I suppose, of cooperation?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Judge Hand: All right, let it go.

Mr. Wright: The next is——

Judge Hand: 119 on page 64.

Mr. Wright: That has been offered and, I think, received. It was marked by the clerk.

Mr. Davis: "Capital Invested." What is the significance of that 119 15(a), (c)-(g) "Capital invested."

Mr. Wright: I think the caption in the printed list "Capital Invested" is not quite specific enough. Actually what it does is to bring the answer to interrogatory 16, that was filed in 1939, down to date.

Judge Hand: What has this to do with anything? You have conceded that there was no common ownership.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I suppose it is still a part of our case to show what the corporate structure of these groups is and to show what, if any, changes have occurred since 1939, just so the Court has before it some reasonably accurate picture of the corporation it is dealing with. That is all that this does, is bring that prior information in 15 and 16 and as to——

Judge Hand: All right, go ahead.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing)—corporate information down to date. It does show the—— Judge Hand: We will admit this one.

Judge Bright: 119 and 120, is that what that refers to, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, your Honor. Those——

Judge Hand: That covers everything, doesn't it, in this bracket under 1945 answers?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

And I think the next thing that we can do are the 1939 distribution answers of Warner, which are contained in this Exhibit 124. That contains the material that is described there on pages 66 and 67, and I suppose the answers (319) to 41, 42, 44 and 45 will be excluded in accordance with the Court's prior ruling.

Mr. Davis: Exhibit 144?

Mr. Wright: 124 is the number of the exhibit.

Mr. Davis: I didn't hear it.

Judge Bright: 43 is short subjects.

Mr. Wright. 43 also, I beg your pardon.

Judge Bright: How about 46?

Mr. Wright: That should go out also.

(Government's Exhibit 124 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will offer 125, which are the Warner 1945 interrogatory answers, covering questions 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Judge Bright: 4 and 5 are short subjects and newsreels.

Mr. Wright: 4 and 5 may be stricken.

(Government's Exhibit 125 for indentification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer 126, the answer to interrogatory 6.

(Government's Exhibit 126 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 127, the answer to No. 7.

(Government's Exhibit 127 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, with the Court's permission, when it comes to 127 and 128 exhibits, it is very important that I should make clear that your description is not before the Court because of a flagrant error in describing "The most profitable 1943-44 feature," where the question is "The feature with the greatest number of bookings." That distinction is very significant in certain aspects of this case.

Mr. Wright: That is quite correct. The actual feature selected is the one which had the greatest number of domestic billings in each case. The words "most profitable" were used as a shortened expression. It may not be accurate. I might say that at the time this list was submitted to the defendants, we wrote them we were going to have this printed for the benefit of the Court and themselves and suggested that if there were any descriptions or changes they wanted made before the list was printed, we would have been glad to incorporate them, so that the responsibility for such matters as this, I think, rests on both sides.

Mr. Proskauer: I trust your Honors will draw no inference in this case, from the observation of my adversary just made. If they want to get into a controversy about what occurred extrajudicially with reference to these descriptions, I am advised by my associates that we suggested a number of corrections, which were not made, but I do not see any point in pursuing that or having this question raised here.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: The next offer is the answers to interrogatories 8, 9 and 10, which appear in Exhibit 128.

(Government's Exhibit 128 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: This answer to 11, which is described on page 69, also appears in Exhibit No. 126, which has already been offered and received and is offered as a part of that exhibit. And the same is true with reference to the answers to Nos. 12 and 13, which are contained in 125 and 129, the admissions of fact.

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright, has this 126 (11) already been offered?

Mr. Wright: That is offered. 126 contains the answers to both 6 and 11 and both are offered and, I believe, have been received. The same is true as to 125, which contains the answers to both interrogatories 4, and 12 and 13.

Then we offer the admissions of fact, which are marked as 129.

(Government's Exhibit 129 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And the answers to 55, 56, 57 and 58, which appear in 116, are also offered, and, I believe, that has been admitted.

That brings us to the answers of Columbia, the first of which is No. 130.

(Government's Exhibit 130 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I assume that that No. 5 may also——

Judge Hand: We had a talk last evening, Mr. Wright, after our session, in regard to these independents and it is all right to put these things in now, so far as they conform to the rules that we have been applying in the other exhibits, but you have absolutely got to show something more definite than you have about these independents or we shall dismiss, in regard to them, on their motion; and that is for you to show at the time, but it is utterly unclear to us now what they have to do with all this.

Mr. Wright: We certainly would expect you to dismiss them if nothing more were offered than their interrogatory answers. This is merely background.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: I take it the answer to 5, contained in No. 130, would be excluded in accordance with the prior ruling because it relates to indebtedness, and that would also apply to No. 6, No. 7, No. 8, No. 9 and No. 10.

Judge Goddard: Are these to be excluded?

Mr. Wright: As I understood the prior ruling, yes. (323)

11 and 12.

Judge Hand: How about 131, 6 there?

Mr. Wright: That would go out also.

Judge Bright: Did you say 9 and 10 also?

Mr. Wright: 9, 10, 11 and 12.

Then we offer 131, which contains the answer to interrogatory 14 on gross income.

Judge Hand: 15 goes out under your stipulation; doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I believe that 15 through——

Judge Hand: Also 16, 17 and 18?

Mr. Wright: I believe that all the information all the way from 15 through 24 may go out from 130.

(Government's Exhibit 131 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we are offering the rest of the data on pages 72 and 73, which appears in their answer to 130.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, will you state now what in 130 you have offered, beginning on page 70?

Mr. Wright: The answers to No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 13, 51, 53——

Judge Bright: 14 is in too, isn't it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: 14—I beg your pardon. That is another exhibit, that is in No. 131.

Judge Hand: It appears that you have got it listed here, (324) so I have marked it admitted.

Mr. Wright: It is admitted but in Exhibit 131 instead of 130.

Judge Hand: What is admitted between 4 and this 131-14, anything?

Mr. Wright: 13.

Judge Hand: I marked it excluded.

Mr. Wright: I think it may be excluded.

Judge Hand: I think it ought to be.

Mr. Wright: Then, after 14, the answers that appear on 72 and 73, I can read them.

Judge Goddard: The answer to interrogatory 27?

Mr. Frohlich: I object to it—on page 72, with reference to shorts.

Mr. Wright: All right, that may go out.

Judge Bright: 27 and 28——

Mr. Wright: 27 and 28.

Judge Bright: (Continuing)—they are excluded?

Mr. Frohlich: And 22, 23 and 24, I think are out. We have no connection with any——

Mr. Wright: They are already excluded.

Judge Bright: They have been excluded.

Mr. Wright: The next exhibit is 132.

Judge Bright: On page 73, in evidence are the answers to 31 and 35?
(325)

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Bright: On page 73, the answers to interrogatories 31 and 35 are introduced in evidence? Have you offered them?

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Frohlich: And I understand they are subject, your Honors, to the same objections that were made heretofore and the same ruling?

Judge Hand: Yes. We have admitted that sort of evidence in all cases.

Mr. Wright: And 132 is the next exhibit offered, which contains the answers to 38 and 39 and also the answer that is listed there to 40(a), (b), (d), (e) and (f).

(Government's Exhibit 132 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 40(c) should also appear as admitted as part of Exhibit 130.

And the next exhibit is 133, which contains the Columbia answers to 40(g) to (j).

Mr. Frohlich: Same objection, if the Court please, that the choice of those two cities by the Government is not a true picture of the activities of this defendant.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, may I call attention to a curious situation in which we find ourselves with respect to (326) these interrogatories? We have never seen them. The interrogatories of the five defendants have been exchanged among one another very lightly, but the interrogatories and the answers thereto of these three so-called independent we have never seen and we haven't the remotest idea what is in them, excepting as we may infer it. The point of my rising is to urge that the Government physically offer these interrogatories and at least furnish us with access to them or copies of them, otherwise we are just in the dark as to what is going in here.

Mr. Wright: Certainly there can be no question about their access to them. I do not believe we have extra copies in either case. I think probably the defendants who furnished them themselves will have extra copies which they would be willing to make available, and, of course——

Mr. Raftery: We are in the same position. We have never seen any of the evidence that went in yesterday, and I think——

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors will glean from that what the degree of cooperation is in the moving picture industry. The five main defendants never let one another see their interrogatories until, oh, some time quite recently. We have never seen the three, and the three have never seen ours, but it is all in the pot now.

Judge Hand: If you are as unsophisticated and innocent as your remarks indicate——

(327)

Mr. Proskauer: I am.

Judge Hand: (Continuing)—why, you will have to establish a clearing house for information among the independents and yourselves.

Mr. Proskauer: We are just that unsophisticated. But what is happening here is, evidence is being offered which we haven't seen, and I wish some assurance from the Government that at least we will have access to it.

Mr. Wright: You have that assurance.

Judge Hand: Of course they have access, and, of course, the query might arise whether anybody has ever seen them.

Mr. Proskauer: And that gives rise to the speculation as to whether the Court is ever going to see them.

Judge Hand: I am very skeptical about that—long exhibits!

Mr. Wright: We will next offer the five volumes marked 133-1 through -5, which are the answers to interrogatory 48, which are separately bound.

(Government's Exhibits 133-1 through 133-5 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then that brings us to 134. We offer 134, the answer relating to Philadelphia——

Mr. Frohlich: Philadelphia, Mr. Wrght?

Mr. Wright: That is your Philadelphia answer.

(328)

Judge Hand: 41 and 42 go out?

Mr. Wright: Right; also the items at the top of page 75, the answers to 43, 44, 45 and 46. The schedule G referred to on page 75 and the other answer to 48, I believe, is physically incorporated in Exhibit 133, already admitted, and is offered as a part of it.

The information listed there on page 76 as to 133-1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 is already in.

134 is in.

135 is a supplement to the New York City answer, which we will now offer.

(Government's Exhibit 135 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we will offer 136, their answer to the first 1945 interrogatory.

(Government's Exhibit 136 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 137.

(Government's Exhibit 137 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: May I see 138 before it goes in?

Mr. Wright: Yes, indeed.

Your Honors, will note that that statement of film rentals includes only Fox, Loew, RKO and Warner. As I understand it, a later statement was furnished for Paramount, after this list had been made up.

(329)

Mr. Caskey: It is objected to on the ground of competency; not the best evidence, no foundation for its admission has been laid.

Judge Hand: What is this?

Mr. Caskey: It is a hearsay statement by somebody.

Mr. Wright: The statement is as follows: "Columbia's answer to interrogatory"——

Mr. Caskey: Just a moment, Mr. Wright? Will you hand it up instead of reading it into the record, until it is ruled on?

Judge Hand: What is this statement in pencil here, "Paramount five largest"——

Mr. Wright: That is additional data that was to come. I think that is all that note means on there.

Judge Hand: Who furnished this?

Mr. Wright: The defendant Columbia.

Mr. Caskey: We have no information as to how they classified those theatres, what theatres Columbia consider affiliates of Fox or not. This is testimony by some unknown person that some theatre affiliates are defendants.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

(Government's Exhibit 138 for identification received in evidence.)

(330)

Mr. Wright: No. 4, which is the answer to interrogatory 4, which is part of 138, I assume is excluded?

Judge Hand: 4 and 5, is that right? 4 and 5 go out?

Mr. Wright: That is right.

No. 139 is next. Those are the answers of Columbia to 1945 interrogatories, 6 through 11.

(Government's Exhibit 139 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The answers to interrogatories 55, 56, 57 and 58 that were a part of 130 are already in evidence, I believe, and are offered.

As to United Artists, the first is No. 140 for identification, containing the answers to No. 1, 2(a)2, and 3 to 24 inclusive——

Judge Hand: Now, 3 goes out, doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: Well, no, I do not think that 3 does. I think what we excluded heretofore was 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12.

Judge Bright: And 13?

Mr. Wright: 13, 14 and 15 I believe stay in.

Judge Hand: What have the answers got to do with it?

Mr. Wright: Well, again it is information as to the management and character of the company. It happens to be a closed corporation controlled by——

Judge Hand: What have the answers got to do with it? Well, all right, let it stay.

Mr. Wright: We will have agreements in evidence here later, and I suppose it is important to show who these people were.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, are you leaving in 13 or excluding it? You excluded it as to Columbia. I just thought I heard you say you are leaving it in.

Mr. Wright: If it was excluded as to Columbia it should be excluded here.

Judge Bright: You did exclude it as to Columbia.

Mr. Wright: Then it is out here.

Judge Hand: 13, 14 and 15 are in?

Judge Bright: 13 is out.

Mr. Wright: And I believe 16 through 24 may also go out.

Judge Hand: 14 is admitted?

Judge Bright: 14 and 15 are in.

You offered 14 and 15 and excluded 16 to 24, is that right?

Mr. Wright: Correct, your Honor. And we also offer the negative data that is contained in the answers to interrogatories 51 and 53, and 25 to 28, 31, 35, 38 and 39, and also contained in 140; and we also offer the answer as to distribution of features in interrogatory No. 40(a), 40(b), 40(d), 40(e) and 40(f), also contained in 140.

(Government's Exhibit 140 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer United Artists' answers, No. 141, the 1939 distribution data, which should exclude, I believe, No. 42, No. 43, No. 44, No. 45——

Judge Bright: And 46 on the next page?

Mr. Raftery: How about 46, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: And 46.

(Government's Exhibit 141 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer 142, the answer to 48 with respect to Kansas City.

(Government's Exhibit 142 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Raftery: United Artists wants to preserve a general objection to this limited evidence.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer 143. They are 1945 answers to questions 1 and 2.

(Government's Exhibit 143 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 144——

(333)

Mr. Caskey: May I see that, please?

Mr. Wright: You want to see 144 or 143?

Mr. Caskey: 144.

(Exhibit 144 for identification handed to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Wright: They are the '45 answers to questions 3, 4 and 5. I take it 4 and 5 will be excluded.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Caskey, even though you are looking at it, we trust you will treat those rentals as confidential.

Mr. Caskey: I make no such representation. If it is admitted in evidence, I assume it is in evidence for whatever purpose, but I object to it. At considerable effort the defendant National Theatres Corporation prepared a chart showing the amount of moneys which it paid to United Artists, and that is in evidence as Exhibit 43. Now, this purports to give a figure on a somewhat different basis. The figure is different by the extent of some $50,000. We did not prepare it, and we object to it on the ground that it is incompetent.

Mr. Wright: That 144 also contains——

Judge Hand: Well, we will receive that.

Mr. Wright: —the answers to interrogatory 7, which we are also offering. That is described on page 83.

(Government's Exhibit 144 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: This data that is listed here is not having (334). been furnished, I believe, is either to be furnished, or some of it has been furnished since the list was printed and will be given a later number and offered later.

Mr. Raftery: I did not quite hear that.

Mr. Wright: I said I understood that some of this data that were listed here as not having been furnished when the list was made up will subsequently be furnished and will, of course, be given a later number and offered.

We offer 145, which is the United Artists' admissions of fact.

(Government's Exhibit 145 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we are also offering that part of 140 already received which gives the answers to interrogatories 55, 56, 57 and 58.

Judge Hand: How about No. 6?

Mr. Wright: That is merely an informative statement.

Judge Hand: Have you offered it?

Mr. Wright: No, we have not.

Judge Hand: Oh, it is merely an informative statement in this record?

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Judge Hand: All right. Now, 7 is in, is it?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

(335)

Mr. Raftery: Mr Wright, you also stated that you have since received——

Mr. Wright: At least a part of it, yes, and it will be numbered and subsequently offered.

Mr. Raftery: Thank you.

Judge Hand: You mean as to 6, the material you are talking about?

Mr. Wright: Yes, that that data has subsequently come in and will be numbered and offered.

Judge Hand: Then you had better just strike out 6, hadn't you?

Mr. Wright: It means nothing. It may be stricken out.

Judge Hand: As much stuff as means nothing may be excluded. We are in favor of excluding it.

Mr. Wright: The only purpose of putting it there was to explain the absence of the material.

Judge Hand: Oh, it was all right at the time. Now, 8 to 13 I have marked admitted, is that right?

Mr. Wright: No, there is nothing offered there, because it had not been submitted or marked. That again is just an informative note there on 8 to 13.

Judge Hand: All right. Shall we strike it out?

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable.

Mr. Raftery: Is 12 offered or withdrawn, Mr. Wright? (336)

Mr. Wright: 12?

Mr. Raftery: On page 84.

Mr. Wright: Your answer to 12?

Mr. Raftery: Yes.

Mr. Wright: No, that has not been offered.

Judge Hand: When are you going to offer that?

Mr. Wright: Well, as soon as we have the rest of the United Artists——

Judge Hand: Do you think it can go in here?

Mr. Wright: I do not think we have all of the United Artists' material yet that was to be furnished in response to interrogatories. We have almost all of it. As soon as we get it all we will offer it.

Mr. Raftery: The answer to 12 was none, and the answer to 13 was zero.

Mr. Wright: That is right. I was mistaken. These interrogatories were in general terms. 12 and 13 were submitted to all eight defendants, but they obviously have application only to the five theatre-ownnig defendants.

Judge Hand: Now, you come to 140, don't you?

Mr. Wright: That, as I say, that exhibit has already been admitted and we are offering these answers to 55, 56, 57 and 58, which are a part of that exhibit.

And that brings us to Universal, I believe. The first exhibit is 146, which I think should have excluded from it 5, 6, 7 ,8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13.

Judge Hand: 1, 2, 3 and 4 go in?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Judge Hand: The others are out?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Then on page 86 the data that goes out, I believe, is 16 through 24.

Judge Hand: How about 14?

Mr. Wright: 14 we offer.

Judge Hand: Admitted. 15 is excluded, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: 15 I think in this case shows an interest in a production subsidiary which is one of the group of corporations that make it up. I think it should be in.

Mr. Raftery: What you are talking about is one of the affiliated defendants of Universal? That is one of Universal's own companies?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

We are also offering the answers to 51 and 53 contained in the same exhibit, and 25, 26, 31, 35, 38 and 39.

Judge Hand: All the rest after 26 go out?

Mr. Wright: No. Just 27 and 28 go out. 31, 35, 38 and 39 are in. Then down at the bottom of the page of 146, 41 and 42 would be out.

Mr. Raftery: As to 40 we want to preserve the general (338) objection as to limitation.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Wright: I haven't got to that exhibit yet. Still on 146, the items on page 88, all of which relates to shorts and newsreels, I assume are out.

Judge Hand: 41 and 42 are out.

Mr. Wright: 41, 42, 43, 45 and 46 are out.

Then as to the data in 146 which appears on page 89, we are offering that. That is, the answers to 55, 56, 57 and 58.

Judge Bright: Do you offer the answer to 48 on page 88?

Mr. Wright: We have not come to—— Judge Bright: That is 146.

Mr. Wright: That is in a separately numbered exhibit. 146-2 is a different exhibit from 146.

(Government's Exhibit 146 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The next one we will offer is 146-1 which appears on page 87.

Mr. Raftery: That is the exhibit as to which we wish to preserve the general objection.

Judge Hand: Admitted.

(339)

Then we shall offer 146-2 which appears on page 88 and contains the answer to interrogatory 48 that Judge Bright just referred to.

(Government's Exhibit 146-2 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And then we offer 147, the Universal admissions of fact.

(Government's Exhibit 147 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 148 which relates to one of the Universal subsidiaries, Big U Film Exchange. I think there the data as to 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 may go out.

Mr. Raftery: In fairness to Mr. Wright, there has been a corporate change in the intercompany relationship between Universal and Big U. Before the day is out we will submit to you a document showing that corporate change. Big U, I understand, is now out of existence.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Mr. Raftery: There has been an amendment of the charter of the parent company and some kind of a merger—I do not know what it is, but we will give it to you.

Mr. Wright: Whatever it is it will be put in the record.

Mr. Raftery: That is right.

(340)

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Wright, what are you putting in here of 148?

Mr. Wright: The reason we put this in——

Judge Hand: No. What is it you are putting in?

Mr. Wright: 1, 2, 3 and 4, and No. 14. The rest I think may be excluded.

Judge Bright: You mean 15 to 24 is out?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: Also 5 to 13 are out?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Now we are offering the parts of 148 containing the answers to interrogatories 51 and 53 relating to theatre interests. The production answers are negative, and I think those may be excluded. Those are the answers to 25 to 28 inclusive, Nos. 31, 35, 37 and 38.

Judge Hand: Excluded?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

The history part down at the bottom of the page, the answers to 55, 56, 57 and 58 are answered. They are in 148.

Judge Bright: I did not hear what you said.

Mr. Wright: We are offering the answers to interrogatories 55, 56, 57 and 58 that are contained in 148 described at the bottom of the page there.

Judge Hand: What are you doing with 146, 146-1, 146-2, interrogatories 40 to 46 and 48?

(341)

Mr. Wright: Those interrogatories have already been offered. This is merely an explanatory note to the effect that those answers cover the distribution activities of this Big U Film Exchange as well as of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. That is the only purpose.

Judge Hand: You may leave it in or strike it out.

Mr. Wright: Well, I think the note is just there for informative purposes.

Judge Hand: All right. Now, 148.

Mr. Wright: That is offered as to 55, 56, 57 and 58, and also as to 1, 2, 3, 4, and 14, and 51 and 53, which were previously covered.

Judge Hand: Next is 149, page 92.

Mr. Wright: I now offer 149.

Judge Hand: What part of it? There are all kinds of subdivisions.

Mr. Wright: We can strike out 5, 6, 7, 8, 9—well, in this case the picture is incomplete if you strike out 9, because I think this is the holding company that does hold stock in other defendants which are part of the Universal group.

Judge Bright. Strike out 5 to 8 inclusive?

Mr. Wright: Yes. 10, 11, 12 and 13 may go out. 15 (342)
I believe should stay in as it shows the interest in certain subsidiaries.

Judge Bright: Is 14 in too?

Mr. Wright: Yes, 14, 15 and 16——

Judge Hand: You want 9, 10 and 11, do you?

Mr. Wright: 9 is in. 10, 11, 12 and 13 are out. 14, 15, 16 and 17 takes care of the Universal subsidiaries. Those should be in. Then I think the answers 18 through 24 may go out.

We are also offering——

Judge Hand: Now wait a minute, Mr. Wright. With respect to 149, 1 is admitted; 2 is admitted; 3 is admitted; 4 is admitted; 5, 6, 7 and 8 are excluded; 9 is admitted?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: 10 excluded?

Mr. Wright: 10, 11, 12 and 13 are excluded.

Judge Hand: Yes, 10, 11, 12 and 13 are excluded. How about 14?

Mr. Wright: 14, 15, 16 and 17 admitted.

Judge Hand: And the rest excluded?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, you used the expression "Universal group." What you meant were the Universal subsidiaries.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(343)

Mr. Raftery: And this offer of 9 and the others is merely to show the company relationships to its own subsidiaries?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Then we also offer the negative statement as to theatre interests appearing in 149. That is in answer to interrogatories 51 and 53. The item at the top of page 94 is merely an explanatory note, and that is true of the next item under distribution. We are offering the history answers under 149. That is, 55, 56, 57 and 58.

(Government's Exhibit 149 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we are offering Exhibit 150, which is the answer of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., except that I believe the answers to questions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 may go out there. 14 which appears at the top of page 96 I think should be in. I believe the rest may go out.

Judge Hand: 14 should be in?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: The rest out?

Mr. Wright: Yes, 15 to 24 inclusive, out.

(Government's Exhibit 150 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we are also offering the negative statement as to theatre interests appearing at the top of page 97.

(344)

That is, the answers to interrogatories 51 and 53 which are part of 150. The next items are merely explanatory notes down to history, and we are offering the answers to 55, 56, 57 and 58 which appear in 150.

Now, on this list there are further interrogatory answers listed which came in at a later date and are included in the supplemental list. I think most of those are in Exhibit No. 349 which may as well be offered at this time. That is an admission of fact which came in from Columbia. It appears on page 115 of the list you have there. That 349 is additional interrogatory data received from Columbia, and I understand their data is still incomplete, but further data will be numbered and offered as received.

Mr. Frohlich: Mr. Wright, I understand that our admissions of fact are complete.

Mr. Wright: For the whole 92 cities? I thought we just got them for the 73 cities, and then you were going to give us the other 19.

Mr. Frohlich: The 92 you have got there.

Mr. Wright: All right, if they are there, they are there. They are all offered.

Judge Hand: You had better not have that statement of yours in there, because if you find that it is borne out afterwards, why, you can correct it, but there is no use of having something in there that might mislead somebody.

(345)

Mr. Wright: I think that is quite correct. I may as well verify this now. (Counting.)

Mr. Frohlich's statement appears to be correct. There are 92 covered there.

(Government's Exhibit 349 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then the remaining interrogatory answer material that is identified on this list I think appears in Exhibit 359, which was supplemental data received with respect to National Theatre holdings. I think, however, that letter, in turn, has been superseded by a later list, and we should probably offer the list instead of this reconciliation letter.

Mr. Caskey: That is correct.

Judge Hand: Then you do not offer 359? You withdraw it?

Mr. Wright: I withdraw 359. I was just going to suggest assigning the same number for convenience, if you have that theatre list here. (Conferring with associates.)

My associate has called my attention to the fact that the newest and superseding list has been given a number that we had not reached, and it will be offered in due course. But this 359 is withdrawn.

360, I believe, gives supplemental data on the Paramount interrogatories; and the same is true of 361. These relate to theatre interests written in response to efforts or (346) letters on our part made to reconcile certain discrepancies. They really supplement the Paramount information as to theatre ownership. We offer those, 360 and 361.

Judge Hand: They both relate to theatre holdings?

Mr. Wright: 360 relates to Paramount theatre holdings; and 361 supplies data with respect to license fees paid by certain Paramount theatres and theatre grosses which had been omitted from prior interrogatory answers.

(Governments Exhibits 360 and 361 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then 362 contains answers of Universal to 1945 interrogatories, one through 5; and I assume under the Court's prior ruling, Nos. 4 and 5 relating to shorts and newsreels would be excluded. The rest is offered.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, this is objected to on the same ground; lack of competency. There is a discrepancy of $300,000 betwen this evidence tendered without any support and Exhibit 43.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

(Government's Exhibit 362 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I believe that completes the sworn interrogatory answers on the printed list. There also are some additional answers to interrogatories that were propounded (346a) at the time the suit was filed, informally, which I should like to offer next. Those are listed here. The first one is No. 151, which appears on page 98.

Judge Hand: What about these 150, 155, 156, 157 and 158, were they excluded or admitted?

Mr. Wright: No. 150, 155, 156, 157 and 158, as I understand it, were offered and admitted.

Judge Hand: I suppose they would be. Same thing.

Mr. Proskauer: What did you say, Mr. Wright?

Judge Hand: Now, 151, you have come to, haven't you, page 98?

Mr. Wright: That is what is currently being offered together with 152, the letter of transmission. That is a list of Paramount theatre holdings by States and by years, from 1932 through 1938.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 151 and 152 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 153 is, I believe, a similar tabulation covering the period 1933 through 1938, submitted by National Theatres Corporation, and 154 is a list of National Theatre holdings, dated November 30, 1937, which was also submitted——

Mr. Caskey: May I see that, please?

Mr. Wright: Yes, surely.

Mr. Caskey: This, your Honors, we are constrained to object to. Not in answer to any interrogatory. We have no copy in our files.

While the gray book indicates it was furnished by Fox, and that may be true, we certainly have no knowledge whatsoever of that fact. It is also wholly immaterial inasmuch as it duplicates other more reliable data, and we object to it on the ground of competency and on the ground of materiality.

Mr. Wright: We certainly withdraw it, if there is any question at all as to who furnished it. I had supposed there was no doubt on that score.

Judge Hand: Withdrawn.

Judge Goddard: What is that?

Judge Hand: 154.

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer No. 156, the Warner Theatre list as of 1945, together with 157, which is a supplementary letter referring to the list.

Judge Hand: 156 and 157?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(Government's Exhibits 156 and 157 for identification marked in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we will also offer 158, the RKO list, as of December 31, 1944, with a supplementary letter from RKO's counsel referring to that list.

(Government's Exhibits 158 and 159 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We are now offering, if the Court please, No. 160, which is listed here as Fox's list of theatres as of July 1945. That should be changed to "as of August 1, (349) 1945," which is the last list submitted and which we substituted for the July list.

Mr. Caskey: It should also be changed to "National's list of theatres."

Mr. Wright: All right. National is one hundred per cent owned by Fox.

Mr. Wright: Then 161 is the Paramount 1945 theatre list.

(Government's Exhibit 161 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: It is being offered with 162, which is a supplementary letter from Paramount counsel, referring to the list.

(Government's Exhibit 162 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 163 is the Loew 1945 list of theatre holdings.

(Government's Exhibit 163 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The next general category of documents that I would like to offer——

Judge Goddard: The next is 155.

Mr. Wright: 155 are these reports which we will deal (350) with later because there is still a matter of controversy as to how far they are willing to go in admitting them. I would rather next proceed to the offer of license agreements.

The license agreements begin on page 100, the first number there being, I believe, No. 172. These 1936-1937 agreements were not in our possession when the list was prepared. These summaries and our data came from agents' work sheets who had examined them in the companies' files, and so we have asked them to produce the documents themselves, and have to rely on their copies for the actual introduction of the material in evidence.

Have you 172?

Mr. Seymour: Are you offering 172?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, it seems to me again we are getting into an area of matter of such doubtful materiality and relevancy that perhaps we can save our selves some time and some of the record by considering it. Here is an agreement made in 1927 which expired in 1937, between two of the defendants, that is, between Loew and the predecessor of the defendant Paramount. There is no proof and will be none that such agreements have been made since 1937 because it is simply an expired agreement. Under the consent decree, while that provision was in force, this method of selling pictures could not be followed. It is true that provision has lapsed but, in the absence of some evidence of the continuation of such franchises or such agreements, it would seem to me that expired agreements were pretty immaterial.

Finally, there cannot really be any question about the legality of franchises aside from this consent decree. Because I think about 1936 or 1937 the Government itself in a suit in this court insisted that two of these defendants give ten-year franchises, and this was a ten-year franchise to certain theatres in St. Louis as a condition of dismissal of the Government's suit. That is United States v. Warner Brothers. Both the granting of a franchise and the dismissal were approved by Judge Knox. So it seems to me this sort of stuff is just encumbering the record.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, this agreement is, of course, the very stuff of which the case is made, the agreements made between these various producer-exhibitor defendants. While it is true that this agreement expired with the 1936-1937 season, it was an agreement which functioned over this ten-year period and is one of those which help to set the pattern that we are now concerned with and clearly—— (352)

Judge Hand: We will admit it.

Mr. Gillespie: Your Honor, we note a similar objection on behalf of Loew's.

(Government's Exhibit 172 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We next offer 173, which is——

Judge Hand: The same objection is made to 173 and it is overruled.

Mr. Seymour: It applies to the next few exhibits, and may it be deemed to apply to all of them, that is, your Honor's ruling apply to all of them, so I won't have to repeat the objection?

Judge Hand: Yes. Are all these exhibits of the same nature on pages 100 and 101; and exhibit numbers for identification 193 and 194 on 102?

Mr. Wright: That is correct. Insofar as they are all film license agreements made between two or more of the defendants in the case, that is right.

Judge Hand: They should be admitted, I should think, and marked, subject, of course, to these objections.

Mr. Seymour: There is one other question that is not really an objection. I just want to mention it now so your Honors will note it. The heading at the top of page 100 is, as called by the Government, "representative agreements." There is no basis for that characterization that I know of. It is just an argument and I hope your Honors will treat this like the other descriptive materials——

Judge Hand: Oh, yes.

Mr. Seymour:——as a mere contention. If they are representative, then there must be proof of others.

Mr. Proskauer: In that connection, your Honors, you will observe, when you come to the Warner licensing agreements, that they are for short periods, one year, two years. They are not at all of the same pattern as the ten-year licensing agreements and, in truth, there is no representative master licensing agreement. When you look at these you find that they all differ.

Mr. Wright: It is perfectly agreeable to me to strike the word "representative" from the list. It obviously——

Judge Hand: Granted.

Mr. Wright:——is not evidence anyway. The purpose of the word "representative," in the first place, was merely to indicate to the Court that these weren't all of these agreements that were made between the defendants.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes.

Mr. Wright: But a selected sample.

Judge Hand: You offer 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, (354)
181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193 and 194?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Judge Hand: All right. They are admtited subject to these objections.

Mr. Caskey: My objection to 178 is to the description, not as to the document. The document relates to a franchise to one theatre in Portland, Oregon, in which a subsidiary of Paramount, then in bankruptcy, had an interest. It was leased by Fox West Coast, or a subsidiary thereof and, as a part of the lease, with the approval of the bankruptcy court, the franchise was entered into, and I think that is scarcely to be gleaned from the description of Exhibit 178 in this gray book.

Mr. Wright: The description is for identification purposes only, and obviously the exhibit speaks for itself.

Judge Hand: Are they marking these?

The Clerk: I don't have them.

Mr. Wright: Have you these agreements that we have just referred to? They were to be produced by the respective defendants. We notified them, of course, and agreed that as between themselves, either party to the agreement could produce it that it was convenient for. I do not know that the time of the Court need be taken up with the actual marking, if they haven't them here, for example, ready to go in.

Mr. Proskauer: Have you copies?

Mr. Wright: I do not think, as far as I know, that we have copies in our possession of any of these unless they have been made within the last few days.

We do not have 174. Have you got one?

Mr. Proskauer: I have a photostat of 175. We are looking for 174.

Mr. Wright: These may as well be marked.

Mr. Seymour: Here is 174.

Mr. Wright: Here is 174, to be marked.

Mr. Proskauer: You have a copy of 174, have you, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, I gave it to him.

Mr. Proskauer: Very good.

(Government's Exhibits for identification 172, 173, 174 and 175 received in evidence.)

(355-A)

Mr. Wright: I believe 172, 173, 174 and 175 are marked 176, we have no copy of.

Mr. Seymour: We have no copy of that.

Mr. Wright: How about RKO?

Mr. Leisure: We have no copy.

Mr. Seymour: We are told that was burned up in a fire of the RKO warehouse.

Mr. Wright: As I understand it, then, neither defendant has a copy of the document described as Exhibit 176 for identification, neither RKO nor Paramount?

Mr. Leisure: Nor the Government.

Mr. Wright: In that event I suppose we will have to offer the agents' worksheets of the summary of the agreement which was made by them when they examined the originals. I will note that as missing.

Judge Bright: 176 is missing?

Mr. Wright: 176.

Mr. Seymour: May we see what you are having marked?

Mr. Wright: 176, as I understand it, the defendants say they are unable to produce, that is, neither Paramount nor RKO can locate the agreement.

Mr. Seymour: Are you marking anything?

Mr. Wright: The ones that have been marked in evidence are 172, 173, 174 and 175.

We now would like to offer 177 and 178.

(356)

Judge Goddard: They are offered and received?

Mr. Wright: They are all offered and received. It is simply a question of marking, as I say. I believe that that has to be done in the presence of the Court.

Judge Hand: That is true. I always fear when we leave you people for a minute that you won't be sawing wood and getting your record in, and we propose to have this thing go just like that. We are not going to stand any other system here. Ties up too many judges.

Mr. Wright: There are limits to the extent to which we can organize this thing. We did not have the agreements. We asked for them and asked to have them produced.

Judge Hand: Do not discuss it now. Go ahead and put in your proof.

Mr. Wright: Has Paramount 177, 178 and 179?

Judge Goddard: I think it is 176 you were looking for?

Mr. Wright: 176, they tell us, they cannot find; that neither party has any record of it; they think it is burned up or something.

Will anybody who has a copy of any of these agreements come forward, and see if we can get the others marked? This is 177.

(357)

Mr. Caskey: Have you 178?

Mr. Wright: I would like a copy, if you have it.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest to your Honors while we are marking those, that I don't want the Court to get the impression that these are general licensing agreements between these two companies covering their entire area. For example, 178 is an agreement between Paramount and Fox West Coast relating to one theatre in Portland, Oregon.

Judge Hand: I know; I understand.

Mr. Wright: 178, the last one.

(Government's Exhibit 178 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: You have 178 and you are marking it?

The Clerk: 178 is marked.

Mr. Wright: Has anyone 179?

(Government's Exhibit 179 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 180. Have you it there? He says you have 180.

Mr. Caskey: 180? No, sir, we haven't 180.

Mr. Wright: Have you made a search for it or is it just——

Mr. Caskey: Of course, Mr. Wright, we have spent six months making a search for documents in this case for you. These are ten years old.

(358)

Mr. Seymour: Why don't you pass that for the present?

Mr. Wright: All right. How about 181?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Wright, Loew's does not have 181. I understood Warner was to produce 181.

Mr. Wright: Is it just a misunderstanding as to who was to produce it, or has neither one of you got it?

Mr. Proskauer: I want no suggestion that we haven't produced what we were expected to. On the 1st of October, 1945, we addressed a letter to your associate, Mr. Lasser, enclosing copies of every exhibit that we were supposed to produce. They were 175, 191, 194, 259, 266 and 271.

Mr. Wright: The situation on 181 is what, Loew's has not been able to locate a copy of such agreement?

Mr. Gillespie: That was not marked on my list as one we were to furnish. I think we have the agreement, but it was just not, as I say, marked as one we were to furnish. Apparently there was a misunderstanding on that.

Mr. Wright: Then either one or the other of you will be able to furnish it? I suppose it will be marked when furnished.

Mr. Proskauer: We will make a search for it. If we can find it, of course, we will produce it.

Mr. Wright: How about 182?

Mr. Gillespie: We have 182.

Mr. Wright: May we have it?

The Court: What is this, 181?

Mr. Wright: 181 they are searching for, and 180.

(Government's Exhibit 182 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: 183——

Mr. Wright: And 184 and 185 and 186. Those are also RKO agreements. Do you have those?

(Government's Exhibits 183, 184 and 185 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 186, have you that?

Mr. Gillespie: Here is 186.

(Government's Exhibit 186 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 187?

Mr. Gillespie: 187.

(Government's Exhibit 187 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 188.

Mr. Thompson: We have not been able to find in the files of Loew anything which conforms to the description of 188.

We have not been able to find any record of any such corporation in the files of Loew's, Inc. as this Anchor Theatrical Corporation. We don't know what the license is, we don't (360) know what the corporation is.

Mr. Caskey: Your ignorance is shared by us.

Mr. Wright: Before we leave this agreement, as I understand it, according to the summary which is contained in this appendix A and picked up on the F. B. I. worksheets, that covered the exhibition of Fox Films in the Fox Palace and Capitol Theatres in Washington, D. C. for that ten-year period. As I understand it, neither Loew nor Fox has any agreement which covered the exhibition of Fox Films in those theatres during that period?

Mr. Caskey: Certainly we didn't—I didn't make the search personally, but we are told this thing does not exist, and it doesn't ring with me. I know the operator of the Fox Theatre, the Capitol Theatre, in Washington and nothing about Anchor Theatrical Corporation approaches it.

Mr. Wright: Have you in your possession agreements which relate to the licensing of Fox films in those theatres, the Fox Palace and Capitol in Washington, D. C. for that period?

Mr. Caskey: Undoubtedly there are some agreements. Whether they are franchises or not, I don't know. We could find out. But I am certain that there has been no franchise, as you know, for that theatre since 19—since we compiled the list which we furnished you in 1940, this theatre has not been franchised. The theatre changed hands back in 1936. (361)
Before that——

Mr. Wright: Which theatre?

Mr. Caskey: The one that is in the union—now called the Capitol, then called the Palace.

Mr. Wright: I think in that case we again will have to rely on the agents' worksheets who made the examination and took this data from the agreements that they examined in the files of the company in 1937.

Judge Goddard: What company did they find it in?

Mr. Wright: I believe that the examination at that time was made of the contracts. The contracts were then, I believe, furnished for inspection by the distributor company in each case and that the contract examined by the agent would have been one furnished by Fox Film.

Mr. Caskey: Didn't they photostat it at that time?

Mr. Wright: I think they may have photostated some of those and made the examination from photostats. We shall certainly do everything we can to locate a photostat, if there is one.

Mr. Caskey: I call the Court's attention, for the sake of the record, to the fact that Exhibit 187 relates to one theatre in the City of Los Angeles.

Judge Hand: 188, you haven't found. Now 189.

Mr. Caskey: We have it. Have you it?

Mr. Whittlesey: Yes.

(362)

(Government's Exhibit 189 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: has Fox or RKO 190?

(Government's Exhibit 190 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 191 and 192. Does Fox or Warner have those?

We have a phototsat of 191 to be marked.

(Government's Exhibit 191 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: What became of 189 and 190? Did they go in?

Mr. Wright: They did. And 192, does Fox or Warner have that?

Mr. Caskey: We have it.

(Government's Exhibit 192 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 193 is, I believe, withdrawn. That is a duplication, I think, of 194. We offer 194, which is the agreement between RKO and Warner, dated August 31, 1945, for two years.

(Government's Exhibit 194 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: What exhibit are you withdrawing?

Mr. Wright: 193 is withdrawn.

(363)

Judge Hand: Now you have everthing in in that section except 176 and 180, 181 and 188.

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Judge Hand: And that is all.

Mr. Wright: Correct.

Judge Hand: And you propose to supply them by oral testimony or other documentary evidence?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, your Honor.

Judge Hand: We will take an adjournment until quarter past two.

(Recess to 2.15 P.M.)

(364)

Judge Hand: Proceed.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, Mr. Wright has handed me what purports to be a photostatic copy of an agreement dated August 16, 1935, between Fox Film Corporation and United Theatre Enterprises, Inc., covering the Rialto, Capitol and Ritz theatres in Macon, Georgia; and it has every appearance of genuineness, and except for the notation on the front cover, which obviously is not part of the document itself, there is no objection. I would like to have that deleted.

Judge Hand: What is this, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: This is No. 180, if the Court please, which appears on page 100 of the list. It was a document that neither of the defendants who were involved were able to locate, and we were able to locate a photostatic copy in our files.

Judge Hand: It may be admitted.

Mr. Wright: The part that Mr. Caskey does not like is a notation "Covers entire circuit" up at the top, which I just struck out in pencil.

(Government's Exhibit 180 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: In order that there won't be any delay in producing this other material and having it marked, we shall (365) now offer consecutively the agreements which are identified here as 195 through 274. Mr. Raftery, I believe, has 195 and 196, and he says he wants to make a speech about them.

Mr. Raftery: I do not want to make a speech. I want to call your Honors' attention to the language at the head, "Representative Master Licensing Agreements" on page 102. We don't produce either of the agreements with any representation that they are representative of anything except what is in the agreements. Now, as to the first agreement——

Judge Hand: Well, that is merely in this pamphlet?

Mr. Raftery: That is right.

Judge Hand: Why don't you strike out "Representative"?

Mr. Wright: As I said before, the only purpose is to indicate that those are not all of the agreements of that class that these people made. "Selected" is just as good a word.

Judge Hand: It seems to give them so much pain——

Mr. Wright: I am willing to have it stricken.

Mr. Raftery: Now, as regards 195, the description says "Dated February 3, 1928, for 10 years." That agreement, by its terms, expired in 1937 in the middle of the year, but the contracting party, Publix Theatres Corporation, went into bankruptcy in late 1932 or early 1933, and the contract expired, as a matter of fact, in 1933.

(366)

Judge Hand: Yes, I understand that.

Mr. Raftery: Now, because of the remoteness of it we wish to object to its introduction in evidence, as it has nothing to do with anything that has happened since early 1933, 12 years ago.

Judge Hand: We will admit it.

Judge Goddard: This had to do with a situation that existed before the bankruptcy, is that right?

Mr. Raftery: That is right. And also that is a printed copy not executed. The executed copy is not in existence, and where there are blank signatures not filled in in print, the parties mentioned never joined in the agreement.

Judge Goddard: They never did join?

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Chaplin never signed it.

Judge Hand: Then does that get in, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Raftery: All the other parties signed it. It was operative as to all of the parties whose printed signatures show in the agreement. This is a contract where United Artists agreed to license 15 pictures a year to the Publix Theatres mentioned therein, and it required the individual approval of the owner of each of the pictures. When the agreement was presented to Mr. Chaplin he would not approve, so his pictures were not included.

Judge Bright: All the others were?

(367)

Mr. Raftery: Yes.

Mr. Wright: The fact that he did not approve appears on the face of the agreement, because there is no showing of any signature on his part.

Judge Hand: All right, we will admit it.

(Government's Exhibit 195 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The other United Artists agreement in that group there, 199, has also been produced by Mr. Raftery, and that will be marked accordingly.

(Government's Exhibit 199 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: What about these prior ones?

Mr. Wright: Now, the Columbia agreements, Mr. Frohlich, have you 196 and 197?

Mr. Frohlich: We haven't got them.

Mr. Wright: You were not able to locate them?

Mr. Frohlich: I looked for them and have not been able to locate them.

Mr. Wright: Has Paramount got a copy?

Mr. Seymour: We have not yet been able to locate a copy. We shall continue our search, and suggest you pass it.

Mr. Wright: Is the same true as to 197?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes.

Mr. Wright: Is that true as to Paramount?

(368)

Mr. Seymour: Just a moment. Yes, the same observation. I suggest you pass that for the present.

Mr. Wright: 197 we will pass.

Now, 198.

Mr. Frohlich: 198 Mr. Marcus has.

Mr. Wright: I think we also have those beginning with 200 there, don't we? Let us have those while you are looking for 198.

These agreements beginning with 200 are pooling agreements relating to the operation of theatres.

Judge Hand: How about 199?

Mr. Wright: We are supposed to have a copy of it which we have not been able to locate.

Mr. Bright: 199 has been marked.

Mr. Wright: Oh, yes, 199 is in. It is 198 that we have not been able to locate.

Judge Hand: You haven't got 198?

Mr. Wright: We think we have it here, but we have not given it to the clerk for marking yet.

And I am now offering 200, a copy of which we have.

(Government's Exhibit 200 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 201. 201 consists of three pieces, all marked with that number.

Mr. Wright: We are now offering 202.

Mr. Leisure: In this case too, if the Court please, the heading may be misleading to the Court. It says "Theatre Pooling Agreements between the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants" and so forth. This agreement with Skouras is not between any of the other defendants at all, and the heading as it reads there is very misleading.

Mr. Wright: The heading includes their theatre-operating affiliates, and we believe other proof will show that Skouras and Randforce are operating affiliates of RKO through a minority interest.

(Government's Exhibit 202 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 203, which is in two parts.

(Government's Exhibit 203 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 204 is also in two parts and is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 204 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 205 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 205 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 206 is offered.

(370)

(Government's Exhibit 206 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 207.

(Government's Exhibit 207 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we offer 208.

(Government's Exhibit 208 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Raftery: Are you putting in 208?

Mr. Wright: Yes, it just went in.

(371)

Mr. Raftery: I want to call this to the Court's attention and ask Mr. Wright for a concession, that the United Artists Theatre Circuit is in no way connected with the defendant United Artists Corporation, nor have we any interest in it, nor has it any interest in us. The only thing in common is the same name, United Artists.

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Judge Goddard: Has United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc. any relation to other defendants?

Mr. Wright: Yes, there is a relation to the defendant Fox through Joseph Schenck and also to the other defendants, that is, through stock ownership, and also to other defendants through so-called pooling agreements, which will later appear.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honor please, Mr. Joseph Schenck, as I understand it, from 1935 until fairly recently was a stockholder in Twentieth Century-Fox, having a considerable block of stock but nowhere approaching any substantial interest, and he also, I am informed, has some stock in this corporation called United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., but that is the only conceivable affiliation, and I submit that meets no legal test, and I am sure Mr. Wright will not contend that the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox exercises any control, participates in the management or has anything whatsoever to do with this corporation.

(372)

Mr. Wright: Our contention will be that Mr. Schenck is an important part of the Fox management and is also president of this Theatre Circuit in addition to the stock interests involved, and, as I have said before, there will be other proof which connects this Circuit with the other defendants in the form of pooling agreements between them.

Mr. Davis: Between all the other defendants?

Judge Hand: That is admitted.

Mr. Wright: Loew, for one. I am not sure how many others.

Mr. Davis: Wait for the proof!

Mr. Wright: The next is 209, which is in two parts.

Mr. Wright: These next numbers have not yet been supplied to us. 210, has Loew a copy of that, or Paramount? Loew-Lucas-Jenkins agreement.

Mr. Seymour: As to 210, in response to your request, we have no copy of it. Paramount has no interest whatever in its operation, and I think it must be included in your list by inadvertence. Paramount has an interest in Lucas and Jenkins in other connections. It has none whatsoever in this Rhodes Theatre. It is a wholly independent operation of Lucas and Jenkins. We have no copy of it and I think it is immaterial and irrelevant in the case.

Mr. Wright: Has Loew a copy of it?

Mr. Thompson: We cannot find any such agreement. The facts of the situation are that a wholly-owned subsidiary of Loew's owns 50 per cent of the stock of the corporation called Rhodes Theatre Operating Corporation. The other 50 per cent of that stock is owned by three individuals, not owned by any corporation.

Mr. Wright: Who are the individuals?

Mr. Thompson: I don't think I have the names of those individuals, but the record shows that the lease of the Rhodes Theatre was assigned to that corporation. There is no operating agreement for that theatre. It is just operated by this corporation in which Rhodes owns 50 per cent.

Mr. Wright: I understand that; I simply wanted to identify the partners who own the other 50 per cent. I understood that to be the Lucas-Jenkins interests. Perhaps I am mistaken.

Mr. Seymour: I am told that is not the fact.

Mr. Wright: If it is not the fact we should have whatever the facts are, I suppose.

Mr. Thompson: I don't have the names of the other stockholders here. If we have that information, I shall be glad to furnish it.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Marcus calls my attention to the fact that he is under the impression that your interrogatory answer shows that the theatre is operated for you and the other 50 per cent holder by Lucas and Jenkins, is that correct?

Mr. Thompson: Not by Lucas and Jenkins. I understand that some Lucas and Jenkins organization operates the theatre, but as to——

Mr. Wright: We will withdraw the number here, and if they can simply furnish us with a statement as to who the other interest is, why, that is agreeable to us.

Mr. Davis: Why don't you, Mr. Wright, if I might suggest, you have in Loew's answer to interrogatory 58, let us turn to that? It is in evidence. Let us see what it says.

Judge Hand: What do you propose to do?

Mr. Wright: As I say, I withdraw the number there and I suppose whatever facts appear in the interrogatory answer appear, and Mr. Thompson's statement is satisfactory, provided it will be supplemented with a statement as to who the owners of the other 50 per cent interest in the company that operates the Rhodes Theatre are.

Judge Hand: All right, 210 is withdrawn.

Mr. Wright: Have you 211, Mr. Davis?.

Mr. Seymour: May I see that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes. We will offer this agreement, 211.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, with reference to this proposed Exhibit 211, agreement between Loew and Skouras Theatres Company, I wish to point out that, as I am informed, Skouras Theatres Company is not a defendant here, nor an affiliate of any of the defendants. It seems to be a third person pure and simple.

Mr. Wright: We will show the facts as to Skouras Theatres Corporation. It is true it is not a defendant. It is a company which operates theatres which is partly owned by RKO, partly by executives of the Fox Film Company. And those facts will appear in the course of the evidence.

Judge Hand: Admitted.

Mr. Wright: Going back to item 210, I notice that in the answer to the interrogatory that is in evidence here of Loew's, that is, Exhibit No. 48, that the page dealing with the Rhodes Theatre, there is the statement made as to Loew's interest: "Nature and extent of interest? 50 per cent leasehold. Name of corporation through which interest is held? Rhodes Theatre Operating Company." And then at the bottom is a notation, Operated by Lucas and Jenkins. Now, am I to understand that is incorrect?

Mr. Thompson: It is not operated by Lucas and Jenkins as a corporation, but I understand the officers of this operating company are connected with Lucas and Jenkins and they do the operating of this Rhodes Theatre.

Judge Bright: What interrogatory was that in answer to?

Mr. Wright: It is in Exhibit 48. The answer to interrogatory 40, I believe, giving the theatres that Loew had in Atlanta and the nature of the interest.

Loew, I believe, was to produce the numbers marked 212. 213, 214 and 215.

I will offer 212.

(Government's Exhibit 212 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And then, I believe, you have 213 and 214, Mr. Thompson?

We are now offering 213 and 214.

(Government's Exhibits 213 and 214 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And you have 215, Mr. Thompson, or do you have that, Mr. Seymour, Loew's Paramount?

Mr. Seymour: I am told that there is no agreement such as is described under your 215. There is no agreement between Loew and Paramount.

Mr. Wright: There is a lease of the theatre from Loew.

Mr. Seymour: Not from Loew to Paramount.

Mr. Wright: From Loew to Balaban & Katz.

Mr. Seymour: No.

Mr. Thompson: There is a lease of a theatre in Oak Park, (377)
a subsidiary of Loew's, to Essaness Theatres Corporation. That is the operator of the circuit of theatres in Chicago. That lease was assigned to another corporation and is operated by that corporation. There has never been a lease to Balaban & Katz, nor any agreement with Balaban & Katz, or with Paramount, about that theatre.

Mr. Wright: What is the name of the last corporation to whom the lease was assigned?

Mr. Thompson: Oak Park Amusement Corporation.

Mr. Wright: That is the corporation, is it not, in which Paramount is interested?

Mr. Thompson: I know of no Paramount interest.

Mr. Seymour: That is certainly misdescribed.

Mr. Wright: In any event, there is no agreement answering the description and we will withdraw that item.

Judge Bright: Which one is that?

Mr. Wright: 215.

Judge Hand: Withdrawn, 215.

Mr. Wright: Then the Warner-Loew leases that are marked 216 and 217.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, I cannot hear a word. I am sorry to keep repeating that. Are you offering 216 and 217?

Mr. Wright: Yes. Those, I believe, you or Loew were (378) going to furnish.

Mr. Proskauer: We have already furnished them. We have given them to you.

While counsel is locating those leases, your Honors, I suppose they may be fairly admissible because they are a transaction between two co-defendants, but they are nothing like a pooling agreement. It is just two leases by which they really exchanged two theatres in Wilmington, Delaware.

Judge Hand: Have you them here?

Mr. Wright: Apparently we cannot locate ours. If either of you gentlemen have your copy here, will you let me have it?

Mr. Thompson: We have 217.

Mr. Wright: May we have that? You haven't 216?

Mr. Thompson: I have not.

Mr. Proskauer: I shall be perfectly glad to look up and see if we can find another copy, but I wish the record to distinctly show that we did furnish it.

Mr. Wright: If you say you did, I assume you did.

(Government's Exhibit 217 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: Have you marked 216?

(379)

Mr. Wright: They have not located a copy yet.

The next is 218, a Paramount-Warner agreement. Does Paramount or Warner have that?

I have sent upstairs for 218. We apparently have that.

I will now have 219 marked, which consists of two parts.

Mr. Davis: What happened to 218?

Mr. Wright: We sent upstairs for it.

(Government's Exhibit 219 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 229 is another Loew-Warner agreement.

Mr. Proskauer: Have you it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: If you gave it to us, we should have it.

Mr. Proskauer: I hold in my hand the receipt signed by your associate, Mr. Lasser, for all these documents for which you are now calling on me. If there is any question about it, here is it.

Mr. Wright: Does that include 221 and 222 and 223?

Mr. Proskauer: The answer is yes, it does.

Mr. Wright: and 224 and 225?

Mr. Proskauer: The answer is, yes.

Mr. Wright: Here are 221 and 222. Apparently we haven't been able to locate 220.

(380)

Mr. Proskauer: In order that there may be no question of the accuracy, this receipt recites that the originals were received for photostating and return. And after a lapse of time, the originals were returned to us, but we have not produced them in court because we assume, of course, that you have the photostats.

Mr. Wright: That is a reasonable assumption. That applies to 223, 224, 225, 226——

Mr. Proskauer: The answer is yes.

Mr. Wright: —227, 228, 229 and 230, is that right? I mean, those are all, you say, delivered by you to us?

Mr. Proskauer: The answer to that question is yes.

Mr. Wright: They may be being photostated. We will offer 231.

Mr. Proskauer: What is the present offer, if you please?

Mr. Wright: 231.

Mr. Seymour: You are skipping for the moment, Mr. Wright, 223 to 230?

Mr. Wright: That is right, we are searching for those documents.

(Government's Exhibit 231 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: That is the lease from Loew to Fox, under (381) which Fox operates the Warfield Theatre?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Then this Fox-Paramount agreement 232, that we will ask to have marked.

Mr. Seymour: I suppose, your Honors, on this exhibit and on certain others to follow, will take notice of the fact that the agreements in question were made by trustees in bankruptcy of this court while the Paramount was under the jurisdiction of the court here.

(Government's Exhibit 232 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we will also offer 233.

(Government's Exhibit 233 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: As I understand the situation as to 234, we are in error there because the corporation named "Paramount Theatres, Inc." had nothing to do with Paramount, is that correct?

Mr. Caskey: That is correct, and the original leases were exhibited to Mr. Marcus and he agreed with our contention.

Mr. Wright: We withdraw that then. 235 is offered to be marked.

(Government's Exhibit 235 for identification received in evidence.)

(382)

Mr. Wright: And 236.

(Government's Exhibit 236 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: As to 237, we were naive enough to assume that because Fox and RKO each owned 50 per cent of the Main Street Theatre in Kansas City that there was probably some written agreement in that connection. However, we are informed that no written agreement was made in connection with the acquisition of those interests, so we will merely offer, in lieu of what is described there, using the same numbers, 237-1 and 237-2, the reports in which Fox reported that it acquired a 50 per cent interest or, rather, National Theatres acquired a 50 per cent interest in the Main Street Theatre on December 23, 1942, and RKO reported the acquisition of a beneficial undivided one-half interest in the fee of the same theatre on January 19, 1943, together with the statement that it was not now being operated. The date of this is February 8, 1943. And there are no present plans for its operation; as I understand it, it is still closed.

Mr. Davis: Report to whom?

Mr. Wright: Reports from the defendants named to the Department of Justice pursuant to the provision of the consent decree—Section 11, I believe.

Mr. Caskey: May I see that?

(383)

Mr. Wright: Certainly.

Mr. Whittlesey: If the Court please, with respect to this matter of an agreement between Fox and RKO with respect to that theatre, Mr. Wright stated that there was no written agreement entered into. I would like to point out that on August 31 we advised the Department of Justice that there was no agreement of any sort entered into between Fox and RKO with respect to that theatre, not merely no written agreement.

Judge Hand: What is this, 238?

Mr. Wright: 237 is that number. It is in two parts, 237-1 and 237-2.

Judge Hand: You are talking about the second part?

Mr. Wright: 237-1, I believe, is the report from Fox; 237-2 will be the report from Loew, both covering this 50 per cent interest in the Main Street Theatre.

Mr. Caskey: Now, the objection to counsel's language is to the fact. What we acquired and what the exhibit shows we acquired was an undivided one-half interest in the fee simple title.

Mr. Wright: I thought that was what I stated.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honor please, to make the statement that they acquired a 50 per cent interest we think is misleading. The building was owned by a number of heirs, and we bought from one heir an undivided one-third interest in the fee; from another heir, an undivided one-sixth interest; and at a later time RKO, without our knowledge, bought other interest; so as a result we are tenants in common, and the use of a 50 per cent interest might be misleading.

(Government's Exhibit 237-1 and 237-2 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We next offer 238 and 239 which appear to be in fact bound together as one agreement. Both exhibit numbers appear on it, however.

(Government's Exhibits 238 and 239 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: If we may go back to 216, we have located that, and I hand it to the clerk for marking.

(Government's Exhibit 216 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then I have also located 218, which I will hand to the clerk to mark.

(Government's Exhibit 218 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 219 is in. I offer 220.

(Government's Exhibit 220 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We have located the Exhibits 223 through (385)
230 which were not available before, which I have now handed to the clerk for marking.

(Government's Exhibits 223 through 230 inclusive for identification received in evidence.).

Mr. Proskauer: What are you offering, please?

Mr. Wright: I just handed the clerk the documents which had previously been offered but not located. 223, I believe, through 230. Those were the documents you had delivered to us for photostating.

Mr. Proskauer: I do not want to take the time urging the objection of relevancy, but in several of those cases the other party to the agreement is a complete independent, in every sense of that term.

Mr. Wright: I can only say that that is a matter as to which we differ with Judge Proskauer.

Now, that brings us up to 240, which is contained in an envelope, and I will ask to have that marked in evidence.

(Government's Exhibit 240 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Proskauer: In connection with the Exhibit 230, just for the sake of getting it all in one place, may it be noted that that terminated last week and is no longer in existence.

Mr. Caskey: In the same connection, I showed Mr. (386)
Marcus when we came down that the sublease of the theatre in Idaho Falls, which is 236, when it expired a subsidiary of National negotiated a lease directly with the landlord, and is no longer an assignee of any lease from Paramount. The relationship is directly between the landlord and the National subsidiary.

Mr. Wright: 241—

Judge Goddard: How about 240?

Mr. Wright: 240 has been received and marked. We now offer 241.

(Government's Exhibit 241 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I now offer 242.

(Government's Exhibit 242 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We now offer 243.

(Government's Exhibit 243 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 244.

(Government's Exhibit 244 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, as to the group of exhibits going in now, it seems to me again there is a wholly gratuitous use of the word "representative" in the title. They (387) are stated to be representative film licensing agreements. Now, the fact of the matter is that the Government for purposes of its own called on the defendants to produce certain license agreements, which we produced, and having produced them they then undertook to characterize them. Now, the characterization ought to be withdrawn. They are certain documents.

Judge Hand: That is a matter of argument.

Mr. Seymour: I do not want the Government's characterization to be constantly before your Honor when there is no basis for it.

Judge Hand: I know, I know.

Mr. Proskauer: The word "representative" causes us no grief, except that we are always pained by inaccuracy.

Judge Hand: You will probably argue it early and late and get it into our heads finally.

Mr. Proskauer: If I may offer an amendment, we will argue it thoroughly and briefly.

Mr. Wright: We offer Government's Exhibit 245 in evidence.

(Government's Exhibit 245 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 246.

(Government's Exhibit 246 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 247, 248, 249 and 250, which are (388) all contained in this red envelope.

(Government's Exhibits 247, 248, 249 and 250 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The last one that went in, your Honors, was 250. Now we offer 251.

(Government's Exhibit 251 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 252.

(Government's Exhibit 252 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 253.

(Government's Exhibit 253 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And we offer 254, 255, 256 and 257.

(Government's Exhibits 254, 255, 256 and 257 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 258.

(Government's Exhibit 258 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 259.

(Government's Exhibit 259 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 259 is apparently in two parts.

We offer 260, 261, 262 and 263, which are all contained in this folder.

(389)

(Government's Exhibits 260, 261, 262, and 263 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 264, 265, 266 and 267, which are all contained in this envelope.

(Government's Exhibits 264, 265, 266 and 267 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 268, which belongs in that same group, Columbia contracts.

(Government's Exhibit 268 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then the United Artists agreement, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273 and 274, which are all contained in this one envelope.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, a point of information. Is this "agreement" or "agreements" in those United Artists? Is there more than one agreement?

Mr. Wright: I will have to look at the exhibit.

Mr. Raftery: Suppose you let me look at them. I have not seen that group of agreements recently.

Mr. Wright: Yes (handing).

(Government's Exhibits 269, 270, 271, 272, 273 and 274 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: That brings us to the printed license forms. The Fox forms are 275 and 276 for identification. These are the forms which have been printed in full in Appendix B. (390)

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, will you tell me why you are offering these?

Mr. Wright: I just explained to the Court that these forms were those that were printed in full in Appendix B.

Mr. Proskauer: These are undoubtedly forms that the defendants used in making contracts with people indiscriminately. But if I may ask, what is the relevancy of it?

Mr. Wright: These forms, I suppose, are the best evidence available of the general method of doing business and the manner in which films are made available.

Mr. Proskauer: But there is a charge here of violation of the Sherman Act. What is it in those forms that you claim?

Mr. Wright: There are a number of similarities, for one thing, which we have pointed out in the schedule in the appendix to B, and there are other provisions which are of very dubious legality in and of themselves. I do not think there is anything to be gained by making an argument on the forms at this time. I think it is perfectly apparent that you cannot consider in any event the legality of what has been done here without knowing what the forms of agreement used in carrying on the business are.

Judge Hand: Are these the same forms as are found in Appendix B?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Mr. Caskey: That is true as to 275. 276 is not an agreement but only someone's rather imperfect summary of one.

Mr. Wright: That is correct, but the somewhat imperfect summary is in Appendix B.

Mr. Wright: I think Loew was to produce the forms referred to there. Have you the Loew forms, 277 and 278?

Mr. Davis: Your Honors, again, I ask whether these forms are introduced—I am speaking now of the Loew forms 277 and 278—are introduced as substantive proof of violation of the Sherman Act; and if so I should like to ask again what the clauses are which, assuming that the Court agreed with the Government, the Government would wish to enjoin the further use of. I think we are entitled to that.

Judge Hand: These things may have a bearing or they may not, we cannot tell. They attempt to show a method of doing business, and they may have some bearing on the case, or they may not. We will admit them.

(Government's Exhibits 277 and 278 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 279 and 280, the Paramount forms, are next offered.

(392)

(Government's Exhibits 279 and 280 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 281.

(Government's Exhibit 281 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Mr. Phillips calls my attention to the fact that in the listing of the Paramount form for the 1943-44 season at page 108 there is a typographical error there. The correct number of the form is not Form A340 A-3 but should be Form 4340 A-3. That is Exhibit 280.

The next number I think is 282, the RKO 1943-44 form.

(Government's Exhibit 282 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then we will offer 283 and 284, the Warner forms

(Government's Exhibits 283 and 284 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 285 and 286, the Columbia forms.

(Government's Exhibits 285 and 286 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We offer 287 and 288, the United Artists forms.

(Government's Exhibits 287 and 288 for identification received in evidence.)

(393)

Mr. Wright: Now I will hand the clerk 290. We are looking for 289.

(Government's Exhibit 290 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I am informed that we have now been able to locate a photostat of No. 188, and we have the agent here who made the examination and who can identify the photostat; and, I suppose, inasmuch as the claim has been made as to that agreement that it just was not simply a question of not being able to find it, but that they did not know that any such agreement was in existence—since they made that claim, we had better have the agent identity the exhibit.

Judge Hand: Show it to them.

Mr. Caskey: Show it to us.

Judge Bright: Show it to Fox and Loew.

Mr. Caskey: There is no question but what this is Mr. Michel's signature and that he was a vice-president of the company at the time; and the O. K. of the initials of the secretary of the company. You do not have to call any witness to prove that.

Judge Hand: All right. Admitted.

(394)

Mr. Wright: No one has been able to locate 181 yet, I take it, and as we have not—I don't know whether Loew or Warner have. That was one you said you were still searching for this morning.

Judge Hand: Have you got the copy of this?

Mr. Wright: We have not.

Judge Bright: 176 is still open.

Mr. Wright: 176 is still unaccounted for. I thought perhaps the defendants might be able to locate a copy during the recess. We have not yet been able to.

I take it the situation as to those listing licenses is the same as it was when we left it this morning, and we will endeavor to see if we can locate a copy.

Judge Hand: Have you got 289 here?

Mr. Wright: No, we are still making a search for that.

I do not think there is much more we can do on the license agreements at this time until they have been located.

Judge Bright: Isn't it printed in full in the appendix?

Mr. Wright: I believe it is.

Judge Hand: Page 180 of the appendix.

Mr. Wright: I do not know whether Mr. Schimel has had an opportunity to check or have compared that form as it appears in our appendix with the form itself——

(395)

Mr. Schimel: I gave a set of forms to Mr. Marcus at noontime. I will get you another set.

Mr. Wright: All right, we will put it in tomorrow if we can't locate it today.

That brings us, I believe, to the Appeal Board decisions. Now, you will find two recent ones given the numbers 291 and 292, and then the first 106 are contained in five volumes numbered 1 to 5 inclusive, which appears on the first page of the list here, and those volumes I think are in the possession of the clerk, because that material was identified——

Judge Goddard: They are in chambers. They were offered on a motion.

Mr. Wright: Yes, they were identified and offered, those numbers 1 to 5.

Judge Hand: What are you referring to now?

Judge Goddard: Appeal Board decisions.

Judge Hand: You mean 291 and 292?

Mr. Wright: And I am also referring to Exhibits 1 to 5 for identification which are listed on the very first page.

Mr. Seymour: I would like to be heard on that offer, if your Honors please.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: I might say that in this connection I do not like to encumber the record with the material that is in printed form that is on file at the Arbitration Association. If it were understood that the decisions may be referred to by either party without physical incorporation in the record, then I do not suppose it is necessary; but we offer them to remove any question as to judicial noticeability.

(395a)

Mr. Seymour: May I inquire of Mr. Wright through the Court for what purpose they are offered?

(396)

Mr. Wright: They are offered, as I stated in my opening statement, primarily as the best available collected data we have as to what the practices of the five consenting defendants have been since the decree was entered; and it represents the Board's findings in a great variety of factual situations, involving complaints of various character that arose under the decree.

Judge Hand: And they are all clearances?

Mr. Wright: No, if the Court please, they are not all clearances.

Mr. Proskauer: 90 per cent of them.

Mr. Wright: Some of them refer to what are called some run complaints, refusal to license on any terms, some refer to an attempt to secure a specific run, a Section 10 proceeding. I believe proceedings under Sections 6, 8 and 10 of the decree, or perhaps 9, too, account for all of them.

Mr. Seymour: Now, if your Honors please, in order to have it perfectly plain as to the basis on which these decisions are received, Mr. Wright gave various reasons for their receipt in his opening, and before Judge Goddard on the motion for temporary injunction he offered these decisions as evidence of violation of law, and we objected to them. We think that they are admissible only for a very limited purpose, and for that purpose we would like to have them admitted; but we would like to make sure they are not admitted for such a broad purpose that they put burdens upon us which should not properly be put upon us.

First, plainly they are not evidence of violations of law, nor of conspiracy, nor of combination. The Appeals Board was deciding certain questions in an arbitration proceeding under standards laid down in the decree and they were not deciding any questions of violation of law, and so, for that purpose, they are plainly inadmissible.

Second, Mr. Wright rather indicated in his opening that he thought they might constitute findings of fact for this case; in other words, that your Honors could, in lieu of making findings yourselves as to any of these facts, somehow, take the Appeals Board findings. For that purpose we think they are inadmissible too. They were decisions under the decree, on the basis of which they were made and on the basis of which they were litigated. They are not findings in a Sherman Act case and could not be accepted as such.

Those two broad categories are categories in which we think they would be inadmissible.

We think that they are admissible for the limited purpose of showing how the decree worked, so that your Honors may know how effective, and how very effective, this arbitration system, set up by the decree, has been; and for that purpose we will urge your Honors to consider all the decisions and not any selected decision, but that is a very limited purpose. What I say to your Honors is, that if they (398) be received, they be received for that very limited purpose.

Mr. Raftery: May I ask Mr. Wright a question? Did I understand him correctly? You are only offering the Board of Appeal decision against the five defendants and not against the three?

Mr. Wright: We offer everything we offer against all defendants.

Mr. Raftery: Then I am going to file a formal objection on behalf of United Artists and Universal. We were not parties to the arbitration system. We were not parties to the decree. We never participated in any of these proceedings. We object to their admission against Universal and United Artists.

Mr. Frohlich: On behalf of Columbia Pictures Corporation I make the same motion that Mr. Raftery has just made for the other two independent defendants.

Mr. Davis: The statement by Mr. Wright brings me to my feet because I want to formalize the objection of Loew's, Inc. to the admission of these documents. We object, first, that they are no evidence in this hearing of the facts which are recited by the Appeal Board. Those facts that are material in this case must be proven entirely independently.

We object, in the second place, and here I meet the last statement of Mr. Wright, that they are introduced against all the defendants, we object to the introduction against (399)
Loew's, Inc. of any arbitration proceedings to which it was not a party. It does not, from our point of view, matter at all what the arbiter or court might have done with any one of our co-defendants, and any decision to which we are not a party we object to on that ground.

We object in the third place, because, and I shade a little with my brother on this question, I am not sure that they are even admissible in order that the Court may inform itself of the manner in which the Appeals Board has gone about its duties. If the Court feels it important at any stage of the case to inquire into the activities of the Appeals Board, they are a source of information, but I do not think they are competent as evidence in this case for any purpose. I should like to make that formal on behalf of Loew's, Inc.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I would like——

Judge Hand: I think we will exclude this evidence for all purposes.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I would like to be heard on that because this is an extremely vital matter. We have here records which were made by these defendants themselves in a tribunal that was set up by this Court for the express purpose of exploring the facts of these complaints and finding what the facts were making a record of them and giving appropriate relief. Now, if these decisions are not evidence of the facts concerning what these defendants have done since this consent decree was filed, I cannot conceive of anything that would be.

Certainly there could be no more futility or no more futile procedure devised than for us to bring before this court the same complainants who have offered testimony in these proceedings, which have been heard by these agents of the court, and findings made, in proceedings where the defendants were present and had the opportunity to cross-examine, argue, appeal, or what you will. Certainly the system that was set up here cannot have the slightest justification; and we will move to set it aside as of any time that the Court should hold that the record that it builds is not even available for this Court in determining what ultimate disposition should be made of this lawsuit.

That, I submit, is a ruling that would knock the props right out from under the system set up here. There is no excuse for its functioning at all if it cannot at least make a record which can be used by this Court in determining the ultimate disposition of the suit. There is no possible constitutional authority for it, I would say. There may be serious objections on that ground as it is, but to assume that you can have a system working extrajudicially in this manner, set up by decree, and that the Court under that decree cannot even look at it, is, I submit preposterous.

Mr. Proskauer: May I be heard briefly on this? This is (401) the first time I ever heard the in terrorem argument used for the admission of incompetent evidence.

If Mr. Wright wishes to move with respect to the arbitration system, that is his business. I suggest that it has nothing to do with the question of the admissibility of these decisions.

This decree provides, consent decree, that "nothing in it shall be an admission with respect to the allegations of the petition, nor an admission or adjudication that the doing of any of the acts or things hereinafter enjoined or the failure to do any of the acts or things hereinafter directed to be done would constitute a violation of the statute."

I agree entirely with my brother, Mr. Seymour, that your Honors have a right to look at these documents to determine the working of the decree, but to say that when we go into an arbitration proceeding, as to whether a clearance is reasonable or unreasonable, and the arbitrator awards a clearance of two more or three more days, that that is evidence, competent evidence, of a violation of the Sherman Law, is to defy every rule of evidence.

Judge Hand: What is this provision of the decree?

Mr. Caskey: Page 2 of appendix C.

Mr. Proskauer: In one case the arbitrators refused to receive a decision of the Court on the Sherman Law question because they said they weren't concerned with that, (402) that they weren't deciding whether a thing violated the Sherman Law; they were deciding the thing the decree told them to decide, which is an entirely different thing.

Mr. Wright: There isn't any question about that.

Judge Hand: To what extent have these arbitration decisions done anything except decide about clearance?

Mr. Wright: They have decided questions of fact raised in proceedings involving not only clearance, but, as I have pointed out, demands for run where the claim is that there has been a violation of Section 6.

Judge Hand: What is that?

Mr. Wright: Section 6 is also printed in here at page 8. It is a provision which says that:

> "No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on film run (to be designated by the distributor) upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor which are not calculated to defeat the purpose of this section, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms to such exhibitor for such theatre will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area"——

Judge Hand: That is a long thing. Can't you summarize it? What is the effect of it?
(403)

Mr. Davis: It is the refusal of any and all runs to an applicant.

Mr. Wright: The purpose of the provision is to prevent what had happened in the past, that is, a refusal to serve an exhibitor on any terms, simply to protect his opposition from competition. It is a form of extreme clearance. Unreasonable clearance may be severe where they won't license him films unless he plays six months after the first run. These situations that are covered by 6 are situations where he would simply refuse to sell pictures on any run at all, no matter how late he wanted to play them.

I don't quite understand your Honors' concern about whether or not they are all clearance or covered other complaints. I submit they would be equally admissible even if they were confined to clearance complaints. There is nothing sacrosanct about the facts developed in the course of clearance complaints. They are still facts which are of importance to this Court in determining what it is going to do with this litigation, even if they arose in the course of arbitrating clearance or any other kind of complaint.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest, your Honor, that the fundamental vice in the Government's position here is that it disregards the rule of competency of evidence. They want you to say that because an arbiter may have said in a little case to which I was not a party, or perhaps Mr. Davis's client was not a party, that there was an unreasonable clearance exacted of a man, and he made certain findings in that, that that is binding on us as evidence of a violation of the Sherman Law. No such question was ever submitted.

Mr. Wright: No such claim is made.

Mr. Proskauer: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Wright: I say, such claim is not made.

Mr. Proskauer: Then they aren't evidence of anything.

Judge Hand: Then what is the claim that is made?

Mr. Wright: The claim for them is that they are evidence of the facts adduced; whether or not those facts constitute a violation of the Sherman Act is, of course, a matter for independent determination by this Court. The arbiters were not applying the criteria of the Act, admittedly; they were applying the criteria established in the decree itself, and, in so far as those facts are concerned, even if those facts they found were not conclusive, they are, at least, prima facie evidence which, if these defendants chose to do so, it seems the most that they could say would be that they have an opportunity here to rebut such facts as have been found in those proceedings, but, to say, your Honor, that they aren't even prima facie evidence of the facts found is simply to ignore entirely the relation between this Court and this arbitration system and these arbitrators. It would be just as though this Court were to say that it even could not look at the recommendations of a special matter that it had appointed to hear and determine a case and make recommendations. That is virtually what these defendants are saying here, is that you cannot consider what the Court's own agents have done in determining what these facts were, and I say that it is inconceivable that you could justify the continued existence of this arbitration system at all if you were to exclude its operation from the scrutiny and review of this Court in that manner.

Judge Goddard: Upon what theory would you submit, Mr. Wright, the findings in a case in which a defendant was not a party? How could that bind somebody who was not a party?

Mr. Wright: Obviously, as to those not parties to the proceeding there could be nothing binding in what occurred here except in so far as it might be tied up through a finding of conspiracy as between the defendants, just the situation you have with respect to any other facts that individually concern a defendant, they do not, of course, bind another unless you have a tie-up; but clearly the objection——

Mr. Davis: I just want to allude to the last remark of Mr. Wright's. Unless these are admissible on this trial, not as proof of what the arbitrators did, not as proof of the relief which they afforded, but as proof of what the parties did, as recited by the arbitrator, then he says, unless they are admissible for that purpose, he is going to make the bold step of moving to dispense with the entire arbitration system.

I do not understand that the arbitral system was set up for the purpose of furnishing evidence on some other trial, whether on the part of the Government or anybody else. I understand the arbitral system was set up to give relief between contending parties, and, indeed, it is so informal in character that under Section 6 of the rules providing for the procedure at hearings, it is recited that "The arbitrator shall be the judge of the relevancy and materiality of the evidence offered and conformity to legal rules of evidence shall not be necessary." The arbitrator's preface reads, "The facts seem to me to be so and so."

But never before have I heard it soberly suggested that such a finding in another proceeding, where those facts might or might not be proper subject of inquiry, that such a finding could be introduced as substantive evidence.

Judge Hand: Well now, suppose his finding is against your client and your client has consented to arbitration, what about it then, and the Appeals Board has, we will say, affirmed or modified or done anything with the arbitration?

Mr. Davis: As between myself, my client and the complainant, that finding of the arbitral tribunal, by our mutual consent, is binding upon us, but that in another suit between my client and the Government of the United States, or whomever, the recitals made by the arbiter can take the place of proof of fact, is to me a proposition so astounding that it is difficult, really, to answer it.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest, your Honors, that the very analogy which Mr. Wright uses in his argument points the distinction? He said that this would be just as though your Honors ruled out the report of a special master. On the contrary, if you appoint a special master, it would be in the action in which the trial was being had. He would be hearing the issues on that trial, he would be bound by the rules of evidence, and he would make a report to your Honors. Here we have, not an arbitration between us and the Government of the United States, we have an arbitration between us and an individual complainant. The arbitrators are enjoined not to respect the usual rules of evidence; they are to take into consideration all business considerations, with certain exceptions; they are not concerned in any decree with the question of law violation. I am talking now about those to which I was a party, because I do not think there is any real distinction. If these arbitrators in the course of a proceeding, to which we might send some young man to take care of, an arbitration between us and John Smith out in some little town, as to whether a two-day clearance or a ten-day clearance was reasonable, write some finding of fact as between us and that man, surely the mere fact that this arbitration proceeding flowed from a judgment in United States v. Paramount, does not make the Government a party to that proceeding, or doesn't make that finding evidence on the trial of the main issue in this case. And to point that, I pose this question to your Honors: Suppose we offered those arbitration proceedings in evidence as an estoppel against the Government, as to such findings as were made in our favor? Why, there isnt a man within the sound of my voice who wouldn't say that is preposterous, and I respectfully suggest it is just as preposterous for the Government to urge these arbitrators' reports as a judicial finding against us, as having the sanctity of the judgment of a court so it could be offered in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Let me go back just a minute to how this decree came about and how the system was set up. Here we were, settling this case in November, 1940, on an admittedly impermanent basis. We were setting up this procedure for a trial period with the express understanding that when we got through with that period it might be necessary to go ahead and try the case anyhow.

In making this agreement, we set up a system whereby these complaints could be litigated without exposing these defendants to the liability of contempt proceedings in the first instance. We knew that the provisions of the decree, which we were attempting to enforce here, were going to be given nationwide application.

What it would have meant, if we had not set up that arbitration system, would have been to devise some system of reference to a master or otherwise for the purpose of hearing the numerous complaints that were going to be brought.

We agreed that we would set it up on a basis where those complaints could be heard in an arbitration forum and there would be no contempt except for a violation of an arbitrator's award.

That system was set up, with the express approval of the Court, the American Arbitration Association designated to perform the function of furnishing the panels of arbitrators and conducting the hearings in the first place, and an appeal board was also especially appointed by this Court for the purpose of granting such review as the parties thought necessary. There again, as a means of relieving this Court from a review function of that character, that job was delegated to these agents especially appointed for that purpose.

Judge Hand: They were final. We had no control over it.

Mr. Wright: They were made final, that is correct, without further review here, with this limitation, that the arbitration system, as such, was not made final and it was expressly understood by everybody who agreed to that decree that the matter would be up for review at the end of the three-year period. We don't——
(410)

Mr. Davis: I challenge that.

Mr. Wright: Just a minute. We do not agree with the defendants' contention at all that they are now entitled to continue this arbitration system indefinitely, as a matter of right. It has only been continued since the expiration of the three-year period, according to our position, by the failure of either party to move to set it aside. Any time that either party moves, under the decree, as we read it, the Court would have no discretion but to set it aside.

Judge Hand: Do you think they could introduce the decisions of this Appeal Board and bind the Government?

Mr. Wright: Well, clearly——

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. As to the facts in the case?

Mr. Wright: Clearly, prima facie, yes. Those facts are established in the course of a mechanism to which we were parties in the sense that we consented to have the thing done that way, even though we weren't parties to the individual proceedings. Clearly, that is the whole difference in the point of view in this arbitration system. The defendants seem to regard it as something that was simply set up as a matter of their convenience to operate wholly outside the judicial framework as a means of disposing of some troublesome complaints that they had.

The only justification the thing has is as a law enforcement device. That is all this suit covers. That is the only jurisdiction this Court has. And the only jurisdiction that the whole system itself derived is from this Court's function, as the agency engaged in making effective the Sherman Act.

They just cannot have their cake in that respect and eat it too. They did get a very wide immunity from contempt proceedings for these continuing violations of these practices that were prohibited in the decree, and we were willing to give them that as the price of convenient administration, but certainly we never supposed that we were not going to have available, for the purpose of the tribunal which created the system, such evidence as it develops as to what was occurring during this trial period.

Judge Bright: You are not precluded from the evidence; you are precluded from adjudications upon the evidence, if this objection is sustained. They are adjudications made between other parties, not between you and a party, but between a complaining theatre operator and one of these defendants. Suppose it had been private litigation between the same two defendants, would you be able to introduce (412) the case on appeal in that private litigation in this case as proof of the facts in that case?

Mr. Wright: That, I think, is an entirely different question, I would say. Probably not. But this is not private litigation. This is public litigation. This is part of a system of public law enforcement. The United States may not have been a party to these proceedings in that it did not go in and actively represent these exhibitors, although I think we did intervene in some proceedings, but the whole theory on which the system was set up was that it was a means of law enforcement, and that the exhibitors by litigating these complaints in these forums would achieve the purposes of the Act.

Those proceedings are an integral part of this one right here. You cannot separate them out and look at it as though these were just proceedings comparable to the triple damage suits to which the United States was not a party. We are a party to this suit, party to this system, and we have to be. There is just no way it could be properly set up and function except in the framework of this suit.

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, I do not think we need to rely on it—I agree thoroughly with my distinguished associates, Judge Proskauer and Mr. Davis, that there can be no possible reason for offering this evidence in another action, and I agree with Judge Bright, it is just as if it were (413) offered in another private litigation—but from time to time here we are held responsible for something that was done by some predecessor in corporate office, and I am afraid that my brother Wright finds himself in that same position here, because the Government did agree in this decree to certain things, and one of those things was that the evidence should not be used subsequently. Let me just read to you from the first paragraph in the decree, which has already been mentioned:

> "Neither such consent, nor this decree itself, nor the entry of this decree, nor any statement, provision or requirement contained in this decree"—

Now, clearly, the arbitration provision was one of the requirements in the decree—

> "shall be used as evidence subsequently."

So Mr. Wright, if we did not have a body of evidentiary law to rely on would find himself out of court on this particular issue.

Mr. Wright: I participated in the negotiations of this decree myself and I have never heard such a distortion of plain language. What that refers to clearly is the fact that when we provided in this Section 6 that they should not license, or not refuse to license, a run on some terms, that that provision was not to be construed as an adjudication that they had unlawfully refused it or unlawfully engaged in that practice in the past, and the same thing, of course, applies to all the other prohibitions that were contained in the decree. Those prohibitions which provided arbitration procedure were not in themselves were to be taken as an admission that they had engaged in the practices which were prohibited. There isn't any question at all about that, but it is perfectly clear that nothing in that first paragraph or anywhere else in that decree ever suggested that this Court would not be able to examine what has been done in the course of carrying out this decree, in determining what ultimate disposition of the suit should be made.

Mr. Leisure. We have no objection to that, but when the issues are totally different, and the issue is one of a violation of the antitrust law as between other parties, certainly there can be no reason for urging it to be offered her in a different forum on a different issue. I have never heard of such a suggestion as that before in court.

Mr. Raftery: Judge Goddard asked Mr. Wright the specific question, how can these proceedings be binding on any party to this action who was not a party in the arbitration proceeding, and Mr. Wright answered your Honor, and I think, if I remember correctly, he stated he did not believe they could be binding. I therefore, on behalf of Universal and United Artists, defendants, enlarge my previous objection to cover that ground, and also, the evidence he seeks to offer against us is hearsay, and I ask for a specific ruling as to these two defendants.

Mr. Frohlich: Columbia joins in that motion.

Judge Hand: Whatever be the decision as to these other defendants, I should think it was clear as to the independents, and I am perfectly sure we would all sustain your objection. I am not so perfectly sure about the others.

Mr. Seymour: May I just suggest this, that if your Honors consider the matter further, perhaps overnight, my position, which I hope I made clear at the outset, is the same as Mr. Davis's as to the inadmissibility of this material as evidence either of a violation of law or a substitute for facts in this case. My point was that it might be admissible, as to which he disagreed, for the very limited purpose of showing how the decree had worked. That would not permit any of these decisions to be offered as a substitute for calling the complaining witness in this case. That is what the Government is trying to get by, that is what it is trying to do, is to use one of these decisions instead of individuals and shift to the defendant some burden, whether or not they were in the case, some burden as if that case had been this case. As to that we are all in accord that it is not admissible, but it may be, I think, and Mr. Davis does not, it may be admissible for a severely limited purpose, and when your Honors come to consider that, I wish you would consider whether it could be admitted for a severely limited purpose which would not cast upon us indirectly the burden.

Judge Hand: How many of these decisions are you trying to get in?

Mr. Wright: We relied in our trial brief—I think we quoted from, in our appendix C, a relatively few. Again, the only reason for offering all was, simply that was the complete picture that was made in the course of these proceedings and was material which the Court should have access to. So far as what we would specifically rely on, there would probably be very little of it.

Judge Bright: What do you say, again, they were relevant to prove?

Mr. Wright: I say they are proof, at least prima facie, of the facts which are there found.

Judge Bright: Of the facts testified to by the complainants?

Mr. Wright: Facts of all kinds. Facts, I mean, findings——

Judge Bright: You are chiefly interested in the facts testified to by the complainants?

Mr. Wright: We are interested in those as well as other facts which were produced by the defendants in the form of their testimony, or license agreements or whatever the arbitrator had before him.

In so far as the facts he found may be relevant here, we say that those decisions are prima facie evidence of those facts. Obviously, they aren't any evidence in themselves that the law has been violated. The arbitrator's consideration of certain facts as being relevant in that proceeding is not necessarily binding on your Honors, and, of course, is not binding at all on your Honors' consideration of what place, if any, those same facts have in this proceeding, but my point is that you cannot in any event shut your eyes to the facts there found in so far as those facts may be relevant to the issues that you are here to determine, and that, of course, includes relief as well as liability.

Mr. Davis: May I say just a word to straighten out what looks like a difference of opinion here at counsel table? My friend, Mr. Seymour, suggests that there are certain aspects in which these might be considered by the Court. I agree. What is that aspect? Not an aspect which is presented before the Court at this time at all. Mr. Wright suggests that the consent decree was limited in life to a three-year trial period. Nothing of the sort. It is as alive, as vital a decree today as it was when it was entered. It is binding, until modified, on the parties to this litigation, both the Government and the consenting defendants, not on our friends in the outer fringe. It provides on its face that the Court retains jurisdiction to modify that decree. If my brother Wright were here on a motion to modify that decree, by altering or abolishing arbitral clauses, it might be competent and your Honors might be interested in looking at these decisions, not to determine whether the facts they contained were true or false, but whether the arbitrators and the Board of Appeals were discharging their duties in an impartial and in an effective manner. That is all there is in it, but Mr. Wright is not here in that posture at all. He is here asking for relief.
(419)

He is here asking for relief outside the decree, beyond the decree, without reference to the decree, based upon what he believes to be a substantive violation of the Sherman Law by these defendants; and in enforcing the Sherman Law, of course, he is enforcing or seeking to enforce a highly penal statute. Now, I take it that there is no precedent in the trial of a criminal charge under Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence for attempting to prove that somewhere else the accused has committed another crime. The only exception, if I remember my Hornbook Rules of Evidence, as to that rule is that you may prove the commission of another crime where the crime charged requires some special skill, as forgery; and to prove the capacity of the defendant to commit forgery you may be permitted to introduce other forgeries that he has committed. But certainly it cannot help on this trial in the least to show that at another place, before a non-judicial tribunal, between other parties, a charge was made and certain facts were adduced

Now, I cannot amplify that. I am tempted to say that much just to show that my brother Whitney and I have not entirely ceased to touch elbows with each other.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest one consideration in line with what has been suggested here. We go before an arbitrator—and I had one in which I was a party—and we litigate such question as was litigated in the arbitration I have (420) before me. "There being sufficient competition to sustain clearance, the question remains as to the length of clearance which will not be unreasonable." And that complainant testified in that case, and I cross-examined him on just one thing, and that is what was within the purview of the arbitration subject to the highly restricted provisions and restricting provisions of the decree. Indeed, I had not cross-examined him at all practically on the other phases of these things which would affect an ultimate finding of fact as bearing on the Sherman Law. Doesn't that bring into the highest relief that the endeavor—and I am raising this now on fundamental considerations of the basic laws of evidence—that the contention that a finding of an arbitrator in a proceeding between me and John Smith on a highly restricted question of clearance cannot possibly be used in a litigation between the United States Government and myself, and that you might just as well say that the Government could go out and put in evidence of a finding of a court of record, if you please, in a case between me and a stranger; and when my friend used the phrase that my colleague on my left had distorted this decree in reading it, I find no suggestion of distortion. I too participated in the drafting of this decree, and nobody ever dreamed that this arbitrating tribunal was to do anything more than to settle disputes between contending claimants for clearance and the like. That is what it did, and such findings of fact as it has made were binding in that arbitration proceeding were stipulated not to be binding, as we read this decree, in this case; and on the basic rules of evidence would be wholly incompetent.

Judge Hand: We will consider this question overnight, and you can go on with the next point.

I just want to ask you this, Mr. Wright: These Appeal Board decisions cover 291 to 298, do they not, and 1 to 5, all those volumes?

Mr. Wright: There are five volumes numbered 1 to 5. Then there are two decisions, 291, 292, and we are offering the six awards that are designated there as 293 through 298. Those are not decisions of the Appeal Board. Those are decisions or awards of the arbitrator where no appeal was taken. As we see it, there is no difference in admissibility. The only difference is one of weight. Obviously we would say that the Appeal Board decisions would be given more weight than arbitrators' awards because of the review, but that they are equally admissible.

Mr. Davis: Let me understand. Are these offered to prove that such and such awards were made, or are they offered to prove the facts that the arbitrators recited?

(422)

Mr. Wright: They are offered for both purposes.

Mr. Davis: We object.

Mr. Seymour: One further vice, I should think, in this last group is that they are only a few of 400 arbitration decisions. Now, the Appeal Board decisions are offered in bulk, but here are six selected out of 400, which would give a very distorted view.

Mr. Wright: As far as we are concerned, the defendants can select such as they want to offer, and offer them with the same effect as the ones we selected would have.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, that sounds generous, but we are not making a bargain here; we are objecting to evidence that is incompetent.

Mr. Wright: May I say one thing more about Mr. Davis's last remarks about our operating outside the decree. We cannot try this case without reference to the consent decree and what has gone before. We are not attempting to. In effect any judgment that is rendered here necessarily takes the form of a modification of that decree. There is simply no escape from that fact, and there is no suggestion in anything that we have done or said that we intend to follow any other course.

Mr. Raftery: Mr. Wright, are you offering the arbitration decisions against these defendants (indicating).

Mr. Wright: I repeat for the purposes of the record, the (423) offer is made generally as against all; and, its ultimate weight, of course, whether or not it is given effect against——

Judge Hand: Well, we will exclude them against your defendants.

Mr. Schwartz: That includes mine also?

Judge Hand: Yes, the independent defendants.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think your Honor accepted Mr. Frohlich's characterization of his defendants a little too quickly. We object to the term. Those people are not called independents in the trade, and I think they are major companies. I just wanted to be sure.

Judge Bright: You called them the three minors.

Mr. Wright: I just wanted to be sure that we did not have an independent adjudication.

Mr. Raftery: I thought the record showed we were now called minors.

Mr. Wright: I take it the ruling is also reserved on these, 293 through 298?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Judge Goddard: When you speak about an arbitration award, do those include any facts, or merely findings?

Mr. Wright: They are in the form usually of an opinion with findings. It simply states what the arbitrator found and what he did. That is what the award consists of.

(424)

Judge Hand: Now, we have got through 300.

Mr. Wright: Through 298, I believe.

Judge Hand: Oh yes.

Mr. Wright: Now, 299 is a document that is offered merely because it throws additional light on the Supreme Court decision. Ordinarily you would have the decision in that case below in the district court reported. In this case the district court decision is unreported because there was no opinion filed. All the court did below was to file findings and conclusions.

Judge Hand: Well, did it go up to the Supreme Court?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: Well, you may put that in.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, one moment, if you please. We have no objection to the Court looking at anything on the theory of stare decisis to enlighten itself, but he is offering in evidence—and I do not think your Honors apprehend this—findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Judge Hand: I do not think he is. We shall not consider it for anything except for such bearing as it has on the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Proskauer: Then it is not evidence.

Judge Hand: Not really. But what harm does it do to make it an exhibit?

(425)

Mr. Seymour: The difficulty with it is, my client, Paramount, was a party to that suit, and was dismissed by the Government.

Mr. Proskauer: So were we.

Mr. Seymour: And so was Judge Proskauer's, and so were some of these others. Now, the findings are offered as if they were binding—

Mr. Wright: I submit that it can be stipulated that the Court may take judicial notice of these documents. I do not care about offering it, but it is not reported, and the only way I can bring it to your attention is by offering it.

Mr. Proskauer: We will stipulate the Court may take judicial notice of any document of record which throws light as a matter of law on any reported decision.

Judge Hand: This is not received as competent evidence. It is received as a legal document that may serve to interpret a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Schwartz: May I ask your Honors to ask Mr. Wright if the findings as to Columbia Pictures are included in that?

Mr. Wright: I believe they are.

Mr. Schwartz: You know, we were dismissed.

Mr. Wright: Yes. That appears quite plainly.

(Government's Exhibit 299 for identification received in evidence.)

(426)

Judge Hand: Now, 300.

Mr. Wright: 300 is a document of a different character. This is also unreported material. It is a report of the special master that was rendered in a criminal contempt proceeding brought by the United States against—

Judge Hand: Well, what became of it?

Mr. Seymour: It was never confirmed by the District Court.

Mr. Wright: The suit was settled as a part of the settlement of this litigation in 1940 while the case—

Judge Hand: We won't receive any such thing as that. That is absurd.

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court please—

Judge Hand: Oh no.

Mr. Wright:—I think it is relevant data. If you will let me finish, that decree in which that proceeding occurred is tied to this one in that it was also modified as a part of this same settlement of this suit here and of the contempt proceeding. This decree, the Balaban and Katz decree—

Judge Hand: We are not going to receive any report of a special master that was not confirmed, even if we could receive it had it been confirmed. Objection sustained. Now go on.

Mr. Wright: The other documents are decrees which were entered against one or more of the defendants in other jurisdictions, and there were original decrees, and then there were modifications entered in each case at the time that this decree was entered.

Mr. Davis: What is that evidence of?

Mr. Caskey: Objected to.

Mr. Raftery: If your Honors please, isn't there some provision in the Sherman Act that you cannot admit consent decrees in other proceedings?

Judge Goddard: They are not evidence in treble damage cases.

Mr. Davis: I ask again, what are these decrees evidence of here?

Mr. Wright: I submit, if the Court please, they are evidence of the scope and effect of the consent decree which is of record in this case. At the time that decree was entered these decrees here were modified on the condition that certain provisions there were suspended while the provisions and this decree remained in effect. I think it is necessary to understand the operation of this decree to have those decrees in evidence.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I am sure that you are in error with respect to 301. There may have been a modification of 303 but it is not my understanding that there was any modification of 301, and it is objected to.

Mr. Wright: As I understand it, 301 is the 1930 consent decree against West Coast Theatres. Then 303, I believe, superseded that, and then that was modified, in turn, by 304. I think all three are necessary to show what happened.

Mr. Caskey: Now, if your Honors please, on this matter of modification: In the consent decree that was entered in the Paramount case there were certain provisions for arbitration of runs, and it was provided that that complainant in those arbitrations might not be one who had an interest in more than six theatres. In order to arbitrate you had to have five or less theatres, and this modification that is talked about simply eliminated that requirement as to arbitration for first and second runs in southern California. That is all that is involved in these other proceedings. Now, there are many other clauses in these decrees that have no relevancy to that point whatsoever.

Mr. Seymour: I should suppose that a consent decree by its own terms was inadmissible as evidence of anything. I have not looked at this particular one, but its ordinary recital is that consent is on condition that it should not be used as evidence in any other proceeding. Now to have it offered as evidence of something is completely defeating that provision. The decree in Southern California in 1930 does not prove anything about 1945, I submit.

Mr. Davis: The thing I am puzzled about, your Honor, is why in the world this Court, which already has received a fair quantum of documentary evidence, should be invited to take decrees of courts in causes that are not related to this; and presumptively I think counsel would be compelled to examine these decrees and find out, if they can, what that litigation was under which they were entered, and their scope; and for the life of me I do not see how they throw the slightest light on the interpretation of the consent decree in this case. Counsel seems to think that whenever there has been any litigation in which the names of any of the defendants at this table have been mentioned, ipso facto he is entitled to introduce it in evidence. Not cite it to the Court as authority, if you please, but to make it a part of his evidentiary case. I do not understand that.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that again we have offered in evidence only because we have referred to them, and we assume that they would not otherwise be judicially noticeable, because they are entered in a court in another jurisdiction. Now, if it is understood, again, that these may be referred to by this Court, we have no desire to have them physically incorporated in the record.

Judge Hand: All right, they may be referred to. They are not marked in evidence. That is what? 301 to 305?

Mr. Wright: And the same thing applies all the way through, 306 to 311. Those are pleadings——

Mr. Davis: Now wait a minute.

Mr. Proskauer: That is going a little to fast for us, your Honor. I have never heard of anybody offering in evidence a criminal indictment returnable against Warner Bros. in Missouri on January 11, 1935.

Judge Hand: Neither did I. I think it is absurd. You cannot put such stuff in.

Mr. Proskauer: Particularly in view of the fact that the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

Mr. Wright: That fact was pointed out in our Appendix C in which we made reference to the proceeding. Again, the only reason for including it here is that we had to refer to it, and we did refer to it, and I suppose——

Judge Hand: Why did you have to refer to it?

Mr. Wright: Well, we think it is a legitimate part of the history of the proceedings that have been brought in prior cases which this Court should consider in determining what ought to be done here.

Judge Hand: You mean to say a criminal information that resulted in a verdict for the defendant?

(431)

Mr. Wright: There were a series of three cases. We did not offer that as proof of any violation by them. We simply recite the facts as to what had happened in prior proceedings brought by the United States; and having recited those facts, inasmuch as there was a question about judicial noticeability of the material, we felt bound to include it in this offer. Now, again, I do not care to have it in the record, providing——

Mr. Davis: Where do you recite the facts, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: We referred to that material in Appendix C.

Judge Hand: They are withdrawn then. 306 to what?

Mr. Wright: 311.

Mr. Proskauer: What is the ruling? Did your Honors rule?

Judge Hand: They are withdrawn. Now, what next?

Mr. Wright: I think that the Federal Trade Commission material should also be withdrawn. Those are reported decisions. There is no problem of judicial notice there involved, 318 through 323.

Judge Hand: Withdrawn?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Now, as to 312 through 317, that is material, again, which we referred to in describing the past efforts that had been made by the Government to regulate certain problems in the industry. I do not think it would be judicially noticeable unless brought to the Court's attention in this form.

Mr. Proskauer: Why should the Court's attention be called by way of evidence to a report which Mr. Clarence Darrow made criticizing the Code of the NRA No. 124? What proof is that against us that after the NRA established a code for this industry Mr. Clarence Darrow did not think it was right?

Mr. Davis: What proof is the NRA itself?

Mr. Wright: Both the Board and the NRA did have an official status. I think it is a matter of interest as to what those officials did at that time in connection with the industry problems.

Judge Hand: What about 312?

Mr. Wright: 312 is the NRA Code.

Judge Hand: What about 313?

Mr. Wright: I do not think those amendments are of any significance. We can withdraw 313.

Mr. Davis: I should like to ask for what purpose counsel is offering the NRA Code 312?

Mr. Wright: Again, we have referred to the Code in our appendix describing the history of prior efforts made by the (433)
Government to regulate competitive abuses in the industry. Having referred to it, we felt bound to offer it in this form.

Mr. Proskauer: Counsel's argument is that he referred to something and therefore he has a right to put it in evidence.

Judge Hand: He admits that it is not admissible, as I understand it. He merely wants to refer to it as contemporary economics or legal theory, or whatever you choose to call it, as a basis for making an argument; isn't that it?

Mr. Wright: Quite right, merely material which the Court should take notice of.

Judge Hand: You can do that with anything.

Does that apply to all of these?

Mr. Wright: That applies right straight through 312, 314, 315, 316 and 317. We merely referred to those documents and felt bound to bring them to the Court's attention in this way.

Judge Hand: If you want to furnish some of those things, I should think they would be very limited indeed. To give us some information for a brief, I should think they would be all right.

Mr. Wright: That was the only purpose. We had included references to them in our trial brief, in Appendix C, and it seemed to us that having done that we were bound to bring them officially to the Court's attention. Now, again, we do not care whether they are incorporated physically as evidence, as long as they are noticeable.
(434)

Judge Hand: I would really rather personally have you make these arguments yourself, where you can make some statement about their background than to have this enormous list of what they said in the Oregon Law Review about it. This kind of business that a good many judges put into their opinions I do not think should be there.

Now, it is past the time for adjournment, and we will pass on this question of the arbitration and the Appeal Board tomorrow morning.

What more have you?

Mr. Wright: Now, as to the FBI reports, I should like to say what has been done and what we are trying to do. As I say, we had the FBI agents make an inspection of these 400-odd towns, I believe, and observe the theatres that were operating there; and then they prepared a report on each town which gives the name of the theatres, the name of the operators, the general age and condition of the theatre, its policy, whether first-run or otherwise; its admission prices, and the number of changes per week.

Now, we are not interested in offering all of that detailed data. After we had done that we submitted it for checking by the defendants as to each town. Our primarily purpose in having the report made was to get a definite check on the situations where the defendants owned or operated all the theatres, and those situations where they had all of the first-run theatres, and those so-called closed situations where they also were maintaining closed theatres. For our purposes we are perfectly willing to offer a summary of those facts and it will make unnecessary to have the detailed reports introduced. We simply had the agents record at the time they made the report this other information.

Judge Hand: Have they seen all this?

Mr. Wright: Yes. The particular defendant who operates in each town has seen the report which was made on his town. The others have not been exchanged.

Mr. Caskey: Let me say that the information falls into two classes: As to our theatres, the information furnished by the FBI is inaccurate in many substantial respects. We went to the expense of having prepared ourselves similar information which we have tendered to the Government. If they want to put that in, of course, there will be no objection. If they do not want to put it in we shall object to the FBI reports, as to the information. As to the theatres not operated by us, we have indicated to the Government our objection. Substantially speaking, it is wholly inaccurate, and we have so indicated to the representatives of the Government.

(435a)

Judge Hand: We will have to meet that tomorrow. You had better confer and see what you can agree on to shorten this.

(Adjourned to October 11, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

New York, October 11, 1945,
10.30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

Judge Hand: You go on with your offers.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, in connection with the offer of these Appeal Board decisions that were made yesterday, I think——

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, we cannot hear you.

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon.

In connection with that offer I want to say that I think that I was largely at fault in the manner in which that was presented to you, by offering all these decisions en masse, when actually we only intend to rely for our purposes on a limited number.

The reason I did that was that I had assumed from what had occured on the hearing on the preliminary motion last March that there was no question at all between the defendants and ourselves as to the admissibility of the decisions for some purpose. I assumed that the difference between us was purely a question of the weight and significance to be accorded them. But in view of the position that was taken yesterday that they are not admissible for any purpose, in order to present the issue clearly and sharply, I shall limit our offer to the following numbers, which are those digested in our appendix C.

Judge Hand: Wait a minute.

Mr. Wright: If you will turn to the first page of the list here I will identify those.

Judge Bright: What pages do they start on?

Mr. Wright: If you will turn to page 1 of our list of exhibits I will identify the particular numbers that are contained in each exhibit to which our offer is now limited.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, for the defense, we do not see the limitation of the offer to certain decisions changes the rule of law.

Judge Hand: Of course, that is perfectly true, but we will take care of that in one way or another when the time comes.

Mr. Davis: I also want to say that there has not been the slightest change on my part as to my objection, because in the tender of these before Judge Goddard the same objection was made, pressed, for the same purpose, and was not passed upon. They were simply offered before Judge Goddard for identification.

Judge Hand: Yes. He said it was not passed on.

Mr. Wright: No question.

Judge Hand: Now go on.

(438)

Mr. Wright: The exhibit No. 1 for identification which contains the decisions 1 to 23, our offer is now limited to Nos. 10, 12 and 18 contained in that volume marked for identification as Exhibit 1.

Judge Bright: Are they digested in your Appendix C?

Mr. Wright: They are digested in our Appendix C.

Judge Hand: 10, 12——

Mr. Wright: And 18.

If you want to see how this ties into Appendix C, your Honors will note that on page 61 of the Appendix C we have there listed a table of the Appeal Board decisions there and awards that were digested; and then on page 62 there is a subject matter index, and the digests follow.

Now, as to Exhibit No. 2 for identification, Volume II, our offer is now limited to the decisions numbered 24, 27, 35 and 40 contained in that volume.

And as to Exhibit No. 3 for identification, our offer is limited to decisions Nos. 52, 58, 61, 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72 contained in that volume.

Mr. Davis: Will you give it to us again, Mr. Wright? I did not quite follow.

Mr. Wright: 52, 58, 61, 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71 and 72.

As to Exhibit No. 4 for identification, our offer is limited to the decisions in that volume numbered 85 and 87.

(439)

As to Exhibit No. 5 for identification, our offer is limited to decision No. 104.

Then, of course, we have also offered the two additional decisions specifically numbered which appear in the list for identification at page 108 as Exhibits 291 and 292 for identification, and the awards which are identified as 293 through 298 inclusive.

Judge Hand: Let us see. What are you reading from now?

Mr. Wright: I am reading from our list of exhibits, page 108.

Mr. Seymour: It seems to me, if your Honors please, that this selective process destroys the only possible basis for relevancy which I suggested yesterday, that is, if you look at the whole body of decisions. Now it is apparent that the selective process is designed, not to show the working of the system, but to show facts in particular cases, and thus points up the objections which have been raised.

Judge Hand: You may show the working of the system by introducing more, if you want to.

What is this at 108 that you said you——

Mr. Wright: I say there are two additional decisions identified there as 291 and 292, which we are also offering.

Judge Hand: In other words, those are subsequent to these volumes?

(440)

Mr. Wright: Quite right. They are numbered in chronological order.

Then we are also offering the awards which are identified there as 293 to 298, all of which are also digested in our Appendix C.

Judge Hand: Well, we have had extreme doubt about this thing, these offers, but the rules of evidence are getting to be very much liberalized, and it is possible at least that under the peculiar circumstances of this case, where this tribunal set up by the court under a stipulation of these parties, that these awards and decisions, where the defendants had a chance to examine, or offer proof, or cross examine the complainants in those cases, may be thought to somewhat resemble the case of an auditor's report. Of course they are not like an auditor's report, the analogy is rather remote, and yet they slightly resemble it. And the parties here have consented to this mode of settling certain disputes, and the decisions may have some prima facie weight, not as to the violation of the Sherman Act, for the decisions did not purport to determine that, but as to the facts found in these cases. We shall admit this evidence and, of course, it is subject, like anything else, to motions later made to strike out.

Mr. Davis: May I ask whether your Honor's ruling goes so far as to admit against any defendant any one of these (441) arbitrations to which that particular defendant was not a party?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Schwartz: If your Honors please——

Judge Hand: These other people would never sign up; they never agreed to this arbitration at all. We have excluded it against them. We are admitting it against the others. Of course there will have to be a proof of conspiracy to have anything decided against A any good against B. We realize that. It is subject to motions to strike out that may hereafter be made, if counsel are so advised.

Mr. Proskauer: Will you permit me to ask whether your ruling goes so far as to admit these as evidence of facts stated to be found in these arbitrators' opinions or decisions?

Judge Hand: Prima facie, yes.

Mr. Raftery: Merely to straighten the record, your Honor, when you said "these other people," you mean the non-consenting defendants?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, before offering any more evidence at all, I would like to take a few minutes to go into the Government's legal theory of the case which I neglected completely in my opening. I devoted myself solely to the factual presentation. The defendants, however, did not neglect their legal theories, and the result has been that, I think, the speed and the manner in which the documents have gone in, have deprived us to some extent of the opportunity that would normally occur to explain the significance of that data in some detail as it went in.

I should like at this time to refer to a couple of Supreme Court decisions and what we say they hold, and what our view is as to the law that is applicable to the activities of these defendants in this case, because I think that is essential to an understanding of how this evidence fits in.

I am very much afraid that I have given the Court the impression that we were just dumping material in here without reference to the specific issues, and I would like to correct that ~~mistake insofar~~ as I can in a few minutes of statement.

The fundamental law that we say is applicable to the activities of these defendants is found in, really, two decisions of the United States Supreme Court, both of which are cited in our brief. The first was the case of Interstate Circuit v. United States, which is reported at 306 U. S., and the other is United States v. Crescent Amusement Company, decided at the last term of court, reported in 323 U. S.

The situation examined in the Interstate Circuit case was this: that was a suit brought by the United States under the (443)
Sherman Act against the same defendants, the distributor defendants that are here before you, and the Interstate Circuit, Inc., a distributor circuit in Texas, affiliated with the defendant Paramount.

The charge that was made in that suit was that all these defendants had conspired with each other as distributors and with Interstate as an exhibitor, to grant to Interstate Circuit, in the agreements they made with it, certain discriminatory privileges which deprived Interstate's smaller independent theatre opposition of an opportunity to compete with Interstate in showing their films.

The specific restrictions that were attacked were minimum admission price restrictions and prohibitions against double features; that is, at the beginning, or, at least, the 1935-1936 or 1936-1937 season, the circuit informed each of these distributors that they could not or would not license their films for first-run exhibition at a 40-cent admission price in the first-run houses which Interstate operated in the principal cities of Texas unless the distributors agreed that those same films would not be shown subsequent run in houses which were in opposition to Interstate Theatres, at a price of less than 25 cents, 25 cents admission, evening, adults; and that they would also agree that these features which Interstate exhibited in its first-run houses at 40 cents would not be exhibited subsequently as part of a double (444) feature program.

Those two restrictions were put into effect in this territory in which Interstate operated theatres, Interstate and its affiliates, one of which was called Texas Consolidated Theatres, where it was a dominant exhibitor, that is, it had all the first-run theatres in most of the large cities of Texas, and it had a number of second-run theatres in those towns, and it had a large number of first-runs in other smaller towns in Texas and New Mexico. The restrictions in question were put into effect in certain of these cities and not in others by all of these defendant distributors. As to another group of cities, they were put into effect only by the distributor Paramount.

That case, in the trial court, was decided in this manner: the trial court found that there was a conspiracy among all these distributors to put into effect these restrictions in the towns where they all did put them into effect; and that the competitive effect of the restrictions was to lift up the admission prices of some of these independent competitors who had ben charging 15 cents and 20 cents, to the 25-cent price that the Interstate's own second and subsequent-run theatres had been charging, so that the price differential that had theretofore existed was taken away from the independents.

The trial court, as I say, found that there was a conspiracy among the distributors and Interstate which violated the Act, but it found in addition that in the situations where there was no conspiracy among distributors but in which Paramount alone imposed these restrictions, that the agreements by which those restrictions were imposed were also invalid in and of themselves, and enjoined their enforcement.

That case was appealed to the Supreme Court by the defendant Interstate Circuit and the distributor defendants, and the questions raised there were these: first, they contended that there was no evidence of conspiracy to justify the lower court's findings because it was based upon uniform conduct rather than express agreement among them.

Next they raised the question that clearly as to the agreements which Paramount alone made, the District Court's judgment was erroneous because there was no conspiracy between Paramount and another distributor to impose them; and absent such a conspiracy, there could not be any violation of the Sherman Act, because under the Copyright Law a distributor acting singly could impose any kind of restrictions he pleased on the exhibition of his product in competing theatres.

Now there also was a third point that in any event the (446)
restrictions imposed were not unreasonable, because, in fact, they simply reflected the business judgment of the distributors to the effect that the most profitable way to exploit the territory as a whole was to impose these restrictions, and that the results shown in the form of added revenue justified that judgment, in that the imposition of the restrictions did result in all of the distributors getting more overall film rental out of the territory, and that therefore there could be nothing unreasonable about imposing restrictions of that character in any event, no matter how it was done.

Now, when it came to the Supreme Court, those points were all urged and all decided adversely to the contentions of the appellants. The court held that there was sufficient evidence of a conspiracy among all the distributors to impose the restrictions, where they did all impose them, and sustained the injunction as to them.

It also sustained the trial court's action as to the agreements which Paramount alone made in the other Texas and New Mexico towns; and in that connection it discussed, of course, the rights that the Copyright Law gives to a distributor as such, and they said that under the Copyright Law the distributor has no unqualified right to impose any restrictions that he pleases in the distribution of his product; that the privileges granted by the Copyright Law are subject to the restrictions of the Sherman Act, and that where even one distributor makes an agreement with one exhibitor which has the effect of unreasonably restricting the terms on which that exhibitor's competitors can show or exhibit that distributor's films, is a violation of the Sherman Act.

Now as to the third point about the reasonableness of the restriction, the Court simply pointed out that there was a public interest at stake under the Sherman Act in the form of a competitive pricing of pictures in competitive theatres which did not give way before such financial advantages that might adhere to the distributors in adopting a non-competitive method of pricing pictures—that is, bringing these independents up to the admission price level of Interstate Circuit.

That case, I think, was a landmark for this reason, that prior to that time the last Supreme Court case involving these same distributors were those which were contained in cases which came up in 1930. They are both reported in 282 U. S., I believe. They were cases in which the United States attacked certain uniform practices that all of them were then engaged in. In one case the provisions that were uniformly incorporated in the license contracts that these defendants made generally with exhibitors which compelled them to assume contracts of other exhibitors when they acquired theatres, were brought into question. In the other case, the so-called uniform compulsory arbitration clause was brought into question. And the proof consisted in each case of showing that these eight were the dominant distributors in the field, and in that case I believe they all expressly agreed to use these uniform provisions and did use them, and the arbitration in those cases I think was carried out by so-called local film boards of trade, evidence as to which was also introduced in those cases.

And the decision in the District Court was a split one. Judge Thacher, I think, sitting, held that in the one case the provisions were reasonable, and dismissed the bill, and in the other sustained the position of the United States. In any event they were both appealed, both coming up together, and in both the Government prevailed; that is, the decision dismissing the bill was reversed, very short opinions being written by Mr. Justice McReynolds, which simply pointed out that uniform action of that character, regardless of the reasonableness of the provisions refute alone, was a violation of the Act.

Now, as I say, prior to the Interstate case, that case had been regarded as establishing the doctrine of uniform action by express agreement to impose restrictions which, even though they might be reasonable in themselves, would amount to a violation of the Act; and after that case, after the Interstate Circuit case, of course, the defendants, as we shall show, did continue to use similar forms of agreement and uniform action to a large extent, but not by express agreement with each other, and these particular provisions were abandoned. I believe you will note that those for the 1936
(449)

1937 season which are printed in Appendix B, contain an optional arbitration clause, for example.
(450)

Judge Bright: What was the case in 282?

Mr. Wright: There are two cases. One is entitled Paramount-Famous Players Lasky Corporation, et al. against the United States, 282 U. S. 30. The other is—I thought they were both listed——

Judge Bright: Are they both in the same volume?

Mr. Wright: No, they have different captions. Oh yes, the other is United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., et al. 282 U. S., 44. They are both listed in our table of cases at No. 4.

Judge Bright: None of those cases involved this question of divorcement of exhibition?

Mr. Wright: No. The only question that was raised there was uniform practice of incorporating these compulsory provisions in licenses with exhibitors generally.

And I might add that the Interstate Circuit case did not involve the divorcement issue as such. Although it appeared in the record that Interstate Circuit was an affiliate of Paramount no point was made of that in the presentation of the case or the decision of the Court.

Now, that case, as I say, was finally decided in 1939. There were two appeals that were sent back for findings the first time. The final decision is the one we have referred to here. That was after this suit had been filed and before this consent decree was entered. And that case led directly to the filing of the Crescent Amusement Company case, which is the other decision that I want to refer to.

In 1939 after the Interstate Circuit case was decided, the Department then proceeded to file three actions against the same distributor defendants and so called independent circuits located in various parts of the country, of which the so-called Crescent Circuit was one, which operated in towns in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama. And the charges as originally made in those three cases, as I say, involved not only the circuits but these defendants, and they each alleged a general conspiracy among the distributors to conspire with each other to grant various discriminatory privileges to the Circuits in question, which suppressed the ability of their independent competitors to operate in competition with them.

Judge Goddard: What is the title of that?

Mr. Wright: United States v. Crescent Amusement Company.

That was the third of those so-called independent circuit cases to be filed, but the first to be tried.

It was tried in 1941 after the consent decree was entered here; and as I believe as someone else has pointed out, pursuant to the consent decree we dismissed from the suit the distributors who had consented to the entry of the 1940 decree in this suit, and the suit went to trial against the

Circuit and the other three distributors, the non-theatre-owning distributors, Columbia, United Artists and Universal.

But I also want to point out that at the same time this dismissal was made of these other distributors, the complaints were amended so that the charge of conspiracy among di tributors was completely eliminated, and the suit went to trial on the claim that there had been a conspiracy among the exhibitor defendants to monopolize exhibition in this area, and a series of separate conspiracies among the exhibitor defendants and each of the remaining distributor defendants to unreasonably restrain——

Judge Hand: This is the Crescent case you are talking about?

Mr. Wright: This is the Crescent case I am referring to.

(Continuing) —unreasonably restrain the competition of the independents.

Now, in this case, in the Crescent case, we broadened the prayer for the kind of relief which we had sought in the Independent Circuit case. Instead of merely attacking one form of discrimination which we alleged and proved to have resulted from the use of so-called circuit buying power, we attacked the exercise of the power as such for the purpose of injuring independent competitors.

Judge Bright: What do you mean attacked the power as such?

Mr. Wright: I think the term "circuit buying power" probably needs a word of explanation. That is a shorthand expression for describing the power in licensing films which resides in any aggregation of theatres which includes within it a number of so-called closed situations. For example, Interstate Circuit's monopoly power, as clearly pointed out in the Supreme Court opinion, rested on its possession of first-run monopolies—principally in the possession of first-run monopolies in several large cities in Texas, and, of course, these other extensive theatre operations.

The fundamental theory on which we attacked the exercise of that power in the Crescent case was exactly this, that in dealing with a circuit of theatres, a combination of exhibitors, if you please, which possesses monopoly power, a distributor does not have the right to do exactly as he pleases; that in making agreements with such a circuit he must, under the law, give due regard to the competitive effect that those agreements will have; that is, the effect that agreements he makes with the circuit will have upon the abiilty or inability of the independent theatres operating in opposition to the circuit to show his films in competition with the circuit theatres.

Now, the form of the use of that power in the Crescent case covered a much wider variety than the Interstate Circuit case. There the types of discrimination were not limited to such clearance restrictions as were involved in the Interstate Circuit case, but they also invited refusals to deal at all with competitors of the circuit for the purpose of protecting the circuit from independent competition.

They also embraced situations of this kind, where the independent was enjoying a run of the distributor's product and the run was arbitrarily taken away and placed in a circuit theatre without giving the independent any opportunity to even negotiate with the distributor for a continuation of the run in his theatre.

Now, these precise forms of the discrimination I think are well summarized in the findings and conclusions of the Court below, which are quite elaborate, and which I offered here the other day; but it is sufficient to point out that that suit did cover the whole ambit of discriminations of that character in its proof, and it also, by way of relief, not only sought to enjoin the mere continuance of such practices—the relief gotten in the Interstate Circuit case—but sought at least partial dissolution of these circuits themselves; and the relief granted by the lower court included partial dissolution of the circuit in addition to enjoining the circuit, or the members of the circuit, from continuing to make the discriminatory licenses with the distributors which they had done in the past.

Now, the form that dissolution took in that case was to order the principal defendant, Crescent Amusement Company, to divest itself of stock interest which it held in other corporations engaged in exhibition also which had been associated with it in buying these films, and which formed the buying combination which was able to induce the distributors to deal or not deal with the independents in opposition; except on terms which would not permit them to compete.

Now, that case also contained considerably broader relief in injunctive form than merely restraining specific practices. It went so far as to enjoin the exhibitors individually from conditioning in their film licenses with these distributors the licensing of films in so-called closed towns upon the execution of licenses in so-called competitive situations. That, of course, is the principal vice of these aggregations of buying power combined into these circuits. The distributor in order to get into the closed towns will generally find that he has to discriminate against the independents in the situation where there is opposition, and the independent of course, is whipsawed between the distributor's to get the revenue out of the closed towns and his circuit competitor's desire to see that he is reduced to an inferior position. So that he is in a position where his competitive position is resolved entirely without reference to his legal situation at all, what (455-A) kind of an operation he has in the town vis-a-vis the circuit theatre in the town, but is ultimately determined simply in terms of what the distributor gets out of his circuit as a whole, which, of course, is always many times what would be available from any small operator in a particular town. (456)

Now, that case, as I believe Mr. Frohlich pointed out, resulted in a dismissal as to two of the distributor defendants. The third, United Artists, was found by the District Court to have unlawfully combined with one or two of these exhibitor defendants in specific situations and was, accordingly, enjoined.

When the case went up on appeal, neither United Artists nor the Government appealed from that part of the decision. I might add there was one other phase of the decree which was considered by the Supreme Court and which I would like to call to your attention. In addition to this partial dissolution, the Government had asked the District Court to enter an order which would prevent these exhibitors from any further acquisitions at all unless they first made an affirmative showing to the Court that the effect of such acquisitions would not be to restrain competition unreasonably. The District Court declined to give that relief but merely——

Judge Hand: The Crescent case?

Mr. Wright: This is still the Crescent case, your Honor.

The District Court in that case, instead of that provision, merely enjoined the exhibitor defendants from acquiring any theatres by coercive means.

That case was appealed by both the exhibitor defendants and the United States. Their appeal challenged the whole case with particular emphasis on challenging the propriety of the divestiture relief. Our appeal was, of course, limited to the refusal to grant the relief against further acquisitions in the form that we had sought. Both of those appeals were decided in the Supreme Court in favor of the Government. The divestiture provisions and all the other injunctive provisions of the decree below, which were before the Court, were upheld and the Court also held that the Government was entitled to the kind of provision that it had sought with respect to further theatre acquisitions and ordered that the decree below be modified accordingly to provide that these should be no further acquisitions by these defendants except and in so far as they might first affirmatively demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Court that the effect of such an acquisition would not unreasonably restrain competition.

The principal significance of that case, as we see it here, is that it for one, showed that the Supreme Court appreciated the fact that you cannot effectively deal with combinations of this kind merely by provisions which tell them not to do in the future what they have done in the past. The other significance of the decision, as we see it, is that it again reiterated and gave point to the proposition that one distributor may be a party to a combination in restraint of trade even though no other distributor is a party to such a combination; that in this case, of course, in many instances the particular discrimination has not been uniformly indulged in by all but was confined to two or three or even one.

And that decision merely carried along the doctrine first announced in the Interstate Circuit case in that connection.

Those cases, I think, are especially significant in dealing here with this question of the liability of these so-called three minors or independents, or little three, or whatever you choose to call them. They do not, as we see it, have any unqualified right to sell this market that we have been attempting to describe here in statistical terms, as they find it; that in selling that market, in making restrictions with those who dominate that market as a result of possessing a theatre monopoly position in certain towns, they are, like anyone else, bound to consider the effect of the agreements they make up the other competitors who are in opposition to those with whom they make these agreements containing terms which expressly restrict the opportunities of these other competitors in showing their films.

To get down to a specific case, here is one of the agreements that was not offered yesterday because I believe it (459) could not be found. It is No. 196 for identification. I will offer it and I would like to call attention to certain provisions.

Mr. Schwartz: Have you a copy of that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I think that is the copy you gave us. I don't think we have another one. We will have it photostated.

Mr. Proskauer: Are you offering something?

Mr. Wright: I am offering 196 for identification.

Mr. Raftery: May it please the Court, in fairness to all our positions here, I don't want to interrupt Mr. Wright in the middle of his testimony, but I think, and I submit, that he should finish his argument before he goes back to offering evidence again.

Judge Hand: I think he should too. I hesitated a great deal, really, to let you start in and talk after you had made this long opening. We cannot go on and talk, talk, talk. We get no picture ourselves.

Mr. Wright: I was merely attempting to illustrate the argument with a concrete piece of evidence.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: If the Court doesn't wish to have that done, I don't do it.

Judge Hand: You had better get through your talk and get through with it quickly and go on with your evidence.

(460)

Mr. Proskauer: Does your Honor care to have any comment from the other side on the argument?

Judge Hand: No, I don't think so.

Mr. Proskauer: We will wait to shoot until we see the whites of their eyes.

Mr. Raftery: And our silence will not be construed as agreeing with them?

Judge Hand: I know; we will avoid estoppels.

Mr. Wright: I have no desire to discuss that document if your Honor doesn't wish to hear it. I was challenged the other day to point to certain provisions which we thought were illegal.

Judge Hand: Are you through with your argument?

Mr. Wright: Why, I have nothing more that I want to press upon the Court at this time.

Judge Hand: That is all right. Then go on putting in your evidence. We will receive this 196.

(Government's Exhibit 196 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Frohlich: May I see it, if your Honor please?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: Then we have also located a copy of 198, which I will offer.

Judge Hand: How about 197?

Mr. Wright: 197 I don't think has yet been located.

(461)

Mr. Raftery: May we see 198?

Judge Bright: Is 196 in your Appendix B?

Judge Goddard: Yes, page 102—Government's Exhibits for Identification.

Judge Bright: But, I mean, is it in your appendix? Is that 196 printed out in full in your appendix?

Mr. Wright: I don't think so. All the agreements that we are offering—none of the executed agreements are printed in full in Appendix B. Appendix B is confined to printed forms of agreement. In Appendix A we abstracted some of the licensing agreements made between the defendants which are listed there, I believe, at pages 37 through 51.

Judge Bright: In what appendix?.

Mr. Wright: Of Appendix A. That is, there is a digest, a summary.

Judge Bright: What pages were they?

Mr. Wright: It begins at page 37, the caption there; the first agreement digested appears on 38 and continues through page 50.

Judge Bright: Your Appendix B, which purports to set out license forms of two different periods, 1936-1937 and 1943-1944——

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Judge Bright: This one apparently is the 1936-1937 season, 196. Is it in this book?

Mr. Wright: Exhibit 196 is an executed agreement for that season for the parties named here. The printed form of license applicable to that agreement is in Appendix B but the agreement itself, of course, contains special provisions which are not incorporated in the printed form, that is, it has typewritten additions. Those are what I was going to call the Court's attention to.

Judge Bright: Appendix B contains just samples, not executed agreements?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Mr. Raftery: May it please the Court, may I ask Mr. Wright if Exhibit 198 was part of the record in the Interstate case?

Mr. Wright: I assume that it probably was, yes, that agreement was part of it.

Mr. Raftery: The agreement was? Well, under those conditions, the defendant Universal wishes to object to the introduction here. This is a matter that has already been litigated and is not part of this litigation. There has been a decision on this contract. Whatever the result is has been judicially determined and is no part of this action.

Judge Hand: What about that?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, in so far as the facts contained in this agreement appear in the Supreme Court (463) opinion, there would be no occasion for offering it, but I don't believe that the Supreme Court or the District Court decision undertakes to describe or summarize the agreements involved in sufficiently elaborate terms to give your Honors a comprehensive picture of what this agreement provides. We offer it not only to bring down—of course, the provisions with respect to admission prices are those discussed in the Interstate Circuit case, but we also offer it for the purpose of showing the method that was used of determining film rental, which I believe is not, for example, discussed in that case at all.

Judge Hand: We will admit it.

Mr. Davis: May I ask your Honors? Mr. Wright said something which I did not catch, referring to pages 37 to 59, is it?

Judge Hand: Of what?

Mr. Davis: Of Appendix A. In what connection were those pages referred to?

Mr. Wright: I think I answered a question of Judge Bright's as to whether in that appendix we had abstracted all of the agreements which we were offering and I replied that we had abstracted only samples.

Mr. Davis: There wasn't any intention to offer those abstracts in lieu of the agreements themselves, I take it?

(464)

Mr. Wright: No.

Mr. Schwartz: May it please the Court, on this Exhibit 196, which Mr. Wright offered on behalf of Columbia Pictures, in which he indicated that that apparently came from our files, I am advised it does not bear our markings. I would like the opportunity, after we compared it with whatever records we have, should it develop not to be an office copy or require some change, to be permitted to do so.

Mr. Wright: Surely.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes.

(Government's Exhibit 198 received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We also offer the Universal license form for the 1936-1937 season, which is Exhibit 289 for identification, which was not located yesterday.

(Governments Exhibit 289 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Bright: You will have one exhibit on page 102, No. 197.

Mr. Wright: That is still missing. Neither Columbia, Paramount nor ourselves have yet been able to locate it.

If the Court please, with reference to these tabulations that are described on page 114 of our list of exhibits and numbered 337——

Mr. Proskauer: Please let us hear you, won't you? Because I want to hear what you say about those.

(465)

Mr. Wright: I am sorry.

I want to call your Honors' attention to the tabulations which have been marked for identification as 337, 338, 339 and 340, and tell your Honors what those are.

Judge Hand: Are you offering these now?

Mr. Wright: Yes, but with an explanation that I would like to make.

Judge Hand: All right. What about these prior ones?

Mr. Proskauer: Are you making an offer? We cannot know what you are doing, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I am.

As to the prior exhibits, there is another problem which I will get to in a moment. I would like to first discuss the situation as to these four.

Mr. Seymour: May I see that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes, you may.

Judge Hand: What is this, 337, 338, 339 and 340?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, your Honor. What those are are mere mathematical tabulations of data which was furnished by the defendant Paramount in answer to interrogatories filed in 1939.

We submitted those tabulations in the form that they are here to the defendant Paramount and we submitted similar tabulations to each of the defendants with respect to their data in the hope that an agreement would be reached as to the approximate correctness of the mathematics in question.

I have some doubt as to whether it is necessary to actually incorporate data of this kind in the record as an exhibit. I suppose we would be perfectly free to put in brief form, or any other, whatever tabulations we made of data in evidence.

Judge Hand: Don't talk about your doubts. If you want to offer it, offer it.

Mr. Wright: I am.

Judge Bright: Is there an objection?

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, as I understand it, after we had checked the figures in a preliminary way, spot-checked them, we advised the Government that a spot-check indicated substantial accuracy, there was a conference of counsel, counsel for one of the defendants and Government counsel, and at that time his attention was called to various errors and inaccuracies in the chart applicable to everyone; in other words, not an error merely applicable to one company, although there were perhaps errors of that kind. In view of the fact that further study of this tabulation indicates that the matters to which the Government's attention was directed at that conference, which occurred in July, I think of this year, I must object to this chart because while many of the figures are accurate, the Government has undertaken to include certain theatres as affiliated which are not affiliated, and has undertaken to treat certain runs as preferred, which is just an artificial segregation, apparently, and so I cannot concede that it is accurate in all respects and therefore I object to it.

Judge Hand: These are your own office figures aren't they?

Mr. Seymour: They are made up by the Government from our answers to interrogatories, and it is the tabulation which we object to. Our answers are in.

Judge Hand: You mean that it is the characterizations——

Mr. Seymour: That is right.

Judge Hand: —in the tabulation that you object to rather than to the figures themselves?

Mr. Seymour: Well, it is the—— Judge Hand: Of course we have nothing to do but to admit the figures. If you cannot agree on them and you want to call attention to a mistake, and it is important at all, afterwards, why, that is part of your case.

Mr. Seymour: It is not just a matter of the figures being right and the characterizations being wrong. If it were, I would just point out the characterizations, but the Government has taken figures which we have furnished and then thrown them into categories which we challenge and that obscure the true statistical picture.

(468)

Mr. Proskauer: Would your Honors let me call your attention specifically to this——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: —so you will see we are not trying to keep this extra illustrated edition from being submitted here on any technical ground.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Assistant Attorney General, chief of the New York office, Lawrence Apsey, under date of July 24, enclosing a copy of a memorandum of a conference that we had on this subject.

The charts applicable to us, we advised the Government in that conference, were open to the following objections, and this is the Government's summary of the conference: 1, they use the words "all preferred runs." We challenged that and asked them, in order to make it perfectly clear what they meant, to head it, "First, second and third runs," and then we would agree on that score. In one footnote on one of our exhibits they have done that; in headings they have preserved the other category which, for reasons that will appear here, is entirely misleading.

The second thing that the Government summary of that conference called attention to was that we called attention to the figures as broken up between affiliated and unaffiliated. We inquired as to which theatres the Government auditor considered in each of these categories. The Government replied it had its own list and it was not available at the conference. The Government auditor indicated, for example, that in New York City certain named circuits might be included among the affiliated group. We pointed out that unless there was an agreement as to which theatres were affiliated or unaffiliated, there could not be any agreement as to the accuracy of a chart purporting to divide receipts between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres.

The next thing that happened was the Government auditor actually stated to us that in computing revenue from first-runs in New York City that they had included revenue derived from Brooklyn on such pictures as had been exhibited in New York City and Brooklyn on an overlapping day. He did not know whether the same method of computation had been followed in all instances and we observed that this method does not accurately reflect the first-run revenue.

The next thing that happened was this, on one of these charts they illustrate a lot of lump sum deals purported to be covered by interrogatory 48. They cover theatres of a particular exhibitor located both in New York and outside of New York but with no breakdown of the lump sum as between theatres. The Government auditor credited the entire lump sum to the revenue derived from New York within New York City, and we respectfully observed that the figures on the chart to that extent did not reflect New York City revenues.

And the last one was Warner's answer to interrogatory 48 designated the first and second and third runs respectively in each city on the basis of the play date instead of on the basis of availability dates, as were presently used in Warner's answer to the Government's additional interrogatories. However this was done, the second and third-run revenue figures appearing on the chart would not reflect the true revenue from these runs and would therefore form no accurate basis for comparison.

That is the last we heard from the Government. We have spent years of mantime and tens of thousands of dollars of money trying to agree with the Government on these things, yet since July 1945, when they tendered us these charts and we called their attention to specific things like this, they do nothing and come in here and calmly offer the charts. We are going to object to them for that reason, your Honors.

Judge Hand: Of course, this kind of objection, how far it affects the particular exhibit you propose to offer, I don't know, but this kind of an objection in itself is a sound one. We are perfectly satisfied to take any kind of tabulations you choose from the testimony, but the tabulation must within itself disclose what it refers to and not be filled with characterizations of your own, from which we cannot identify the theatres or the particular facts.

Mr. Wright: There is no question about that whatsoever, your Honor.

Judge Hand: I think this is the kind of thing you ought to have agreed on and got into shape. This just confuses us. We won't know whether it is——

Mr. Wright: I will read what is on these exhibits that I just offered. This exhibit that we prepared was submitted to Paramount and that this is what their counsel had to say about it on July 13, 1949, "A spot"——

Judge Hand: 1945?

Mr. Wright: 1945, it should be. It says "1949." "A spot check of the figures on this sheet has been made by Paramount Pictures, Inc., as a result of which it does not propose to object to the tabulations upon the ground of inaccuracy, but it reserves its right to object to their relevancy and materiality, and Paramount Pictures, Inc. also reserves the (471a) right to offer tabulations of its own concerning the same subject matter, in accordance with the letter of Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett to Wendell Berge dated June 20, 1945." (472)

Now, I thought that that took care of these particular tabulations. It now appears—and no counsel has suggested this to me heretofore—that he does not wish to stand by the representation that was made at that time.

As far as inaccuracy is concerned, I would say at any time, certainly, if a mistake is discovered, it should be corrected, regardless of whether or not somebody had stipulated before that it was correct. But that really is not his basis of objection now. The mathematical computations are just as correct as they ever were.

Now I agree that insofar as the—— Judge Hand: If you described a thing—I think that was embodied in his objection—if you described a corporation or theatre or anything else as an affiliate, that is merely your description, and we do not know its relation at all, and we not only do not know that but do not know which one it is, why the thing, you see is just all balled up.

Mr. Wright: I quite agree, and I suppose that the only cure for that situation is to submit in each case a statement of—and these should be obtainable from the work sheets, of course—a statement of the theatres which were classified as affiliated in making up the charts. That is the only way I know how to resolve that controversy.

(473)

Mr. Proskauer: If Mr. Wright would follow the suggestion contained in this correspondence and give us modified sheets or agreements, and make an agreement with us of what he means by affiliated theatres——

Mr. Wright: We do not proposed to tabulate the figures in the way the defendants wish to tabulate them.

Judge Hand: No, there is no reason why you should. I agree with you, Mr. Wright. But there is reason why the exhibit should within its four corners, explain to us what it refers to.

Mr. Wright: As I say, if the Court please, insofar as this chart and all of these charts are concerned, I know of no way to resolve that except to submit to your Honors with the charts a list of those theatres, naming them by name, which were regarded by us as affiliated for the purpose of the chart.

Judge Hand: Have you got such a list?

Mr. Wright: We can prepare them from the work sheets and submit them, and that I think is the thing to do in the event of any question over affiliation here or non-affiliation which, on the basis of the statement here, we do not suppose Paramount intended to raise.

Judge Hand: What about that, Mr. Seymour? What do you suggest?

Mr. Seymour: here are various difficulties which Judge (474)
Proskauer has outlined. Anything which will enable us to try to agree would be helpful, but the things that Judge Proskauer's associate suggested to Mr. Wright's associates last summer have not been done. They should have been done before this. We will go along with any method of getting these things correct, but the Government has simply stood adamant that its method of doing it is the only way to do it; and we cannot agree that it is correct or permit them to go in, and give your Honors the impression that they are correct. Now, any procedure by which we can get together on a revision of these things is all right, but that should have been done. It was in July that counsel told Mr. Wright's associates what was wrong with these charts. I am personally a little embarrassed about it because we said in the first instance that the figures, our spot check of the figures, showed them to be correct; and it was only after that or very shortly after that that these errors in the headings came to general attention, but it was immediately after that that counsel for one of the other defendants told Mr. Wright that that same difficulty pervaded all these tabulations, told him it pervaded their tabulation, and it also pervades all the others.

Mr. Wright: In view of what has been said, I see nothing to do except to go over the chart heading by heading to de- (475) termine what has to be done to resolve the conflict. Now it seems to me on the affiliation question that can be handled by submitting a list of the theatres which we used as affiliated——

Judge Hand: Yes, you could do that.

Mr. Wright: Now, I might as well take them up one by one. The first heading, "Number of National Exhibitions." I take it there is nothing wrong with that?

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, it seems to me that this would be better: we are not involved in this particular chart, but the ruling made may cover charts we are interested in. Instead of Mr. Wright just drawing a statement from his work sheets and submitting them to the Court, I do not see why we should not follow the orderly Procedure that is followed every day in the courtroom, and take his work sheets and mark them for identification, and then we can tell and the Court can tell what he draws his conclusions and his inferences from. I do not want some statement that he draws from his work sheets submitted to the Court.

Mr. Wright: I might say that at the time we submitted the charts we also made work sheets on which they were based available in our New York office here for examination, and nobody came down to look at them.

Mr. Leisure: If your Honor please, it is a long time, and (476) you know something of the difficulty about making things available when the Government has it. When you go there, they are some place else, or some other defendant has them. Why should not they be marked today for identification so they will be equally available to all of us.

Mr. Wright: That is perfectly agreeable to us.

Judge Hand: All right. Go on with your work sheets.

Mr. Proskauer: If the Government will take up the specific objection raised and discuss it with us in an endeavor to avoid burdening the Court with all this terrible detail, I think that would be better. It is our desire to do that as far as we possibly can.

The Court (Judge Hand): You do not seem to be able to agree about things. I should think you ought to be able to agree on some form of statement here, and then make your law points about it.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honor please, one reason we cannot agree is that the issue is one of the ultimate issues to be decided. Now in New York there are three circuits of theatres involved. One is the RKO Circuit, which is clearly affiliated, no question about it. And the revenue derived from RKO should be classified as affiliated. Now the next circuit is the Skouras Circuit, which we say is not affiliated, and which the Government says they will prove is affiliated. And the (477) third circuit is the Randforce Circuit, which we say is not affiliated and the Government says is affiliated. Now, all we want is that the chart which shows revenue from affiliated theatres shall show to your Honors how much of it is RKO, which is without the realm of dispute, how much of it is Skouras, which is in the realm of dispute, and how much of it is Randforce, which is in the realm of dispute. Then if your Honors——

Judge Hand: You are clearly entitled to that.

Mr. Caskey: Well, that is what they won't do, and that is what the fight is about.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is not correct that we won't do it. I say I think the only way to resolve that question——

Judge Hand: Maybe it is not correct that you won't do it. It is correct that you have not done it, and here you are going on in this very long trial, and you ought to have ironed this thing out, I think.

Mr. Wright: I submit we did the best we could to do it. Now what he is proposing is to have us recompute the whole chart in the manner he says it should be done. Now I am perfectly willing to submit a list of the theatres which will disclose themselves which have been included in what we call affiliated theatres and which have not. But I submit that (478) if he wants to compute separately the rental of the theatres which are involved in these various degrees of affiliation, he is perfectly free to do that.

Judge Hand: I really do not see, Mr. Wright, any difference. You could do it by one exhibit or you could do it by four or five, as long as the Exhibit tells on the face of it what it is doing.

Mr. Wright: That is right. I think that is correct.

Judge Hand: Your exhibit could cover the whole crowd, everybody, and maintain, if they are maintainable, your contentions, or maintain, if they are maintainable, their contentions or the contentions of some of them.

Mr. Wright: But I am just pointing out that counsel is apparently now taking the position that he will not agree to the correctness of the figures even if we submit with the chart a list of the theatres which we included in the affiliated rental.

Judge Hand: I do not so understand.

Judge Bright: I thought counsel wanted you to break them down into three subdivisions, as far as RKO is concerned, and put them under your claim of affiliated theatres.

(479)

Mr. Proskauer: What is the objection to your putting in your list of theatres, A, theatres we consider to be affiliated, like RKO; B, Skouras; and, C, Randforce?

Mr. Wright: There is not any objection to that. That affiliation, of course, appears from other evidence; once you have the name of the theatre, you have the extent of its affiliation.

Judge Hand: Now you are arguing as to whether you have proved your case as to affiliation. That is in question.

Mr. Wright: I assume that it is, but I say the proof as to the extent of the affiliation is nothing about which there is any controversy. The only controversy is as to whether or not these minority interests do amount to affiliations as the defendants use the term.

Judge Hand: Of course.

Mr. Wright: I say——

Judge Hand: The inference, at least, is in question. Why don't you get up an exhibit that discloses the figures on the basis of affiliation and non-affiliation?

Mr. Wright: That is exactly what we did here. Now if we have to further and re-compute——

Judge Hand: No, on the basis of what you claim to be affiliation and on the basis of what they claim to be affiliation.

Mr. Wright: I am perfectly willing to have their figures submitted simultaneously on the basis of what they claim to be affiliated, but in order for us to make both tabulations it means that we have to go ahead and redo the charts completely, and figure totals in their categories, which is a very difficult, laborious piece of work.

Mr. Davis: May I suggest, your Honors, that I think we are all overlooking a little bit what the evidentiary status of these charts is. Now, there is a custom, and a very laudable custom, of shortcutting testimony by putting in summaries; and counsel have a perfect right to offer a summary. But it is not primary evidence at all until it is accepted by the opposing party. We have a perfect right to say we do not accept your summary. Then the burden is obviously upon the person who offers it to introduce the person who made the summary and ascertain in what manner he made his computations, and from what sources. That would entitle us, if we chose to, to insist that these charts were not evidence at all, and the person who prepared them be put on the witness stand and cross-examine as to his sources. That is a laborious process but one to which we are perfectly entitled, and in the absence of it, these charts cannot be thrown at the Court with the airy statement that it is for us, if we see anything wrong about them, to introduce evidence.

Mr. Wright: Now——

Mr. Davis: Just a minute, Mr. Wright.

(481)

Now, that is where we are. Now, we are perfectly willing to have these charts reformed in the particulars which Judge Proskauer says we pointed out in writing as long ago as last July, but we are quite within our rights in objecting to their introduction in their present form.

Mr. Wright: I do not think there is any question about what Mr. Davis says, your Honors. We have Lieutenant Borwick, the man who supervised the preparation of these charts, here, and we shall be glad to have him put on the stand and have him identify what he did with his worksheets, and he is subject to cross-examination. It seems to me, however, that that is a very laborious, needless method of getting at the result.

Judge Hand: I think so, too, but you can't substitute for that laborious method a method which you are using now of putting in stuff that we cannot tell anything about and that the other people dispute.

Mr. Wright: I repeat that I have only offered these agreements on the basis of a stipulation which has been repudiated. Now, that I can't——

Mr. Seymour: Now, I cannot let that statement stand unchallenged. I have explained to your Honors the situation. Mr. Wright says that we are repudiating a stipulation. I do not think we are at all. He was advised last July of these general errors within a period of a few days of the date of this stipulation; and, furthermore, we reserved in our stipulation the fact that there were inaccuracies here. Now, my objection goes along with that of other defendants to similar charges, and I certainly do not want to be put in a position of repudiating a stipulation or anything of that kind. The Government has known for months what the position of the defendants was.

Judge Hand: Well, we shall undoubtedly sustain the objection as to all these exhibits until they are clarified and the items are segregated, I think you should do it by agreement, without any question. You can agree, not as to conclusions but as to a form which will show what is affiliated and what is not affiliated. If you go over them, it won't require any expert testimony or anything else.

Mr. Wright: Let me suggest this, your Honors. We have Lieutenant Borwick here with his work papers, and I suggest that we can sit down with a chart with such people they wish to designate, and we can have a conference and prepare a statement, and if we are able, iron it out. And if we can't resolve the question in that way, then I suppose we would be put to the task of putting the witness on the stand and having him testify as to what was done.

Judge Hand: Now, assuming you can do that by cooperation, what more have you got?

Mr. Wright: In addition to the charts which are listed (483)
here, all of which, I suppose, could be handled the same way as these that have just been offered, we obtained a series of letters from persons affiliated with the defendants either as partners or managing officers or employees with respect to certain theatre holdings of theirs, and we have submitted those letters to all of the counsel, and asked if they would stipulate that these persons, if called, would testify to the facts shown in the letters. The facts in the letters simply show the relationship between these persons and one or more of the defendants, and describes the extent of their theatre interests.

Mr. Davis: Do any of these letters come from Loew's, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Davis: Do any of these letters come from Loew's?

Mr. Wright: I am not sure whether we have one from a Loew executive or not. I believe a statement as to theatre holdings, if any, of its executive officers was to be furnished. I do not think we have yet received it.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright, will you let us look at the letters you want us to stipulate to?

Mr. Wright: May I continue with what I was saying? As I was saying, we submitted the letters to counsel for the defendants, and we would have been advised, I believe, by four of them that they would stipulate that if called as witnesses the writers of the letters would testify to the facts contained therein, subject to a great many objections that they would want to make on the grounds of relevancy and materiality.

Mr. Proskauer: I am inspecting them, your Honor. I think I am going to be able to say Yes.

Mr. Caskey: What are you offering, Mr. Wright?

Judge Bright: Why don't you make your offer and then we will know whether there is an objection or not?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I shall offer the exhibits marked for identification as 350 through 356, and also 165 through 170.

Mr. Proskauer: That is, 350 to 360 inclusive?

Mr. Wright: No.

Mr. Proskauer: 350 to 356 inclusive?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: As to these letters, as far as I am concerned, I am advised that we have already stipulated in writing, and therefore we stipulate here that the signers of these letters, if called, would testify to the facts contained in the letters.

Judge Hand: All right. They are admitted.

Mr. Seymour: I was waiting for Judge Proskauer to finish. As to 168 and 170, I think probably those exhibits ought to be withdrawn. The Government must have been (485) under a misapprehension as to the relationship of Paramount to the author of those letters. There is no relationship now. I would be perfectly willing to stipulate that if called they would testify as in the letters, but since the testimony would be plainly immaterial because there is no relationship, I think they ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. Wright: I agree.

Mr. Seymour: So 168 and 170 ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: They are withdrawn, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Correct, your Honor.

And I will offer just 165 to have it marked.

(Government's Exhibit 165 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 166 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 166 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 167 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 167 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 168 is withdrawn.

Judge Hand: Now, you have 169 and 171, haven't you?

Mr. Wright: 169 is being marked.

Judge Bright: Which one are you introducing?

Mr. Wright: 169.

(486)

(Government's Exhibit 169 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Seymour: I would like to see 171.

Mr. Caskey: That is not being offered, is it?

Mr. Wright: 170 is withdrawn.

And I shall offer the others covered by the stipulation which begin at 350, which is on page 115 of the list of exhibits.

(Government's Exhibit 350 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And I will also offer 351.

(Government's Exhibit 351 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 352 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 352 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 353 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 353 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 354 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 354 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 355 is offered.

(Government's Exhibit 355 for identification received in evidence.)

(487)

Mr. Wright: 356 is a negative letter. I shall withdraw that.

Mr. Caskey: Let me see it, please.

(Letter handed to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Wright: I think those are all of those, if your Honor please. I think that accounts for all of the letters of that character that are on the printed list.

Judge Bright: On page 114 there are two there, 341 and 342.

Mr. Wright: Those letters, if the Court please, 341 and 342, those relate to charts again. Those are not of this class, and I think should be taken up with the other chart procedure.

We shall next offer two exhibits which set forth the holding of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. as of March 30, 1940, and March 1, 1945, respectively. The March 30, 1940 list is marked for identification as No. 358, and the 1945 list is marked for identification as No. 164.

Mr. Proskauer: What is being offered?

Mr. Wright: These are statements which were furnished to us by counsel——

Mr. Proskauer: May we see it?

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) ——by counsel for United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. which sets forth the holdings of the corporation in theatres as of the dates mentioned.

(488)

Mr. Leisure: Is that 164 you are offering, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: 164 and 358.

Mr. Leisure: Now, as to 164, and the other one also, that is a statement made on behalf of a corporation which is not a party to this action and is not charged as a co-conspirator of the defendants in this case. We object to it on those grounds.

Mr. Proskauer: I am advised that United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., of course, has no relationship to any defendant in this case, that the name is just a coincidence. We cannot consent to admit these because we do not know a thing about it, and because it indulges in such loose characterization that it is going to result in embarrassment. Here is a heading "Skouras Theatres". What that means,

I don't know. Here is a heading "Randforce Theatres." What that means I don't know. If you get this clarified so as to make clear exactly what it meant we shall seriously consider agreeing on it with you.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, these exhibits I just offered were also submitted to counsel for the defendants with a request for a stipulation that if the representative of the United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. were produced here he would testify to those——

Mr. Proskauer: I don't know what you are saying. (489)

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —that he would testify to those facts that are set forth.

Now, these United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. theatres and Skouras theatres are those as to which there is a dispute between ourselves and counsel for the defendants as to whether they are or are not affiliated with defendants. All we offer are, of course, the facts showing the extent and character of the affiliation, and the Court may judge for itself how they should be treated.

Mr. Caskey: The facts as testified to by whom?

Mr. Wright: The facts as to——,

Mr. Proskauer: Not as to what.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —the facts as to the connection between United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. and Mr. Joseph Schenck of Twentieth Century-Fox Film, I believe, are set forth in Mr. Schenck's letter which is marked in evidence as Exhibit 166. The facts as to the United Artists Theatre, Inc.'s connection with the defendant RKO, I believe are covered in the interrogatory answers of RKO, from which it appears that they are jointly interested with this circuit in a combination referred to as Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc. The extent to which this United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. is engaged in joint operations with the theatre operations with the defendant Loew, I believe, appears in the agreements which have been offered in evidence as No. 214.

(490)

The facts as to joint theatre operations of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. and Fox I believe are contained in exhibit numbers 239 and 238.

The facts as to the association of the Circuit with Paramount I believe are set forth in Exhibit No. 208.

Mr. Caskey: What Mr. Wright has done is to avoid answering the questions as to who is testifying to the facts purported to be stated in Exhibit 164. He has stated that certain things are already in the record. If they are, then nothing is needed. The question is on the competency of this document which, according to my recollection, has never been submitted, although I confess there has been such a welter of material that I am unable to say what has and what has not been submitted to us.

Mr. Wright: The data was submitted to us with a covering letter dated July 27, 1945. This relates to both exhibits which is signed by Mr. William P. Phillips, Jr., who I believe is the vice-president of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., and he is the one that supplied that information in response to our request.

Mr. Proskauer: Let us see that letter.

Mr. Davis: He is not testifying here, is he?

Mr. Wright: When we submitted the data we asked for a stipulation.

Mr. Proskauer: Will you let me see the schedules referred to in this letter?

(491)

Mr. Wright: Those are the exhibits for indentification we have just been examining.

Mr. Caskey: None of our side of the table have ever seen these before.

Judge Bright: Didn't you say that you had a stipulation that if Mr. Phillips were called he would testify to these things?

Mr. Wright: Apparently we have not. We had submitted these for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of calling a witness to testify to those facts. Now we are, of course, dependent upon such a stipulation for the competency of the data.

Mr. Proskauer: I want your Honors to understand that this is just as foreign to us as anything can be. We have no connection with this situation; we do not know the people; we do not know Mr. William E. Phillips of the United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., and we have never seen these documents.

Mr. Wright: I would concede, your Honors, that obviously the documents are not admissible in the absence of a stipulation that Mr. Phillips, if called, would testify to the facts stated therein.

Judge Hand: They are excluded.

Judge Bright: Why not withdraw the offer, and if you want to renew it later, do so?

(492)

Mr. Wright: I think we shall want to call the witness to establish the facts, and the same thing, I think, applies to an exhibit marked for identification No. 357, which I understood had also been submitted which sets forth the Skouras Theatres Corporation theatre interests as of March, 1939; and I would, of course, only offer this on the assumption that there would be a stipulation that if called, Mr. George Skouras, the president of the corporation who furnished the date, would testify to the facts therein stated, if called as a witness.

Mr. Leisure: May we see the exhibit? We may interpose no objection.

Mr. Wright: The accompanying letter which goes with that is this letter of March 6, 1939, signed by Mr. Skouras (handing).

Mr. Leisure: This was submitted in 1939. What the facts are today, I don't know, but subject to correction we will have no objection to it.

Mr. Wright: I think we got a letter as to the present date.

Judge and. That is 357?

Mr. Wright: That is 357.

Judge Hand: Admitted.

Mr. Wright: I understand, if the Court please, that the facts as to the Skouras Theatres holding as of 1945 are contained in the document we offered as Exhibit 164, the statement furnished by United Artists Theatre Circuit which owns an interest in the Skouras Theatres Corporation.
(493)

Judge and: I thought that had been withdrawn.

Mr. Wright: That has been withdrawn. I am just explaining that I think we do have that data, and we do propose to offer the 1945 situation.

Mr. Proskauer: If instead of calling it "Skouras Theatres" you would really state who owns them and which Skouras has an interest in them, we would get along very much better. The difficulty here in just calling them affiliated theatres, or Skouras theatres, or some such thing, gives a wrong impression.

Mr. Wright: We did not prepare the chart.

Mr. Proskauer: Neither did we.

Mr. Wright: There is no question that the words "Skouras theatres" refers to "Skouras Theatres, Inc."

(Government's Exhibit 357 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: I think, if the Court pleases, that that disposes of virtually everything on the list here except the F.B.I. reports which were given the number 155 for identification.

Judge Goddard: We have the supplementary list.

Mr. Wright: Oh, has that been handed to your Honors? I did not realize you had the supplementary list. If you have that there we may as well dispose of those.
(494)

Mr. Wright: There are on that list additional letters to which I think the same stipulation applies. No. 363 I offer.

Mr. Proskauer: Is this all one?

(Government's Exhibit 363 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And number 364.

Mr. Proskauer: May we see them, what they are?

Mr. Wright: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Proskauer: One request we have to make is to please be advised of what is being offered and to get a look at it.

Mr. Wright: You have a copy of this list, I take it?

Mr. Proskauer: The list does not mean anything. The document does.

Mr. Wright: That is true.

Mr. Proskauer: I cannot find it in my heart to object to any letter signed by Dwight, Harris, Koegle & Caskey.

Mr. Caskey: That is not what it is described as. I call your attention to the fact that the thing being handed to the clerk is not what is described on the piece of paper your associate gave me. If you will look at the letter, it may not be what you want.

Mr. Wright: Let us take a look at it.

(495)

Mr. Proskauer: May I see 363, so we can know what it is?

Mr. Wright: You are quite right, that is incorrectly listed. The letter 364 is from Dwight, Harris, Koegel & Caskey; and the date is correct, but it refers to stock ownership of Joseph H. Moskowitz and not Darryl F. Zanuck.

Judge Hand: Nobody has objected to it so far as I know. Go on with your next offer.

(Government's Exhibit 364 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Davis: Have you offered 363?

Mr. Wright: Yes. 365 are additional answers.

Mr. Seymour: May we see those, Mr. Wright? We have never seen them.

Mr. Wright: They have only been received by us within the last day, I believe. They are the remainder of the Universal answers to our 1945 interrogatories 6 to 11. 365 and 366 are Universal answers to our 1945 interrogatories 12 and 13. 367 is a letter of the character covered by a prior stipulation. That is from Gordon, the president of Jefferson Amusement Company, to Paramount.

Mr. Davis: What does he say. What is the letter about?

Mr. Seymour: With respect to Exhibits 365 and 366, if your Honors please, they are answers of the defendant Universal to some interrogatories which none of us have ever seen before, and that is not a ground for exclusion, but I think it ought to be plainly understood that we should have an adequate opportunity to make corrections.

(496)

Mr. Wright: No question of that.

Mr. Seymour: Because they report on theatres alleged to be affiliated with us and we haven't any idea whether they are right or wrong.

Mr. Wright: We will offer 368, which is another——

Judge Bright: Have 366 and 365 been marked?

The Clerk: No, your Honor, not yet.

Mr. Wright: 365.

(Government's Exhibit 365 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: 366 is next.

(Government's Exhibit 366 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: Then 367 and 368.

(Government's Exhibits 367 and 368 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: We will offer 369, which is additional interrogatory data furnished by United Artists.

(Government's Exhibit 369 for identification received in evidence.)

(497)

Mr. Wright: And the same thing applies to 369—1-2-3-4-5.

Mr. Proskauer: What are those?

Mr. Wright: Those are United Artists answers to, or contracts which were furnished to us by way of answer to Interrogatory 6. Instead of answering the interrogatory in the form in which the other defendants answered it, they simply handed us photostats of the contracts in question.

Mr. Davis: You are offering them?

Mr. Wright: We are offering them.

Mr. Davis: Just for the record, your Honors, so there won't be any mistake hereafter, in point of avoirdupois, we concede now that the weight of evidence is with the Government.

Mr. Raftery: And they extracted it from the minor's files. There are $800 worth of photostats there. The only reason I am pointing it up in that manner is to show the nature and extent of furnishing of contracts in an effort to answer these interrogatories.

(Government's Exhibits 369-1 to 369-5 inclusive for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: The list that has been handed to your Honors and to counsel again appears to be incorrect. The next item there should bear the number 369-6 instead of 369-5, and 369-6 is part of the same United Artists material.

(498)

(Government's Exhibit 369-6 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: And 370, if the Court please, which we are offering, is the up-to-date information as to the Universal's corporate structure, which Mr. Raftery referred to yesterday and which he furnished us.

(Government's Exhibit 370 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Raftery: And I presume it is received with the deletions that were made by your Honors as to the other defendants. You will remember you eliminated the number of stockholders and twenty largest stockholders. While this document was being prepared, we were working under the old ruling.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: So it is received, I presume, with the deletions.

Judge Hand: That is true.

Mr. Wright: Correct. That, I think, takes care of the list of documents with the exception of the F. B. I. reports, and in accordance with your Honor's suggestion I spent last night checking that data with Mr. Caskey and Mr. Pride as to Fox. We have had others checking the data with the other defendants who operated in the towns in question and I think that this afternoon we will be able to read into the record the facts upon which we have been able to agree, and those reports can be offered as to which there is no dispute. And that, I think, will virtually complete our presentation, subject to picking up such odds and ends as additional interrogatory data that was to be furnished but in some instances has still not come in.

Mr. Proskauer: Do we have to come back for these F. B. I. reports this afternoon? We have given you, as I understand it, our corrections to a number of things in these reports, all of us.

Mr. Wright: I said that we would put in the data that was agreed upon this afternoon.

Mr. Davis: I am frank to say I never even heard of these F. B. I. reports, and I haven't seen any of them, and I want to know just what they are and how they are made up and what they deal with.

Mr. Wright: I will be glad to explain. These reports are simply one for a town. They originally covered, I think, about five hundred odd towns in which the defendants operate theatres, almost all of which are under 25,000 in population. A sample form has the heading at the top, the name of the town, what State; then under the theatre column are listed the names of the theatres in town, under the names of owners, whoever owns or operates; date of acquisition; date built; seating capacity; class of feature; class of films displayed; and general location; the run, whether first or subsequent; evening adult admission price; and the extent of operation; that is, either full time or otherwise; the number of program changes.

As to this data, as I say, we assembled it primarily for the purpose of showing in which towns that the defendants operated in there were no independent theatres, and, second, for showing the towns in which there were no independent first-runs, even though there were independent theatres, and, third, the data as to theatres kept closed by the defendants in the closed towns. That is the data that we are principally interested in.

For our purpose, a summary may be furnished listing that data, and I think will shorten the amount of material in the record. We collected the other information I submitted because we thought, as long as they were going into the towns, they might as well do the complete job and have anything the defendants might wish as well as what we might wish to offer, but I don't want to encumber the record with the entire reports, if we can simply read in or furnish a list which will take care of the points that I just mentioned.

Mr. Davis: You are not asking us to stipulate the accuracy of the facts on each one of these reports. Here is the sort of thing. One has just been handed me: Town, West Reading; State, Pennsylvania; Fabian Theatres (bought out Wilmer-Vincent, Inc. in June 1944) and Loew's; date acquired, 1939; date built, 1939; number of seats, 754. Class of theatre, 1st. Class of films, A-B once or twice weekly as second film of double feature—once a week normally; location, 603 Penn Avenue, West Reading, Pa. Serves high-class area; evening adult price, 29 cents plus 6 cents tax (raised in late 1944 from 25 cents plus 3 cents tax); extent of operation, 365 days per year; no other theatre in West Reading; Pennsylvania; theatres closed or converted to commercial use, S. W. Reiff (deceased); when closed or converted, 1912 or 1913. Building no longer standing."

Now, what has that accumulation of data indicated here to do with this case?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I have just pointed out that I do not propose to offer that accumulation of data. All that I am interested in showing is those three facts, the situations where the defendant has all of the theatres, the situations where it has all the first-run theatres, and the (502) names and locations of the theatres that are closed in the closed towns. We collected this other data and submitted it largely for our own purposes, and as far as we are concerned we have no desire to reach any stipulation at this time as to all these details that are contained in the reports. We do want to offer the data I have just referred to in summary form.

Mr. Davis: The highly illuminating fact which I gather from this painful assemblage is that West Reading, Pennsylvania, has only one theatre and that Loew's has an interest in it. I am not able to perceive what it has to illuminate the issues which are supposed to be tried here, and for my part I am not going to assent to these F.B.I. reports.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the only purpose of the offer is to give an accurate description of the actual competitive situation in these towns in terms of whether or not there is opposition and whether or not there is first-run opposition. Those we think are relevant facts in measuring the actual buying power that each of these circuits has and shows what their competitive position is.

Judge Hand: Can't you get into a stipulation about anything about it?

Mr. Wright: We have stipulated.

(503)

Judge Hand: We cannot sit here just to hear talk about your desire to prove things that you say exist and their refusal to let you prove them in that way.

Mr. Wright: We do have stipulations, your Honor, as I understand it, with Fox, Warner and Paramount, which were those principally involved. Mr. Davis's company is involved, I think, in possibly one or two situations covered by the reports, and not of any great significance.

Judge Hand: You can probably prove those aliunde, can't you?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Hand: You can probably prove those facts, if you want to, aliunde—outside of this F. B. I. report?

Mr. Wright: I think so.

Judge Bright: Prove it by the F. B. I. operator, by oral testimony.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Seymour: The point I am going to press this afternoon, when the matter comes up, is the question of the materiality and the relevancy of the proliferation of this case into local areas.

(504)

As your Honors will recall, the Government's brief mentions 73 large cities and they say that there is a monopoly there because some of the defendants have interests in theatres there or operates theatres there, and then they pass to the group of cities, all cities over 25,000 in population, and they say in somewhat around 150 out of the total number of cities there is some kind of monopoly there, that is, monopoly in those cities, and they have a very fancy theory for it, your Honors will recall. What these F. B. I. reports are going to do, and we are agreeing to the facts, in so far as we knew them, so there won't be any dispute about it—now they are going to take this into every hamlet in the United States under 25,000 population, where there is a theatres situation they want to mention. It I total that number, we have got 73 little lawsuits, perhaps out of the 73 cities; and then we have 150 little lawsuits out of cities over 25,000, and for my part, it seems to me that is almost enough. So, this afternoon, when they come to take up little towns in Alabama and things of that kind, I am going to urge your Honors that that total number of lawsuits, 250, or whatever it is, is almost enough for our purposes unless we can find some way to get the Government perfectly clear that we are not going to have to litigate or discuss situations in those individual cities. That is what I pretty much fear, by the Court receiving any more detailed evidence of that kind.

Judge Hand: What about that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: As far as we are concerned, we do not propose to attempt to break the case down into any more than one lawsuit. We do not offer this evidence for the purpose of showing a particular competitive discrimination in any particular one of these situations. We simply think that it is relevant data on what we conceive to be the fundamental issue in this case and that is the power and extent of the control that these defendants exercise over the film market, the domestic film market, and we think it is an essential part of any estimate of that power.

Judge Hand: Why don't you omit this stuff that Mr. Seymour has just referred to, very small stuff? It hasn't much to do with the case?

Mr. Wright: I would agree that we would still have a case without it. I offer it simply, as I say, to complete the description of the extent of the control that these people have over the market.

Judge Hand: I understand there isn't any objection except by Mr. Davis, whose client is only affected in a very few cases, two or three cases—

Mr. Wright: That is right.
(506)

Judge Hand:—to the competency of this proof.

Mr. Seymour: Well, your Honor, I think that will be the situation. We have reached an agreement, as I understand it, last night, through some of Mr. Wright's colleagues and some of ours on the Paramount situation. Until they actually go in, I am not sure that they will represent precisely the agreement, but that method of procedure is entirely agreeable to us, if you want to take it. I won't make an objection on the ground of competency, if it is in accordance with the agrement reached last night. As to relevancy, that is something else.

Mr. Proskauer: There is another thing, I submit, in fairness that Mr. Wright should do. He just told me that his FBI reports show that these defendants owned theatres in about 400 or 300-some-odd of these little towns out of 500. On the 500 that he examined, my comment was, "You must have picked those 500 pretty selectively."

Mr. Wright: My answer was that we did.

Mr. Proskauer: Yes, you did. That is as false a picture of this country as anybody could give, and it is just going to throw on us the burden of showing by record evidence what the situation is really throughout the country and not going through the process of selecting 500 towns out of all the thousands of little towns in the United States and tendering them to the Court as a national picture.

(507)

Mr. Davis: May I just go back to my West Reading, which has been handed to me? And it arouses my intense interest because I would hate to see the worthy citizens of West Reading in the grasp of the cruel monopoly. And the F. B. I. has made its report, "Fabian Theatres (bought out Wilmer & Vincent in June, 1944) and Loew * * * Walter Vincent now chairman of board of Fabian Theatres, which reportedly was negotiating to buy out Loew interest about six months ago." Somebody has just handed me a notation on that, "Not true, that Fabian was negotiating for purchase of Loew interest. This theatre was consistently losing money because of late run. It is a fifth-run theatre, after Reading, Pennsylvania. Because of unsuccessful operation, theatre was lost to an independent on September 1, 1945."

This theatre was never operated by Loew and it is the only theatre in the barren waste of West Reading, Pennsylvania.

It is true that in 1912 or 1913, one S. W. Reef, who has been gathered to his fathers, had a theatre, which was closed and the building is no longer standing. I don't know whether this monopoly is responsible for that destruction or not.

If Mr. Wright wants to use these F. B. I. reports, so far as my client is concerned, if he will sort out of this (508) accumulation all those which refer to situations in which Loew's, Inc. is involved, we will look them over and if we agree with the report of the F. B. I., the report which the F. B. I. agent has given, we will put it in. If we do not, we are not going to, unless the Court commands us, to let this go in and put us to counterproof to correct what is reported by the F. B. I. agent.

Mr. Wright: If the Court pleases, I have already pointed out I did not propose to offer that report for any such purpose.

Judge Hand: We will have to adjourn now. We will adjourn to 2.20, and see if you cannot get these things in shape.

(Recess to 2.00 p.m.)

---

(509)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I spent the noon hour arranging these reports in an attempt to reading in the data that we want or regard as relevant without encumbering the record with the reports themselves.

What I have done is to take the Warner situations, for example, which have, I understand, been checked by them, and eliminate those as to which there was still any doubt or disagreement. And then I propose simply first to read the names of the towns in which, according to the report, there are no theatres other than those in which Warner has a financial interest.

Mr. Proskauer: I have a suggestion to make about this, your Honors, that I have not had finally checked by all my colleagues but which I think ought to appeal to everybody. As far as I am concerned I want to let these reports go in evidence for whatever they may be worth, if Mr. Wright will stipulate that the 500 towns with a population between 5000 and 25,000 which were investigated by the FBI, were chosen by him because of information that one or more of the five defendants owned theatres in those 500 towns; and that as to the other 6200 towns, none of the defendants owns or operates any theatre whatever. That is the fact. Now, if he will put that in we shall facilitate his putting in what he has got on the 500 towns.

Mr. Wright: I do not think there is any question about that. These were, of course, selected because the defendants owned theatres in those towns.

Judge Hand: All right. Are you satisfied?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: On that same line, because of the concern which I expressed to your Honors this morning of being burdened and having to burden the Court with treatment of these selected towns in any respect in our proof, I wonder if Mr. Wright, along the same line, won't concede what is also undoubtedly the fact,—that the so-called affiliated theatres in the towns to which he refers are the best physically and the best operated theatres in those towns?

Mr. Wright: We will concede nothing of the sort. We do not think it is a fact.

Mr. Seymour: Now, you see what that does, if your Honors please. That means that we have to face the possibility of dealing in our testimony with the several hundred towns which he is going to mention in this group, because it is his theory that somehow the circumstance that there is an affiliated theatre in those towns and that there are few, if any, competitors in some of them, is somehow relevant to this case.

Now, for my part, Paramount has interests in theatres in 44 states. To deal with that kind of a problem I have got to call a great many witnesses who can testify to the local situation, and therefore I must press my materiality and relevancy objection to this whole thing. If your Honors should overrule it I will facilitate the going in of the evidence; but to burden your Honors with this additional group of several hundred towns seems to me quite futile. It does not certainly, since it is obvious that there are so many towns where the defendants own or have interest in no theatres—it certainly does not prove a pattern or monopoly in all towns under 25,000.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the material is not offered for that purpose. We have shown, of course, by the theatre lists and other data all of the towns in which all of the the defendants and their affiliates own theatre interests. Obviously they have no interests in any other towns. All that this data is offered to show is the competitive situation, if any, in the smaller towns as to which we have no other data than the fact that they have theatres there.

Now, Mr. Seymour, neither he nor anyone else is going to have to call any witnesses before this Court to prove anything he wants to prove about the character or quality of those theatres that they own. It is the kind of thing that there obviously cannot be any dispute about, and as far as we are concerned, we think it is relevant and immaterial in any event. I simply decline to make the stipulation that he suggested because I do not believe what he stated to be the fact is the fact. If he wishes to make that proof as part of his case, he obviously does not need to call any witnesses to do it as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Seymour: If I do not have to call any witnesses, why don't you concede it? I have got to have either witnesses or a concession, it seems to me, if this material is to go in.

Mr. Wright: You will, I think, have to furnish something comparable to the data that we furnished that you would be willing to submit which you claim established that fact that you assert; and if you did, we would certainly agree that no one needed to be called to the stand to testify in accordance with the representations that you desired to make as to theatre quality in those specific situations.

Mr. Seymour: The difficulty, you see, is you can have a concession about quality and quality of operation, but you can't deal with that statistically; and if Mr. Wright thinks that I am going to undertake to fight him with equally dull statistics on this issue, I am certainly not. You cannot put theatre operation into statistics. A simple concession—and I think it is undoubtedly true that after your Honors familiarize yourselves with all the facts in each one of these things (513) you would come to that conclusion—is the simple way to do it; and if he does not want to make it, that leaves me with this burden, and therefore I press that objection.

Mr. Caskey: Your Honors, when we come to the list that is going to be submitted as to National which we agreed upon, there are two aspects to it which seem to us to make it wholly immaterial. A considerable number of the so-called towns on the list in which it is said that National has the only theatre or the only first-run theatre are, in fact, suburbs of Los Angeles.

They may be political subdivisions and have a separate count in the census, but it is just exactly as if he were establishing that National had the one and only theatre in Spuyten Duyvil, and we think it is wholly immaterial. The second is that in a large number of them, we have the only theatre in town, the town being in many instances 2000, 3000 or 4000 people. I don't suppose there could be any contention that, having the only theatre in a town in which no one else had ever attempted to open a theatre, is a violation of any law, but they put them all on the same sheet of paper, and we press the objection as to the immateriality of that kind of testimony.

Judge Hand: We will admit it.

Mr. Proskauer: That is on the understanding that Mr.
(514)
Wright has stipulated what I understood him to stipulate, namely, that in approximately 6200 towns in this category of population no defendant operates or owns or has any interest in any theatre.

Mr. Wright: The facts as to what towns of that size are not in are apparent from a comparison of the census figures with the answers. I don't know whether it is 6200 or some other number.

Mr. Proskauer: Subject to correction.

Mr. Wright: But it is taken subject to check with such data as is available.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: With respect to Warner I merely wanted to read into the record the names of the towns which have been checked as being towns in which they have the only theatre or theatres.

Mr. Proskauer: I understood you were offering the papers in lieu of taking the time to read it.

Mr. Wright: No, I am not offering the papers. The only data I am offering is the town list.

Mr. Seymour: The what?

Judge Bright: Offering the town what?

Mr. Wright: Just the names of the towns. The theatres that are in the towns appear and are described in the interrogatory answers and the other lists which we have previously offered. There was no point in duplicating that data here, as I see it.

Mr. Proskauer: May I make this clear, with the Court's permission, that when we matched these reports, we checked them only with reference to the fact that we had a theatre in the town. We made no check as to whether there was any competing theatre in the town and, in that respect, we want our freedom to show there may have been, if that develops.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: That's all right.

Mr. Wright: The Warner towns in which, according to those reports as of the checking so far made, indicates that the theatres in which Warner has an interest are the only theatre or theatres operated in the town, are as follows.

Mr. Seymour: Will you state the population as you go along?

Mr. Wright: No, I cannot. I don't have it. I assume that the Court will take judicial notice of the census figures as to any town that is mentioned.

The towns in Connecticut are: Derby and Manchester;

In Maryland, Frederick;

In Massachusetts, Amesbury, Clinton, Newburyport, Waverly, Woburn;

In New Jersey, Beverly, Bordentown, Bridgeton, Clementon, Collin, Collingswood, Cranford, Dover, Milburn, Millville, Moorestown, Mt. Holly, Nutley, Pennsgrove, Pleasantville, Ridgewood, Riverside, South Orange, Swedesboro, Woodbury. That completes New Jersey, I believe.

(516)

In New York those towns are: Batavia, Medina, Wellsville.

In Pennsylvania, Ambler, Bala-Cynwyd, Brookville, Donora, Dormont, Elkins Park, Etna, Gettysburg, Greensburg, Jenkintown, Lansdawne, Palmyra, Prospect Park, Punxsutawney, Red Lion, Ridgeway, State College, Tarentum, Titusville, Tyrone, Warren, Willow Grove.

In Virginia, Clifton Forge, Lexington.

In West Virginia, Martinsburg.

In Wisconsin, Delavan and Lake Geneva.

In the following towns, according to the reports so far checked, there are independently owned theatres which are operated, however, under an operating agreement with the Warner theatres in the town. Those are what are colloquially known as the pool situations. This is where all the theatres in town are under the operating agreement:

Bloomfield, New Jersey; Jamestown, New York, and Harrisonburg, Virginia.

I think that completes the Warner offer.

As to Paramount—

Mr. Seymour: I wonder if it would be agreeable to the Court and counsel if, as he calls the name of the town, I give the population by the 1940 census, subject to correction? I have a list of them.
(517)

Mr. Wright: Entirely agreeable.

Judge Hand: This is Paramount?

Mr. Wright: This is Paramount as to those situations which I understand have been checked.

Mr. Seymour: And it is also true, Mr. Wright, that in many of these places, perhaps in all of them, the theatre is owned by a corporation in which Paramount has, in many cases, well under a hundred per cent of the stock.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I believe the precise extent of the stock interests appear in other interrogatory answers.

The Paramount situations in which there are no theatres other than those in which Paramount has a financial interest are, beginning with Alabama, Auburn.

Mr. Seymour: 4652.

Mr. Wright: Chickasaw.

Mr. Seymour: 1530.

Mr. Wright: Jasper.

Mr. Seymour: 6847.

Mr. Wright: Selma.

Mr. Seymour: 19,834.

Mr. Wright: Troy.

Mr. Seymour: 7055.

(518)

Mr. Wright: As to Arkansas, Conway.

Mr. Seymour: 5782.

Mr. Wright: Dardanelle.

Mr. Seymour: 1870.

Mr. Wright: Fayetteville.
Mr. Seymour: 8212.
Mr. Wright: Jonesboro.
Mr. Seymour: 11,729.
Mr. Wright: McGehee.
Mr. Seymour: 2663.
Mr. Wright: Newport.
Mr. Seymour: 4321.
Mr. Wright: Smackover.
Mr. Seymour: 2235.
Mr. Wright: Springdale.
Mr. Seymour: 3319.
Mr. Wright: Stuttgart.
Mr. Seymour: 4628.
Mr. Wright: Van Buren.
Mr. Seymour: 5422.
Mr. Wright: Connecticut, Norwalk.
Mr. Seymour: 39,849.
Mr. Wright: And Florida, Cocoa.
Mr. Seymour: 3,098.
Mr. Wright: Clearwater.

(519)

Mr. Seymour: 10,136.
Mr. Wright: Deland.
Mr. Seymour: 7,041.
Mr. Wright: Eustis.
Mr. Seymour: 2,930.
Mr. Wright: Hollywood.
Mr. Seymour: 6239.
Mr. Wright: Melbourne.
Mr. Seymour: 2622.
Mr. Wright: Mount Dora.
Mr. Seymour: 1880.
Mr. Wright: New Smyrna Beach.
Mr. Seymour: 4402.
Mr. Wright: Georgia, Buford.
Mr. Seymour: 4191.

Mr. Wright: Elberton.

Mr. Seymour: 6188.

Mr. Wright: Waycross.

Mr. Seymour: 16,763.

Mr. Wright: Kentucky, Fulton.

Mr. Seymour: 3308.

Mr. Wright: Maine, Bath.

Mr. Seymour: 10,235.

Mr. Wright: Ft. Fairfield.

Mr. Seymour: 2693.

(520)

Mr. Wright: Houlton.

Mr. Seymour: 7771.

Mr. Wright: Orono.

Mr. Seymour: 3702.

Mr. Wright: Rockland..

Mr. Seymour: 8889.

Mr. Wright: And Massachusetts. The first is Allston.

Mr. Seymour: Isn't that a suburb of Boston or a part of Boston?

Mr. Wright: It is listed here as a suburban situation. I assume it is a suburb but apparently a separate census entity.

Mr. Raftery: If the Court may permit a former resident, it is a part of the City of Boston, Allston.

Mr. Wright: If it is included in Boston, we will withdraw it.

Mr. Seymour: You withdraw it, so we do not have to have any conference.

Mr. Wright: I will withdraw it.

Brighton.

Mr. Seymour: That is also a part of Boston.

Mr. Wright: East Milton.

Mr. Seymour: Are you withdrawing that?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: East Milton is a part of Milton.

(521)

Mr. Wright: I will withdraw that.

Hyde Park.

Mr. Seymour: That is part of Boston. Is that withdrawn?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

As I understand it, what you are saying is that these are not separate entities, recognized by the Census Bureau?

Mr. Seymour: That is my understanding of it, and that is subject to correction.

Mr. Wright: We are withdrawing those subject to correction. The line we used was simply the census classification.

Natick.

Mr. Seymour: 13,851.

Mr. Wright: Needham.

Mr. Seymour: 12,445.

Mr. Wright: Norfolk Downs.

Mr. Seymour: Part of Quincy. Is that withdrawn?

Mr. Wright: That is withdrawn.

North Attleboro.

Mr. Seymour: 10,359.

Mr. Wright: Northampton.

Mr. Seymour: 24,794, and there appears to be one theatre in which Paramount has no interest in that town.

Mr. Wright: Then it should not be in this list. If that is the fact——

Mr. Seymour: It is also subject to correction, but do you withdraw it?

Mr. Wright: —it should be withdrawn.

Newton.

Mr. Seymour: 69,873.

Mr. Wright: Roslindale.

Mr. Seymour: That is part of Boston and is withdrawn?

Mr. Wright: Withdrawn.

Wollaston.

Mr. Seymour: Part of Quincy, and it is withdrawn?

Mr. Wright: Withdrawn.

Michigan, Birmingham.

Mr. Seymour: 11,196.

Mr. Wright: Minnesota, Fairmont.

Mr. Seymour: 6988.

Mr. Wright: And I have some more in Florida here. Arcadia.

Mr. Seymour: 4055.

Mr. Wright: Bartow.

Mr. Seymour: 6158.

Mr. Wright: Bradenton.

Mr. Seymour: 7744.

Mr. Wright: Ocala.

(523)

Mr. Seymour: 8976.

Mr. Wright: Palm Beach, or West Palm Beach I believe it is. I think it is called in here Palm Beach and West Palm Beach.

Mr. Seymour: They are covered by the census separately.

Mr. Wright: I take it the theatres in both communities are all affiliated with Paramount, that's right?

Mr. Seymour: That is correct.

Mr. Wright: Well, that statement will cover it.

Mr. Seymour: Are you going to put it in?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: The population of Palm Beach, I suppose taken at the least favorable time, is 3747; West Palm Beach, 33,693.

(524)

Mr. Wright: Plant City.

Mr. Seymour: 7,491.

Mr. Wright: St. Augustine.

Mr. Seymour: 12,090.

Mr. Wright: Sanford.

Mr. Seymour: 10,217.

Mr. Wright: Sarasota.

Mr. Seymour: 11,141.

Mr. Wright: Vero Beach.

Mr. Seymour: I can't give you the population. That is not on the list in here. I will undertake to supply the population at a later date.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest that in phrasing the concession before I was guilty of an inadvertence. I said towns between 5,000 and 25,000. It should have been towns of under 25,000 population, because some of them are smaller than 5,000. I assume we can agree on that, with the Court's permission?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: Where are we going now, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Winter Haven.

Mr. Seymour: 6,199.

Mr. Wright: And Winter Park.

Mr. Seymour: 4,715.

Mr. Wright: Here are more in Minnesota: Moorehead.

(525)

Mr. Seymour: 5,491.

Mr. Wright: St. Cloud.

Mr. Seymour: 24,173.

Mr. Wright; And in New York: Owego.

Mr. Seymour: 5,068.

Mr. Wright: And Waverly.

Mr. Seymour: 5,450.

Mr. Wright: And in Mississippi: Columbus.

Mr. Seymour: 13,645.

Mr. Wright: Tupelo.

Mr. Seymour: 8,212.

Mr. Wright: West Point.

Mr. Seymour: 5,627.

Mr. Wright: And in North Carolina: Canton.

Mr. Seymour: 5,037.

Mr. Wright: Chapel Hill.

Mr. Seymour: 3,654.

Mr. Wright: Goldsboro.

Mr. Seymour: 17,274, and there appears to be another theatre there.

Mr. Wright: In that case it should not be on. In this list there are three theatres all operated by North Carolina Theatres.

Mr. Seymour: Chapel Hill has a theatre in which Paramount has no interest.

(526)

Mr. Wright: That also, according to the report that was submitted and I understand checked, has all three operated by North Carolina Theatres.

Mr. Seymour: Will you bear with us just a moment? You go ahead with this subject to correction, if you will.

Mr. Wright: Lexington, North Carolina.

Mr. Seymour: 10,550.

Mr. Wright: And Greenville.

Mr. Seymour: 12,674.

Mr. Wright: And Hendersonville.

Mr. Seymour: Hendersonville?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: 5,381.

Mr. Wright: And in North Dakota, Minot.

Mr. Seymour: 16,577.

Mr. Wright: And in Pennsylvania: Bloomsburg.

Mr. Seymour: 9,799.

Mr. Wright: Carlisle.

Mr. Seymour: 13,984.

Mr. Wright: Danville.

Mr. Seymour: 7,122.

Mr. Wright: Dickson City.

Mr. Seymour: 11,548.

Mr. Wright: Dunmore.

Mr. Seymour: 23,086.

(527)

Mr. Wright: Duryea.

Mr. Seymour: 8,275.

Mr. Wright: Forest City.

Mr. Seymour: 4,266.

Mr. Wright: Hawley.
Mr. Seymour: 1,778.
Mr. Wright: Honesdale.
Mr. Seymour: 5,687.
Mr. Wright: Jersey Shore.
Mr. Seymour: 5,432.
Mr. Wright: Kingston.
Mr. Seymour: 21,679.
Mr. Wright: Luzerne.
Mr. Seymour: 7,082.
Mr. Wright: Mauch Chunk.
Mr. Seymour: 3,009.
Mr. Wright: Northumberland.
Mr. Seymour: 4,469.
Mr. Wright: Pittston.
Mr. Seymour: 17,828.
Mr. Wright: Pottsville.
Mr. Seymour: 24,530.
Mr. Wright: Sayre.
Mr. Seymour: 7,569.
(528)
Mr. Wright: Sunbury.
Mr. Seymour: 15,462.
Mr. Wright: And Towanda.
Mr. Seymour: 4,154.
Mr. Wright: And again in North Carolina: Goldsboro.
Mr. Seymour: 19,037.
Mr. Wright: And in South Carolina: Abbeyville.
Mr. Seymour: 4,930.
Mr. Wright: Anderson.
Mr. Seymour: 19,424.
Mr. Wright: Darlington.
Mr. Seymour: 6,236.
Mr. Wright: Greenwood.
Mr. Seymour: 13,020.
Mr. Wright: South Dakota: Madison.
Mr. Seymour: 5,018.

Mr. Wright: Huron.
Mr. Seymour: 10,843.
Mr. Wright: Watertown.
Mr. Seymour: 10,617.
Mr. Wright: And in Tennessee: Kingsport.
Mr. Seymour: 14,404.
Mr. Wright: And in Texas: Anahuac.
Mr. Seymour: 1,003.
Mr. Wright: Arlington.
Mr. Seymour: 4,240.
(529)
Mr. Wright: Corsicana.
Mr. Seymour: 15,232.
Mr. Wright: Eagle Lake.
Mr. Seymour: 2,124.
Mr. Wright: Eastland.
Mr. Seymour: 3,849.
Mr. Wright: Mercedes.
Mr. Seymour: 7,624.
Mr. Wright: McAllen.
Mr. Seymour: 11,877.
Mr. Wright: Nederland.
Mr. Seymour: 2,500.
Mr. Wright: Paris.
Mr. Seymour: 18,687.
Mr. Wright: Port Neches.
Mr. Seymour: 2,487.
Mr. Wright: And in Vermont: Barre.
Mr. Seymour: 10,909.
Mr. Wright: And Rutland.
Mr. Seymour: 17,082.
Mr. Wright: And in Virginia: Charlottesville.
Mr. Seymour: 19,400.
Mr. Wright: Exmore.
Mr. Seymour: 932.

(530)

Mr. Wright: Hilton Village.

Mr. Seymour: 1,673.

Mr. Wright: And Phoebus.

Mr. Seymour: 3,503.

Mr. Wright: That covers all those that have been checked.

As to Fox, the following are towns in which it has been agreed that Fox has an interest in all of the theatres in the town.

Mr. Caskey: Why don't you just mark it in evidence? I have got the population figures, and during recess we can just mark the population figures in?

Mr. Wright: I think that is all right.

Mr. Caskey: Will you just look at the first page, Mr. Wright? Santa Barbara has a population of more than 25,000 and should come off the list.

Mr. Wright: That should remain on the list, with that qualification.

Mr. Caskey: No. This is only a list of 25,000 or less.

Mr. Wright: I take it there is no dispute about the fact that in Santa Barbara the only theatres in the town are three Warner and two Fox. Now, if there is a dispute about that fact, we don't offer it; if there is not, we do offer it.

(531)

Mr. Caskey: I am perfectly willing to concede that there are two Fox theatres, to the extent of my knowledge.

Mr. Wright: Do you concede there are three Warner theatres?

Mr. Caskey: Just a minute. The figure is 34,958.

Mr. Wright: You say you have a list with the population figures on it?

Mr. Caskey: Yes.

Mr. Wright: As to Fox, we will simply ask to have marked this list on which Mr. Caskey has noted the population figures for each town, with the exception of a few which are listed as being in the Metropolitan Los Angeles area.

We can mark that as Government's Exhibit 371 for identification.

Mr. Caskey: Mark it in evidence.

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable. It will be received, I take it.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 371.)

Judge Bright: What is it a list of?

Mr. Wright: That is a list of Fox towns which have been checked so far by the defendants and found to be towns in which all of the theatres are those in which Fox has an interest. That is, towns of less than 25,000. The list as it went in excludes Santa Barbara in which that situation prevails, but is a town of over 25,000.

Mr. Caskey: Now, Mr. Wright, will you stipulate in connection with this that in all the other towns in which Fox operates, a list of which has already been marked in evidence, that there are independent competing theatres?

Mr. Wright: We shall not so stipulate. As I understand it, there are a number of situations where our reports have shown that the town was a closed town, where there has not been a satisfactory reconciliation of the discrepancy.

Mr. Caskey: Well, how many are there of those?

Mr. Wright: I do not know how many there are, but there are number.

Mr. Proskauer: We shall endeavor to narrow the area of difference if you will tell us how many you claim.

Mr. Wright: He knows how many we claim. You have the data.

Mr. Caskey: Four or five towns? We have got it right here. How many are there? You count six? I will take your count. I am not asking for a concession; I am asking for a stipulation that in all the other towns in which Fox or National has theatres except those on this Exhibit 371 and six unidentified ones there is competition.

Mr. Wright: We will give you no such stipulation.

(533)

Mr. Caskey: There are other theatres operating.

Mr. Wright: There are other towns in which no survey was made in which I think there is no operating competition. There are towns of more than 25,000 in which there is no independent competition.

Mr. Caskey: We are trying to narrow the ambit of this case, and so far unsuccessfully. Will you make it under 25,000?

Mr. Wright: I repeat that our reports, in so far as I know, I have no assurance that they cover all of the towns under 25,000 in which Fox operated. There certainly can be no dispute about the facts. If you can make available to us the data on those towns, we shall be glad to stipulate it with you as to any town where you operate.

As to RKO and Loew we have received no checked reports, and we think the situations of that character in which they are involved are not sufficiently consequential to make that proof at this time anyway. We will rest on what we have offered.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: My associate calls my attention to the fact that the situation in the record as it now stands as to Exhibits 48, 88, 97, 100, 106, we should state that the offer of the interrogatory answers which are contained in those exhibits should include the answers to 50-A, 52, which were inadvertently omitted from the descriptions opposite those exhibits.

(534)

Judge Bright: 50-A and what?

Mr. Wright: The answers to 1939 interrogatories, 50-A and 52. That applies to Exhibit 48. 48 as it stands merely refers to 51 and 53. These two numbers should be added. And the same thing applies to 88.

Judge Bright: What is the next one? 48. And what is the next?

Mr. Wright: 88.

Judge Hand: 50-A and 52 added to 88?

Mr. Wright: Yes. That is on page 36, and they should also be added to 100, which appears on page 47, and 106, which appears on page 53 of the list.

Judge Bright: The same interrogatory answers to each one of these, is that right?

Mr. Wright: 106 was already in evidence, but only as to 51 and 53. We are now including 50-A and 52.

Judge Bright: Is that the last one?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I am also informed that the defendants will now stipulate to certain testimony of Mr. Phillips, which would make competent the exhibits identified as 164 and 358, which were the statements of the theatre holdings of the United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., providing we agree that he would also give testimony which they have written (535) out here which they apparently desire to have in; and with the understanding that that is, of course, their testimony and not offered by us, I have no objection to adding that to the stipulation as to what he would say, if called.

Judge Hand: This is 164 and 358?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I believe the stipulation is as follows: That if called to the witness stand Mr. Phillips, the vice-president of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., would state that these two schedules, 164 and 358, are accurate statements of the holdings of that corporation in subsidiary corporations and in theatres as of March 30, 1940, that being 358; and March 1, 1945, that being 164, respectively.

Judge Hand: 164?

Mr. Wright: Yes. And that if further called as a witness —presumably as a witness for the defendants—

Mr. Caskey: Or on cross-examination.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing)—he would testify that United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. is a holding company organized for the purpose of investing its funds in the stock of theatre-owning companies; that it does not and never has operated any theatre, and that it does not and never has had any facilities for operating theatres. I suppose that means operating them directly, because as the chart shows, it does appear that it holds substantial interest in operating companies.
(536)

Mr. Proskauer: I suggest that either Mr. Wright is going to take our stipulation or he is not. I don't know what these interpolations are, partly because I can't hear them. But we have done everything to facilitate him in this. This company has never owned any theatres or operated any theatres.

Mr. Wright: That he would further testify that United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. acquired its stock interest in Metropolitan Playhouse, Inc.—that is one of the companies referred to in the schedule—and thus indirectly its stock interest in Skouras Theatres Corporation and Randforce Amusement Company—that interpolation is the witness's and not mine in a 77B proceeding in this Court with the approval of Judge Mack.

That he would also testify—and as to this I have some doubt as to precisely what is meant—I think we ought to understand each other on this: that its affairs are separately conducted by its own board of directors, and that none of the defendants participate in the management of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.

Now, I take it this is not intended to contradict the other evidence in the record that Mr. Joseph Schenck does act as the president of the United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., and that he is also associated with Twentieth Century-Fox; nor is, it, I suppose, intended to contradict the evidence we have offered as to the extent of the agreements which have been made between this defendant and other defendants.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors—

Judge Hand: I do not see any propriety in your talking about what they intend and all that by stipulation. If you are putting in a stipulation, put it in.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Judge Hand: That is a matter of argument.

Mr. Wright: That he would also testify that to his knowledge United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. has not conspired or combined with the defendants, or any of them, to restrain or monopolize interstate trade or commerce.

Well, we will stipulate that if permitted to testify in those terms, which calls for a conclusion—

Mr. Proskauer: I don't know what you are saying, Mr. Wright? Are you agreeing to it or not?

Mr. Wright: We agree that as to that statement that he would so testify.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all we are asking for.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —if permitted over our objection, that such testimony as that is irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial; because the conclusion he is attempting to draw is one for the Court and not for him.

Mr. Rafftery: Mr. Wright, purely for the record, we did not consent over here. You said the defendants consented. (538)

At the opening of your statement of concession you said the defendants had consented to the introduction of the two exhibits and the making of that stipulation. Will you please eliminate us from your statement of concession, because we did not consent from over here. We never heard of it until just now.

Mr. Wright: I suppose the stipulation is not worth much if you gentlemen desire to contest the facts that are stated there.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, as to the five of us we will stipulate that on cross-examination Mr. Phillips would testify to what is on that sheet.

Mr. Wright: That has already been done.

Mr. Proskauer: I did not know what you meant by saying calling him as our witness, or objecting to something as irrelevant. We made a concession that we will let you put in that evidence as to what he would testify to if you would concede that on cross-examination he would testify to what is on that sheet of paper.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I should have called to your attention—and I apologize to you—that at lunch time I made some pencil corrections in the corporate names on those schedules which may not have been called to your attention, but which I am sure are accurate.

(Government's Exhibits 164 and 358 for identification received in evidence).

Mr. Wright: At this time I should like to rest our case subject to those qualifications that we shall of course continue to search for and attempt to locate I think one or two missing contracts and offer them when located. We shall also, of course, expect to incorporate in the record when produced some interrogatory answer data that has still not yet been furnished to us by the various defendants.

In so far as the charts are concerned that were marked in evidence, we shall follow the procedure suggested by your Honors, and in the event that an agreement can be reached, as I think it can, we shall also offer those. In the event an agreement could not be reached, we would have to call, I suppose, Mr. Borwick with his worksheets and have that testimony; but I think that in accordance with the Court's suggestion we can work out agreement on the mathematics of the charts and the descriptions that are contained in them.

Now, by attention is called to the fact that 181 has just been located, and we will ask that that be marked in evidence.

Mr. Proskauer: What is 181?

Mr. Wright: That is a license agreement for the exhibition of Loew pictures in Warner theatres.

(Government's Exhibit 181 for identification received in evidence.)

(539A)

Mr. Wright: My attention is called to 171, which we will withdraw at this time.

(540)

And I also call attention to the fact that we have requested data from other so-called Paramount partners similar to that contained in the letters already received as Exhibits 167 and 169, and we should like, of course, to eventually incorporate that, as received, under the same kind of stipulation that the existing exhibits went in.

Mr. Seymour: It is correct, Mr. Wright, that the request for that information was made by you of the local companies, and you are waiting on them and not on us.

Mr. Wright: That is quite correct. We wrote them direct for that data and we have not received responses from some.

Judge Hand: Subject to these items, you close?

Mr. Wright: Right.

Judge Hand: Counsel were anxious to have time to get themselves together and organize for the defense. We think that three weeks is altogether too much, and we give you until a week from Monday at ten-thirty, and then go on full blast. So that we will adjourn now until the 22nd of October at ten-thirty a.m.

Mr. Seymour: May it be understood, your Honors, that when we come back we may then make any motions on the record we may want to make with respect to this case?

Judge Hand: Oh, yes, you may make any motions to reserve your rights. We will undoubtedly require you to go into your full case. As to your case, Mr. Raftery, we are not so sure.

Mr. Raftery: May we make our motions on the return day?

Judge Hand: You may do so the same day. Probably the Government can make clear just what their contention is as to whether we should require you to put in evidence or not.

Mr. Schwartz: May I make a further request of your Honors? In view of the fact that it is rather unclear as to the position that the Government puts us in at the moment, if there is any brief or memoranda to be submitted by the Government, could we get a copy of it in advance so we could meet the issue squarely and save a lot of time?

Judge Hand: Do you want to submit any?

Mr. Wright: We should be glad to submit one if the Court desires it, and I will cover any specific points that you have in mind.

Judge Bright: I would like you to state exactly what you claim is shown by these exhibits. We haven't seen them. We haven't the slightest idea what you are driving at because we haven't read anything yet.

Mr. Wright: That is quite right. I was speaking with respect to United Artists, Columbia and Universal. (542)

Judge Bright: I would like you, on the whole case, either to make an oral statement, or submit some memorandum, just so we will know what you claim you have proved.

Mr. Wright: Our trial brief, I think, does in large part cover that, but I will be glad to furnish such supplemental argument as you desire.

Judge Bright: I think oral argument would do the trick, if you should be able to make an oral statement as to what you claim you have proven by this evidence at the time the motions are made.

Mr. Wright: Surely.

Judge Bright: Further briefs won't help us a whole lot.

(Adjourned until Monday, October 22, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

(543)

New York, October 22, 1945,
10:30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

Judge Hand: You may proceed.

Mr. Proskauer: If your Honor please, before we proceed, may I avail myself of the opportunity to correct certain information contained in these F.B.I. reports which were made at the time we stipulated. We have carefully checked them, and I desire to record the following as our position after checking.

We do not concede that Waverly, Massachusetts, is a town of 25,000 or less. It is not listed in the Almanac and is, we believe, merely a suburb of Boston.

We do not stipulate that there is any such town as Collin, New Jersey. We know of no such town and none appears in the Almanac.

We do not stipulate that Bala-Cynwyd, Elkins Park or Willow Grove, Pennsylvania, are such cities since they are not listed in the Almanac, and we believe them to be suburbs of Philadelphia.

As to Amber, Jenkintown, Lansdowne and Prospect Park, Pennsylvania, we concede that they are towns listed in the Almanac, but we add that we believe them to be suburbs of Philadelphia, and that the theatres in Philadelphia take clearance over them.
(544)

As to Etna, Pennsylvania, we concede that it is a town listed in the Almanac, with the qualifications that it is part of the metropolitan area of Pittsburgh, over which Pittsburgh takes clearance.

As to Beverly, Bordentown, Bridgeton, Moorestown, Mt. Holly, Pennsgrove, Riverside, Swedesboro and Woodbury, New Jersey, we did not concede when we checked the Government's reports, that Warner had any theatres therein, and we do not concede it. We will, however, concede the fact that these theatres in these towns are operated by Atlantic Theatres, Inc., which has the sole right to manage them and purchase film therefor; and that Warner Bros. owns fifty (50%) per cent of the stock of Atlantic Theatres, Inc.; that the other fifty (50%) per cent is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Amsterdam, who are not connected with any of the other defendants.

As to Delevan and Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, we did not concede when we checked the F.B.I. reports that Warner has any theatres therein. These theatres are owned and operated by Standard Theatres Company, in which Warner owns no stock whatsoever. We do not concede that we have an arrangement by which we get 25% of the profits of the operation of these theatres.

The rest of my memorandum from which I am reading relates to certain other towns as to which Mr. Wright made an inquiry of us, but which I understand he has not yet put in the record; so I will reserve those.

Mr. Frohlich: May it please the Court, is it in order for the defendant Columbia to make its motion at this time to dismiss?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to make that motion in some detail, if I may.

Judge Hand: Have you concluded your case?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we have, subject to the reservations that I made before. We have some additional material that has come in by way of supplementing what is already in the record, that is, answers to interrogatories that were not completed before, and there will be some of that material that will still come in from time to time. We can put in what we have.

(546)

Judge Hand: Oh, we cannot keep this case open forever, to let material come in. You don't mean to say you are desiring to keep it open to put in material whenever you get anything? If it was important enough that might be done in any case, but we cannot have an everlasting performance here.

Mr. Wright: The sole reservations that I made——

Judge Hand: Never mind what you made.

Mr. Wright: Your Honor ——

Judge Hand: The question is, are you ready to proceed or rest? You have to do one or the other?

Mr. Wright: We are willing to rest on the material that is in the record, but, in fairness to the defendants who have furnished the interrogatory data, where they desire to furnish additional or corrected data, we have always had an understanding that we would make the addition or correction as it was presented to us. There are some of them who still haven't completed either getting the data or making such checks as they felt they ought to make, and that was the purpose of the reservation.

We also have this problem of these missing agreements which the defendants were not able to locate, and we haven't been able to find any copies, and as to those we have had to have the worksheets of the F.B.I. agents involved photostated, and are submitting those worksheets in the hope that (547) a stipulation may be reached on those without the necessity of getting the agents, one of whom is some distance from the courtroom.

And, of course, as to the tabular material, we tried to follow your Honor's suggestion and submit that in revised form for further checking.

Judge Hand: You have had a whole week to further complete your case and we have to insist on termination.

Go ahead, if you have anything you want to introduce.

Mr. Wright: I have this morning the two documents that supplement Exhibit No. 230. That was the Warner lease of a Fox theatre in Philadelphia. The only document that was marked was the lease made in December, 1944, which was terminated this summer. I have asked the Warner's counsel to furnish, and they have agreed to have incorporated in the exhibit the preceding lease.

Judge Hand: It was marked by us as in here. What are you doing here?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Hand: It is marked by us in our record as in already.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I am adding to the document that is in these other two documents that I will now describe. (548)

Mr. Proskauer: Prior leases that expired?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: May I see them?

(Mr. Wright hands papers to Mr. Caskey.)

Mr. Wright: The lease dated July 28, 1936, and an extension agreement, dated July 31, 1939.

Mr. Proskauer: I don't know why you want to encumber the record with a lot of old expired leases.

Mr. Caskey: No objection, except as to materiality.

Judge Hand: Haven't you got masses of stuff in here that, if in your position is correct, sufficiently establishes it?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, your Honor, but in this case the document we were interested in was the one that I have just offered here and not the one that was actually produced. That is, the one I am now offering is the one that is tied to the Fox franchise in Philadelphia and that is the lease that I had inadvertently supposed we got the other day. We did not get that; we got the later lease. And I wanted to put in the one I intended to have in, that is all.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Caskey: What numbers will they bear?

Mr. Wright: I suggest that these be marked 230-A and B respectively, that is, the July 28, 1936, document A and (549) the extension of July, 1939, being marked 230-B.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 230-A and 230-B.)

Mr. Wright: And we also had marked for identification a letter from United Artists, dated October 17, 1945, bringing up to date the data as to the officers and managers of the corporation, which is marked for identification as 372, and we also had marked letters received from a couple of affiliates of Paramount, showing the relationship between those companies and the defendant Paramount, one of them dated October 4, 1945, from North Ohio Theatres Corporation, marked for identification as 373, and Publix Rickard Nace, Inc., marked for identification as 374, dated October 6th.

Mr. Seymour: May I see those?

Mr. Wright: Yes (handing).

Mr. Seymour: All right, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: We will offer these with the understanding that the defendants are agreeable to making the same stipulation with respect to these letters as the others, in order to avoid calling the witness to testify to what is in the letter.

Judge Hand: Where are they on the printed list?

Mr. Wright: These are not on the printed list that your Honors have there, because it did not come in until after that was made up.

Mr. Proskauer: The only thing I could hear was the (550)
"stipulation." If I am going to stipulate something, I want to know what it is that I am stipulating.

Judge Bright: Is that the stipulation, that they are received subject to correction, if the information is not complete?

Mr. Wright: Surely.

Mr. Caskey: That is 373 and 374?

The Clerk: 372, 373 and 374.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 372, 373 and 374 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we were also in the process of attempting to work out further stipulations with the defendants with respect to this data which was given by the F.B.I., but, in so far as we are concerned, it is not essential to our prima facie case, and we are content to rest without it. I assume if the parties desire to have it incorporated in the record at a later date, we can put it in.

Judge Hand: In other words, they will really come in either in their case or in rebuttal?

Mr. Wright: Or in rebuttal.

Judge Hand: All right, plaintiff rests.

Mr. Frohlich: If the Court please——

Judge Hand: I should not make any protracted motion here, because I do not believe it is in the slightest degree (551) likely, after going over these decisions, that we are going to dismiss at this stage of the case. If you want to make a formal motion, all right, but we are not going to dismiss now.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to make a formal motion on behalf of Columbia Pictures Corporation to dismiss.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, on behalf of Loew's, Inc., I wish to present a formal motion to strike out so much of the testimony as does not relate to Loew's, Inc. on the ground that to this time there has been no showing of any conspiracy, concert, or agreement between the parties. I will not argue it and present it in writing and will pass it to the stenographer to be incorporated in the minutes.

Judge Hand: Yes, all right.

(Mr. Davis's motion will be found at the end of the day's proceedings.)

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I have a motion to dismiss the petition in so far as it asks for the relief reserved and also to strike, and I would like leave to hand it to the stenographer and have it copied in the record because I rather assume your Honors will reserve decision on these motions at this time.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, to save time, may it not be understood that each of the defendants severally makes the corresponding motion in its own behalf inter alios mutatis-mutandis; that is, we move to strike all the evidence that does not relate to Warner Brothers on the ground that there has been no conspiracy proven, and we join in the motion presented by Mr. Davis and the motion presented by Mr. Seymour, making it severally on behalf of our respective clients.

Mr. Raftery: For the sake of the record, I join, first, in the motion to strike. Now, formally, I want to move to dismiss the complaint or the petition as to Universal Pictures Company, Inc. on the undisputed evidence that that company is not engaged in any business but production; it is not engaged in distribution; it is not engaged in the theatre business; and there is no proof of any kind against Universal Pictures Company, Inc. That is separate and apart from the distributing defendant which is before this Court. As to that defendant I press the motion to dismiss.

Judge Hand: We will reserve decision on all these motions.

Mr. Raftery: And as to the defendant Universal Film Exchange and Big U I move to dismiss on the grounds that the plaintiff has failed to prove facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.
(552a)

I make the same motion as to United Artists Corporation on the ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.
(553)

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, do you claim in this case any monopoly or restraint of trade in production?

Mr. Wright: To this extent only, that the effect of this market control which is, we say, made effective through distribution practices and theatre ownership of these defendants, does, to some degree, restrict production opportunities.

That is, the production situation is this, as we see it, and that is that anyone who wants to produce a picture and has got money to finance it, and a story and star, and can get a major release, can make the picture; but that the releasing system is such, the market is so controlled, that the producer, even the so-called independent producers, are dependent upon a major release in order to return the cost of an expensive picture. And to that extent we say the facts we have shown with respect to this market control do restrict producers' opportunities as well as those of distributors and exhibitors.

Judge Bright: Well, what evidence is there in the case that there has been any such thing as that occurring at any time during the period which you have covered by your evidence?

Mr. Wright: Well, there is no evidence as to a specific competitive injury to a particular producer. I simply say that as a matter of argument we would urge that one of the effects of market control of this kind is necessarily—that is, in and of itself—the very existence of the control does limit the opportunities of so-called independent producers.

Judge Hand: How does that make this particular independent producer a co-conspirator?

Mr. Wright: I did not allege that independent producers were co-conspirators. By "independent producer" now I am using the term to refer to somebody who puts his money into a picture and acts independently of any distributor or exhibitor in that respect.

Judge Hand: Which one of these is such?

Judge Bright: Universal is only engaged in production.

Judge Hand: All right, Universal. How do you hook up Universal?

Mr. Wright: Well, the producer, Universal, is hooked up, I believe, through one hundred per cent stock ownership with the Universal distributor. That company is a part of a group of corporations that form what we have referred to here as the Universal defendants. Universal is no sense an independent producer in the sense that I was using the word—that is, a producer who is independent of any of these major distributors in his production activities. And we say that even as to those who are independent through absence of any stock affiliation or ownership affiliation, they are dependent on these eight major companies for a release of their product to the extent that they want to make pictures which require large investments and need to be exploited in the metropolitan centers in order to return the cost and a profit.

Judge Bright: Well, you allege in your complaint a combination in restrain of trade and a monopoly in production.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: And a similar thing in distribution?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: And a similar thing in exhibition?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: Now you say that inasmuch as there are restraints of trade and monopolies in exhibition and distribution, that ipso facto that creates a monopoly or restraint of trade in production?

Mr. Wright: Ipso facto we say it does create at least a restraint. It does not create a monopoly to the extent that nobody else can produce pictures, because other people do produce pictures.

Judge Bright: It is a fact, isn't it, that there is real competition in production?

Mr. Wright: There is competition to this extent: there is competition, as outlined in the opening statements, with respect to story properties, for example. I do not think there is any question about that. Various producers bid in opposition to each other for those literary properties. To a lesser extent there is competition in signing up talent, although that is to some extent nullified by an exchange of so-called production talent among the producers. But there is no question but what there is a marked difference in the extent and character of the control which the defendants here are able to wield over production and the extent to which they control distribution and exhibition. But their control of distribution and exhibition does have restrictive consequences in the production field.
(556)

Judge Bright: Well, you say does have? Or might have? Which do you mean?

Mr. Wright: Does, definitely. I mean it does exist. You have this market control existing, and it has continuously existed for a substantial period of time. So, as I say, in order to exploit this market, your producer, whoever he may be, is forced to rely for an outlet on these distribution companies.

Judge Bright: Has that in any way restricted production so far as any specific evidence is concerned?

Mr. Wright: Well, if you are talking in terms of (557)
numbers of pictures produced, I suppose the evidence shows that there has been a lesser number released. However, it is purely a matter of argument as to what you attribute the release of a smaller number of features to. Simply concentration on high quality, high cost of pictures is one explanation of it. But I would concede that the evidence you have before you does not show that any particular independent producer who wanted to make a picture could not get it released by one of these distributors.

Judge Bright: Or has not?

Mr. Wright: Or has not, yes. If he can make——

Judge Hand: Now, is Universal put in here because it is a producer or because it controls a distributor?

Mr. Wright: Because of its affiliation with the distributor, Universal Film Exchanges. It is part of that combination.

Judge Hand: In other words, as a producer there is no case against it?

Mr. Wright: Separately, no. That is quite right. Separately considered there would be no case against it.

Judge Hand: Separately considered?

Mr. Wright: But it is a part of —— Judge Hand: Why don't you answer the query? As a producer there is no case against it?

(558)

Mr. Wright: That is correct, yes, sir.

Judge Hand: All right, that clarifies some part.

Judge Bright: That applies to all of the producers as such?

Mr. Wright: Yes, considered individually.

Judge Bright: Well then your case is aimed at distribution and exhibition in combination?

Mr. Wright: Quite so.

Judge Bright: Practically entirely, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: The other is merely an effect of what we have proved as to this, because they have a distribution monopoly, and restraint of trade does have an adverse effect, we say, on production activities, but that is the extent of the claim.

Judge Hand: It would have an adverse effect you would say against others than any particular defendant; it would have no adverse effect against them?

Mr. Wright: That is correct.

Judge Bright: If I understand you, if I wanted to produce I would hesitate to do it, anticipating that I might not get a market for my films; is that the idea?

Mr. Wright: I think you have a reasonable assurance that if you are a competent producer and can make a good picture, you can get one of these companies to release that film for you. But you do have a limited number with whom you can bargain, and you are dependent on one or more of them for the terms on which you release it. I would suppose that you as a producer would conceivably be better off if the distribution market were such that it were not controlled by eight companies. If you had twenty or thirty possible distribution outlets, I would assume that your production opportunities would be somewhat more competitive than they are today.

Judge Hand: Then you could not have any case, for instance, against Paramount as a producer; the case that you would have as regards Paramount would be the attempt of the other producers to restrict Paramount, and vice versa, the interlocking business. You could not have any case against any individual as a producer?

Mr. Wright: Quite right.

Mr. Raftery: If your Honors please, I did not want to press my motion or argue my motion, but this last colloquy brings me back to asking your indulgence for five minutes.

There is no more evidence in this record against any one of these three distributor defendants—and I refer to Universal, Big U, and United Artists as individuals—and that is the only way we can be classed in this lawsuit—than there is on the production issue.

Mr. Wright has put in evidence nothing but two blank forms of contract, some individual contracts with some of the individual exhibitors, showing that United sold pictures, we will say, to Warners or some of the others at a price, at a film rental; some of the contracts carried clearance, others did not. There is no proof in the record that the clearance was reasonable or unreasonable. There is no proof in the record that the price was right or wrong. They are just bare skeletons, as one of your Honors remarked the first day, and I challenge Mr. Wright to show your Honors any one way where any contract offered in evidence comes within the Interstate case, the Crescent case, U. S. v. Paramount, or U. S. v. First National.

He told us on Thursday morning, October 11th, that those four cases were the milestones. In the Interstate case there was a specific finding of conspiracy among everybody. In the Interstate case, Justice Stone, who wrote the prevailing opinion, said in effect that any one of the distributors could have put any one of the restrictive provisions in that contract that O'Donnell secured down there, provided they did it separately and independently. He also said in reference to the Paramount-Texas Consolidated affair—that is where Mr. Wright argued there could be a separate conspiracy; that is where they were discussing copyright—and in that said, granted that Paramount could have used that clause, if they did it by virtue of their copyright. He says they did not. They did it because they were forced to do it by the O'Donnell letter. That case is based entirely on conspiracy and monopoly.

In the Crescent case there is nothing in that but the trial of some situations that none of these defendants were involved in, and it is res adjudicata as to that, and that is out of this case.

In U. S. v. Paramount, tried in this court, the bill of complaint charged that the defendants formulated, adopted and agreed to use exclusively a standard form of contract with compulsory arbitration provisions. The answer admitted that charge. And on that and on that alone, Judge Thacher found conspiracy, an agreement to use exclusively compulsory arbitration; and the arbitration decision is based on that.

In the Credit Committee case it was a similar bill and answer trial, with an admission of conspiracy, and Judge McReynolds in the Supreme Court held that was against the law.

There is not one bit of evidence in against these little three, and as I pointed out on the opening day, we are being subjected to sitting through this entire trial with the hope that somehow during the trial Mr. Wright will supply some evidence against us; and I must press our motions at this time or ask Mr. Wright, and I challenge him, to produce one bit of evidence that bring us within any of those four cases which he says are the milestones.

Judge Hand: What about the Goldman Theatres case?

Mr. Raftery: In the Goldman Theatre case, if your Honors will look at the opinion, Judge Kirkpatrick found that there was a theatre called the Erlanger Theatre, run by a man named Goldman, and that each of the defendants refused to sell him any pictures.

The second finding was that if the theatre had been run by Warners and not by Goldman, they would have sold pictures to that theatre; and they held it was a discrimination; and that has nothing to do with the case here. It has been litigated, it has been tried, the Government appeared as amicus curiae in it, and there was the matter of assessing damages.

Now in that case you had a specific finding of agreement not to sell. There is no evidence in this record of that kind; there has not been one bit of evidence put in here that any exhibitor or any member of the public has been affected by anything done by any of the companies represented at this table; and that is the reason that we feel that Mr. Wright should point up to this court where we come under any of these cases, where we have violated the law, other than dropping in eight hundred contracts as to one defendant, a few hundred as to another, none of which contain any of the provisions that have been condemned in any of the judicial decisions. And that is the reason we feel that a great injustice is being done to these smaller defendants, being compelled to go through this long and protracted trial, with no proof by the Government as to any law violation by any of us.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest, your Honors—you mentioned the Goldman case——

Judge Hand: I am going to suggest—I will begin with Mr. Seymour—that there be a little discussion in answer to Mr. Wright's argument of the Interstate case, the Crescent case, the Goldman case, and also with regard to price fixing. This may be obvious to you, but I should like to hear what you have to say about cases like Bobbs-Merrill v. Straus, where they fixed a price on the resale of books. Now this does not fix any price, of course, in one sense.

Now go ahead, Mr. Seymour, if you have anything you want to say.

Mr. Seymour: Your Honor asked me some questions which I cannot answer at the moment, but I will do my best.

The Interstate case I think is correctly analyzed by Mr. Raftery when he says that depended upon a conclusion of a specific conspiracy. There there were identical letters sent out by a dominant exhibitor, and no explanation of those letters; and the court concluded that there was a conspiracy. That was the situation in a circuit down in Texas——
(564)

Judge Hand: What is that, Interstate you are talking about?

Mr. Seymour: United States v. Interstate, and I think that case depends on these particular facts, depends upon the finding of conspiracy; and as I read the majority opinion, it squarely reserves the right of the copyright proprietor to protect himself as a matter of individual action. And that is what this case will show.

Now, as far as Crescent is concerned, Paramount was not a defendant, was excused, although originally named was excused, and nothing in that case can operate as a finding or determination against Paramount. That was a local——

Judge Hand: Well, I do not think that makes any difference. It is a precedent, you know. He was suggesting it was res adjudicata.

Mr. Seymour: The essential basis of that case is the evidence which the court relied on for its findings of the improper exertion of buying power by an independent circuit proprietor. That is an independent circuit, a circuit not affiliated in any way with any of the defendants in this case.

Judge Bright: Why was Paramount excused in that case? Because it consented to the decree in this case?

Mr. Seymour: It is my impression, if your Honor pleases, that that case was pending when the consent decree was entered, and at that time Paramount and the other defendants who participated in the consent decree were dropped.

Judge Hand: You are talking about Crescent, I think, and not Interstate.

Mr. Seymour: I am now talking about Crescent, because I think the Interstate case depends upon the particular facts in the light of a particular conspiracy which the court inferred from the fact that the defendants did not explain why it happened.

Now in the Crescent case, first Paramount, and certainly these other defendants were not in the case during the trial and did not get heard.

Judge Bright: That is, the five majors were taken out because of the filing of the consent decree in this case?

Mr. Seymour: That is my understanding.

Now that case is a case involving an independent circuit, not theatres affiliated with these defendants, and it depends upon the particular facts found in that case with respect to the abuse of the buying power by that independent circuit. (566)

In other words, that independent circuit used certain methods which the court found justified relief, but that defendant is in no way connected with any of these defendants, and none of them are chargeable with what it did. So that case, I think, depends upon its particular facts, and points up the fact that in competition with the theatres of Paramount, or in which Paramount has an interest, there are a number of independent circuits in this country having, as the Crescent case shows, great power, a power which they are quite prepared to use to make the problem of distribution of pictures and the problem of protecting the revenue of the exhibitors and producers, extremely difficult. If anything, that case is an argument against any such relief, to hamstring the producers and exhibitors, as the Government asks in this case.

Now the Schine case, recently decided by Judge Knight is a case of the same character. In that case Paramount was excused as a defendant upon the entry of the consent decree, and the case depends upon particular practices by an independent circuit, a circuit not in any way connected with these defendants; and your Honors will see from these two cases, Crescent and Schine, the sort of problems that the distributors meet; and there are at the present time some hundreds of circuits—some of them are not as large as Crescent and Schine—but hundreds of circuits, and the problems that the distributors have, to sell their pictures and make a fair revenue in the teeth of such problems as are presented in the Schine and Crescent cases.

Now I am not prepared to discuss the Bobbs-Merrill case at the moment. I would like to say generally that it is our position——

Judge Hand: Well, that was the beginning of all this stuff in copyright. That is where they sued Bobbs-Merrill and Scribner in two cases for tie-in contracts really. It was the predecessor of the Patents case, the Motion Picture Patents case.

Mr. Seymour: I think there was a sale involved in those transactions.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: There is no sale involved here. The problem here under the copyright law is the right of the copyright proprietor to grant a limited right of exhibition under a license, he retaining his full copyright rights, but subject only to that limited grant; and we will satisfy your Honors, I think, as to the reason for the various protections that have been included in license contracts since long before any of these defendants had any interest in theatres.

Now the ones principally challenged here are—— (568)

Judge Hand: Oh, yes, that is perfectly true, but you have not really yet pointed out to me why there should be a difference between a license and a sale. In other words, everybody thought this was true, in the case of a sale. Those cases turned up, and those cases were to the effect that they could not control—well, subsequent events, after they had parted with their title. Now here they let a man exhibit their film with an upset price. Supposing instead of having an upset price they simply had a royalty, just a straight royalty, with no maximum-minimum or anything else—that would certainly be all right, wouldn't it?

Mr. Seymour: Well, I would think it would, and I think that—— Judge Hand: Well, I do not think anybody would claim that was not all right, unless there was some general conspiracy.

Mr. Seymour: I am sure that is so, and this is, in substance, another way of fixing the reward, and I can show your Honors that.

Now I think the difference between the problem here and the problem in the Bobbs-Merrill case, without attempting to analyze it at length, because I am not prepared to do it—I think the essence of that case is, there was an attempt to control the price beyond the first sale.

(569)

In other words, the same problem met in the General Electric case, which is still good law.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes, of course, that is perfectly true. This, of course, is an attempt to control the price of admission after the first exhibition.

Mr. Seymour: Now let me explain that to your Honors because I do not know that it has been made clear. First, it is not an attempt to control the admission price after the first exhibition.

(570)

Judge Bright: Isn't it, in effect, an attempt to do that by applying clearance and these run rules so that subsequent sales or subsequent licenses will be at a price that is impliedly fixed?

Mr. Seymour: I do not think so, if your Honor pleases. It is true that by reason of the aging process of films, the subsequent-run exhibitors are unwilling to pay and are unable to pay as high a revenue as the first-run exhibitor, and in a sense that is a result of the fact that a first-run was granted an exhibitor, and was protected by clearance. But there is no relationship between the first and second-run licenses. In other words, there is no license for first-run and the second run and the third run which attempts to control it. They are separate license contracts, each protecting the legitimate interest of the distributor in the revenue from that picture on that run.

Judge Bright: Well, it protects the exhibitor, too, doesn't it?

Mr. Seymour: There is no question about that fact.

Judge Bright: In other words, the first-run man will be expected to be protected by clearances or runs which are subsequent to his?

Mr. Seymour: There is no question about the fact that the clearance provision which gives the first run clearance over a subsequent run is a provision in which the first-run (571) exhibitor has an interest. But the main interest in the clearance provision is the distributor's interest in insuring himself the largest possible revenue.

Now, with this copyrighted article, he is entitled, staying within the law, to get an assurance of the largest possible revenue for his copyrighted work he can get; and I submit that the method used, the reasons for which we may develop by testimony in this case, the method used of providing a run, first, second or third, and licensing so that the distributor receives either a flat rental—which is really like the royalty which you suggest—or a movable rental—which is the percentage arrangement—is a proper method for him to get the reward for his copyright.

Now, the clearance provision, which was specifically recognized in this consent decree as a necessary element in the sale of pictures is a protection to the copyright proprietor for the revenue which he can receive first run. Now, the fact that it is incidentally of value and importance to the first-run exhibitor does not affect its legality; and despite the observations in the dissenting opinion, U. S. v. Interstate, it seems to us that the majority opinion does not strike at the right to have reasonable clearance arrangements. And this consent decree squarely recognized it; and the Fourth Circuit, in the Westway case, which is cited in the brief, has indicated that the Interstate case—Judge Chesnut's decision which was upheld in the Fourth Circuit, indicated that the Interstate case does not touch this situation.

Now, we will develop, I think, through evidence that through the protection of the distributor's revenue, which he has to have in order to get his money back on his pictures requires these protections, and that they are individually arranged.

Now, the essential part of the Government's attack here is some theory of conspiracy; that they are arranged by conspiracies between the distributors. Now, that is not the fact, and we will show it to your Honors. Each one of these contracts is separately made by the distributor and exhibitor.

Judge Hand: of course, they have made a claim that is greater than that. They have made a claim under the Interstate case that you simply cannot use a copyright this way in such licensing agreements, and that is what prompted me to ask these questions. My mind is extremely fluid in regard to this complex situation, which is very complex, but I am sure it is going to be decided on some of these general principles and not whether Brookline is part Boston or is still an independent town, and all that detail that you are talking about.

Mr. Seymour: I think it will, too.

Judge Hand: That will do nothing in the end but take up time.

Mr. Seymour: I think when your Honors have heard the testimony as to how these contracts are made and why they are made this way, you will be satisfied that they are made to protect the revenue of the copyright owner, and that this is a legtimate protection, and I do not think that the Interstate case stands in the way of it for a minute.

Judge Hand: Of course, Mr. Seymour, with an equal zeal they argued all these things, that they were necessary protections, those old tie-in contracts, to carry out the rights of a patentee, to carry out the rights of a copyright owner. Scribner and Bobbs-Merrill said that it was absolutely horrible to have R. H. Macy & Company dumping their books on the market so cheap that it would spoil their original sales. As a matter of policy you are getting fairly close, I think. (574)

Mr. Seymour: I think not, if your Honor please, and I hope the virtue of our position won't——

Judge Hand: It is something that intellectually puzzles me somewhat. Now, as I remember it, in this Goldman case they laid a great deal of stress—this is on an entirely different point, but the Third Circuit laid a great deal of stress—that has not gone up yet—on the current practices of the defendant.

Mr. Seymour: The Goldman case is another case which depends upon the particular fact in that case, and Judge Proskauer, whose client, Warner Brothers, was particularly involved, will, I am sure, be glad to discuss that with your Honor, but I just want to say this: our zeal in defense of this system which has been in effect since at least 1916 or 1917 in this industry, ought not to be taken against us, because other counsel were equally zealous when they were wrong. This case is squarely within, by analogy at least, United States v. General Electric, which has withstood every effort of the Government to cut to down.

Mr. Proskauer: May I say a word to try to meet what is in your Honor's mind as a source of puzzlement? I take now for my text a note in the Government's brief, "Even if individual control by a single distributor of admission prices for its own pictures were justifiable as a privilege impliedly (575)

enjoyed by a copyright owner under the Federal Copyright Act, statutory immunity for price-fixing cannot save a price fixing combination."

Without making any concession that is my idea of the law.

Mr. Wright: I don't think you read the full note, did you? You left out the last part.

Mr. Proskauer: I am sure I read all that was essential. If your Honors think I did not, I apologize. "Even if individual control by a single distributor of admission prices for its own pictures were justifiable as a privilege impliedly enjoyed by a copyright owner under the Federal Copyright Act, statutory immunity for price-fixing cannot save a price fixing combination which operates both within and outside the statutory authorities."

I believe I read all that was essential in that note the first time, and it is not my habit to misstate anything to a court.

What is this price fixing talk that has been injected into this case? Let us forget copyright for a moment. If I have a boxing kangaroo, I suppose that I am entitled to show that boxing kangaroo all over the United States for a percentage of the gate receipts and to fix the gate receipts. Here, instead of having a boxing kangaroo I have a copyrighted motion picture. I am entitled to show it. I am entitled to take a percentage of the profits, of the take at the gate, and I am absolutely entitled, in the absence of conspiracy, to fix the price which is to be charged to compensate me and be the basis of my percentage.

The Macy case is not in contradistinction to that. What the Macy case held was that if I publish a book, and I sell that book, not licensed, sell it, and I have no more interest in what my vendee does with that book, that is, no more direct interest, that I cannot arbitrarily say to him, "I forbid you to sell that book for what you please."

And when your Honor suggested tentatively, as you did a moment ago, that perhaps there wasn't any distinction between the license and the sale, I think practically your Honor overlooked the enormous area of difference between the conduct of a man who sells a book and who is not directly interested in what the book is resold for, and a man who does not sell a motion picture but licenses the production of it on a percentage basis and is directly interested.

I have talked practically. Now I will talk legally. The distinction that I have made practically is absolutely carried out in the General Electric case, to which my colleague, Mr. Seymour, referred. The distinction between a resale and a license has a legal foundation and it has an enormous practical foundation; and I suggest that when we develop this case the real issue here will be on the Government's tender of the argument that we were guilty of a conspiracy. If we were not, that is the end of price-fixing, as we see it. If we were, that brings on more talk and I am going—I can hardly envisage a finding that we were, because, as Mr. Seymour has indicated, the proof will negative any thought of a conspiracy.

That brings me to the next step in what was suggested by your Honor's observation, the Goldman case. Let us assume arguendo that I was all wrong on this price fixing. I could conceive—I could conceive—if you find that, of your enjoining us from doing whatever everybody has done in the theatre business, in the motion picture business, in every kind of exhibition business for a hundred years, that is licensing for exhibition with a percentage and a provision for what should be charged to the public. I could conceive of the remote possibility of your Honor's enjoining that, but my friend comes along and says, "no, no, no, we don't want that. We want a complete divorcement of theatre ownership from production," and that is burning down the house to roast the pig, as I said in my opening before Judge Goddard.

Coming to this Goldman case, I would be less than candid with this Court if I did not admit that in a number of local situations there had been decisions against these defendants. I would be less than candid if I did not direct your Honors' attention to the enormous difficulties in the practical operation of this business. No matter how lily-white one tries to be, we have been subject to the depredations of the Schines and the Interstate Circuit and the Crescent people, coming down on us with their enormous buying power and coercing us into doing things that the courts have held were wrong.

The only case of all these in which the gravamen of the offense was not such as to make us victims rather than perpetrators of wrong is the Goldman case, and I am going to be frank to admit that, let us assume we were all wrong in the Goldman case, and I do not believe we were for reasons that I shall suggest to you, here is a purely local situation growing up out of a history that I indicated in my opening I am going to develop to your Honors by testimony, here is a theatre which a man named Goldman buys, leaving our employ, Warners' employ, where he had an enormous salary, and he goes out and starts in opposition to us and he buys an old theatre, that had been erected in the heyday up on West Market Street—and your Honors must pardon me for a little detail here because the Goldman case was on the front page of the Law Journal, by strange coincidence, and I am sure it must be in your Honors' minds.

Judge Hand: That Erlanger Theatre in Philadelphia you are referring to now; aren't you?
(579)

Mr. Proskauer: Yes, I am referring to that. West Market Street was a street that backs up on the Pennsylvania Railroad embankment, and years ago there was a plan to take down the embankment and West Market Street was going to blossom, and two great theatres were erected there, the Erlanger, which is now in the sticks, in a theatrical point of view, and the Mastbaum, which our people built. We built also the Erlanger in combination with other people and we gave it up to the mortgagee, losing some four or five hundred thousand dollars and abandoned it years ago. That is what we thought of that theatre.

Now, Goldman comes along in the war period and he says, "I have got this theatre and I am going to every company around and I am going to demand that you take your pictures away from the theatres where you have been showing them for years and give them to me," and every single theatre-producer refused to do it, and the Court inferred, the Circuit Court did, from that unanimity that we had all agreed to boycott Goldman.

Judge Hand: Has anybody applied for a writ in that case?

Mr. Proskauer: We are about to do it, and we are debating whether to apply for a writ before or after the fixation of damages, your Honor. We have got a practice question there.

(580)

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Proskauer: But we are certainly, as we are now advised, intending to apply for a writ.

Judge Hand: I suppose they would not be very likely to grant it until the case was completed.

Mr. Proskauer: That is what is bothering us, your Honor, and I think that is what we shall have to do.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: But I am not going to ask you to overrule the Goldman case; I am going to ask you to assume arguendo the correctness of the holding in the Goldman case as applying to a most peculiar, separate and unique situation, and it may well be that you will say,—I don't know, I am going to argue against it,—Warners ought not to own all those theatres in Philadelphia. As a matter of fact, we don't have them all now. You may say, "Well, you did wrong when all of you separately say you won't sell Goldman, a poor victim of a conspiracy,"—who admitted he was making a quarter of a million dollars a year by the organization of this fight on his former employers, Warner Brothers. You may say that and you may say that the Court was right in saying that in this local area relief should be given, but again I venture to suggest that the gap between that and the Government's position, that there is a general, nationwide conspiracy, where territory is carved up by agreement and where these theatres are used for some sinister purpose, and, therefore, we must be absolutely destroyed by this theory of divorcement, the gap between that is as wide as the gap between heaven and earth.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, you referred to clearance quite frequently, and I am not sure that I understand just what the issue is as to clearance. In article VIII of the consent decree the Government stipulated or conceded that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, was essential to the moving picture industry. Is it the Government's position now that that is wrong, that it is not essential, or is it the Government's position that it is essential but that these defendants have violated it by imposing clearances that were not reasonable as to area and time?

I don't want to take a lot of time, but if I could get simple answers to that, it would help me.

Mr. Wright: Yes; well, I think that our contention is that the clearance has been abused, that these defendants have so organized the clearance structure that it no longer has any real purpose of protecting copyright privileges, but is organized for the purpose of protecting theatre operating profits and, of course, the ownership of the five principle distributors of the five largest theatre circuits has weighted the practice in favor of the device as a theatre operating profit protection rather than as a copyright protection. That is the essential thesis, I think, of the case.

Judge Hand: That is the kind of extremely vague argument that leaves me very cold. It is terribly vague. You say that it is not done to protect the copyright, but it is done more in the interest of the exhibitors. How in the world am I going to tell that, and how does that kind of argument spring from anything except a general attitude? If you read it, you would find a great deal of parallel cases, and a great deal of interest, in the book called "This Age of Jackson," where they thought for years that everything was a monopoly—everything was a monopoly—and objected to it on that ground.

I think it may be that under an extension of these decisions about sales and tie-in contracts, that this may be illegal; but to say that it is not a protection of the copyright, I must say, seems to me very unreasonable.

Mr. Wright: I would say that, of course——

Judge Hand: And I should think it was a very great protection to the copyright. Of course, when I first became district judge, I was catapaulted right into Victor Talking Machine v. Straus; I wrote the opinion in the Circuit Court of Appeals here in the Motion Picture Patents case, which was a case of infringement invalidating contracts on a different ground, not a violation of the Sherman Act, and we went under the Clayton Act, and great lawyers and great judges—in Bower v. O'Donnell and in the other case, where Judge Holmes was always for the patent owner and for the copyright owner—were on the other side. These arguments now are not foreign to those. Those cases and the copyright cases may not be conclusive at all on this case, and I do not suggest that they are, but that kind of consideration was in the air, but I do not see how you can claim that this is not an important protection of the copyright. The copyright will become, undoubtedly, almost worthless, or worth little, if there is no protection as to the price paid on other runs. Won't that be so?

Mr. Wright: Let me say this: When I said that the restrictions were not within—were not for the purpose of advancing the copyright, I meant that they are not within the limits that the courts have said the copyright owner may go.

It is true, perfectly true, that the owner of the copyright may decide that the most satisfactory way to exploit a particular area is to do it through a theatre operating monopoly; that is, it may be perfectly true that a theatre operating monopoly in an area, providing that the copyright owner gets a satisfactory percentage of the monopoly profits in the area, may be the best financial deal that the copyright owner can make in the area, that is, that that kind of system of copyright restriction will yield him more money than any other system. And in that sense those restrictions are protecting his copyright, but I say that that kind of use of copyright or patent restrictions is one which the courts, for at least the last six or seven years, have been unwilling to tolerate, and that the argument I am making for it does not require any extension of existing doctrine at all; that that falls squarely within this line of both copyright and patent cases, which hold that you cannot use your copyright or patent restrictions for the purpose of bolstering up somebody else's monopoly merely because it is more profitable for you to market your product through that monopoly, and that is our position. It is a question of law there rather than fact. We could never, as your Honor suggests, hope to show that these restrictions were not profitable to the owner of the copyright. Certainly, the way these people have the industry organized and the use of these restrictions, it is perfectly rational from the standpoint of yielding the maximum profit to the distributors. It does, however, have competitive effects which the courts have been unwilling to sanction.

Judge Hand: Do you claim that such restrictions violate (585)
the law if the copyright owner is not combining consciously with other people who have obtained a monopoly? You are putting him in the position, aren't you, of a kind of contributory infringer or something? Of course, he cannot be a contributory infringer because he owns the copyright.

Mr. Wright: I think the difference between the defendants and ourselves on this combination question is this: We say that in order to show a law violation in the use of these restrictions, we have only to show a combination between the distributor and the holder of an exhibition monopoly. They say that the distributor, acting apart from other distributors, can impose any restrictions he pleases and that he cannot be guilty of conspiring or combining with a theatre operator or group of theatre operators for the purpose of unreasonably restricting the competitive opportunities of that theatre operator's theatre opposition in showing the films. That is where the fundamental difference, as a point of law, is between us.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, may I get a clear understanding of that? It would help us very much.

Judge Hand: Let the stenographer read it.

(Record read.)

Mr. Raftery: I do not concede that, your Honor. That (586). is not the difference between Mr. Wright and these defendants here. The difference between——

Judge Hand: We cannot have everybody hopping up. Are you through, Mr. Proskauer?

Mr. Proskauer: I am going to be through by asking your Honor one question and then I am going to turn it over to Mr. Davis. I would like your Honors to inquire whether Mr. Wright has any authority to the effect that a license without conspiracy, which fixes the prices at which exhibition is to be had for percentage, is, ipso facto, illegal? Is there any authority that he can cite for that proposition of law?

Mr. Wright: We have never offered such a proposition of law. The vice in these agreements is that they do not merely get together with a theatre owner and fix the terms on which he shall exhibit their pictures, but at the same time they make restrictive agreements which determine the terms on which that theatre owner's competitor may exhibit the film, and that those are the restrictions which bring them into conflict with the law, and that even if they do not agree with another distributor to impose restrictions of that character, if it appears from the restriction, from the nature of the restrictions themselves, that they were imposed for the purpose of preventing this subsequent exhibitor from competing on fair terms with the owner of the first run, that then there is an unlawful combination right then and there between the distributor and that prior run exhibitor with whom he makes the agreement that restricts the terms on which he shall do business with the subsequent run.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, in the absence of combination, is clearance illegal? Have you changed your position?

Mr. Wright: No, I was just stating that we do not make any claim of illegality in the absence of combination, but we differ as to who may be parties to the combination. We say you can have an illegal combination——

Judge Goddard: You still contend that clearance is essential, providing it is reasonable as to time and area? If you can give me a direct answer to that it will help me, please.

Mr. Wright: We are not here, if the Court please, to determine the facts as to what is essential or what is not essential to any particular form of exploitation of the market. I think what we are here for is to determine what is legal and what is illegal. It is perfectly true that if you are going to have a system of staggered runs and clearances, you have to have clearance agreements, but in our view you do not need the network of restrictions that you have got now in order to have a market in which you have some clearance restrictions; that you cannot have clearance restrictions and at the same time have a competitive market, a market in which clearances are freely negotiated, which we say you haven't got now.

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright, when you read over those minutes I think you will come to the conclusion you did not give a very direct answer.

Judge Bright: Could you be more concrete?

Mr. Wright: Let me give a concrete example of the circumstances under which I think you could say that clearance restrictions are reasonable. If, for example, you have a situation where you say you want—it is publicly desirable, let us say, to have the film shown in the same area at staggered admission prices, beginning at 50 cents and going down to 10 cents——

Judge Hand: I do not know what you mean by desirable. Desirable to whom?

Mr. Wright: To the public, let us say.

Judge Hand: I know, but the public has no right. Now, the public has no desire.

Mr. Wright: Desire to the distributor. Let us assume that a distributor, exploiting a particular market——

Judge Hand: You are talking about the matter as though the law had some control over what a copyright owner charged for a license. It has no——

Mr. Wright: It has no control over what he charges for a license fee. The Sherman Act does modify the copyright law to the extent that it does impose limitations on the kind of restriction agreements he can make with the persons to whom he grants licenses.

Judge Hand: Yes, because of the effect upon third parties—

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: (Continuing)—and through combinations.

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is correct.

Judge Hand: It makes no difference, in other words, how desirable or undesirable it is to the public in the particular case, if these other factors are not involved, to have a cheap film or not. The public has no right to have a cheap film.

Mr. Wright: The only rights that the Sherman Act guarantees the public, as I see it, is to have a competitive distribution of films.

Judge Hand: That is true.

Mr. Wright: And that, of course, is the issue that is raised here, whether there is a free competitive market or whether the market is arbitrarily controlled by combination among these defendants in the suit.

(590)

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I rise to call the first witness. I haven't taken part in this discussion this morning, although I have found it extremely interesting, but there is one thing I want to say before I call my witness: The stubborn refusal of the Government to state its position in this case, and I use that word advisedly, the stubborn refusal to state its position is only equalled by the equally stubborn misrepresentation of the position of the defendants. I was astounded when my friend said that the defendants contended that a copyright owner was privileged to make any contract he pleased, and that that was our position. Now, of course, no such position has ever been maintained by any counsel in this case, and, I hope, by no informed counsel in any other.

There are two guiding principles here, and I suggest them and then I am going on to what is my immediate duty. I think you will find the cases fall into this partition: The owner of a patent or of a copyright monopoly is supreme within the borders of his grant, and whenever he oversteps the borders of his grant and seeks the use of monopoly to grasp upon it a monopoly outside of his grant, the action is illegal; and, second, that so long as he stays within the borders of his grant, he may use any means not forbidden by law to reap the reward of his monopoly which the grant promises to him.

That is the acid test in all these cases and I do not think you will find any decision which challenges either one of those principles. That is our position here, and we maintain that we have, in these contracts and in our conduct, stayed strictly within the limits of our copyright grant and that the means we have taken to reap our reward are not forbidden by any law of the United States.

Having said so much, because I did not want this debate to go on without my participation, having said so much, I want now to call the first witness for the defendants.

It has been agreed that we will put our cases in, our full cases, in the rotation we have previously observed. I have a witness on behalf of Loew's, Inc., whom I want to examine on some general subjects which will interest all the defendants alike. Therefore, we have arranged that I shall call my witness and examine him. I will then modestly retire, without closing the case on behalf of Loew's, Inc. and my brother Seymour will take the field for the Paramount.

I call Mr. William F. Rodgers.

---

(592)

WILLIAM F. RODGERS, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Loew's, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Rodgers? A. in Rye, New York.

Q. What is your occupation? A. I am general sales manager and the vice-president of Loew's Inc.

Q. What are your duties as the general sales manager of Loew's, Inc.? A. General supervision of all license agreements, and the operation of our branch offices throughout the United States and Canada.

Q. Do you have anything to do with the management of theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have anything to do with the purchase of films for exhibition in their theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you been in the motion picture business? A. Thirty-five years.

Q. Will you give us a brief summary of the experience you have had in the motion picture business? A. Well, I was employed in 1910 by the General Film Company, and several years later I left to go with a Mutual Film Corporation, and in both capacities I was more or less employed as a clerk. I later came back to the General Film Company as a branch manager, in Albany, I believe.

For a short period of time I was also with the Triangle Film Corporation, and again in, I should say 1915 or 1916, in that neighborhood, I returned to the General Film Company as sales manager of the company, and in 1917 I went with the Goldwyn Company.

During a period of 1917 and 1918 I was away from there and for a short period of time I worked on special duties for Famous Players-Lasky, and returned to the Goldwyn Company in 1920, and I have been there ever since, that is, the Goldwyn Company merged with Metro in 1924, but with either one of the two companies, I have been continuously employed since 1920.

Q. That makes a total span of how many years? A. Thirty-five.

Q. In short, you practically grew up with the business, I take it? A. That is right, I have had a great deal of experience.

Q. We have used a great many terms here which I think all of us understand, but I want to have definitions of them on the record, so I will begin with definitions. What is a feature film? A. We consider a feature film as a subject that is in excess of 4000 feet.

Q. Regardless of topic? A. Regardless of topic, would be considered a feature subject.

Q. What is a short? A. A short subject is 2000 feet or less, as a general thing. In some cases they have made what they call streamlined features, from 4000 or less, but we confine a short subject to, generally speaking, 2000 feet or less.
(594)

Q. What is a newsreel? A. A newsreel is a subject dealing with topical subjects of the day and, generally speaking, is less than a thousand feet in length.

Q. What is a trailer? A. A trailer is a method that is used in advertising advance entertainment. Some people refer to it as "Coming Attractions." It is a film that is shown on the screen indicating the future entertainment of that particular theatre.

Q. They come on the screen as "Next week so-and-so"? A. That's it.

Q. And it has a scene or two? A. Sometimes; sometimes it is entirely in text.

Q. They are used purely for advertising purposes? A. Advertising purposes.

Q. Rather than for exhibition? A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by general release? A. General release is a period of time when a picture is generally available to the more important places to commence its exhibition.

Q. Who fixes the time of the general release? A. In my company, I do.
(595)

Q. What is a trade showing? A. A trade showing is the result of the consent decree, in that we trade-show for the benefit of our customers each picture before it is offered to be licensed.

Judge Bright: Features?

The Witness: Each feature picture; not the short subjects.

Q. What is a road show? A. A road show is generally considered a picture that has the majority of seats scaled at a dollar and ten, or a dollar and twenty cents or better at night, for adult prices.

Q. What is meant by "preferred time"? A. Well, preferred time is the days of the week where the theatre most generally does the greatest business.

Q. What are those days? A. They differ in different parts of the country and differ in different cities and differ in different neighborhoods. Sometimes Monday and Sunday are better; other times Friday and Saturday are. It depends entirely on the locality.

Q. And the habits of the people? A. And the habits of the people.

Q. What is meant by a test run? A. A test run is in an effort to determine a fair exhibition value from a distributors' viewpoint of a particular picture. We test them in a number of cities before we are in a position to determine (596) the extent of drawing power.

Q. What is meant by a franchise? A. Generally speaking, a franchise is intended to cover an agreement for a period of longer than a year.

Q. What is meant by a blanket deal? A. Generally speaking, again, a blanket deal is considered one that embraces a number of theatres on one form of contract.

Q. Consolidate the revenues for the purpose of fixing price? A. Well, it consolidates revenues in a good many theatres. Of course, it isn't always for all the theatres involved. Sometimes it is only for a given number of theatres involved.

Q. Will you tell us just what the machinery is by which you make a sale of these, or license of these films? A. Would you like me to give you the general organization and structure of our company?

Q. Yes, general organization and structure. A. Well, we have, first, of course, our main offices here in New York, and we have 32 branch offices or exchanges, as we call them, in the more important cities in the United States, and in those offices we employ a branch manager, assistant manager, an office manager, a number of clerks, number of shipping clerks, people to inspect film, exploitation men, and salesmen; and each three or four of those offices are under the supervision of a district manager; and each four or seven of those offices is under the supervision of a sales manager. Our sales managers, with the exception of the one in New York City who supervises New York, make their headquarters in the field. For instance, our West Coast sales manager makes his headquarters in Los Angeles; we have one in the South who makes his headquarters in New Orleans, and another one in Pittsburgh who makes his headquarters there and supervises the adjacent area; another one in Chicago and so forth.

When our films are trade-shown our salesmen are routed to various sections of the individual area, in which office they represent, and they contact the theatre owners in that area for the purpose of securing license agreements.

Our district managers, plus our branch managers, solicit the business of people who we call office accounts. Those, generally speaking, are those located in the larger cities or the more important accounts of the particular office; and if the assistant or the sales manager is needed, he also participates in the negotiations and representation of our product.

And those contracts or license agreements, when they are completed, are forwarded to New York for approval or rejection. There aren't, however, many rejections. They usually are accepted on the basis of the field man's recommendations.

(598)

Q. Does all this organization act under your instructions? A. Yes.

Q. And report to you? A. And report to me.

Q. How are the films made available to the exhibitor? A. Well, that depends largely on the locality of the exhibitor, the type of theatre he has, where he is located, and his ability to pay. I said his locality, but we try, in so far as it is practicable, to negotiate what we call first runs, second runs, third runs, and so forth, in the order of their importance.

Q. I am coming to that in a moment. What I was really after was the distribution of prints and their rotation? A. The distribution of prints, of course, is one that is handled by a booking clerk. We have a number of booking clerks in our offices who supply the prints, the positive prints, that is, to the theatres with whom we have license agreements, depending upon the availability of the picture to that particular theatre.

Q. How many prints, exhibition prints, are made of each feature picture? A. That depends entirely upon the picture. We have some of which we ordered as low as 200 prints, and on some pictures, such as Gone With the Wind, we have ordered as high as five hundred. I should say, generally speaking, a fair average for our company is 300, 350.

Q. Are they delivered from the exchange to the exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then returned by the exhibitor to the exchange? A. At the completion of their engagement, for examination.

Q. And then after examination they are returned, and they are delivered to some other exhibitor? A. Booked to another theatre.

Q. So that a number of films rotate throughout your entire sales area? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of runs. What are runs? A. Well, runs——

Q. In the language of the trade? A. Sir? I did not hear that.

Q. What are runs in the trade language? A. Runs is a sequence with which the positive prints are delivered. A run is either a prior period to another theatre or a subsequent period to another theatre. The whole run of the picture is the sequence with which the positive print is supplied.

Q. How are runs classified? A. Generally speaking, according to the ability of a theatre to pay, its locality; number of matters are taken into consideration. I will get to that in a moment. There are first runs, second runs, third runs, fourth runs; how many more? A. Sometimes they go up to 18 or 20, depending again on the size of the city. I couldn't tell you offhand how many runs are involved in the metropolitan area here in New York, but I should venture the suggestion there are at least twenty or twenty-five runs.

Q. During the period of first-run, does any other theatre show the picture? A. Generally speaking, not in that particular city, no, sir.

Q. The same is true as to the second-run, no later runs show the picture in that locality? A. Later runs do not show the picture in the particular city while the second runs are playing.

Q. How many theatres does one positive reel of film serve in the course of the season? A. One print of a positive subject, it depends—you cannot do that by a general rule. It depends entirely on the territory. Take, for instance, in Texas, we can get many more runs for a picture because they are shown less frequently and the wear and tear is less great. In New York, where there are theatres which open early in the morning and play until early the next morning, with the consequent wear and tear, the call for stock is much more acute; you do not get as many runs in New York. I haven't, frankly, averaged it for some little time, but the last time I did I think we got on the average of 35 runs, 35, 40 runs for a picture.

Q. What is the cost of such a positive film, the cost of making them, not the cost of production? A. That again (601) depends on whether it is black and white or if it is in technicolor.

Judge Bright: By 35 runs, you mean 35 exhibitions?

The Witness: No, I would say 35 runs. Sometimes a theatre in New York, for instance, may run eight or ten times a day and run it for four days, but I consider myself if a theatre plays our picture three days, I consider that one run. So on the average of 35 engagements, I might say.

Q. I was asking you the cost of making one of these films? A. The cost depends on black and white or technicolor. If you order all prints that are required, or generally all that you need, the positive print of black and white approximates about a cent and a half a foot, whereas, in the case of Technicolor, it is approximately 5½ cents or five and a fraction a foot.

Q. Do you negotiate with your theatres the run which they are contracting to play? A. Either I or one or my immediate assistants do.

Q. Is that reached as a result of agreement? A. No, we generally discuss each individual theatre alone, individually, wherever it is located, except I may decide to renew an agreement that had been going on for the last six months or a year, and I will say, "Let us do the same way for the future," but, generally speaking, each theatre is considered separately.

Q. I mean, is the particular run the subject of final agreement between the exhibitor and yourself as the sales agency? A. Yes.

Q. Do you determine, you or your organization determine, what you are prepared to offer to the exhibitor? A. That is, our theatres in our company, you mean, or generally speaking?

Q. Yes, in your company. A. In my company I am the one that determines that in negotiation with our theatre people.

Q. Why is this system of runs necessary in the industry? A. As I have viewed it over a good many years, it is the only basis on which you can afford to invest the tremendous sums that today are invested, and have been for many years, in motion picture production. There must be a priority of run, otherwise, if pictures were shown simultaneously, such as they were many, many years ago, there would be no possibility of grossing the large amount of money that is necessary to gross today to warrant the investment that is made in our pictures.

Q. Why should that be so? A. Well, in the first place, there are many, many communities who cannot afford to charge an admission price such as the admission price that is charged by the larger theatres, and in the days when all theatres charged very, very modest sums and pictures were shown simultaneously in all different types of theatres, you did not gross as much per picture in those days, as a result of those matters, as you now spend for a matter of footage in the production of pictures. In other words, I remember some of the most successful short subjects that were made, many, many years ago, that grossed in those days, and we thought was very great, $20,000 a picture. Well, $20,000 for a picture today would not hardly give you time to turn around. And that sort of thing was abandoned many, many years ago, because, with the increase of the cost of production, it was necessary to seek other means, other avenues of return, to justify that cost, cost of ever increasing demand for better stories, better writers and everything else that goes to make up production, and from that developed the runs.

Q. When was the practice of runs started? A. Runs with priority over each other, or one subsequent to another, I should say, must have started in the neighborhood of twenty—some twenty-four, twenty-five years ago—23, somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q. Have they been continuously employed since that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I asked you the reason for adopting this system of runs. Has the habit of the public anything to do with it? A. Well, the habit of the public has this much to do with it. (604)

As I say, first, they live in neighborhoods many of which could not support a theatre that charges as much as the downtown or larger theatres. Then, in addition to that, the public, if all runs were shown at the same time, would miss a picture that they were particularly interested in and it would be gone, whereas today there is a staggered number of runs and if a person missed a picture in one particular theatre, he can usually find it in another for a good long time to come. And then again it would be impossible, practically, to supply any larger number of runs simultaneously.

Q. Is there anything in the eagerness of human nature to see a thing first? A. Very definitely.

Q. There are people who will pay money for that privilege, aren't there? A. There are.

Q. What are the factors that dictate the selection of theatre A for a first-run or theatre B for a second, or theatre C for a third? A. There are a great many factors that have to do with that. There is locality, management, showmanship ability, location, their price of admission, length of run —there are so many, many factors you take into consideration.

Q. I want to read to you from the consent decree, Section 10, Paragraph C, and ask you to follow this closely. This section provides that "In determining whether the exhibitor's complaint"—that is, as to a run—"is established by the evidence, the arbitrator shall take into consideration, among other things, the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed: the terms, if any, offered in respect of each of the two competing theatres, the seating capacity of each said theatres; the capacity of each for producing revenue for the distributors; the character, appearance and condition of each, including its furnishings, equipment and conveniences; the location of each of said theatres; the character and extent of the area and population each serves; the competitive conditions in the area in which they are located; their comparative suitability for exhibition of the distributor's features and the run requested; the character and ability of the exhibitor operating each and his reputation generally in the industry and in the community for showmanship, honesty and fair dealing; the policy under which each of the theatres has been operated and the policy under which the complainant proposes to operate his said theatre if he obtains the run requested; the financial responsibility of the exhibitor operating each of said theatres, and the distributor's prior relations with each of the two theatres involved and with their owners and operators and any equities arising therefrom."

Do you consider all these factors in deciding a run? A. I certainly do, but I think that is a very, very proper way to consider it, too.

Q. Are there any others that occur to you which are omitted from that catalog? A. I don't remember.

Q. I notice the last thing in that catalog of factors is the distributor's prior relations with each of the two theatres involved. How does that enter into the subject? A. From our point of view that enters into it with me very strongly.

Q. How so? A. Well, we have had many, many years in which to finally determine on the best runs for our product and the best outlets for our pictures. We have given all these matters due and careful consideration that you have cited there, and when a man who has been dealing with us for a period of years qualifies under all of those, I see no reason for considering changing him. And therefore the man who has been a customer of ours for a period of years has a very good standing in our eyes.

Q. Do you negotiate this question of runs theatre by theatre? A. Our company does, yes, sir. Our representatives, rather.

Q. Do you negotiate with theatres owned by any of the co-defendants in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you apply to the theatres owned by your co-defendants, or by the co-defendants at bar—do you apply the same criteria that you do to theatres owned by independents? A. Yes, sir.

(607)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think that question calls for a conclusion that the Court rather than the witness would find from testimony as to what was actually done in those situations. I do not think it is proper for this witness to make the statement in that form.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Davis: Will you read the question and answer?

(Question and answer read.)

Q. Do you give any preference to any theatres owned by the co-defendants because of their ownership? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

Q. Do you have any agreement, contract, understanding or concert of action with the defendants, the co-defendants, or any of their officers or agents with reference to the runs that should be given to any particular theatre? A. No, sir.

Q. Is that an entirely independent determination on your part and on the part of your company? A. Entirely on my part.

Q. What is clearance? A. Well, clearance is linked up very closely with the matter of runs. There are some places where the sale of the run suffices; whereas in other cases the matter is defined as clearance, and sometimes they are used together. Clearance is the period of time elapsing between one showing and another, or one engagement and another, I should say. Sometimes it is measured from the last exhibition day of a prior run. Some specific period, depending upon the individual situation involved.

Q. What is the reason for it? A. Well, the reason has been established, again over very many years. Generally speaking, clearance for a certain period is given to a theatre who plays prior and is in a position to pay greater returns to the distributor than the succeeding runs. Therefore it is felt by us as a distributor that he should be given a certain amount of priority. That priority differs, depending entirely on the situation involved or the locality involved, I might say. It runs from six days to three months, depends entirely on the theatre and its location, its operation, and all of those other elements that you have just recently read.

Q. Why should it be a matter of importance, the exhibitor holding the first-run, that the second-run should not begin for a specific period after his run was ended? A. Well, if you did not give a reasonable period of time, that second-run house would be advertising the product while the first-run house is playing it. In addition, the run that followed the second-run house would be advertising the picture before the second-run played it or while he was playing it; and as you go down in the sequence of runs, each theatre has the period of time, or each group of theatres sometimes has the period of time elapsing between one showing and another; and only in that way are you able to handle their collective business with the limited number of prints that you can afford to buy.

Q. How long has that system of clearance been in use? A. For approximately the same period of time that the runs have been in use, 20 to 25 years.

Q. Well, do you and your organization determine the amount of clearance to which your customer theatres are entitled? A. Yes, that is determined by us but is brought about by negotiation and the consideration of a great many elements. Again, the type of theatres and a great many other things.

Q. Well, let me read you again from paragraph 8 of the Consent Decree, and I will ask you to follow this closely:

> "In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the Arbitrator shall take into consideration the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

"(1) The historical development of clearance in the particular area wherein the theatres involved are located;

(610)

"(2) The admission prices of the theatres involved;

"(3) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

"(4) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

"(5) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor defendant from such theatres;

"(6) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage; and

"(7) All other business considerations, except that the Arbitrator shall disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres."

Do you consider those factors in determining upon clearances? A. They were considered in determining clearance.

Q. Are there any others which occur to which are not included in that list? A. I could not recall any at the moment, no, sir.

Q. Do you, in fixing clearance, disregard the fact that the theatre involved is affiliated with one of these co-defendants or with a circuit of theatres? A. I do, yes, sir.

Q. Is that negotiated theatre by theatre? A. Theatre by theatre.

Q. And on the merits of the particular theatre involved? A. And on the merits of that particular theatre. In fact, all of our negotiations are by individual theatres.

Q. Is there any agreement, or has there been any agreement between yourself, your organization, or Loew's, Inc. with any of the defendants in this case as to the time or place of clearance, or the grant itself of clearance to any particular theatre? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that calls for a conclusion that can only be drawn from the evidence in the case as to what was done in these situations, what these agreements are. I do not think this witness is competent to give that answer.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Now I come to contracts, Mr. Rodgers: You told us what franchises are. A. Yes.

Q. Are there any franchises outstanding between Loew's Inc. and any exhibitor? A. No, sir.

Q. Has Loew's ever indulged in granting franchises? A. Yes, sir, but not lately.

(612)

Q. Can you tell me in its entire history how many franchises Loew's has granted, how many to the defendants or corporations affiliated with them, and how many to independent exhibitors? A. Well, I had that record prepared a short time ago. I believe altogether——

Q. I will let you refresh your memory. You say that was prepared by your direction? A. Yes.

Judge Bright: What did you say a franchise was?

The Witness: A franchise was an agreement to supply the product for a period longer than one year, usually two years or longer.

A. (Continuing) Well, we had had franchise agreements with those who are affiliated with the defendants, a total of 46 for less than five years, during the history of our company; with six that we had made for a period of ten years; and seven we had made for five years, or a total of 59 such franchises. And to the individuals or so-called independents during a similar period we had granted 154 franchises. In other words, a total of 213 of which those associated with the defendants had 59.

Q. And all those have now expired? A. They are all expired.

Q. Are you granting franchises currently? A. No, sir.

Q. Why not? A. Well, the consent decree prohibits it.

Q. Well, explain just how and why the consent decree prohibited franchises? A. Well, I might add to that the consent decree did prohibit it. Whether it does or not at the moment, I am not prepared to say definitely, but we have respected the terms of the consent decree which require us to trade show each picture before it was offered to be licensed. So, therefore, for the most part we are offering to license to theatres but four and five pictures at a time because that is as many as we can get together at one time.

Q. Well, the franchise is a contract entered into before the pictures are made? A. Yes.

Q. And cover the output or a portion of it for a certain future period? A. Generally speaking, the output for a period.

Q. So if you trade show, of course you can't contract for pictures that are not yet in being? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, franchises aside, what is your other form of contract? A. We have a form that we call license agreement which applies to each group of pictures as they are offered; or if we sell an individual picture, it applies to that. And as I say, generally speaking, they are now offered either individually or in groups of four or five pictures at a time.

Judge Hand: Why do you offer them in groups of four or five? I suppose you do not offer more perhaps because of the provisions of that decree?

(614)

The Witness: Well, I must show them first, and I can't get more than four or five together, as a general thing, to trade-show, and therefore I am limited in the number of pictures I can sell.

Judge Bright: Well, you are limited to five anyway, aren't you?

The Witness: Well, we were limited to five, but to be frank with you, I think that there was some misinterpretation that we always felt we were limited to the number that we could show; so therefore, for my company, when we were in a position once or twice to show 10 or 12, we offered the 10 or 12, but after they were trade-shown we gave a cancellation privilege on those.

Judge Hand: This is all a mystery to me. Why do you have four or five instead of one?

The Witness: Well, to be frank with you, that is more for our customers' convenience; and so many theatres play so many pictures, that it is very difficult for them to buy small quantities at once. They would rather buy larger quantities.

Q. Why? A. Well, in the first place they seem to think, I believe, that they can buy them cheaper, No. 1; and secondly, and of equal importance, is that it permits them to have a sort of a sense of security; if they would have a year's product at one time it would relieve them of the necessity for buying each month or each two months.

Q. Well, if they get a group of five, do they like to buy them in groups in order to secure certain exhibition time for their threatres? A. Well, they don't care particularly about buying them in groups, but they would certainly rather buy five than they would one, because the transaction would be just multiplied five times, and they must make their bookings in advance, and they like to set their bookings as far as they can. So the theatre owner would rather buy in the larger group.

Q. I show you what purports to be an exhibition contract, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, distributed by Loew's, Inc., form No. 1221-15M-3-45, and ask you whether this is the current form of contract license that you are employing? A. Yes, sir, that is the current form of contract form that we are using at the present time.

Mr. Davis: I offer that in evidence. I think that will be Loew's Exhibit 1, will it not?

Mr. Wright: We have no objection, but if there are any differences of substance between this form and the one we offered for the 1943-44 season, I think they ought to be pointed out.

Mr. Davis: I am not sure whether there are any or not. I have not compared them. The shorter is somewhat abbreviated, and I do not accept the summary which is in your exhibits.

(616)

Mr. Wright: May we have copies?

Mr. Davis: They are all copies.

Q. Why this different coloring, Mr. Rodgers, on these? A. They all go to different departments. One copy after it is approved goes to a sales manager, possibly; another one goes to a district manager; one goes back to the branch; and, of course, the theatre owner must get his copy, and that is the reason they are all different colors.

Judge Bright: Are they all identical?

The Witness: They are all identical, yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: I shall ask to have the white one marked in evidence, as I want to ask some questions about it, and perhaps your Honors would be content with a pink, a yellow and a green.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-1)

Q. I notice on this exhibit, Mr. Rodgers, a series of squares marked "Top Bracket", "2nd Bracket", "3rd Bracket", "4th Bracket" and "5th Bracket." What is the meaning of those? A. Well, in those spaces are inserted at the conclusion of negotiations the prices that had been agreed upon to be charged for pictures that would be designated in any one of five brackets. We classify our pictures in five different brackets.

(617)

Q. You classify them from what point of view? A. From their ability to draw at the box office, which is determined after our test runs.

Q. Are you always right about it in your classification? A. No, sir. We sometimes err, not often.

Q. Does the bracket in which the picture is entered have anything to do with the price you charged for it? A. Yes, sir; we charged that price that is in that bracket. If we designate a picture in the second bracket, that is the price that is charged as film rental, or the terms that are charged.

Q. What do you do if it proves that your prophecy was wrong and the picture does not belong in as good a bracket as you gave it? A. We move it into the bracket where it does belong, immediately.

Q. On your own motion or on an application of the exhibitor? A. On our own motion when we know it; but when we don't know what the receipts were, an application on the part of the exhibitor will straighten it out immediately.

Q. Now, I notice to the right of this exhibit what is called a sliding scale table. Will you explain that to me? A. Well, a sliding scale is a percentage arrangement whereby our percentage of the gross receipts in that particular theatre is measured by the amount of business that the theatre does. We will agree with the theatre owner to start off at a certain figure, and before we can earn any more money the gross receipts must increase, and as they increase our percentage of the gross increases.

Q. I was a little ahead of my story. You have license fee or rental or minimum guarantee; you also have license fee, percentage of all gross receipts. Which of those methods, or both, do you employ? A. We employ them both. As a matter of fact, we have no fixed policy. We have a very flexible policy. We prefer to play on a sliding scale. If that does not suit the pleasure or convenience of our customer, we will play on a guarantee with the sharing arrangement, or in some instances we will even play on a flat rental if we can get enough.

Q. What proportion of your contracts are on a percentage of gross receipts? A. Well, that would be pretty hard to answer unless you call for specific pictures. I would say there are some pictures in which we have a participating arrangement with every theatre we do business with, without exception; and there are other instances where I would say the smallest percentage of theatres play flat rental. The largest percentage will have some kind of a participating arrangement.

Q. What is the reason for playing some pictures flat rental and others on percentage? A. Well, for the most (619)
part the most successful pictures are those which cost the most; and I have never found it possible to get in the way of a flat rental a sufficient price that would assure me of having at least an opportunity to handle the picture profitably. But by handling it on percentage, we have an opportunity to share if the picture develops that particular type of gross; and then, in addition to that, we have a chance to profit if the gross receipts so justify.

Q. Is there any advantage to the exhibitor in fixing compensation on a percenage rather than a flat rental basis? A. I think there is a very definite advantage to the exhibitor.

Q. What? A. Well, in other words, he pays what he figures to be a fair proportion of receipts if the picture develops. In our sliding scale it is most advantageous to the theatre to play on that basis because he rarely, if ever, can be hurt under such arrangement. He buys pictures at a minimum percentage term and does not increase them unless the gross receipts of the theatre are materially increased; so it is particularly to his advantage.

Q. Now, I find on this exhibit in red ink a special offering of a picture called "Weekend at the Waldorf." How does the offering of that picture differ from the five that are in the group named at the top of the exhibit? A. That is (620) one where we want participating arrangements everywhere, and that is sold independent from the group entirely. It is not necessary for them to buy it in order to get the group, nor is it necessary for them to buy the group in order to get that one.

By Judge Bright:

Q. There is some reason for that, isn't there? A. You mean both in the same contract?

Q. Some reason for putting "Weekend at the Waldorf" in red ink. A. Well, the reason for that is, again, respecting the consent decree or its provisions. This was a special picture on which we wanted participating arrangements, and I wanted specifically to call to the attention of the trade, and for Mr. Wright's information if it fell into his hands, that we would not use an individual picture to sell a group, nor were we using the group to sell an individual picture. Each had to stand on its own merit. And the reason I put them in the same sheet—this was made up several months ago, this contract, four or five months ago—was at that time in an effort to conserve paper. Otherwise I would have had two separate contracts. That is the reason for it being in red ink.

Q. Was the reason because of the fact that this particular picture is shown in Radio City? A. It had not been (621) contracted for at that time in Radio City when this contract was made up, but I knew it would be contracted for specially, and it deserved unusual terms.

By Mr. Davis:

Q. Who prepares this form of contract? A. Well, I supervise it. It is done in our office here in New York by various associates of mine, but the authorship of that particular arrangement, I suppose, is mine.

Q. Do you, or has any officer of your company, any agreement, contract or understanding with the co-defendants or any of their agencies for the employment of a common form of contract? A. No, sir.

Q. Has there ever been any such agreement so far as you know? A. Not for many, many years, not since Judge Thacher's decision, no sir. There was a uniform contract at that time.

Q. It did exist, did it not, prior to 1928 in the trade conference era? A. Yes, in which exhibitors and distributors participated, but not since that time.

Q. And they participated in the trade conference under the aegis of the Federal Trade Commission, isn't that so? A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Since that time there has been no agreement on uniformity? A. None whatever.

Q. Now, I notice a line on this exhibit "Net Admission
(622)
Prices Per Person—Orchestra—Balcony—Children under 12—Matinee—Evening—Adults and Children of 12 and over."

What is written into that when the contract is complete? A. Well, inserted there are the admission prices that the theatre owners give us as their minimum prices for each particular period of the day, or the division, as you cite, between adults and children. That is the prevailing price, the minimum price that the exhibitor is charging at the time that agreement is negotiated.

Q. Do you fix that minimum or does the exhibitor fix that? A. Oh, no, I do not fix that. The exhibitor fixes that. That is his price.

Q. He prices the theatre and his admissions and you write it in accordingly? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has he the power to increase such price if he wants to? A. Yes, indeed he has.

Q. Does that occur from time to time? A. I am sure that it does; a number of instances.

Q. Have you looked up that question with particular reference to the film "As Thousands Cheer" to ascertain how many theatres exceeded their minimum admission? A. I could not tell you, but I am sure it must be hundreds.

Q. Well, I show you a memorandum and ask if that refreshes your recollection. How many theatres showed "As (623)
Thousands Cheer" (handing paper)? A. I believe in the neighborhood of fifteen-thousand-some-hundred theatres.

Q. How many first-run? A. Well, I have not segregated it by first-run, Mr. Davis. I could not tell you how many first-run. That has always been a difficult question for me to define, how many first-runs are there really.

Q. Well, we will have something more on that later. I am asking you now by way of illustration in how many cases did the exhibitors exceed their minimum prices? A. 346 cases of the number of contracts that we had of record; it was 346 cases that increased their admission prices.

Q. Out of how much? Let me see that memorandum a moment. A. Out of an examination of 3600 theatres.

Q. Yes. These figures are taken, are they not, from those of the 416 cities with more than 25,000 population? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Showing 3631 theatres? A. That is correct.

Q. And among those theatres you have reports of admission prices of 3237? A. Yes.

Q. And in 346 of that latter number they exceeded the admission price? A. Than had been provided for in the contract, yes, sir.

Q. How many such license contracts are made by Loew's, Inc. in the course of a season? A. Well, we do business and we sell approximately—well, we sell as low as 7000 contracts and as high as fifteen-thousand-some-hundred.

Q. How many theatres are there in the United States? A. Approximately 17,000.

Q. Well, while we are on that, what is the Film Daily Year Book? A. The Film Daily Year Book is a publication that is issued once a year by the publishers of the Film Daily.

Q. Is it regarded as a reliable publication? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a current reference book in the trade? A. Yes, for very many topics.

Mr. Davis: Well, I should like to offer as an exhibit a reprint of pages 7 and 8 of the Government's trial brief with an added column of the number of theatres taken from the Film Daily Year Book. I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: Of course, I assume that for the most part these exhibits offered by individual defendants are not exhibits as against their co-defendants. I do not make any objection to this. The exhibits will have individual numbers; they are offered in support of the individual defense of the case.

Mr. Davis: I can assure you that I have no malicious purpose toward any of my co-defendants. Indeed, if any of them told me that this exhibit was in any respect harmful, I would not offer it. Just so much concert of action in this case.

Mr. Proskauer: I desire to embrace the offer of concert. This exhibit can certainly be offered on my behalf.

Mr. Wright: I do not think we have any objection to the exhibit as such. I might say we don't have the same confidence Mr. Davis has as to the reliability of the Film Daily figures. Our experience is that many are not accurate.

Mr. Davis: I have proved that that is a recognized and respectable publication.

Mr. Wright: For the purposes of this exhibit the figures there seem to be roughly correct.

Mr. Davis: I offer that in evidence.

Judge Hand: Received.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-2)

Mr. Davis: Your Honors will notice that it raises the previous estimates of the theatres in the United States to 18,076.

By Mr. Davis:

Q. I believe you said, Mr. Witness, that you had nothing to do with buying films for exhibition in the Loew theatres? A. That is correct, I do not.

Q. Did you mean to include films which Loew's itself producers in that statement? A. Well, even in that position, I am a seller to Loew's theatres, not the buyer for them.
(626)

Q. Do you have to negotiate with the Loew's theatres as if you were a stranger? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is on the buying end of that proposition? A. There are two gentlemen, Mr. Joseph Vogel and Mr. Charles Moscowitz.

Q. They each have an organization, I suppose, to assist them in buying? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you sell your Loew's pictures to them as if you were selling to a stranger? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find them hard traders? A. Sometimes.

Q. Do you in selling your pictures to Loew's theatres inquire what pictures Loew's are buying from other producers? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you in negotiating your contracts with third parties or with the co-defendants pay any attention to what they are buying from Loew's? A. No, sir.

Q. I mean what they are selling to Loew's. Of course you would pay attention to what they are buying if you are selling to them. A. Oh yes.

Q. But do you pay any attention to what they are buying from others? A. I have no interest in that.

Q. Do you make the licensing of a film to a theatre affiliated with any of the co-defendants dependent as to price, terms or duration on what that co-defendant may be licensing to you? A. No, sir.
(627)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that again calls for a conclusion that I do not think he is competent to draw.

Judge Bright: Is all of this licensing throughout the United States cleared through your office?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell me how many such contracts as this I have just exhibited are executed in the course of a season? A. Well, for an individual picture I should say we execute as many as fifteen-thousand-some-hundred agreements, and in a group of pictures probably the same number, but cancellation privileges would bring it down to eighty-some hundred or seventy-five hundred, or maybe lower.

Q. How many such groups do you sell in the course of a season? A. Well, last year we had about 30 pictures of which about a half dozen were sold separately. We must have had six groups, at least, and six individual sales, a terrific amount of transactions.

Q. Well, my mental arithmetic is not good enough. How many separate contracts would that add up to? A. If I had six groups of 15,000, that would be 90,000; and if I had six more individual sales, approximately, that would be (628) another 90,000, or 180,000 transactions on those alone, on feature attractions alone.

Q. That is pretty astronomic. A. Yes; and don't forget we have newsreels and short subjects and trailers.

Q. Are they separately negotiated? A. Yes.

Q. You spoke of cancellations. What cancellations are customary? A. Well, it depends on the situation. The cancellations when we sell more than five pictures in a group is fixed. Where we sell five pictures in certain localities we permit elimination if we are satisfied that they cannot absorb that many, or that there were particular pictures in a group that would not be suitable for the theatres buying them. That is the reason for the fluctuation of the number of pictures sold or played eventually.

Q. Do you have many cancellations or applications to cancel? A. There are many eliminations, yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: Now, I am going on to another topic. Perhaps your Honors will want to adjourn now for lunch?

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until 2:15.

(Recess to 2:15 p.m.)

(629)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, before the witness resumes there is one procedural problem which I should like to mention: The Government has offered, and there have been received, a number of license contracts between defendants and theatres in which other defendants have an interest. Now, we have examined the contracts which concern Paramount pictures or theatres in which Paramount has an interest, and from our examination they appear to be just standard contracts. But they are very voluminous. Now, I think that it is a situation in which the interest of the Court and counsel would be served by having the Government furnish us with a sort of informal bill of particulars as to what it is about those contracts that they rely on. I realize that ordinarily those things are done before trial; but it has only arisen by virtue of the fact that they were offered during trial; and I should like to have a statement which we could rely on as an indication of what the Government counts upon in those contracts as helping its case. And just as Mr. Wright said this morning when Mr. Davis handed up the new contracts that he would like to know what the differences are, we should like to know what it is that the Government relies on. Perhaps Mr. Wright will agree to do that and we won't have to bother the Court with it.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we are not going to limit ourselves in any way at this time. We rely on every piece of printing that is in any of these contracts that were offered in evidence. I can see no occasion for us to tell counsel that they can ignore at this time any part of it.

Judge Hand: All right.

Now we shall proceed.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Rodgers.

WILLIAM F. RODGERS, resumed the stand. Direct Examination continued by Mr. Davis:

Q. I think we were discussing the subject of minimum admission prices which you told us were those prices named by the theatre itself written into the contract. What is the reason for writing any admission price into the contract? A. Well, it has a contributory reason as to the availability of pictures in many places. It is one of the considerations we give as to when pictures can be made available; and the theatre owner in specifying the price of admission expects to get his availability in many cases based upon the price of admission that he charges.

Q. Does it have any effect upon the revenue of the distributor? A. A great deal; a great deal of effect, because it stands to reason in most cases the more the admission price is charged the greater the receipts.

(631)

Q. How long has the practice of naming minimum admission prices in the contract prevailed? A. Well, I feel that the run and the clearance and the admission price, they all have such a close relation one to the other, that they commenced to be generally operative, as I said this morning, somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 years ago, 22 years ago, I can't recall exactly when; somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q. Now, it has been suggested that the provision in your contract for an audit of the exhibitor's receipts is put in for some purpose other than to protect your revenue. Is that true? A. Well, that is put in for specifically the purpose of protecting our revenue. As a matter of fact I believe that there is some clause in our contract to the effect that the theatre owner is merely the custodian of the receipts, and we want the privilege of verifying that.

Q. Do you maintain a corps of auditors for that purpose? A. We don't have a corps of auditors specifically for that purpose, but we use our auditors for that in connection with other auditing work that they do around the country.

Q. Do your auditors, when sent to the theatre, audit the general business of the theatre or only your particular contract? A. They only have a right to audit, as I understand it, the pictures played under the sharing arrangement.

(632)

Judge Hand: This kind of thing, Mr. Davis, does not impress me at all. The charge of the Government is that they audited these reports. If these contracts are valid, they certainly have a right, a perfect right to do that; and if they are invalid, they are invalid.

Mr. Davis: And, of course, we heartily agree with that.

Judge Hand: I do not see what it has to do with the case.

Mr. Davis: And perhaps I am over-anxious in refuting a charge which seems to me to be absurd on its face, but in the trial brief the Government charges we used this system of auditing to secure information about the business of the theatre with our competitors and in that way to promote the general conspiracy that is charged, and I am simply trying to negative that insinuation.

Judge Hand: I suppose it is all right.

Mr. Davis: But I shan't waste any time on it.

Judge Hand: But I think it is an awfully far-fetched argument.

Mr. Davis: I never heard of any man making a contract of this sort who did not reserve the right to see whether he was being cheated, such being human nature.

Q. Do you, as a result of these audits, procure any information relating to the business of your co-defendants, competitors or other persons than the theatre involved? A. No, sir, never.
(633)

Mr. Davis: We will drop that subject there.

Judge Bright: You limit the audit solely to the purpose of the one picture or one series of pictures in which you are interested?

The Witness: We limit the audits to only pictures which are played under the participating arrangement. Sometimes we——

Judge Bright: What do you mean by "participating arrangement"?

The Witness: Percentage arrangement, or a dollars and cents guarantee, with the sharing arrangement beyond a certain figure.

Judge Bright: Only for pictures licensed for that theatre?

The Witness: Yes, sir, only of our own pictures.

Judge Bright: Not others'?

The Witness: No.

Judge Bright: You have no right to audit anybody else's pictures?

The Witness: No, sir, none whatever. Nor do we have a right to audit our own pictures under the——

Judge Bright: You exercise the right to audit nobody else's picture receipts?

(634)

The Witness: No, sir. In the first place, they wouldn't permit me to, and we have no interest in it.

Q. Let us go to theatre ownership for a moment. How many theatres does Loew's, Inc. own, if you know? A. I don't know how many we own. I think we operate in this country in the neighborhood of 130, 135, or something like that.

Q. You don't own the fee simple of all that you operate? A. No, sir, but I am acquainted with the structure under which we operate them.

Q. Are their locations so shown in the document which has been admitted in evidence as Loew's L-2? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is approximately correct, as far as location? A. That is approximately correct.

Q. Is there any agreed division of territory, so far as exhibition is concerned, or sales either, between Loew's, Inc. and any of these co-defendants?

Mr. Wright: May it please the Court, we have the same objection we made before, that that is a conclusion for the Court rather than this witness.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. No, sir.

Q. Do your theatres always exhibit your own Loew's films? Put it this way: Do Loew's theatres always exhibit

(635)

Loew films? A. With one exception.

Q. What is the exception? A. The exception is in Niagara Falls where we have an interest in a theatre in Niagara Falls but our product is played in the theatre of an independent exhibitor.

Q. Do Loew films fill up playing time of all the Loew theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Is there room for playing other films? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they licensed from third persons? A. Licensed from the other companies in the business, or the distributors.

Q. Who has the supervision of that licensing? A. Mr. Joe Vogel and Mr. Moscowitz.

Q. What is the difference between their respective spheres? A. Mr. Joseph Vogel has charge of all our out-of-town theatres excepting the—he has charge of all the out-of-town theatres including the Capitol Theatre here in New York, whereas Mr. Moscowitz has charge of all the metropolitan theatres, those that are in this metropolitan area in Greater New York.

Q. What is the general character of the theatres owned by Loew's, Inc.? A. They are very fine theatres.

Q. What reason is there for a producer of films owning his own theatres for exhibition purposes? A. I can only speak for our own company. I say that in our connection that the reason we have theatres in the many places we do is that we use them as show windows and use them as test spots for the establishing of values of our various pictures.

Q. And what do you mean by "show windows"? A. Well, a show window, I consider a show window is an important theatre in an important city in any particular geographical area and, generally speaking, after we test a picture in a given number of spots or localities, I should say, then we are in a position in the more lucrative territories of this country to use our own theatres as show windows where our own pictures can be played first and in that way establish their values.

Q. How does the playing of your pictures first in your own theatres establish their value? A. Well, it is a generally well known matter, if the picture does well, it is generally known throughout that particular area; and by the same line of reasoning, if it does poorly, it is known even quicker. But then, it gives us in New York a better idea as to the cross-section value of the picture; where it is shown in so many different sections, we know very well about what the value will be for that picture for all of America.

Q. Do you make first-run contracts with any of the theatres owned by the co-defendants here at the bar? A. There are a number of first-run contracts made with them, yes.

(637)

Q. Do you make first-run contracts with wholly independent theatres? A. Yes, in many sections.

Q. And you exhibit first-run in your own theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. First-run theatres play at the highest admission rates, do they? A. Generally speaking that is always true.

Q. Do they customarily produce the quickest and largest share of your revenue? A. First-run theatres that we have at Loew's, yes.

Q. Let me ask, what is the overall cost, annual cost, of maintaining your distribution system, of which you are the head? A. Well, our field forces for the last year have cost us on an average of $115,000 a week. I believe the overhead for our New York office is somewhere between five and six million dollars a year. I don't know the exact figure now.

Q. It is substantial? A. Substantial, yes, very.

Q. You were asked by the Government in its interrogatories to name the film for the season 1943-44 which received the largest number of contracts. A. Yes, sir.

Q. You named, I believe, the film "As Thousands Cheer"? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Government asked you for further information as to the revenue derived by its exhibition. Have you caused to be made or caused to be made under your direction a chart showing the revenues derived from the exhibition of that film and the ownership and class of the theatres from which they were derived? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you to look at the two charts, which I will identify as L 3-a and L 3-b, and ask if those are the charts which you caused to be prepared? A. Yes, sir, these are the charts.

Mr. Davis: Before offering these in evidence I should like the Court to look at these, which I hand to the bench, in order that I may explain the purpose for which they are being offered. These are charts L 3-a and L 3-b. They are an exhibition of the data which the Government requested and put in evidence by its Exhibits 57-1 to 57-49.

The first of these charts shows the overall take of that picture of $3,537,588. Midway of the chart there is a black line marked "Cost of negative, prints, advertising, royalties and trailers, $2,016,000." That is the cost of making that picture. It includes nothing for distribution, nothing for overhead, but is the manufacturing cost of the film, prints, royalties and trailers. And until that line has been crossed the company is out-of-pocket.

The Government asked us for the revenue from the first-runs in all cities with a population of 25,000 and over, 416 in number. That is the first column to the left of the chart. It is in red because it has not yet reached the cost line.

It asked us for revenue from second-runs in all cities with population of 50,000 and over. That is shown in the second column.

After the first column has been added, then this bit of information raises it a little further, cumulatively.

It asks us for revenue from third-runs in all cities with population of 200,000 and over. That is the third column. And after counting the column 2, you will see that there is a small addition to that column, still below the cost line.

Revenue from fourth-runs in all cities, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Detroit, with population of a million and over, and the fourth-run adds something to this mounting column in the fourth line.

Then the fifth line is not in response to the Government's requests, but is our own statement of the entire revenue derived from that film, $3,537,000. Your Honors will note that it does not cross the cost line, and the first-run, second-run, third-run and fourth-run have been played in these cities named. Our fourth column includes the play everywhere, our total take.

(640)

Now, if your Honors will look at the second chart, L 3-b, you will find the breakdown on each of these columns showing the sources of this revenue. The first column, revenue from first-runs in all cities with population of over 25,000, amounts taken from Loew's own theatres, Fox, Paramount, RKO, Warner and independents, are all shown in that column. It will appear that the largest revenues, as might be expected, were from Loew's own theatres; second, by reason of their number, was from Paramount's theatres; and the third was from the independents who paid us more than either Warner or RKO or Fox.

In the second column, revenue from second-run in all cities with population of 50,000 or over. Your Honors will notice that here the independents spring to the top of the sum, $81,000 from the independents in that second-run, $59,000 from Loew's own theatres; and the next is Paramount's theatres, with $37,000.

Then we come to the revenue from runs in all cities with a population of 200,000 and over. Again Loew's own theatres are the most productive—no, here the independents have even gone beyond Loew's, $59,000 from the independents and only $51,000 in Loew's own theatres.

And then we come to revenue from fourth-runs in all cities with population of over a million. And here the independents are $55,000, and the next one is Warner's with $18,000.

Then we come to the fourth column, which represents our total take, and your Honors will find that these first, second, third and fourth-runs and the sums contributed by the co-defendants' theatres have not yet pulled us out of the red.

And we then find that with the small amount from Paramount and a smaller amount from Warner, and $1,288,000 from the independents, we finally made our profit.

I offer that in evidence, and I shall argue from it that if Loew's, Inc. is engaged in a conspiracy to suppress and militate against all independent theatres, it is very clear that Loew's, Inc. is industriously endeavoring to cut off its own nose to spite its face, for were it not for the independents, this $3,537,000 could never have been earned, or the two million spent on this picture could never have been retrieved.

I offer these exhibits.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we, of course, obviously cannot examine this witness on the charts. He did not prepare them. He had them prepared. Now, all we want with reference to these charts is the same opportunity we gave the defendants with respect to ours, to check the data. Otherwise I should think

(642) they might go in. But at this stage it seems it is a little premature to admit them until we have had an opportunity to check.

Mr. Davis: Of course there is no objection in the world to that, your Honors. Counsel may examine the chart as much as he pleases, and if he is not satisfied with Mr. Rodgers' statement that it was prepared under his direction, I am perfectly willing to produce the hands that drew the lines, and the accountants who entered the figures.

Judge Hand: We will admit it. Of course, you can check it by getting the data.

Mr. Wright: I should like to point out, your Honors, as far as this cost data is concerned, that is something that——

Judge Hand: What is that?

Mr. Wright: I just wanted to call attention to the fact that the charts do contain something more than a recap of material that is in evidence.

Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Wright: There is cost data on there for which there is no underlying evidence; and we would at least want the opportunity to check with someone who prepared the cost data as to what some of these costs might represent.

Judge Hand: You will have that.

(643)

Mr. Davis: You will find on that chart not only is the cost data not included in the interrogatories which were put to us and filed, but the fourth column, the total receipts and their division is not so included. The chart is independent evidence as to those topics, and I have had the witness verify them.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibits L 3-b and L 3-a.)

By Mr. Davis:

Q. Do you remember how many theatres exhibited "As Thousands Cheer" in the United States? A. Well somewhat better than 15,000; 15,000 and some hundreds. I don't recall the exact figures.

Q. Well I am afraid that you are about 19 theatres out. A. I see.

Q. I show you a memorandum purporting to give the figures and see if it refreshes your recollection as to the number of theatres in which "As Thousands Cheer" was shown. A. The statement shows 14,981 theatres. This I had prepared.

Q. Will you break it up into theatres owned by the co-defendants, each one of them, and by the independents? A. Loew's played the picture in 145 theatres; Warner's 339; Paramount, 932; RKO in 22; the Fox West Coast in 405, or a total of 1843. And non-defendants was 13,138, a total of 14,981.

(644)

Mr. Davis: I offer that sheet of paper in evidence.
Mr. Wright: There is no objection.
Has that exhibit a number or a letter?
The Clerk: Not as yet.
Mr. Wright: We have no objection to it.
Judge Bright: That will be Exhibit L 4.

(Marked Loew's Exhibit L 4.)

Q. Mr. Rodgers, we have been confronted by the Government with a request for information as to the first-run theatres in 92 cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 and over. Laborious as it may be, I want to take up each one of those cities with you and ask you who runs your films first-run in that city, why the particular theatre in that city that does so is chosen by you as a first-run theatre. Have you got a list of those theatres in front of you? A. No, sir.

Q. I am not asking you to verify the list at this time but simply to guide your recollection. In Akron, Ohio, which theatre runs your film first-run? A. Loew's theatre.

Q. Is that your own theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it your custom when you have a theatre to run your films in it first-run? A. Generally speaking, with the one exception I mentioned the other moment.

(645)

Q. What other theatres in Akron run films first-run? A. There are three others, the Colonial, the Palace and the Strand.

Q. By whom are they owned? A. The Colonial by the Shea operation; the Strand by Warner Bros., and the Palace by Mr. Katz.

Q. Which theatre in the city has the largest seating capacity? A. Loew's theatre.

Q. Are the other three in competition with Loew's on the first-run? A. Very much so, yes, sir.

Q. Do you license any later runs in Akron? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The City of Albany: What theatre in Albany runs your films first-run? A. The Palace and the Grand.

Q. By whom are they owned? A. They are operated by Fabian.

Q. How long has he been a customer? A. Well, I should say for at least 10 or 12 years.

Q. Besides those two theatres, are there any other first-run theatres in Albany? A. Yes, there are three others: The Strand, the Ritz and the Leland.

Q. By whom are they owned? A. The Strand and Ritz are owned by Warner Bros., and I believe the Leland is also operated by Warner's, but I am not sure.

Q. Do they compete with the theatres which you license first-run? A. Yes.

(646)

Q. What is the largest theatre in Albany? A. The Palace.

Q. Is that your first-run theatre? A. It is one of them.

Q. How do the seats in that theatre compare with the next largest? A. They are much larger, I guess nearly twice as many as in any other theatre in town.

Q. Atlanta, Georgia: What is your first-run theatre in Atlanta, Gergia? A. Loew's Grand theatre is the first-run theatre for us there.

Q. I am reminded I did not ask you whether Fabian was an independent theatre in Albany? A. Yes, he is independent.

Q. Then we pass on to Atlanta, Georgia.

Mr. Davis: I apologize to your Honors for this if this is going to be a tedious journey, but I do not know any way to avoid it. That is, as long as the Government confronts us with these innuendoes.

Q. What is your first-run theatre in Atlanta? A. Loew's Grand Theatre.

Q. Is that your own theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many other first-run theatres are there in Atlanta? A. Six other first-runs.

Q. By whom owned? A. Well, Fox owns one—well, Publix, rather, the Publix-Lucas-Jenkins organization own the Fox; they own the Paramount; they own the Capitol and the Roxy. There is a Rialto Theatre operated by W. T. Murray; and there is a Rhodes Theatre there that is operated by us as a move-over or carry-over theatre.

Q. Explain what you mean by a move-over. A. Well, when we finish playing the picture at our Grand Theatre we move a great many pictures into the Rhodes where there is a continued engagement, continuous.

Q. Do the other theatres in Atlanta compete with yours? A. Yes, sir, they all compete.

Q. How does your Loew's Grand in Atlanta compare in size and equipment and character with the other theatres? A. Well, except for size we consider our theatre the best outlet for us in Atlanta. It is smaller than the Fox and smaller than several others.

Q. To whom do you license first-run in Baltimore, Maryland? A. The Loew's theatres, the Loew's Century, and we play some pictures in the Valencia.

Q. What other first-run theatres are there in Baltimore? A. There are six other theatres.

Q. Who owns them? A. Mr. Mechanic owns the New Theatre; Mr. Schanberger the Keith's; Mr. Rappaport the Hippodrome; Mrs. Hicks operates the Little Theatre and the Mayfair Theatre; and Warner Bros. operates the Stanley Theatre.

(648)

Q. Do those theatres all compete with your theatres in Baltimore? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the largest theatre in Baltimore? A. The Stanley Theatre is the largest. Ours is next.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he apparently has this written out in the sheet, and I suppose if they want to have it marked as an exhibit we could stipulate that he would testify in accordance with the sheet there. It would save some time.

Mr. Davis: Well, this sheet which I and the witness have in our hands gives the names of the theatres, the towns, the name of the operator in each town, and the number of seats in each theatre. It does not describe the theatres and it does not say what is done about second or subsequent-runs. Now, I am willing to put this in provided I can get a stipulation that the theatres in which we license our films first-run are the best and most suitable theatre in that particular locality; second, that where there is more than one first-run theatre where we have a theatre, the others are competing with us for the public patronage——

Mr. Proskauer: More than one first-run.

Mr. Davis: More than one first-run theatres.

Mr. Wright: I——

Mr. Davis: Just a moment, Mr. Wright. I am not finished.

(649)

Mr. Wright: Well, you have gone far enough to make it apparent that there won't be any stipulation.

Mr. Davis: That puts me to my proof and I shall proceed as long as I and the witness and the Court hold out.

Q. Baltimore, Maryland. A. Yes, sir?

Q. Have we left Baltimore? A. We are going from Baltimore.

Q. Birmingham, Alabama: Whom do you license first-run in Birmingham, Alabama? A. The Publix-Wilby interests.

Q. Who are they owned by? A. I believe they are in some way associated with Paramount.

Q. How many theatres have they in Birmingham? A. Four.

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres? A. The Empire operated by Mr. Merritt.

Q. Is that independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you license first-run to all the Publix-Wilby theatres? A. Yes, some of our pictures play in all of them.

Q. What is the largest theatre in Birmingham? A. The Alabama.

Q. What is the seating capacity of the Alabama? A. 2,552.

Q. What is the seating capacity of Mr. Frank Merritt's Empire? A. 924.

(650)

Q. What theatres do you consider best adapted for first-run use in the City of Birmingham? A. The Alhambra particularly.

Q. Alhambra? A. And the Lyric and Ritz. But the Alhambra is the place where we seek to put most of our pictures.

Q. Read that again. A. The Alabama, excuse me.

Q. Yes, that is better. A. My eyesight is getting poor, I guess.

Q. Do you license second, third and fourth-runs in Birmingham, Alabama? A. I don't know just how many runs we license there but we license in addition to the first-run.

Q. I wish if I ask you about any first-run in any city you tell me whether that is your exclusive exhibition there or whether it is followed by other theatres licensing second, third and fourth-run.

Boston, Massachusetts. A. We play our product in our two theatres, Loew's State and Loew's Orpheum.

Q. What other first-run theatres are there in Boston? A. There are the Metropolitan, the Paramount, the Fenway, the Boston, the Memorial, the Translux and Majestic; and in Boston, incidentally, we market our pictures to a number of subsequent-runs.

Q. Do they compete with you? A. All of them.

(651)

Q. Why do you license first-run to Loew's State and Orpheum? A. Because we think they are the best theatres for our purposes in Boston.

Q. Any subsequent-runs licensed in Boston? A. A great many.

Q. Bridgeport, Connecticut. A. In Bridgeport, Connecticut we have four theatres. Loew's operates the Poli, Majestic, Globe and Lyric, and our product plays in all of them. In addition to that the Warner Bros. operate a theatre there, and there are a number of subsequent-runs to whom we supply our product.

Q. Do you license your own theatres there first-run? A. Yes,

Q. What is the largest theatre in Bridgeport? A. I believe the Poli is the largest one there.

Q. That is your theatre? A. Yes.

Q. The Loew's theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Buffalo, New York. A. Buffalo, New York, Loew's operates the Shea's Buffalo, the Great Lakes and the Hippodrome Theatre, to whom we sell our product.

Q. Any others? A. In addition there are two other theatres, the 20th Century and the Lafayette.

Q. Owned by whom? A. One is operated by the Buffalo 20th Century, Inc., and the other by Basil Brothers.

Q. Are they both independents? A. I believe they are.

(652)

Q. Do they compete with Loew's theatres? A. All of them.

Q. Any subsequent-runs in Buffalo? A. A great number of them.

Q. How do those theatres, as theatres in point of seating capacity and character compare with the other theatres? A. They are the best.

Q. Cambridge, Massachusetts. A. In Cambridge, Massachusetts, there are two first-run theatres there, the Central Square, operated by M. & P., and the University Theatre operated by Stanley Sumner.

Q. Are they independent? A. No. M. & P. is operated by them for Paramount, and the University is an independent to whom we sell our product.

Q. You sell to the independent, do you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Camden, New Jersey. A. Camden, New Jersey, there are three first-run theatres operated there now, the Savar operated by an independent, Sam Varbalow, and the Grand and Stanley operated by Warner Bros. We sell them both.

Q. You sell both, Varbalow and Warner Bros.? A. Yes.

Q. Is Varbalow an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent-runs in Camden? A. Quite a few, yes, sir. We sell them all or as many of them as we can.

Q. Now, I would suggest that we may make speed, Mr. (653) Rodgers; you understand what the questions are that I am trying to get here, and if you will without waiting for a question go down the list and tell us about the towns as we come to them, and if I find anything omitted I will ask you a question, and we will make some time that way.

Canton, Ohio is the next one. A. Canton, Ohio, there are three first-run theatres there, the Palace operated by an independent; the Ohio, operated by Warner Bros., and Loew's Theatre operated by us. We sell Loew's Theatre, and there are a number of subsequent-run houses there to whom we also sell our product.

Q. All right. Charlotte, North Carolina. A. Do you want me to go forward with the list without you calling the names, or would you rather call the names?

Q. I will call the names? A. All right. In Charlotte, North Carolina, there are three first-run theatres there, the Carolina, the Imperial and Broadway. They are all operated by—I see it says amusement companies, but, in fact, I think they are controlled by the Kincey interests who are an affiliate of Paramount; and we sell our first-run pictures to each one of the three theatres.

Q. You sell to each one of those theatres? A. We sell our pictures to all three, not to each three. There are a few subsequent-runs in the city to whom we also sell our product. (654)

Q. When you say sell your product, you mean license your product? A. Lease it, yes, sir.

Q. Lease it. Now, Charlotte. A. That was Charlotte.

Q. That was Charlotte. Chattanooga. A. In Chattanooga there are two first-run theatres also operated by the Wilby interests, associated, I believe, with Paramount, namely, the Tivoli and the State, and we sell to either one or both of them.

Q. Are there any other theatres in Chattanooga that would be entitled to claim first-run? A. There is no other first-run there, but there are a few subsequent-runs, and we offer our product to them too.

Q. Chicago, Illinois. A. Chicago, Illinois, there are a number of first-runs there. I think McVicker's is operated by Johnny Jones; the Apollo, Chicago, Garrick, by Balaban & Katz; Roosevelt and State-Lake and United Artists, by Balaban & Katz, to whom we sell our product first-run. There is also the Wood's Theatre operated by the Essaness Circuit; the Oriental by a Mr. Costello; the Palace by RKO. There is a World Playhouse operated by a Mr. Vicedomini; and the Grand Theatre is operated by RKO. We sell, as I say, or lease our product to the B. and K. interests for playing in a number of their theatres. Wherever in our opinion the picture is most suitable, that is where we sell it or lease (654a)
it. There are many subsequent-run theatres in the City of Chicago to whom we sell our product.

Q. Who are B. & K. affiliated with, if anyone? A. B. & K. are affiliated with Paramount.

Q. How do their theatres compare with the other first-run theatres you have named in Chicago? A. Generally speaking they are by far the better theatres.

Q. I can't hear you, Mr. Rodgers? A. I say generally speaking they are by far the better theatres.
(655)

Q. For how long have you been selling them or licensing them? A. For many years. Many years. Certainly beyond 10 or 15—20 years, I guess.

Q. Has their handling of your film been satisfactory? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent runs in Chicago? A. Quite a number of them.

Q. Cincinnati, Ohio. A. Cincinnati, Ohio, there are eight first-run theatres there, Palace, Albee, Capitol, Lyric, Shubert, Keith, Family and Grand, and they are all operated by the RKO Midwest Corporation.

Q. Do you sell to all of them? Do you license to all of them? A. Well, we license to all of them one way or another. They have a different sort of arrangement in Cincinnati than they have in most cities. They carry over from one theatre to another, and it is not uncommon for our pictures to be played first-run in a majority of those theatres.

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres in Cincinnati? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you license subsequent runs in Cincinnati? A. Quite a few, yes, sir.

Q. Cleveland, Ohio. A. In Cleveland, Ohio, there are seven first-run theatres, of which we have three, State, Stillman and Ohio Theatres; Warner Bros. operates the Hippodrome and the Lake, and the RKO Theatres are Palace and Allen.

Q. Do you license there to Loew's, Inc.? A. We license to Loew's, Inc.

Q. How do those theatres compare with the theatres of the other companies? A. We consider them best for our purpose.

Q. Are all of those theatres that you have named in competition? A. All of them, yes, sir.

Q. Subsequent runs? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Columbus, Ohio? A. In Columbus, Ohio, we operate two theatres, Loew's Ohio, and Loew's Broad, to whom we sell our products, to either one of the two, and in addition to that the Palace and Grand Theatres are operated by the R. F. Keith Company or the RKO.

Q. Do you sell to them? A. No, sir.

Q. Are they in competition with you? A. Directly, but we do sell a number of subsequent runs.

Q. Dallas, Texas? A. In Dallas, Texas, there are six first runs, all operated by the Interstate Theatres; Majestic, Palace, Capitol, Rialto, Melba and Tower Theatres, and we sell to them, or lease to them, and they are also licensed, like in Cincinnati, that is, in some cases they move from one house to another.

Q. Is Interstate Theatres an independent chain? A. No, (657) sir.

Q. Who owns it? A. Associated with Paramount.

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres in Dallas? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you license subsequent runs in Dallas? A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Dayton, Ohio? A. In Dayton, Ohio, we have one theatre, Loew's, to whom we lease our product. There is also an independent operation there, the Victory Theatre, and, in addition, State, Colonial and Keith that are operated by RKO Midwest Corporation.

Q. Do you license them? A. No, sir.

Q. Are they in competition with you? A. Directly.

Q. Any subsequent runs in Dayton? A. Quite a few.

Q. How does your theatre in Dayton compare with the others? A. I consider it the very best theatre there.

Q. Denver, Colorado? A. Denver, Colorado, we sell our products, or lease it to the Orpheum Theatre. There are in addition to the Orpheum, the Denver, Paramount, Esquire, the Alladin, and the Rialto, all operated by the Fox West Coast; and in addition to that there is a Denham Theatre there, independently operated.

Q. Who operates the Colorado Orpheum? A. We sell to the Orpheum Theatre, we lease our products, and it is operated by the RKO, but our company has an interest in it.

(658)

Q. Mr. Rodgers, Judge Proskauer is very much averse to that word "sell" as being legally incorrect. If you can, call it "license" hereafter. A. I shall use the word "license."

Judge Hand: A very alarming word, Mr. Witness. It gets right into the copyright cases.

Mr. Proskauer: The word is not so alarming as the fact would be. As long as it is not a fact I don't mind the word, but I don't want him using the wrong word.

The Witness: Well, it couldn't be sold.

Judge Hand: I suppose you are only interested in this from the literary point of view.

Mr. Proskauer: I am deeply interested in the purely legal problem which your Honor expressed this morning.

Q. How does the Orpheum Theatre in Denver, which you license first run, compare with the other theatres there? A. Compares very well. I consider it the best theatre there.

Q. Is it in competition with the other theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent runs in Denver? A. A number of subsequent runs.

Q. When I say "any subsequent runs" I mean any subsequent runs licensed by you, of course. A. Yes, sir, we license a number of runs there.

Q. Des Moines, Iowa. A. In Des Moines, Iowa, there are four first-run theatres, three of which, the Des Moines, the Paramount and Roosevelt are operated by the Tri-States, I would say an affiliate of or associated with Paramount, to whom we license our pictures; and there is another theatre there, an RKO Orpheum Theatre, to whom we do not license our pictures.

Q. How do the Tri-States theatres compare with the Orpheum? A. I consider them the most outstanding theatres there.

Q. How long have you licensed to them? A. Sir?

Q. How long have you been licensing to the Tri-States? A. Oh, at least 15 years or more.

Q. Been a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir, very.

Q. Detroit, Michigan. A. In Detroit, Michigan, there are seven first-run theatres there, the Fox operated by the Fox-Michigan Corporation, the Adams, operated by the Adams Amusement Company, and there are the Michigan, United Artists, Palms State and Broadway Capitol, operated by the United Detroit Theatres, who I believe are in some way associated with Paramount and to whom we license our product; there is also another theatre there, the Downtown Theatre, which I see is listed here as owned by Howard Hughes.

Q. How do the theatres to whom you license your product (660) first-run in Detroit compare with the other theatres that have first-run? A. I consider them the best theatres there.

Q. How long have you had that account? A. Oh, many years. At least 15, 20 years.

Q. Do you license any subsequent runs in Detroit? A. Yes, quite a number.

Q. Duluth? A. Duluth, Minnesota, there are four first-run theatres there. Norshor and the Garrick, operated by the Minnesota Amusement Company, and the Lyric also operated by that company, to whom we license our products; and then there is another theatre there, the Granada, owned by a Mr. Blackmore, to whom we do not license our product.

Q. How does Mr. Blackmore's theatre compare with the three theatres of the Minnesota Amusement Company, to which you license? A. I do not feel that it compares at all to the theatres that we play in.

Q. That is a two-headed reply. You say it does not compare at all? A. In other words——

Q. Does it compare favorably or unfavorably? A. I should say that I feel that our outlet is the best to be had.

Q. How long have you had that account? A. Also for many, many years.

(661)

Q. Elizabeth, New Jersey? A. In Elizabeth, New Jersey, there are three first-run theatres, operated by the Skouras interests in one case, operating the Liberty Theatre; and Warner Bros. operating the Regent and Ritz. We license our product to the Ritz and Regent—Ritz or Regent, I might say, both of whom compare most favorably with any other theatre in town.

Q. Are they better theatres for your purpose than the Skouras Liberty? A. I should say by far, yes, sir.

Q. Erie, Pennsylvania. A. In Erie, Pennsylvania, there are three first-run theatres, one of which is operated by the Shea interests, which is called the Shea Theatre; the other theatre, the Warner is operated by Warner Bros. and I believe also their theatre is the Colonial. We divide our product first-run and license there to both Warners and to Shea.

Q. Shea is an independent? A. Yes.

Q. Who owns the Colonial? A. I believe it is operated by Warner. I am not certain of that.

Q. Are the Shea and the Warner theatres in competition? A. Very much so, yes, sir.

Q. Fall River, Mass? A. In Fall River, Mass., there are three first-run theatres, the Durfee, Centre and the Empire, which are operated by an independent operator, Mr. Nathan Yamins, and we sell or lease our products, I should say, to one of the three.

Q. I see you are catching on. A. Rapidly.

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres there, except Mr. Yamin's? A. No, sir. He operates all first-run theatres there.

Q. Any subsequent runs there? A. Yes, a number of subsequent runs.

Q. Do you license them? A. We do, yes, sir.

Q. How do those subsequent-run theatres compare with Mr. Yamin's? A. Well, Mr. Yamins owns some of the subsequent runs but they are not suitable for first-run houses.

Q. Flint, Michigan? A. In Flint, Michigan, there are four first-run theatres there, Capitol, Regent, Palace and the Garden, operated by the Butterfield interests, to whom we license our product.

Q. Is Butterfield Theatres affiliated with any of the defendants? A. I have never actually known them to be. I have never had any contact at all with anyone else except Beatty, although I have been told at one time or another that there are others of the defendants who had interests in the theatres, but I do not know it for a fact. I deal only with the general manager and president of that company.

Q. Has that rumor that some of the defendants might be interested in Butterfield had anything to do with your licensing? A. None whatsoever.

(663)

Q. You negotiated direct with Butterfield? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Fort Wayne, Indiana? A. In Fort Wayne, Indiana, there are five first-runs, the Emboyd, Paramount, Jefferson, Palace and the Wayne, four of which are operated by the Harrison Theatre and Realty Company, to whom we license our products.

Q. Is that an affiliate or an independent? A. They are independent, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Who owns the Wayne? A. A gentleman by the name of Pete Mallers, to whom we do not license our product.

Q. Is he an independent? A. Yes, sir, he is.

Q. How does his theatre compare with the theatres of the Harrison Theatre & Realty Company? A. It doesn't compare at all. Very small in its capacity.

Q. Fort Worth, Texas? A. In Fort Worth, Texas, there are three first-run theatres, the Worth, Hollywood and the Palace, all operated by the Interstate Theatres, who, I believe are associated with Paramount, and to whom we license our product at first-run there.
(664)

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres in Fort Worth? A. No, sir, but there are subsequent runs to whom we license our product.

Q. You license subsequent runs in Fort Worth. Gary, Indiana? A. In Gary Indiana there are the Palace and the Gary and the State. The latter theatre is operated by the Publix-Great States, to whom we license our product; and at the moment I cannot recall the name of the owner of the Palace or the Gary, which is listed here as affiliated. I cannot recall his name but we do not license our product to him.

Q. Why do you sell to Publix-Great States there instead of to the Palace and the Gary? A. It has been a very good outlet for us for a good many years. We feel under the circumstances it is the best outlet for us.

Q. It is not as large a theatre as the Palace, is it? A. No, it is not near as large, but we believe we can get a better representation by longer playing time, and the account has been very satisfactory over the period of years.

Q. How long have you had that account? A. Many, many years. I couldn't tell you, Mr. Davis; I don't know, but a good many years.

Q. Grand Rapids, Michigan. A. In Grand Rapids, Michigan, there are five first-run theatres operated by the But-(665)
terfield interests, the Majestic, Keith's, Regent, Center and Kent, and we license our product to the Butterfield interests for showing in those theatres or in one or all of them.

Q. Is it shown in all five theatres? A. Not necessarily, unless it is moved from one to the other occasionally, but, generally speaking, it is shown in but one of the five.

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres in Grand Rapids? A. No, sir.

Q. Any second runs? A. A number of second and subsequent runs, to whom we license our products.

Q. How do those second and subsequent-run theatres compare to the Butterfield Theatres? A. There is none of them that can compare.

Q. In size, equipment or location? A. No, sir, can't compare at all.

Q. Hartford, Connecticut. A. In Hartford, Connecticut there are eight first-runs, of which our company operates two, Loew's Poli and Loew's Palace; there is also a theatre called Dow's Theatre, operated by a Mr. Dow, I suppose—I don't know him. Mr. E. M. Loew operates a theatre; Warner Bros. operates a theatre, the Regal; and the Harries Bros. are listed as operating the State; and the Strand is also operated by Warner Bros.

Q. Do all those first-run theatres compete with yours? (666)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you show first-run in any theatres in Hartford except your own? A. No, sir.

Q. Are there any subsequent run licenses in Hartford? A. Yes, sir; and to whom we license our product.

Q. Houston, Texas. A. In Houston, Texas, there are four first-run theatres, of which one, Loew's State, is operated by us and to whom we license our product; the other three theatres, the Majestic, the Metropolitan and Kirby, are operated by the Interstate Theatres.

Q. Do you license in Houston, any theatre except your own, first-run? A. We have licensed a few pictures to Interstate Theatres there when our theatre is congested in bookings, but not many.

Q. How does your theatre in Houston compare with the Majestic, Metropolitan and Kirby? A. We think it by far the best theatre in Houston.

Q. Any subsequent runs licensed in Houston? A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Indianapolis, Indiana. A. In Indianapolis, Indiana, there are five first run theatres, which we operate one, Loew's Palace; and in addition to that there is a Circle, Indiana and Lyric Theatres, operated by what is known as the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, but which, in reality, I believe, is associated, partially, with Paramount—I am not sure of this; and then there is the Keith's theatre there operated by RKO. We sell or lease our product only to Loew's Palace Theatre.

Q. Any subsequent runs? A. Yes, we sell—or lease our product, yes, to a number of subsequent runs.

Q. Jacksonville, Florida? A. In Jacksonville, Florida, there are four first-run theatres—no, I see there are five here, four of which are controlled by the Florida Theatres Company affiliated, I believe, with Paramount. That is, Florida, Palace, Arcade and Temple Theatres; and also the St. Johns Theatre, operated by what is listed as the St. Johns Operating Company; but is, I believe, Mr. Zeid, an independent operator. We lease our product to the four theatres, Florida, Palace, Arcade and Temple.

Q. How do those four theatres compare with the theatre of the St. Johns Operating Company? A. I consider them most superior.

Q. What is their relative seating capacity? A. Well, the Florida seats 2100, the Palace 1800, the Arcade 1100, the Temple 889, and St. Johns 900. We do not play many of our pictures in the Temple Theatre.

Q. How long have you had that account? A. For very many years.

Q. Are there any other second-run licenses? A. Quite a number, yes, sir; to whom we license our product.

(668)

Q. Jersey City? A. In Jersey City there are three first-run theatres, the Loew's Journal Square, operated by our company, and the State, by the Skouras Company, and the Stanley by Warner Bros. We license our product to our own theatre.

Q. Any subsequent runs? A. Yes, a number of them to whom we lease or license our product.

Q. Kansas City, Kansas. A. In Kansas City, Kansas, there are two first-run theatres there, the Granada and the Electric Theatre.

Q. I am going back to Jersey City for a moment. Are Skouras and Warner in competition with your theatre there? A. Yes, sir, definitely.

Q. Go ahead to Kansas City. A. In Kansas City, Kansas, in that situation the Granada and the Electric Theatres are first run. One is operated by what is known as the Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., and the other the Electric Theatre Company. I believe that they are the same operators that operate both theatres.

Q. Which one do you license? A. We license to the Fox Midwest Theatres there.

Q. You aren't sure that they are both operated by the same operator there? A. I am not sure at the moment now, but Fox Midwest Theatres has been our account for many years and I am inclined to think they are both operated by the same people, although of that I am not certain.

Q. Kansas City, Missouri. A. In Kansas City, Missouri, there are seven first-run theatres, of which we operate one, the Midland Theatre, to whom we license our product. The others, the Uptown, Esquire, Fairway and Tower Theatres, are operated by Fox Midwest Theatres. The Newman is operated by the Paramount Kansas City Operating Corporation and the Orpheum is operated by the RKO Orpheum. We do not license except to our own theatre in Kansas City.

Q. How does your theatre compare in size? A. In size——

Q. And availability, to the others? A. In size it is a great deal larger. In all ways, it is the finest theatre in Kansas City.

Q. You license subsequent runs in Kansas City? A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Knoxville, Tennessee. A. There are four first-run theatres there, the Tennessee, the Riviera, the Strand and the Bijou, operated by the Publix-Wilby, associated, I believe, with Paramount, to whom we license our product. There are no other first-runs there that I know of.

Q. Do you license subsequent runs in Knoxville? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any other theatres in Knoxville adapted to be first-run theatres? A. Not that I know of, no.

Q. Long Beach, California. A. In Long Beach, California there are seven first-run theatres, of which Fox Westcoast controls four, the West Coast, the United Artists, the Imperial and the Long Beach. There are three that are listed as operated by Milt Arthur, State, Cabart and Rivoli. We sell or lease, rather, our produce to the Fox Westcoast Theatres.

Q. Is that an old account? A. Very old.

Q. How old? A. Well, we have been leasing to them even prior to the time the Fox Westcoast operated the theatres. We leased to them when they were more or less independent many years ago.

Q. How do their theatres compare with the three theatres owned by Milt Arthur? A. We consider them the best theatres there.

Q. Do you license any subsequent runs in Long Beach? A. Yes, a number of them.

Q. Los Angeles, California. A. There are a number of first-run theatres in Los Angeles. I would have to count them. There are listed here twenty theatres in Greater Los Angeles, of which the Fox West Coast operated the Loew State, Grauman's Chinese, Uptown, Carthay Circle, United Artists, Four Star, Fox Wilshire, the Ritz, the Los Angeles, the Orpheum, Egyptian; RKO operating RKO Hill Street, (671) the Pantages; Milt Arthur operates the Paramount in Los Angeles and a Paramount in Hollywood; Warner Bros. operate Warner Bros. Theatre in Los Angeles, and the Warner Bros. Hollywood Theatre, as well as the Wiltern Theatre in Los Angeles; Galston & Sutton operate the Hawaii; and Mr. Popkin has the Million Dollar, the Vogue and the Pan-Pacific.

Loew's product is licensed to Fox Westcoast and played in several theatres simultaneously, sometimes the Los Angeles, the Egyptian and Uptown, at other times Loew's State, Chinese and United Artists.

Q. Is Loew's State owned by Loew's, Incorporated? A. The building is, yes, sir.

Q. Under lease to Fox Westcoast? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the theatres you have named of Fox Westcoast compare with the others on your list? A. How many?

Q. How do they compare with the others on your list? A. We consider them the best outlet there.

Q. Is there competition among all these first-run theatres in Los Angeles? A. Very keen; very keen competition, yes, sir.

Q. Is there any subsequent run out in Los Angeles? A. There are a number of subsequent runs to whom we license our product there.

Q. Louisville, Kentucky. A. In Louisville, Kentucky, (672)
there are six first-run theatres. There are the Rialto, Strand and Brown, operated by the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company; Loew's United Artists Theatre, operated by our company; and the Mary Anderson and the National operated by the Peoples Theatre Company.

Loew's product is licensed to Loew's United Artists Theatre and occasionally, and I think frequently, carried over, I think, to the Brown Theatre there, in which we have an interest.

Q. What is the best theatre in Louisville? A. Loew's United Artists, by far.

Q. Do these theatres compete? A. They all compete, yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent runs in Louisville? A. Yes, sir; we sell—lease subsequent runs there.

Q. Lowell, Massachusetts. A. In Lowell, Massachusetts, there are three first-run theatres, operated by Mullen & Polinski, I believe, for Paramount, or in association with Paramount. They operate the Strand and the Merrimac Square. RKO operates the Keith Theatre. We license our product to the Strand or Merrimac.

Q. How do they compare as theatres with RKO Keith Theatre? A. Very favorably, very good theatres.

Q. How long has that been your account? A. Many years.
(673)

Q. Memphis, Tennessee. A. In Memphis, Tennessee, Loew's operate two theatres there, the Loew's Palace and the State theatres, to whom we license our product. And in addition to them there are two theatres operated by the Malco Theatres, Inc., the Strand and the Malco, who, I believe, are associated with Paramount; and Warner Bros. operate a theatre there, the Warner Theatre.

Q. How do the Loew Theatres in Memphis compare with the other theatres you have mentioned? A. I consider them the best theatres there.

Q. Do the other theatres compete with Loew's in Memphis? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Miami, Florida. A. In Miami, Florida, there are four theatres listed as first-run, the Capitol, Miami, Paramount and Olympia. The Capitol and Miami are operated by the Wometco Theatres, and the Paramount and Olympia are operated by Paramount Publix. The Capitol and Miami are independent theatres. The Paramount and Olympia are operated by associates of the Paramount, to whom we license our product.

Q. How do the Paramount theatres compare with those of the Wometco? A: I consider them superior theatres.

Q. The fact that they are owned by Paramount, does that have anything to do with your selection of those theatres for first-run? A. Nothing whatever to do with it. We have been selling them for many years and I believe, in one instance, before Paramount had any interest there.

Q. Milwaukee, Wisconsin. A. In Milwaukee, Wisconsin we have six first-run theatres there, the Wisconsin, the Palace and the Strand, that are operated by the Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation; and Warner Bros. operate three theatres, the Warner, Alhambra and the Riverside. We license our product to the Fox-Wisconsin Amusement Company.

Q. How old is that account? A. That also is an account of many years' standing.

Q. How do the theatres of the Fox-Wisconsin Amusement Company compare with the theatres of Warner Bros. in Milwaukee? A. I would say they are both on a par, as they both operate very good theatres.

Q. Are they competing? A. Very much so.

Q. Any subsequent-run license in Milwaukee? A. Yes, we license a number of subsequent-runs there.

Q. Minneapolis, Minnesota. A. In Minneapolis, Minnesota, there are eight first-run theatres, all operated by the Minnesota Amusement Corporation, the Radio City, State, Orpheum, Gopher, Aster, Century, World and Lyric, and our product is licensed to play in one or several of them. Sometimes they carry over our pictures there from one theatre to another. There are no other——

Q. Any other first-run theatres in Minneapolis? A. There is no other there. There is none of the subsequent runs that would merit first-run consideration. However, we sell a number of subsequent runs there, or lease them.

Q. Nashville, Tennessee. A. In Nashville, Tennessee, there are four first-run theatres, of which Loew's Inc. operated one, Loew's Vendome, to whom we license our product, and there are three other theatres operated by the Crescent Amusement Company, the Paramount, the Knickerbocker and the Princess, to whom we do not lease our product.

Q. Do they compete with Loew's Vendome? A. Very much so, yes, sir.

Q. Newark, New Jersey. A. In Newark, New Jersey, Loew's operates—there are five first-run theatres, of which Loew's operates one, Loew's State, to whom we license our product. There are the Paramount and Adams theatres, operated by Adam Adams; Proctor's Palace, operated by RKO; and the Branford Theatre operated by Warner's. We do not license our product to anyone there excepting to Loew's, although we do sell a number of subsequent runs.

Q. How does Loew's Theatre in Newark compare with the theatres in these other persons' names? A. Very good theatre and compares very favorably; in fact I should say it is about the best theatre there.

Q. Are they all competing? A. Yes, sir.

(676)

Q. New Bedford, Massachusetts. A. In New Bedford there are four first-run theatres, the State, Empire, New Bedford, operated by Harry Zeitz, and the Olympia Theatre operated by Mullin and Pinanski who, I believe, are associated with Paramount. And in that case we license our product to both interests.

Q. To what? A. We license our product to both interests.

Q. Is Harry Zeitz an independent? A. Mr. Zeitz is an independent.

Q. New Haven, Connecticut? A. In New Haven there are five first-run theatres, of which Loew's Inc. operates three, Loew's Poli, Loew's College and Loew's Bijou theatres. There is a Paramount Theatre there operated by M. & P., who, I believe, are associated with Paramount; a Roger Sherman, operated by Warner's. We license our product to our own theatres, the Poli and the College and the Bijou.

Q. How does the Poli compare with the other theatres in New Haven? A. The Poli is very good. As a matter of fact the Poli Theatre there is the largest theatre in the city.

Q. M & P and Warner theatres compete with your theatres? A. They are also good theatres but we think we have the best for our purposes there.

(677)

Q. New Orleans, Louisiana. A. In New Orleans, Louisiana, there are six or seven I should say, first-run theatres, the Saenger, Tudor and Globe theatres, operated by the Paramount-Richards organization; we have the Loew's State theatre which we operate; there are two theatres there, the Orpheum and the Liberty, operated by Singer, who, I believe, is associated with RKO; and there is a Center Theatre, which operates spasmodically, operated by a Mrs. Lazarus.

We license our product to our own theatre, Loew's State, which is by far——

Q. How does your theatre compare with all the others you have named? A. I think it is the best theatre there. I think they are all the best theatres, generally speaking, except when I say there are some of them that are on a par.

Judge Bright: Even then you are being modest.
The Witness: Slightly, yes, sir.

Q. Do the other theatres compete with yours in spite of all your superiority? A. They all do, yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent runs in New Orleans? A. Yes, we sell some subsequent runs there, or lease them, rather.

Q. New York. A. New York City, there are a great many first-run theatres. Those that are considered first run, I should say, are sixteen or seventeen in number.

(678)

Name them. A. Seventeen, I believe. The Astor is one. I just don't know the name of the people that are operating that now. We used to operate it. The Ambassador Theatre in New York also is a new one, new addition for first-run motion pictures too. Then there is the Roxy, operated, I believe, by people associated with the Fox Company. The Globe and Gotham, operated by Brandt. Rialto, by Arthur Mayer. Music Hall, Radio City Music Hall Corp. I believe Mr. Rockefeller has something to do with it, but it is operated by the Radio City corporation. The Capitol Theatre, which we operate. The Hollywood Theatre of Warner's. Strand Theatre of Warner's. The Rivoli Theatre, I believe, is operated, partially at least, by Paramount. And the Paramount Theatre, operated by it. And then we have the Loew's State, and we have the Criterion Theatre. In addition to that there is a Victoria, operated by the same people whose name I don't know, that are operating the Astor Theatre. Then there is a Republic Theatre that, I think, Brandt operates in conjunction with the Republic Company. And there is the Winter Garden Theatre, that I believe the United Artists now have something to do with as a first-run outlet.

So far as our product is concerned, we license it to a number of different theatres, Radio City Music Hall playing some, and playing one right now as a matter of fact and the (679)
Capitol Theatre plays a number of our pictures.

Q. The Capitol is yours? A. So do Loew's State and Criterion.

Q. The Capitol, Loew's State and Criterion are yours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other persons other than your own theatres, outside of Radio City Music Hall, do you license? A. We have played some pictures with the Globe and Gotham operated by Mr. Brandt.

Q. Is he an independent? A.* I believe we did sell one picture to the Paramount Company and that was about a year or two ago, for the Paramount Theatre, and we might have sold one to the Republic, but we have sold a number of first-runs, or licensed a number of first-runs, in the City of New York to different interests.

Q. You don't make a practice of running your pictures the first-run in any theatre except your own in New York, do you? A. Well, we play a great many pictures at the Radio City Music Hall—I say a great many; as many as playing time permits, but there is by far more of our product played in the theatres that we operate, like the Capitol and the Criterion and the Loew's State. By far the majority of our pictures find their way to those theatres.

Q. Are all those theatres located in the Broadway district? A. They are all located in the downtown district, yes, sir, not all on Broadway, but they are all in the vicinity.

*See p. 549 for correction.

Q. Is there any competition in the theatre business on Broadway? A. I should say plenty.

Q. Any competition in the motion picture business among these theatres on Broadway that you have named? A. They are all in competition with each other.

Q. What would you say as to the relative excellence of the Capitol, Loew's State and Criterion compared with their competitors on Broadway? A. Well, I measure their value to us as a distributor in ability to give us film rental and, under those circumstances, I would say the Radio City and the Capitol are both the theatres that draw off the greatest revenue to us.

Judge Bright: You consider the value of a theatre by its revenue-producing ability?

The Witness: Generally speaking, yes.

Judge Bright: That is, the amount of money that they can produce determines whether they are of greater or of lesser value?

The Witness: Generally speaking, and it generally follows that they are so much better theatres.

Judge Bright: You mean better theatres in equipment?

(681)

The Witness: Better equipment, better seating capacity as a rule, but the final measuring stick is usually where you can get the most revenue.

Q. Do you license any subsequent runs in the City of New York? A. A great number, yes, sir.

Q. Any idea how many? A. I should say five or six hundred, I guess.

Q. Let us go to Norfolk, Virginia, leaving New York for further and later consideration. A. Norfolk, Virginia, we have Loew's State Theatre there; and there are also two theatres, the Norva and Granby, that are owned, I believe, by the Fabian interests; there are three theatres there operated by Mr. Wilder, known as the Newport, Colley and the Centre theatres.

Judge Bright: The Fabian Theatres own the complete interests in the theatres?

The Witness: To the best of my knowledge, they do. In this particular situation there is some sort of pooling arrangement, with which I am not wholly familiar with our Company in this particular place, where, in addition to Loew's State, we also play in some of the Fabian theatres there which were formerly owned by Wilmer & Vincent, which, to my knoweldge, was wholly independent.

Judge Bright: Was that the same Fabian you mentioned in Albany?

(682)

The Witness: Yes, sir, but that is a separate, I believe, a separate corporation because Fabian has operated those theatres in Albany for many years, whereas in these theatres in Norfolk, and I believe he is also interested in Richmond, he just acquired the entire interest, or part interest, in Wilmer & Vincent's, within the last year. He was never operating there up until a year ago.

Q. Who do you license in Norfolk? A. Who do we license? We license the Loew's in Norfolk.

Q. Is Wilder an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he compete with you? A. He does.

Q. Does Fabian compete with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent runs in Norfolk? A. Quite a few to whom we license our product.

Q. Oakland, California. A. In Oakland, California, there are eight first-run theatres, Fox, Paramount, the Orpheum, Grand Lake and the Franklin, operated by Fox West Coast, and in addition to that there are three others, the T & D, Esquire and Roxy, operated by a Mr. Blumenfeld.

We license our product to the Fox West Coast Theatres.

Q. Is Blumenfeld an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the Fox West Coast theatres compare with the three managed by Blumenfeld? A. Generally speaking, they are very superior.

Q. How long have you had that Fox Westcoast account?

(683)

A. Many years.

Q. Been a satisfactory account? A. Very.

Judge Bright: How do you know what film rentals the other theatres draw off?

The Witness: Well, you cannot tell what they draw off but I know from my dealings with individuals such as this, for instance, when you ask me that specific question, I can tell you that in Fox West Coast Theatres in Oakland, if I license a picture to be played first-run there, and the picture shows any merit at all, it is not very difficult for me to persuade the Fox West Coast people to play that picture in another theatre or to hold it another week, whereas my experience with other people is not the same, whether the picture is doing well or not. Your greatest problem with a great many individually operated theatres is to get them to play pictures for as long as the picture deserves. They like to get new pictures and change very frequently, and whereas in these particular theatres as in a good many others——

Judge Bright: What experience—taking that particular one there—what experience have you had with Blumenfeld?

The Witness: None whatever, except in the other neighborhood theatres, where he buys or leases our product, I have murder on earth sometimes to get him to give what we think is proper treatment to our pictures in those other theatres, and I have no reason to believe he would treat me any different in Oakland than he treats me in neighborhood theatres where I deal with him.

Judge Bright: Do you sell him all subsequent-run pictures?

The Witness: I try to; at least we license them in other theatres.

Judge Bright: Do you license any first-run pictures in any of his theatres?

The Witness: No, sir, but he has a number of neighborhood theatres in Oakland and San Francisco to whom we license pictures—to him and to his interests.

Judge Hand: To what do you attribute this, the fact that Blumenfeld is a hard trader and Fox an easier trader?

The Witness: I would say they are both very hard traders, as far as that is concerned, but between the two I usually can iron out any differences that might exist with the Fox people, whereas I am not always so sure—take, for instance, you mentioned this particular case here in San Francisco. I was——

Mr. Davis: A little louder.

The Witness: I was in San Francisco here just two or three weeks ago and one of the purposes that brought me there was to try to make a deal with Blumenfeld and some of his associates in some of his theatres, and his associates had not bought our pictures for six or eight months. So it finally developed that I ended up having to sell some one else where Mr.

Blumenfeld's theatres are operating, and now I do not know that I am going to do much business with Blumenfeld in those theatres at all. In other words, you don't have a dependable outlet, whereas in the Fox Company, I may squabble with them frequently, but no matter what the differences are, they are usually ironed out.

Q. Were you selling the Fox-West Coast in Oakland before Blumenfeld came on the scene? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Fairly treated by the Fox-West Coast? A. Were we fairly treated? Yes, sir.

Q. How do their theatres in Oakland compare with the Blumenfeld theatres? A. For the most part they are much larger and better operated theatres.

Q. Oklahoma City, Oklahoma? A. In Oklahoma City there are six first-run theatres, the Criterion, Midwest, Liberty, Tower, the Warner and the State. The first four theatres are listed here as Standard Theatres—the first five theatres—and the last one, the State, operated by Mr. Noble, who I believe is an independent but whom I do not know. We lease our product to Joe Cooper there, who is associated with, I assume, with this Standard Theatres, but I know he is associated with the Paramount Company.

(686)

Q. How do the theatres in Oklahoma City, operated by Standard, compare with the theatre operated by Noble? A. With one exception, they are of larger seating capacities, and certainly much better theatres.

Q. How long have you had that Standard Theatre account in Oklahoma City? A. Well, I have dealt with them—as I say, I know him as Joe Cooper—Joseph Cooper—and I dealt with him, at least our company has, for these many years, at least 15, 18, 20 years at least.

Q. Has it been a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Omaha, Nebraska? A. In Omaha, Nebraska, there are four first-run theatres, three of which are operated by Tri-States, the Orpheum, Paramount and the Omaha. Tri-States, I believe, is associated with Paramount. Then there is another theatre, the Brandeis, operated by RKO. For many years we have licensed our product to the Tri-States, Mr. Abe Black.

Q. How do the Tri-States Theatres compare with the (687)
Brandeis, operated by RKO? A. They are much larger and much better theatres.

Q. Do the RKO theatre and Tri-State theatre compete with each other? A. Yes.

Q. Have you subsequent runs in Omaha? A. Yes, we have quite a few.

Q. Paterson, New Jersey? A. In Paterson, New Jersey, there are four first-run theatres operating there, three of which, the Fabian, the Garden and Rivoli, are operated by Warner Bros. The U. S. Theatre is operated by Adam Adams, who, I believe, is in some fashion associated with Paramount. We divide our product there. We license part of it to Adam Adams and the other, remaining part, to Warner Bros.

Q. Do you divide it on any fixed percentage or just as the trade works out? A. No, I think one-third of the product goes to Adam Adams and the other two-thirds go to Warner Bros.

Q. How are those fractions arrived at? A. In this particular case it was brought about by a very great difference of opinion between Warner Bros. and ourselves about 12 or 14 years ago. We had a rather serious disagreement and we sold Adam Adams, who was operating that theatre at that time, part of our product, and some little time later we reached an understanding with Warners and then commenced to supply them, too, but we never felt like withdrawing our support from Adam Adams, because he came to us when we needed him, and that is how it came about.
(688)

Q. Peoria, Illinois? A. In Peoria, Illinois, there are three first-run theatres there, the Madison, the Palace and the Rialto, operated by the Great States Amusement Corporation, which is associated with Paramount, and to whom we license all our products first-run.

Q. Those are the only first-run theatres in Peoria? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any subsequent runs there? A. There are a few to whom we license our product.

Q. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania? A. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, there are listed ten first-run theatres there, of which eight are operated by Warner Bros., the Aldine, Boyd, Capitol, Earle, Fox, Mastbaum, Stanton, and Stanley, to whom we lease our product. The Studio and Erlanger are listed as operated by William Goldman—no, the Studio by William Goldberg and the Erlanger by William Goldman. We don't license our product to either one of them.

Q. How big is the Studio? A. The Studio Theatre is a very small-theatre. I imagine it is a theatre that plays mostly foreign pictures.

Q. Listed as having 398 seats. A. Very small, yes, sir.

Q. What is the biggest theatre in Philadelphia? A. The biggest theatre is the Mastbaum Theatre.

Q. How many seats? A. 4800 seats.

Q. How does that compare in size and capacity with the Erlanger [illegible]. Well, it compares much better. The Erlanger is only 1[illegible], but, incidentally, we do not sell the Mastbaum Theatre, in Philadelphia. We have always considered it off location and for many years we did not sell it and haven't sold it lately, but we licensed our product for showing in others of the Warner theatres.

Q. You don't license the Mastbaum? A. No.

Q. What are the Warner theatres you license in Philadelphia? A. We play some pictures in the Aldine, the others in the Boyd.

Q. How big is the Aldine? A. 1297 seats.

Q. How big is the Boyd? A. 2338. The Aldine Theatre is what we used to call a real run theatre. They put a picture in there and they will keep it for weeks and weeks, if the business merits it. The Boyd is a rather expensively operated theatre and they will keep it for a limited period of time. The Stanley Theatre has been more or less of a two or three weeks and maybe sometimes four weeks. The Earle Theatre is a week-stand house. Largely, the Fox was, I believe——

Judge Bright: How long did the Erlanger operate?

The Witness: The Erlanger has not been operating for many years. That is one of the bases of these suits that was spoken of this morning. It has been closed for many years. It just opened lately, I believe. I think it was open last week, or it was due to open, someone told me, for a particular picture, but it has been closed for a long time, for some years.

Judge Bright: Hasn't it been operating during this litigation?

The Witness: No, sir, except maybe for an occasional legitimate show which would go in there, but not with pictures. It has not been operating to the best of my knowledge.

(691)

Q. You license the Aldine, the Boyd and the Capitol. What others in this list? A. The Earle, the Fox, the Stanton and the Stanley.

Q. Why don't you license to the Mastbaum? A. Well, we did many, many years ago license the Mastbaum, and then business got so bad they closed the Mastbaum. It was a very, very expensive house. Well, we considered it to be very badly off location, so when they opened it we would not license out pictures there. We confined the licensing of our pictures to the other theatres in which we had had more favorable experience, and have not, since the theatre opened, renegotiated any deals with them at all for the Mastbaum Theatre.

Q. How does the location of the Mastbaum compare with the Erlanger? A. They are very close together. They are just within a block or two blocks of each other on Market Street.

Q. Is what you say about the Mastbaum being off location equally applicable to the Erlanger? A. I would consider so, yes, sir.

Mr. Proskauer: One block further up.

The Witness: Yes, in the same neighborhood.

We have never licensed any picture to the Erlanger Theatre.

Q. Are there any subsequent-runs licensed in Philadelphia? A. Yes, quite a few.

(692)

Q. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. A. In Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania there are nine first-run theatres, of which the Loew's Company operate Loew's Penn, to whom we license our product. In addition to that there is the Harris Theatre operated by the J. P. Harris Theatre Corporation; the Harris-Senator Theatre operated by the same company; the Fulton, operated by the Fulton-Shea Theatres; the Stanley, Warner and Ritz Theatres, operated by Warner Bros. The Barry Theatre, operated by the Varsity Amusement Company, and the Art Cinema by Morris Rubin.

Q. How many of them are independents? A. Sir?

Q. How many of these you have named are independents? A. I would consider the Harris and the Senator and the Fulton to be independent, and the Art Cinema. I do not know who the Varsity Amusement Corporation is. It operates the Barry Theatre.

Q. Whom do you license in Pittsburgh first-run? A. We license to Loew's Penn Theatre there and also to Warner Bros'. Stanley Theatre.

Q. How do they compare in size with the other theatres in Pittsburgh? A. They are the two largest theatres in Pittsburgh.

Q. Very much the largest, aren't they? A. The largest, yes, sir.

Q. Are there any subsequent-run theatres licensed in (693)
Pittsburgh? A. Yes, a number of them to whom we license our product.

Q. Portland, Oregon? A. In Portland, Oregon, there are eight first-run, six of them operated by the Hamrick-Evergreen, associated with the Fox West Coast. That is the Paramount, Orpheum, Oriental, Playhouse, Music Box and Mayfair theatres. We, however, sell to the J. J. Parker Theatre interests who operate the Broadway and United Artists theatres there.

Q. Are they independent? A. They are independent.

Q. Now, Hamrick-Evergreen is Fox West Coast, is it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent runs at Portland, Oregon? A. Quite a few, and we license our product to them.

Q. Providence, Rhode Island? A. In Providence, Rhode Island, there are six first-run, of which we operate Loew's State Theatre there. There are three independent operations operated by Ed Fay, the Majestic, Fay's, and Carlton Theatre. There is the Strand Theatre operated by an Ed Reed, and the Keith-Albee Theatre operated by RKO.

Q. Do you license only your own theatres first-run? A. No; we have occasionally carried over some of our product for a continued first-run to Fay's Carlton Theatre, in whom we have an interest.

Q. How does your theatre there, Loew's State, compare with the other theatres in Providence? A. We have by far the largest theatre there, and as such I consider it by far the best.
(694)

Q. Are there subsequent-runs in Providence? A. Yes, quite a few to whom we license our product.

Q. Reading, Pennsylvania. A. In Reading, Pennsylvania, there are six first-run theatres, of which we operate one, Loew's Colonial Theatre. In addition to that, Wilmer & Vincent operate the Embassy and Ritz; Jay Emanuel operates the Astor and Park; and Warner Bros. operate the Warner. We license only to Loew's Colonial Theatre there.

Q. Are there any other theatres in competition with you in Reading? A. They are all in competition with us.

Q. Do you license any subsequent-runs in Reading? A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Richmond, Virginia. A. In Richmond, Virginia, there are six first-run theatres of which we operate Loew's Theatre there. Morton Thalheimer operates the Byrd, State and Capitol there. The Fabian interests operate the National and Colonial. We license our pictures to Loew's, but they are shown also at the National and Colonial because of an interest we have in the operation of the Fabian theatres there.

Q. What is the best theatre in Richmond? A. Sir?

Q. What is the best theatre in Richmond? A. Well, our (695)
theatre I consider by far the best.

Q. Are the other theatres in competition with you? A. They are all in competition with us.

Q. Do you have any subsequent-run licenses in Richmond? A. We sell quite a few, yes, sir.

Q. Rochester, New York. A. In Rochester, New York, there are six first-run theatres, the Capitol, the Palace, the Century, the Temple and the Regent, and we operate the Loew's Rochester Theatre there to whom we lease our product. The Palace is operated by the RKO, and I believe the Schine interests operate the Century and Temple. I am just not sure which are the names of the theatres he operates, but our product is entirely leased to Loew's Theatre.

Q. How does Loew's Theatre in Rochester compare with the other theatres? A. Our theatre is by far the largest, and I consider the best.

Q. Do the other theatres compete with you? A. Yes, they all do.

Q. Do you have any subsequent-runs in Rochester? A. Quite a number, yes.

Q. St. Louis, Missouri. A. In St. Louis, Missouri, there are seven first-run theatres, of which we operate two, Loew's State and Loew's Orpheum. The Fanchon & Marco interests operate the Ambassador, the Fox, the Missouri, the St. Louis and the Shubert.

(696)

Q. What is the Dayton Theatre Company? A. Dayton Theatre Company is our company, or, at least, it is a subsidiary of our company, but we operate the theatres, Loew's, Inc.

Q. Do you operate Loew's State and Loew's Orpheum? A. Yes.

Q. Do you license first-run only to your own theatres? A. Only to our own theatres.

Q. Are there any subsequent-runs licensed in St. Louis? A. A number of subsequent-runs licensed there, yes.

Q. Do the other first-run theatres compete with your State and Orpheum? A. They all do.

Q. St. Paul, Minnesota. A. In St. Paul, Minnesota, there are six first-runs, of which five of them are operated by the Minnesota Amusement Company, associated with Paramount. They are the Paramount, Orpheum, Strand, Tower and Riviera theatres; and the World Theatre is operated by the Berger Amusement Company, an independent. We license our product to the Minnesota Amusement Company.

Q. What is the seating capacity of the Berger Amusement Company theatre, the World? A. It seats 800.

Q. And what is the seating capacity of the Paramount? A. 2,362; and then the Orpheum, 2,183; the Strand, 759, and the Tower 1,040, the Riviera 1,306.

(697)

Q. How long have you been licensing the Minnesota Amusement Company first-run in St. Paul? A. For many years.

Q. How long? A. For many years.

Q. Has it been a satisfactory account? A. Very

Q. Do you know whether they were there before the World Theatre was built or not? A. I am sure they were there before the Berger Amusement Company operated the World.

Q. Are there any subsequent-runs licensed in St. Paul, Minnesota? A. Quite a few, yes, sir.

Q. Salt Lake City, Utah. A. In Salt Lake City, Utah, there are six first-run theatres, the Centre, the Utah, the Capitol, the Studio and the Marlo, all operated by the Intermountain Theatres, which is affiliated or associated in some way with Paramount, and to whom we license our product. There is also an independent operation there called the Uptown, operated by Mr. Lawrence.

Q. How does the Uptown Theatre operated by Lawrence compare with the Intermountain theatres? A. It is much smaller than the better theatres of the Intermountain, although they have one theatre that is just a very small theatre, a move-over.

Q. How long have you seen licensing the Intermountain? A. Sir?

Q. How long have you been licensing the Intermountain? A. For many years. As long as I have had anything to do with it.

(698)

Q. Do you know whether they were on the ground before the Lawrence Theatres came? A. Oh yes, I am sure they were.

Q. Have you any subsequent-runs licensed in Salt Lake City? A. Yes, sir, a few.

Q. San Antonio, Texas. A. In San Antonio, Texas, there are five first-run theatres, all operated by the Interstate, associated with Paramount. They are the Majestic, the Aztec, the Texas, the Empire and the Prince, to whom we license our first-run product.

Q. Are there any other first-run theatres in San Antonio? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any subsequent-runs licensed there? A. Yes, sir, quite a few of them.

Q. Sacramento, California. A. In Sacramento, California, there are six first-run operating there, three of which are controlled by the Fox West Coast, the Senator, Alhambra and Capitol, to whom we license our product; and there are three operated there by Blumenfeld, the Tower, Esquire and Times.

Q. Is that the same gentleman you were talking about some time ago? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. What do you do in Sacramento? A. We do very well there. I consider our outlet there is the most desirable and by far the best operation.

Q. You license to the Fox West Coast, do you? A. For many years, yes.

Q. You license all three theatres, the Senator, Alhambra and Capitol? A. Well, we license the three theatres on a carry-over basis; they don't play simultaneously, but our product plays in one of the three depending on the pictures. We naturally would rather play them in the Senator and Alhambra rather than in the Capitol. That is where most of our pictures go.

Q. How long have you been licensing the Senator, Alhambra and Capitol? A. For many years.

Q. Is it a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir.

Q. San Diego, California. A. San Diego, California, there are listed now 10 first-run theatres. Seven of them are operated by Fox West Coast and three by an independent. The three, I imagine, formerly owned by Mr. Mertzger, called the Spreckels, Broadway and the Tower. The Fox West Coast operations include the Fox, State, California, Adams, Orpheum, Mission and the Balboa, and they are by far the better theatres of the city.

Q. How long have you been licensing them? A. For a good many years. As far back as I can remember.

Q. Are there any subsequent-runs at San Diego? A. Yes, there are quite a number to whom we license our product.

Q. Were you licensing first-run theatres before Fox came (700) into San Diego? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who owned the theatres then? A. Well, there was a group owning them; I believe Gore, Turner & Dahnken had something to do with it, and a number of different individuals. There was a company—I forget what the name of it was—but they operated a number of theatres in Los Angeles and in the environs.

Q. I am speaking of San Diego now. A. I know, but in Southern California they operated in a number of places there.

Q. Is the same thing true of Sacramento, that you licensed first-run the Senator, Alhambra and Capitol before they were taken by Fox West Coast? A. I do not know that all three of them were built at the time that Fox West Coast acquired them, but it had been any one of the three, if not two of the three before Fox West Coast acquired them. We had them as a very definite customer in Sacramento, yes, sir

Q. Now, San Francisco, California. A. In San Francisco, California, there are ten first-run theatres, of which Fox West Coast operates the Fox, Paramount, Warfield, St. Francis, State, to whom we license our product first-run. There is also the Golden Gate Theatre operated by RKO; and Blumenfeld operates the Orpheum, United Artists, Esquire and Tivoli.

Q. How do the theatres operated in San Francisco by (701)
Fox West Coast compare with the theatres operated by RKO and Blumenfeld? A. Well, generally speaking they are superior in seating capacity, so far as one is concerned, and generally speaking they are equally as good as the one that RKO operates, and Blumenfeld also operates a very good theatre in the Orpheum Theatre. But I should say that the Fox West Coast for our purpose at least is the best outlet.

Q. Were you licensing the Fox, Paramount, Warfield, St. Francis and State before Fox West Coast acquired them? A. Well, there was a time—our company owned the Warfield Theatre, and there was a period of time when we operated the Warfield Theatre; and I do not think we did so well with it, and we later leased it to the Fox West Coast. So, therefore, for some time we were playing our product in our own theatre.

Q. How long have you been licensing to those Fox West Coast Theatres in San Francisco, licensing first-run? A. I could not answer you definitely on that, because I did not have charge of the West Coast when this transaction happened; but to my knowledge it has been going on for at least 12 or 15 years.

Q. Has it been a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any subsequent-runs licensed in San Francisco? A. Yes, we licensed a number of subsequent-runs (702) there.

(702)

Q. The Fox Theatre belonging to the Fox West Coast at San Francisco is very much the largest theatre in the city, isn't it? A. That is true; a huge place, 4,651 seats.

Q. Scranton, Pennsylvania. A. In Scranton, Pennsylvania, there are four first-run, the Strand, Comerford, Capitol and State, all operated by what we know as the Comerford-Publix, associated in some fashion with Paramount, and they are the only first-run there, and we license our product to them.

Q. There are, you say, no other first-run? A. No, sir.

Q. Are there any theatres in Scranton, Pennsylvania, of such size, capacity and equipment as would entitle them to play first-run? A. No, sir; I would say no.

Q. Seattle, Washington. A. In Seattle, Washington, there are eight first-run theatres of which the Fifth Avenue, the Paramount, the Music Hall, the Orpheum, the Blue Mouse and Music Box are operated by the Fox West Coast Theatres to whom we license our product. There is also an independent operation there called the Palomar operated by J. Danz Circuit, and the Liberty is operated by Jensen-Von Herberg, to whom we do not license any pictures first-run there.

Q. How do the theatres operated in Seattle by the Evergreen Theatres Corporation compare with the Danz theatre and the Jensen-Von Herberg theatre? A. They are far superior.

(703)

Q. Do you have any subsequent runs licensed at Seattle? A. Yes, quite a few.

Q. How long have you been licensing the Evergreen theatres? A. For many years.

Q. Has it been a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Somerville, Massachusetts. A. Somerville, Massachusetts, there are five first-run theatres, the Broadway and Teele Square, operated by Mr. Viano; the Capitol and Ball

Square operated by M & P, who are associated with Paramount; and the Somerville theatre operated by Mr. Viano. We sell or lease, I should say, our product to the M & P interests, either the Capitol or Ball Square. The theatres are very superior and they have been a very fine account.

Q. Is Viano an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say the M & P theatres are superior in quality? A. Yes, sir, in capacity.

Q. South Bend, Indiana. A. South Bend, Indiana, there are three first-runs there, the Colfax, the Palace and the Granada. They are operated by the Great States Amusement Company, I believe their name is, and they are associated in some way with Paramount, and we license our product to them. There are no other first-run theatres there.

Q. Are there other theatres in South Bend which by their quality, location or equipment, would be entitled to be considered first-run theatres? A. No, there are not.

Q. Do you have any subsequent runs licensed in South Bend? A. We do license subsequent-run accounts there, yes.

Q. Spokane, Washington. A. In Spokane, Washington, there are four first-run theatres, the Fox, Orpheum, State and Granada, all of which are operated by Fox West Coast to whom we license our product. There are no other first-run theatres there.

Q. Are there any other theatres in Spokane which by their quality, character and location, are entitled to be considered as first-run? A. No.

Q. Do you have any subsequent runs licensed in Spokane? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Springfield, Massachusetts. A. Springfield, Massachusetts, there are six first-run theatres; the Palace is operated by my company; the Paramount and Broadway theatres are operated by the Western Massachusetts organization, which is in some way associated with Paramount; and the Capitol and Art theatres are operated by Warner Bros.; and an independent operation called the Bijou, operated by A. Anders. We license our product to our own theatre there.

Q. How does your theatre compare in size and quality with the other theatres? A. It is by far the best theatre (705)
there.

Q. Is there competition among them? A. Yes, sir, keen.

Q. Do you have any subsequent-runs licensed in Springfield, Massachusetts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Syracuse, New York. A. In Syracuse, New York, there are six first-run theatres there, the RKO Keith operated by the S.K.E. Company, which is in some way identified with RKO; the Paramount, the Eckel, the Empire, likewise operated by them, I believe; and we operate two theatres, Loew's State and Loew's Strand theatres.

Q. To whom do you license your first run? A. We license our pictures to our own theatres there, which, incidentally, are by far I should say the best theatres in the city.

Q. Is there competition with the other first-run theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any subsequent runs in Syracuse? A. Quite a few, yes.

Q. Tacoma, Washington. A. In Tacoma, Washington, there are five first-run theatres, the Roxy, Music Box and Blue Mouse, operated by John Hamrick Theatres, but they are in fact associated with Fox West Coast; and then there are two independent operations, the Rialto, operated by Mrs. Moore and Mr. Ousley, and the Riviera by Barovic, whom I don't know. We license our product to the John Hamrick
(706)
Theatres, and have for a number of years.

Q. Are you sure that Fox West Coast has an interest in the John Hamrick Theatres? A. I would not swear to it, no, sir, but I am reasonably sure.

Q. I find a disposition here at this table to dispute you about that? A. Maybe they know better than I do; I am only assuming.

Q. Maybe we had better put that down at tentative. How long have you licensed to the John Hamrick Theatres in Tacoma? A. For many years.

Q. How do their theatres compare with the others? A. Much better theatres.

Q. Have you any subsequent runs licensed at Tacoma? A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Tampa, Florida. A. In Tampa, Florida, there are four first-run theatres, the Tampa, the Strand, the Park, and the Florida. There is also an individual theatre there, the State, operated by an individual, Mr. Gore. We lease our product to the Tampa, the Strand and the Park.

Q. Is Gore an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who owns the other theatres? A. Well, there is a Florida Theatre that is operated by the Florida Theatres Company, and the other three are operated by the Florida Theatres Company, who, I believe, are associated with Paramount.

(707)

Q. How do those theatres compare with the Gore theatre? A. Much larger and much better. They are larger and better.

Q. Toledo, Ohio. A. In Toledo, Ohio, there are seven first-run theatres, the Paramount and Princess, I believe operated by Balaban & Katz; there is Loew's Esquire and Loew's Valentine operated by our company; and there are three theatres, the Granada, Rivoli and Pantheon, operated by Mr. Skirball.

Q. Are they independent? A. Mr. Skirball is independent; Balaban & Katz I imagine are associated with Paramount.

Q. Whom did you license in Toledo? A. We license our products to Loew's theatres in Toledo; that is, the Valentine and the Esquire.

Q. Now the Valentine and the Esquire in Toledo are not as large as the Paramount of Balaban & Katz, or the Rivoli of Skirball, are they? A. That is true, they are not as large. We have owned, however, the Valentine Theatre—at least the Valentine Theatre—for a long time before the Paramount was ever built, and I believe before the Rivoli was built. (708)

Q. And you license to them because you own them? A. Yes. We have had this Loew's Valentine for a good many years, and within the last few years also acquired the Esquire. So we figured that between the combination of what we have we are better off than we would be with either a larger seating capacity house and certainly one that cost as much money to operate as the Paramount does.

Q. Are there any subsequent runs licensed at Toledo? A. Quite a few, yes, sir.

Q. Trenton, New Jersey. A. In Trenton, New Jersey, there are seven first-run theatres, the Mayfair, the Stacy, the Lincoln, the Capitol, the State, the Trent and the Palace. The Lincoln, Capitol, State, the Trent and the Palace, are operated by RKO; the Mayfair and Stacy are operated by Mr. Hildinger. We license our product to the RKO interests there.

Q. How do its theatres compare with the Hildinger theatres? A. They are by far the better theatres.

Q. How long have you licensed RKO at Trenton? A. We licensed to Trenton before RKO operated there; we licensed to an independent who disposed of his interest or part of his interest to RKO. For many years we have sold those theatres.

Q. It has been a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tulsa, Oklahoma? A. In Tulsa, Oklahoma, there are (709) four first-run theatres, the Ritz, Orpheum, Majestic and Rialto, operated by an independent named Ralph Talbot, to whom we license our product. There are no other theatres there; no other first-run theatres there.

Q. Utica, New York? A. In Utica, New York, there are three first-run theatres, the Avon, Olympic and Stanley. The Avon and Stanley are operated by Warner Bros., and the Olympic by C. C. Gordon. We license our products to the Warner interests, and there are no other first-run theatres there.

Q. How do the Avon and Stanley compare with the Olympic Theatre? A. They are superior in every way.

Q. Washington, D.C. A. In Washington, D.C. there are seven first-run theatres, Loew's Palace, Loew's Capitol, Loew's Columbia, which are operated by our company. The Earle and Metropolitan are operated by Warner Bros., Keith's, operated by RKO; and the Little Theatre there, which is more or less of a revival theatre, operated by Mrs. Miller.

Q. How big is that? A. 290 seats.

Q. Very well. To whom do you license in Washington? A. We license our products to Loew's Theatres there.

Q. First-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the Loew's Theatres compare with those of Warner Bros., RKO and Mrs. Miller? A. Well, the two of (710) our theatres are by far the largest theatres there and the best theatres in Washington. Our Columbia Theatre does not compare with some of the others, but the other two, the Capitol and the Palace are very fine theatres.

Q. Do the Earle, Metropolitan and RKO Keith's compete with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any subsequent runs in Washington? A. Yes; we lease a number of subsequent runs there.

Q. Wichita, Kansas? A. In Wichita, Kansas, there are five first-run theatres, the Miller, the Orpheum, the Palace, the Wichita, and the Sandra, all controlled by Fox-Midwest, and to whom we license our products, and there are no other first-run theatres there.

Q. Are there any subsequent-runs? A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Wilmington, Delaware? A. Wilmington, Delaware, there are five first-run theatres, the Rialto, Aldine, Queen, the Warner and Grand Opera House. The Rialto is owned by an individual, Mr. Belair; the Aldine is operated by us; and the Queen, Warner and Grand Opera House are operated by Warner Bros. We license our produce to our own theatre and do not to the others, and there are no other first-run theatres there.

Q. How does your theatre compare with the others? (711)

A. It has the largest seating capacity and I believe the nicest theatre there.

Q. Do the other theatres compete with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any subsequent runs in Wilmington? A. A few, yes, sir.

Q. Yonkers, New York? A. In Yonkers, New York, there are two first-run theatres, Proctor's, operated by RKO, and Loew's Yonkers, operated by our company; and we licensed our product to the Loew's Theatre; and there are no other first-run theatres there, or none competent to be a first-run.

Q. How does your theatre compare with Proctor's? A. It is larger by far, and a better theatre.

Q. Youngstown, Ohio? A. In Youngstown, Ohio, there are first-run theatres, the Warner, the Paramount, the Park and the Palace. The first three are operated—there is some sort of pooling arrangement between Warner and an independent, the Shea interests, to whom we license our product. The Palace Theatre is operated by Mr. Printzen to whom we do not lease our product.

Q. You license Warner there, do you? A. We license Warner and Shea.

Q. How do their theatres compare with the Palace operated by the Pallmerco? A. Well, the Warner Theatre is a much larger theatre than any of the others, and, generally (712) speaking, with the carry-overs and so forth, I would say that it is superior to the Palace.

Q. How long have you been licensing Warner at Youngstown? A. We have been licensing either Warner or Shea in Youngstown for many years.

Q. It is a satisfactory account? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any subsequent-runs licensed at Youngstown? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: That completes the grand tour, but I have a few more questions before the bell rings.

Q. Are there any localities in the United States, Mr. Rodgers, where one or more of the defendants here other than Loew's are operating theatres but in which Loew's licenses all of its product to an independent? A. Oh yes, a number of those places.

Q. Are there any cases where Loew's would divide its product between an independent and one of the defendants? A. There are quite a few of those, too, yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell me how many localities there are where the defendants have theatres but Loew's licenses all its products first-run to an independent? A. I believe there is slightly somewhere in excess of 100 such places.

Q. Can you tell me how many places there are where both independents and defendants have theatres and Loew's divides its product between them? A. Well, there are thirty (713)

some places that I know of where we so divide our products.

Mr. Wright: May I make a suggestion? It would save some time, I think, for the cross-examination tomorrow if we could have a list of those hundred places where you say the independents are licensed and the thirty where the product is split.

Mr. Davis: We will furnish a schedule of that.

Q. You can supply such a schedule, can you, Mr. Rodgers? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: Do these 93 cases cover the cases or most of the 73 cities in the Government's trial brief?

Mr. Wright: He covered, I believe, the entire 92 with populations of over 100,000.

Judge Bright: How about the 73 that are on your pages 17 to 19 inclusive?

Mr. Wright: Those are included, and he covered 19 more that also have more than 100,000 population as per the 1940 census.

Mr. Davis: Covered all those as to which an interrogatory was addressed to us and which have been introduced in evidence. That was for 72 and 73, and this is 92, the tour we have just taken.

Judge Hand: In other words, these 20 towns more or less are things that have been added because of information you have given since?

(714)

Mr. Davis: Added to the schedule which was in the trial brief. I do not know whether the information is later or earlier, really.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Davis: It is an overlap of something like 20 towns.

Now, at the moment I think I have nothing more to ask Mr. Rodgers; but if any of my colleagues at the table have anything to ask him, I shall put him in their hands before I turn him over to Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: We shall adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10:30.

(Adjourned to Tuesday, October 23, 1945, at 10:30 o'clock a.m.)

Mr. Davis: The defendant, Loew's Incorporated, without waiving its right to offer evidence in the event this motion is not granted, moves pursuant to Rule 41(b):

1. To dismiss the petition, filed herein on July 20, 1938, and the amended and supplemental complaint, filed herein on November 14, 1940, in so far as the Government seeks the relief prayed for in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (6), (7), (8), (10) and (11) of Section VIII of said petition and in paragraphs (2), (3), (5), (6), (7), (8) and (9) of Section VIII of said amended and supplemental complaint, on the ground that upon the facts and the law, the plaintiff has shown no right to such relief or any part thereof.

2. To strike, as to the defendant, Loew's Incorporated, the following exhibits, portions of exhibits and evidence from the record on the grounds hereafter specified:

APPEAL BOARD DECISIONS

(1) So much of Exhibit 1 (Appeal Board Decisions, Volume 1) as is composed of Appeal Board Decisions numbers 18, 35, 40, 58, 61, 66, 67, 70, 71, 72 and 87, and Exhibit 292 (decision No. 111), it appearing on the face of said decisions that neither Loew's, Incorporated, nor any corporation or agent in any way controlled by Loew's Incorporated, was a party to the proceedings referred to therein, and upon the further ground that the plaintiff has failed to connect either Loew's Incorporated or any corporation or agent controlled by Loew's Incorporated with any of the parties to said proceedings and that the plaintiff has failed to establish by said decisions, or by any other proof or inference, any combination or conspiracy to which the defendant, Loew's Incorporated or any corporation or agent controlled by Loew's Incorporated is a party.

(716)

20TH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION

(2) Exhibits 12, 13, 20-24, 28-45, 160, and all subletters thereof, on the ground that said exhibits being concerned with the organization and business of the Fox Film Corporation are not competent evidence as against the defendant Loew's, Inc., the plaintiff having failed to establish either by this evidence or by any proof or inference any combination or conspiracy to which the defendant Loew's, Inc., or any corporation or agency controlled by Loew's, Inc., is a party.

PARAMOUNT

(3) Exhibits 8, 9, 59, 60-66, 70-73, 78-85, 161, 162, 373 and 374 (same reason as Fox).

(717)

RKO

(4) Exhibits 86-88, 91-101, 105-112, 158, 159 (same reason as Fox).

WARNER

(5) Exhibits 116-129, 156 and 157 (same reason as Fox).

COLUMBIA PICTURES.

(6) Exhibits 130-139 (same reason as Fox).

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION.

(7) Exhibits 140-147 (same reason as Fox).

BIG U FILM EXCHANGE.

(8) Exhibit 148 (same reason as Fox).

UNIVERSAL CORPORATION.

(9) Exhibits 149-153 (same reason as Fox).

MISCELLANEOUS.

(10) Exhibits 164-167, 169, on the ground that the said exhibits show on their face that neither the defendant Loew's, Inc., nor any corporation or agent controlled by the defendant Loew's, Inc., is in any way connected therewith, the plaintiff having failed to establish either by this evidence or by any other proof or inference any combination or conspiracy to which the defendants Loew's, Inc., or any corporation or agency controlled by Loew's, Inc., is a party.

LICENSE AGREEMENTS.

(11) Exhibits 174, 175, 177, 178, 179, 180, 189-192, 194-196, 198-209, 218, 219, 221-227, 229, 230, 232, 233, 236-242, 244-246, 251-261, 263, 265-268 and 271-274. Said agreements show on their face that neither the defendant Loew's, Inc., nor any corporation or agent controlled by the defendant Loew's, Inc., is in any way connected with said agreements, the plaintiff having failed to establish either by this evidence or by any other proof or inference any combination or conspiracy to which the defendants Loew's, Inc., or any corporation or agency controlled by Loew's, Inc., is a party.

"REPRESENTATIVE" FORMS OF FILM LICENSES.

(12) Exhibits 275, 276, 279-290, said agreements show on their face that neither the defendant Loew's, Inc., nor any corporation or agent controlled by the defendant Loew's, Inc., is in any way connected therewith, the plaintiff having failed to establish either by this evidence or by any other proof or inference any combination or conspiracy to which the defendants Loew's, Inc., or any corporation or agency controlled by Loew's, Inc., is a party.

UNREPORTED DECISIONS AND CONSENT DECREES.

(13) Exhibit 299, upon the ground that said exhibit shows on its face that neither the defendant Loew's, Inc., nor any corporation or agent controlled by the defendant Loew's, Inc., is in any way connected therewith, the plaintiff having failed to establish either by this evidence or by any other proof or inference any combination or conspiracy to which the defendants Loew's, Inc., or any corporation or agency controlled by Loew's, Inc., is a party.
(719)

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY DEFENDANTS—OTHER THAN LOEW'S.

(14) Exhibits 350-355, 357, 358, 360-362, 364-374, said communications from counsel for other defendants show on their face that neither the defendant Loew's, Inc., nor any corporation or agent controlled by the defendant Loew's, Inc., is in any way connected with said communications or the subject matter thereof, the plaintiff having failed to establish either by this evidence or by any other proof or inference any combination or conspiracy to which the defendants Loew's, Inc., or any corporation or agent controlled by Loew's, Inc., is a party.

(720)

ing Corporation, pursuant to Rule 41(b), and without waiving their right to offer evidence in the event these motions are not granted, make the following motions addressed to the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint and to the exhibits and evidence offered by the plaintiff, upon the grounds hereinafter set forth.

1. Said defendants move to dismiss each and every allegation of the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint not connected with or having to do with the issues disposed of by the Consent Decree entered herein on or about November 19, 1940, on the ground that upon the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to the relief sought or any part thereof.

2. Said defendants move to dismiss the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint in so far as the plaintiff seeks thereby the relief or any thereof prayed in paragraphs (4), (5) and (6) of Section VIII of the petition filed herein July 20, 1938, or in paragraphs (5), (6) and (7) of Section VIII of the amended and supplemental complaint filed herein November 14, 1940, on the ground that upon the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to such relief or any part thereof.

3. Said defendants move to dismiss the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint in so far as the plaintiff seeks thereby to separate or divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures by these defendants or either of them from the exhibition of motion pictures by Paramount Pictures, Inc. or by any corporation all or any part of the stock of which is owned or controlled by Paramount Pictures, Inc.,

on the ground that upon the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to such relief or any part thereof.

4. Said defendants move to dismiss the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint in so far as the plaintiff seeks thereby to dissolve any corporation in which Paramount Pictures Inc. directly or indirectly has any stock interest, or to dissolve any corporation in which Paramount Pictures Inc. has directly or indirectly any stock interest, and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, or owns directly or indirectly any stock interest in any corporation so engaged, on the ground that upon the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to such relief or any part thereof.

5. Said defendants move to dismiss the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint in so far as the plaintiff seeks thereby to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres in which Paramount Pictures Inc., or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly any stock interest, has any interest, on the ground that upon the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to such relief or any part thereof.

6. Said defendant moves to dismiss the petition and the amended and supplemental complaint in so far as the plaintiff seeks thereby to require Paramount Pictures Inc., or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly any stock interest, or any circuit of theatres in which Paramount Pictures Inc., or any such corporation or circuit is interested, to divest itself of any or all of its or such corporation's or such circuit's interests, direct or indirect, in motion picture theatres, on the ground that on the facts and the law the plaintiff has shown no right to such relief or any part thereof.

MOTIONS TO STRIKE EXHIBITS NOT RELATED TO PARAMOUNT DEFENDANTS.

The defendants Paramount Pictures Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation move to strike, as to them, the following exhibits and evidence from the record upon the grounds hereinafter stated:

1. That portion of Exhibit 1 (being Volume I of the Appeal Board Decisions) constituting Appeal Board Decisions Nos. 10 and 18:

The foregoing motion to strike is made upon the ground that it appears upon the face of each of said

(723)

Appeal Board Decisions Nos. 10 and 18 that neither Paramount Pictures Inc. nor Paramount Film Distributing Corporation were parties to the arbitration proceedings in which such decision was rendered, and that there is no proof in the record connecting either of these defendants with any of the parties to such arbitration proceedings; that there is no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are, or either of them is a party and that none of said decisions tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

2. Exhibits 12, 13, 20(a)-20(1) inclusive, 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 28(a)-28(g) inclusive, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44 and 45.

Of the foregoing Exhibits 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 consist of theatre lists purporting to show the theatre interests of defendants Loew's, Warner Bros., National Theatres, and R.K.O. respectively.

Exhibits 12, 13 and 20-45 referred to above were offered by the Government as being list of National's theatres and "Fox's Answers to the Government's Interrogatories."

(724)

These defendants move to strike these Exhibits 12, 13 and 20-45 upon the ground that there has been no proof connecting defendants Paramount Pictures Inc. or Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, or either of them, with defendants Twentieth Century Film Corporation or National Theatres Corporation or any of their subsidiary or affiliated companies; and no proof tending to show any combination or conspiracy between these corporations or any of them and the Paramount defendants or either of them; that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

3. Exhibits 46-58.

These defendants make the same motion with respect to these exhibits offered under the heading "Loew's answers to the Government's Interrogatories."

4. Exhibits 86-114.

These defendants make the same motion with respect to these exhibits offered under the headings "Answers of R.K.O., K.A.O., R.K.O. Midwest, Pathe
(725) News, R.K.O. Proctor Corporation, R.K.O Radio Pictures Inc. and the Van Buren Corporation to Government's Interrogatories."

5. Exhibits 116-129.

These defendants make the same motion with respect to the exhibits offered under the heading "Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. answers to the Government's Interrogatories."

6. Exhibits 130-139.

These defendants make the same motion with respect to the exhibits offered under the heading "Columbia's answers to the Government's Interrogatories."

7. Exhibits 140-145.

These defendants make the same motion with respect to the exhibits offered under the heading "United Artists' answers to the Government's Interrogatories."

8. Exhibits 146-150.

These defendants make the same motion with respect to the exhibits offered under the heading "Answers of Universal Pictures Company Inc., Big U Film Exchange Inc. and Universal Corporation to Government's Interrogatories."

9. Exhibits 153, 154, 156-160 and 163, being theatre lists of other defendants offered under the headings of "Tabulations of Theatres" and "1945

Theatre Lists" and Exhibits 164 and 166 offered under the heading "Information as to Theatre Interests and Extent of Affiliation of Defendants, furnished by Non-Defendants."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits on the ground that there has been no proof connecting these defendants or either of them with such evidence and no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which they are or either of them is a party; that none of these exhibits tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

10. Exhibits 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193 and 194 offered by the Government under the heading "Representative Master Licensing Agreements between Five Producer-Exhibitors Covering the 1936-37 Season."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are agreements to which neither of these defendants is a party and that there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party, and that this evidence and these agreements do not tend to establish any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

11. Exhibit 199 offered under the heading "Representative Master Licensing Agreements for the Exhibition of Films Released by United Artists, Universal and Columbia Pictures in Theatres of the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants during the 1936-37, 1937-38 and 1938-39 Season." This Exhibit 199 is described as "United Artists pictures in Fox theatres."

These defendants move to strike this exhibit upon the ground that neither of them is a party to the agreement; that there is no proof of any combination or any conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that such agreement does not tend to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

12. Exhibits 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 211, 212, 213, 214, 216, 217, 219, 220, 223, 228, 228, 229, 230, 231, 235, 237, 238 and 239 offered under the heading "Theatre Pooling Agreements between the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants and Their Theatre Operating Affiliates, Now in Effect."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that the exhibits show that neither of these defendants is a party thereto; that there has been no proof connecting these defendants or either of them with such agreements; and no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that none of these exhibits tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

13. Exhibits 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 252, 253, 254, 256, 257 and 258 offered by the plaintiff under the heading "Representative Film Licensing Agreements between the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants Governing Feature Films Released During the 1943-44 Season."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that the exhibits show that neither of these defendants is a party thereto; that there has been no proof connecting either of these defendants with any of said agreements; and no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that these exhibits do not tend to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

14. Exhibits 259, 260, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272 and 274 offered by the plaintiff under the heading "Licensing Agreements between United Artists, Universal, and Columbia, and the Major Producer-Exhibitor Defendants Covering Feature Films Released During the 1943-44 Season."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that the exhibits show that neither of these defendants is a party thereto; that there has been no proof connecting these defendants or either of them with any of said agreements; that there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that these exhibits do not tend to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

15. Exhibits 275, 276, 277, 278, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290 offered under the heading "Representative Printed Forms of Feature Film Licenses Used and Supplied by the Eight Distributor Defendants."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that there has been no proof connecting these defendants or either of them with any agreement of these forms or of any of the terms thereof; that there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that none of these forms of agreement tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

16. Exhibit 298 offered under the heading "Consent Decree Arbitration Awards Where No Appeal Taken."

These defendants move to strike this exhibit upon the ground that neither of these defendants was a party thereto; that there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that this exhibit does not tend to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

17. Exhibit 299 "Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co."

These defendants move to strike this exhibit upon the ground that the facts found are not res judicata and cannot form the basis of or constitute evidence of another proceeding; that there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that such exhibit does not tend to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

18. Exhibits 312-317 constituting the N.R.A. Code, the Bertrand Report, etc.

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial or hearsay and upon the ground that there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that none of these exhibits tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

19. Exhibits 355, 356, 357, 358, 362, 364, 365, 366, 369, 370 and 371, being letters from counsel for other defendants and answers of Universal and United Artists to the Government's further Interrogatories.

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are not binding upon them; that there has been no proof or combination or conspiracy; that none of these exhibits tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

MOTIONS TO STRIKE EXHIBITS REFERRING TO OR CONNECTED WITH PARAMOUNT.

The defendants Paramount Pictures Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation move to strike, as to them, the following exhibits and evidence from the record upon the grounds hereinafter stated:

1. Those portions of Exhibits 1-5 inclusive comprising Appeal Board Decisions Nos. 1, 10, 12, 24, 27, 35, 40, 52, 58, 61, 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 85, 87, 104; all of Exhibits 291 and 292; and all of Exhibits 293-297 (the foregoing exhibits constituting selected Appeal Board Decisions and decisions of Arbitrators in proceedings in which one or both of the Paramount defendants were parties).

(734)

These defendants move to strike these exhibits on the grounds that (a) they do not constitute evidence of the facts found; (b) they do not constitute evidence of any violations of law; (c) they are hearsay; (d) such exhibits and the evidence therein contained are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case; (e) such exhibits and the evidence therein contained are irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution; (f) there has been no proof of any combination or conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party; that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

2. Exhibits 8 and 9 (being respectively described as "Paramount's theatres" and "Paramount's pooled theatres").

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the grounds (a) that the evidence contained in these exhibits, being lists and other information with respect to theatres in which Paramount was directly or indirectly interested as of the date of said exhibits, to wit, 1939, is irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case; (b) that such exhibits and the evidence therein contained are irrelevant to the specific issues of divorcement and dissolution; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

3. Exhibits 59-63, 65 and 66, offered under the heading "Paramount Answers to Government's Interrogatories—Organization—1939 Answers."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits on the grounds that (a) they do not contain any evidence or facts relevant to the present issues, but merely speak as of the date of such exhibits, to wit, in 1939; (b) they do not contain evidence relevant or material to the issues of divorcement and dissolution; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

4. Exhibit 64, offered under the heading "Paramount's Answers to the Government's Interrogatories —1945 Answers."

These defendants move to strike this exhibit on the ground that it is irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, being merely a list of all corporations, whether engaged in production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures or not, in which Paramount Pictures Inc. has any stock interest whatsoever; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

5. Exhibits 63, 70 and 71, offered under the heading "Paramount's Answers to the Government's Interrogatories—Production—1939 Answers."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that (a) they are irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case; (b) that they are irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution; (c) and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

6. Exhibits 72, 78 and 79, offered under the heading "Paramount's Answers to the Government's Interrogatories—Distribution—1939 Answers."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that (a) they are irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case; (b) that they are irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution; (c) and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

7. Exhibits 80-83, offered under the heading "Paramount's Answers to the Government's Interrogatories—1945 Answers."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the grounds that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case and are irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, being merely lists of Paramount's feature pictures released and film rentals received in certain selected cities without any basis being laid for the selection of such cities or for the selection of the 1943-4 season, and the cities selected have been arbitrarily so selected simply upon the basis of population; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

(738)

8. Exhibit 84, offered under the heading "Paramount Answers to the Government's Interrogatories —Admission of Facts—1945."

These defendants move to strike this exhibit on the ground that it is irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, being merely Paramount's admissions of facts with respect to first-run distribution in certain cities arbitrarily selected by the plaintiff upon a basis of population, without any basis being laid for such selection, and upon the ground that they state facts with respect to certain arbitrarily selected motion picture seasons, without any basis being laid for such selection; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

9. Exhibit 85, offered under the heading "Paramount's Answers to the Government's Interrogatories —History—1939 Answers."

These defendants move to strike this exhibit upon the ground that the evidence therein contained is irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

The foregoing exhibits are simply statements as to the history of Paramount and of its acquisition of certain other producing, distributing and exhibiting companies or stock interests therein. In view of the fact that the plaintiff does not complain that any of these acquisitions were illegal, this evidence is wholly irrelevant and immaterial.

10. Exhibits 151 and 152, 161, 162, 165—167 and 169, offered under the headings "Tabulations of Theatres Owned by Paramount Prior to 1938," "1945 Theatre List Furnished by the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants" and "Information as to Theatre Interests and Extent of Affiliation with Defendants Furnished by Non-Defendants."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and are irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, being simply lists of theatres in which Paramount had some interest as of arbitrary dates and letters from companies in which Paramount has some stock interests, without any basis being laid for the selection of dates or the selection of corporations; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

11. Exhibits 172, 173, 174, 175, 177, 178, 179 and 180, offered under the heading "Representative Master Licensing Agreements between the five Producer-Exhibitors covering the 1936-1937 season."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, being simply certain licensing agreements, without any basis being laid for the selection thereof and no proof that they are representative or typical, and without any basis being laid for the selection of the period covered thereby; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

12. Exhibits 195, 196 and 198, offered under the heading "Representative Master Licensing Agreements for the Exhibition of Films Released by United Artists, Universal and Columbia, etc."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues of this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, being simply certain agreements for the exhibition of pictures in arbitrarily selected theatres in which Paramount has directly or indirectly some stock interest, without any basis being laid for the selection of such agreements, or any proof that they are representative or typical, and without any basis being laid for the periods of time covered thereby; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

(742)

13. Exhibits 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 215, 218, 221, 222, 224, 225, 226, 232, 233 and 236, offered under the heading "Theatre Pooling Agreements, etc."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, and upon the ground that they are arbitrarily selected agreements, without any basis being laid for the selection, and there being no proof that they are representative or typical, and upon the further ground that there has been no proof of any combination of conspiracy to which these defendants are or either of them is a party, and none of these agreements tends to prove any such combination or conspiracy; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

14. Exhibits 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 250, 251, and 255, offered under the heading "Representative Film Licensing Agreements between the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants Covering Feature Films released During the 1943-1944 Season."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, and upon the further ground that they are arbitrarily selected agreements covering arbitrarily selected theatres and theatre situations without any basis being laid therefor; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

15. Exhibits 261, 267 and 273, offered under the heading "Licensing Agreements between United Artists, Universal and Columbia and the Manager-Producer-Exhibitor Defendants Covering Feature Films Released during the 1943-1944 Season."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, and that they constitute arbitrarily selected parties for an arbitrarily selected season, without any basis being laid for any such selection; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

Colloquy

16. Exhibits 279 and 280, offered under the heading "Representative Printed Forms of Feature Licenses."

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement, and that they constitute mere forms of agreement used in arbitrarily selected motion picture seasons; and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

(745)

17. Exhibits 350-354, 360, 361, 363, 367 and 368, being letters from various companies in which Paramount has some stock interest.

These defendants move to strike these exhibits upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial to any of the issues in this case, and irrelevant and immaterial to the issues of divorcement and dissolution, and that they constitute merely letters from arbitrarily selected corporations, without any basis being laid for such selection, and on the further ground that there is no proof that either of these defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired to monopolize the motion picture business, or any part thereof, and that none of said exhibits tends to prove any such monopolization attempt or combination or conspiracy.

New York, October 23, 1945;
10.30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

WILLIAM F. RODGERS, resumed the stand.

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Davis:

Q. Referring to the list of towns which you discussed on yesterday; Mr. Rodgers, are there any corrections or additions you want to make to what you said on that subject? A. There are several corrections that I would like to make. I would like to apologize for three errors that have been called to my attention. One of them was in, I believe, Tacoma, where I had listed as John Hamrick Theatres as being associated with the Fox West Coast, whereas I find that they are independently operated by John Hamrick; another instance I mentioned in Indianapolis, where I believed that the Paramount Company were interested in theatres, I find that they are operated by an independent, Harry Katz; and in the case of Cambridge, Mass., instead of——

Q. Just a moment, about Indianapolis. A. Sir?

Q. Does that refer to the theatres that are listed here under the name of Fourth Avenue Amusement Company?

(747)

A. That is in Indianapolis, yes.

Q. Those are operated by an independent? A. Harry Katz, yes. And in Cambridge, Mass., where I inferred or stated that the house was operated—we sold first-run to Mr. Sumner up there, I find that that is a second-run in that vicinity. So those three corrections I should like to make.

Q. Do you sell any first-runs in Cambridge, Mass.? A. Yes, sir, we sell it to M. & P.

Q. Do you sell to M. & P. first-run at the Central Square and to S. Sumner second-run at the University? A. Yes.

Q. Have you any other corrections you want to make? A. Not that I know of, no.

Q. You told us that there are 101 towns and cities in which you sold first-run to an independent although there was an affiliate competing in that town or city. A. Yes; I said in the neighborhood of a hundred.

Q. Have you prepared a list of those towns and cities? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: I offer in evidence schedule of the cases of our product to independent in opposition to co-defendants; and another tabulation, cases where Metro product is divided between independents and co-defendants. Copy has been furnished to the Government.

(748)

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Four sheets marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-5.)

Q. Have you prepared or caused to be prepared under your direction from the books of the company tables showing the division of total domestic feature film revenue received by Loew's from all exhibitors for the fiscal years 1936 to 1944 inclusive, showing the proportion of the receipts taken from Loew's own theatres, from Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner respectively, and from non-defendant theatres? A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Do you identify this as such a tabulation (handing to witness)? A. Yes, sir, I identify it.

Mr. Davis: I offer that in evidence. Perhaps your Honors will want to see it at the bench.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-5.)

Q. There is one phrase which I find here from time to time that you did not define yesterday. What are key runs? A. Well, key runs, according to my ideas, are the more important localities in each exchange area from which following runs key from. I don't know offhand how many there are, but we don't use numerals, we don't use even populations, but what we consider as important communities or important cities or towns in each geographical branch territory are considered by us as key runs. And then——
(749)

Q. Just a moment. Let me understand you. Is a town accepted as a key run or are theatres accepted as key runs? A. Well, I more or less consider the theatre as the key run, for the reason that we are doing business with a certain theatre; but on the other hand, if I were doing business with another theatre, the probabilities are I would consider the town or locality, just as I do in larger cities; I will consider runs after the so-called second-runs, what we call key runs. The next important runs after the second-runs in large cities are called key runs.

Q. What is the significance of the words "key run"? A. Well, "key" means important to me; from which centers or from which theatres important revenue is received.

Q. And what use is made of that importance? A. Well, they all go to help us determine the eventual value of a picture, its exhibition values.

Q. Then they are important from the standpoint of the drawing power of the film? A. Exactly, sir.

Q. Are all your feature pictures, newsreels and shorts copyrighted before they are released? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You showed us yesterday on the form of contract a line where the films were allocated to brackets, first, second, third, and so forth, which you told us was your estimate at the time of the release of the drawing power of the film.
(750)

You also told us that when you were mistaken in that it was afterwards corrected. Is that your general policy? A. That is a published policy of ours, yes, sir.

Q. Who determines when those corrections shall be made? A. I or one of the sales managers working with me, or our district managers, or even our branch managers have full authority in the field to adjudicate those designations at any time that they are satisfied that they should be changed.

Q. Have you given sales managers any general instructions to that effect? A. Yes, sir; we published such instructions.

Q. How have you published such instructions? A. In our house organ and in various talks and communications we have had with our field office.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I suppose we might as well have the instructions rather than his testimony as to what is in them.

Mr. Davis: I was about to offer them, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Mr. Davis: I was just edging up to it.

Q. I show you a magazine bearing the title "The Distributor" dated July 12, 1945, and ask you what this is? A. That is an issue of our house organ, "The Distributor," dated July 12, 1945.

(751)

Q. I notice on pages 6 and 7 of that magazine the 2-page spread headed "The M-G-M Policy." Did you formulate that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you issue that to your distributors and sales managers and salesmen? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it express the policy of Loew's, Inc. with reference to the subjects with which it deals? A. It does.

Mr. Davis: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, it is obviously a self-serving statement prepared for the purposes of the suit.

Judge Hand: We will admit it.

Mr. Davis: I admit the self-serving character.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-6.)

Q. You told us yesterday about this rotation of films. I want to make that perfectly clear. After the film has been exhibited by the theatre to which it is licensed, what becomes of it? A. After it has completed all of its exhibitions, I assume?

Q. Well, after it has completed its several contracts, what does the exhibitor do with it when his contract term has expired? A. He returns it to our branch office or exchange, as we call it.

Q. What does your branch office or exchange then do with it? A. Well, we keep film for a period of years for (752) emergency purposes, but it is all maintained in our exchange for at least two to two and a half years; and they keep all positive prints there returned by the last exhibitor that has played it under the terms of his contract.

Q. What happens when the film is finally worn out? A. Well, at the time the film is finally worn out they are all mutilated and returned—generally speaking I imagine they are returned to the manufacturer or someone else who can salvage something from the positive stock, the nitrate of silver, or whatever ingredients there are; but they are all mutilated.

Q. Why is that? A. So there is no chance of their falling into unauthorized hands.

Judge Bright: Mr. Davis, in this Exhibit L-5 there are some statements or columns headed "Saenger Replacements" and "Theatre Service Replacements."

Mr. Davis: I do not hear your Honor.

Judge Bright: In this Exhibit E there are columns headed "Saenger Replacements" and "Theatre Service Replacements." Will you explain those, please?

Mr. Davis: I will ask the witness to explain that.

The Witness: These are places where they have sold in opposition to the theatres that are now controlled by the Saenger interests.

(753)

Q. And who are the Saenger interests? A. Sir?

Q. Who are the Saenger interests? A. They are associated with Paramount.

Q. And these theatres that you have listed here are theatres competing with the Saenger interests? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are selling to them now in preference to the Saenger? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: Does that answer your Honor's question?

Judge Bright: Then there is another column right underneath that.

The Witness: The "Theatre Service Replacements"? Well, the Theatre Service is an organization that is booked by the Saenger people. How much interest they have in it, I don't know, but they did handle all the bookings; and if you do business in the theatres that they operate you do it through the Saenger Company; and not being able to do business with the Saenger Company in any of their holdings, these are the theatres that we sold against those theatres that are considered the Theatre Service Company, I believe. And we have sold them in opposition to the Theatre Service Company, the Theatre Service booking organization. I just don't know what the correct corporate name is.

Judge Bright: And there is another.

The Witness: There is another one here called the (754)

United Theatre Replacements. Now, the United Theatre Replacements is also an organization that is controlled by the Saenger Company in New Orleans, and these are the theatres that we sold in opposition to the ones that the United Theatres booked or handled.

Q. Can you tell me, Mr. Rodgers, whether the Theatre Service is connected with Paramount? A. Well, the Paramount representative handles all of the business for the Theatre Service. I don't know to what extent they are associated with Paramount, but a Paramount representative in their offices handles the business completely.

Q. But you know nothing of the relationship between them? A. No, sir.

Mr. Davis: Are there any other questions on this?

Judge Bright: No.

Mr. Davis: Do any of my colleagues want to ask the witness any questions?

Mr. Seymour: I have a few.

Cross Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, with reference to this last matter that you just mentioned where you referred to Theatre Service and United Theatres in New Orleans, you said the Paramount representative bought for those theatres. A. E. V. Richards, yes, sir, is the supervising representative there.

(755)

Q. Mr. E. V. Richards is connected with the Saenger Circuit? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Paramount has an interest in that, but do you personally know of any interest that Paramount has in this United Theatres or Theatre Service? A. No, sir.

Q. So that was just your own inference; you had no basis for saying that Paramount's representative bought except that it was Mr. Richards, who is also interested in the Saenger Circuit? A. That is right.

Q. Now, I have a couple of other questions: Where does the Loew distribution department negotiate for the licensing of Metro pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. In the various territories where their representatives are located.

Q. That is, those negotiations are conducted in the field? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, for example, in connection with the theatres managed by M. & P. in New England, are those negotiations conducted in the offices of the M. & P. in Boston? A. Either in their office or ours in Boston, yes, sir.

Q. And, for example, in connection with United Detroit Theatres, are the negotiations conducted in Detroit? A. Always.

(756)

Q. So that in each case of the licensing of Metro pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest, the negotiations are conducted at the office or in the city where the operator or manager of the group of theatres is, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. They are not conducted at all through the Paramount theatre department? A. No, sir.

Q. Are the negotiations for the exhibition or the licensing of Metro pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest conducted by representatives of the distribution department under your general supervision? A. Either general representatives or myself, yes, sir.

Q. At the time of those negotiations, that is, negotiations for the exhibition of Metro pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest, do you have any knowledge or information as to negotiations or arrangements for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in theatres in which Loew has an interest? A. None whatever.

Q. Do you know with whom Loew negotiates for Paramount pictures in Loew theatres? A. I couldn't answer that definitely, no, sir. I don't know.

Q. By whom are those negotiations for Loew conducted? A. By either Joseph Vogel or Charles Moscowitz.

Q. Are those gentlemen in the Loew theatre department? A. Yes, sir, both of them.

(757)

Q. Do you have any connection whatever with those negotiations? A. None whatever.

Q. Is there any relationship whatever between the negotiations or arrangements for the showing of Paramount pictures in Loew theatres and the licensing of Metro pictures to theatres in which Paramount has an interest?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is much too broad for him to answer, as to whether there is any connection whatever.

Mr. Seymour: This is a factual matter in which the Government——

Mr. Wright: It is simply his conclusion, and the conclusion which the Court can draw.

Judge Hand: Yes, there are a good many conclusions on both sides. Go ahead and answer it.

A. No, sir.

Mr. Davis: Any other questions?

Mr. Caskey: I have a few.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, you testified yesterday that you license your pictures in Kansas City, Missouri, to the Midland Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that theatre take clearance over the theatres in Kansas City, Kansas? A. Priority? Yes.

Q. Your theatre in Kansas City, Missouri, plays ahead (758) of the theatres in Kansas City, Kansas? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you informed yourself since yesterday as to whether Fox Midwest has any interest in the Electric Theatre in Kansas City, Kansas? A. No, I have not. I neglected to do that. My attention was called to the fact that there was an error made but I did not get a chance to investigate it.

Q. Where is Kansas City, Kansas? A. It is right across the river from Kansas City, Missouri.

Q. And the so-called first-run theatres in Kansas City, Kansas, are within a mile of the Midland Theatre? A. Very close.

Q. In referring to Denver, Colorado, you have referred to certain theatres as being operated by Fox Midwest Theatres. Do you know who the operator is? A. Yes, Mr. Ricketson.

Q. That is Frank H. Ricketson, Jr.? A. I believe that is his name.

Q. You have known him for some years? A. Many years.

Q. To your knowledge he has the operation of the theatres in Denver? A. All that area, yes, sir.

Q. And has an office in Denver for that purpose? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the name of the corporation? A. I couldn't tell you the name of the corporation, no. I mean, (759)
I don't recall it.

Q. You testified that the Orpheum was the best theatre in Denver. Are you familiar with the Denver theatre? A. I have been in it.

Q. And the Paramount theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. If Mr. Ricketson were to testify that in his opinion they were the best theatres in Denver, would you be disturbed? A. Not at all. They may be for his purposes, but I consider the Orpheum as best for ours.

Q. The Denver and the Paramount are large de luxe theatres? A. Very good theatres.

Q. Centrally located? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Detroit are you familiar with the Fox Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What class of theatre is it? A. It is a beautiful, fine theatre.

Q. And comparable to the Michigan Theatre? A. Yes.

Q. In Spokane, you said that three theatres were operated by Evergreen and that there was a theatre called the Granada, which was not of the same class?

Mr. Caskey: I would like to have these marked for identification as Fox Exhibits A, B, C and D.

(Marked Fox Exhibits A, B, C and D, respectively, for identification.)

(760) Q. Calling your attention to Fox Exhibit A for identification, the Fox Theatre in Spokane, is that the largest theatre in Spokane? A. I believe so.

Q. And it is the theatre in which the best Loew pictures are played first-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you look at the picture of the Granada, whatever legend it bears? A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever played any pictures in the Granada? A. I cannot recall that we have, but I couldn't say definitely.

Q. From your experience in the motion picture business are you able to say without having played any pictures in the Granada, whether the revenue possibilities of a picture played in the Granada are equal to those of the Fox? A. That is quite obvious, that they could not be.

Mr. Caskey: I offer in evidence the photographs of the four theatres in Spokane.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I see no reason why the record should be encumbered with photographs of this character. There isn't any dispute about the fact that there are different kinds of theatres in all of these cities, some of them big and large, some of them small, and they all have different appearance. I haven't the faintest idea of what that proves.

Judge Hand: What, really, is the object of piling in this stuff?

Mr. Caskey: I do not propose to pile it in, but the object is to answer the inquiry which Judge Bright made yesterday as to whether or not an experienced distributor could know the revenue possibilities of a theatre, which he had not exhibited any pictures in, and I want to show that from the very appearance of the theatres that anyone would know that the Fox Spokane is infinitely superior to the Granada Theatre. I do not propose to have an illustrated book of every theatre in the United States, although that in itself might be instructive.

Judge Hand: Not for me. I think we will rule these things out. I think we are getting the case too complex and burdensome for anybody. Things like this we will never look at, you know. I can give you that firm assurance if you want it—the three of us.

Mr. Caskey: If Mr. Wright will give me the firm assurance that he will never contend that the Granada Theatre is a satisfactory outlet for Fox Pictures, I will be content.

Judge Hand: Does he make any such contention?

Mr. Caskey: I don't know.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I expect to develop through cross examination that the question of what is a satisfactory outlet has very little to do with the physical characteristics.

(762)

Judge Hand: You do not have to develop cross examination just to investigate, just for fun. There is no pleasure for us in it.

Mr. Wright: I say, I think I can persuade——

Judge Hand: Unless you have some definite purpose in it. I deprecate enormously this building up of records in cases of this type. I have said so times without number. We will exclude this.

Q. Mr. Rodgers, in licensing pictures to theatres operated by Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, with whom do you deal? A. We deal with a number of individuals.

Q. Principally? A. Well, you have zone managers in various sections.

Q. I am talking now about Fox West Coast Theatres, the California—— A. That is, the California structure entirely?

Q. Yes. A. My original negotiations were first with Charles Skouras.

Q. And then with whom? A. With various of his associates, with Zabel and others.

Q. In the licensing of Metro pictures to the theatres of the Fox West Coast Theatres, has Mr. Skouras or his associates ever conditioned or attempted to condition the licensing of the Metro pictures upon the Loew theatres licensing the Fox pictures? A. No, sir.

(763)

Q. Have you ever attempted to condition the licensing of Metro pictures to the Fox West Coast Theatres——

Mr. Wright: Same objection to this line of inquiry that we made before. He is talking in terms of conclusions that the court has to draw.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Caskey: I am sorry, I did not finish my question.

Q. (Question read.) —upon Fox licensing its pictures to the Loew theatres? A. I have nothing whatever to do with that, no sir.

Q. Has the subject ever been discussed? A. Never.

Q. Is the same true as to the National Theatre groups which are operated out of Seattle? A. Same answer would apply there.

Q. And Denver? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Milwaukee? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Kansas City? A. Same thing.

Q. In negotiating the licensing of your pictures, have you ever conditioned the licensing of the pictures to the California group upon any or all of the theatre groups in Seattle, Denver, Milwaukee or Kansas City licensing the pictures? A. To the contrary, deal only for the individual territory individually.

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

(764)

Q. And has any one of those groups conditioned the licensing of Metro pictures upon your licensing the other groups? A. No, sir.

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, there are eight distributor defendants——

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. Are there any more of the so-called——

Mr. Van Bergh: I have two questions for the Warner.

By Mr. Van Bergh:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, approximately how much film rental did the Warner theatres pay Loew in the 1943-44 season? A. I can't remember that exactly.

Q. Would it refresh your recollection if I suggested the figure of $5,800,000?

Mr. Davis: Where is the exhibit? I think we have that exactly.

A. It might.

Q. Would you say approximately that was in the range? A. I couldn't say that because I deal with a lot of figures and I would have to see.

Judge Hand: I thought you had an exhibit stating it.

The Witness: But I think that was by years, over a period of years.

(765)

Judge Hand: The clerk says it has not been received. I thought it was in evidence.

Mr. Davis: I offer it.

Judge Hand: All right, received.

Mr. Davis: If the clerk will give it a number, so Mr. Van Bergh can refer to it.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-7.)

Q. Mr. Rodgers, Loew's Exhibit L-7 indicates that the figure is $3,731,208. So it is approximately $3,700,000. A. But I understood you to say five million.

Q. That is right, I did say that. A. Because I didn't think so, but I was hopeful that I would be agreeably surprised.

Q. Mr. Rodgers, approximately how much film rental——

Judge Bright: Is that for any one year?

The Witness: 1943-44, $3,731,000.

Q. Will you tell us approximately how much film rental the Loew theatres paid to Warner in the same year? A. I haven't the slightest idea.

Q. Would it surprise you if I told you $200,000? A. I haven't any feeling in the matter because I don't know.

Mr. Van Bergh: All right, thank you; we will prove it some other way.

Judge Bright: Mr. Rodgers, in your licensing practice with the defendants, do you use the same form of license that you do for independents?

The Witness: I should say yes, sir, in most cases, if not in all cases. There are some times when there are a number of theatres that are operated by the defendants in any area, we may use this one form of contract and have annexed to it the various theatres represented, but in all cases we use our same form of contract with the defendants as well as the individuals.

Judge Bright: Has that been so over the period of the last ten years?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: That there is a uniform license agreement which is used for all theatres?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: No matter with whom they are affiliated?

The Witness: That is true, yes, sir. I might add there, with the exception of our own theatres. We do not always execute agreements block by block with our own theatres, but with all the defendants and all the individuals we use the same style and form of contract.

Judge Bright: Who determines whether a theatre shall be a first-run, a second-run or subsequent-run pictures?

The Witness: Well, generally speaking, our branch managers and district managers in the field, and it has been more or less historical, except for new theatres that come on the picture. Very little clearance or availability has been changed over a period of years.

(767)

Judge Bright: Who determines it where there is any question about it?

The Witness: Generally speaking, our branch managers make their recommendation to the district manager, and if there seems to be the slightest question about it at all, the district manager will take it up with the sales manager and, if necessary, bring it to my attention for decision.

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, you testified yesterday concerning the licensing of certain of your pictures in RKO theatres, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In doing so, with whom did you deal? A. Well, I personally haven't dealt very much with RKO in the last several years, but my assistants deal with a Mr. Mirich.

Q. In licensing these theatres of RKO, were they ever conditioned in any way upon the showing of RKO pictures in theatres owned either by Loew's or theatres affiliated with Loew's? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

Mr. Leisure: That is all.

(768)

By Mr. Raftery:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, in addition to the eight distributors here, national distributors, are there any other national distributors in the United States? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you name them? A. I believe Monogram Distributing Corporation, or Distributing Company; there is a P.R.C. Distributing Organization; and, in addition, a Republic Distributing Organization. I don't know their corporate names, but they are the principal three.

Q. They are generally known in the trade as Republic, Monogram and P.R.C.? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And each of those companies have studios in Hollywood? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Republic has a large studio at Studio City, isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. Modern, large studio? A. It is not as large as ours but it is large.

Q. We will admit yours is the largest. Now they have a national distributing organization, have they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have had for many years? A. For some years, yes, sir.

Q. They are affiliated with a laboratory? A. That I don't know.

Q. Well, you have heard of Consolidated Laboratories? (769)

A. I have heard of them but I do not know it to be a fact.

Q. It is generally considered in the trade that they are affiliated in some way with a laboratory, is that right? A. So I have heard.

Q. And they produce a great number of pictures at Studio City and distribute them nationally? A. More than we do, yes.

Q. And more than United Artists, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And more than Universal? A. That I don't know.

Q. Well, as many as Universal? A. I should say approximately, anyhow.

Q. And they license the exhibition of their pictures in competition with your pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To these defendants and to independent exhibitors? A. They are in open competition with us, yes, sir.

Q. And they use generally the same manner of means of distribution that you described yesterday to Mr. Davis? A. I should say generally, yes.

Q. They have a sales manager, Mr. Grainger, have they not? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. James Grainger, well known in the trade, is he not? A. Very well.

Q. Been in the business as long as you have been? A. Longer.

(770)

Q. In addition to that, P. R. C. have a studio in Hollywood, have they not? A. Yes.

Q. On Santa Monica Boulevard? A. I have never been in it but I know where it is.

Q. You know where it is, and it has been there a good many years, that particular studio? A. I don't know whether they have operated it a good many years but it has been there for a long time.

Q. And they distribute pictures nationally? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sell them to the affiliated and non-affiliated? A. Yes, they sell them all over.

Q. And the same applies to Monogram? A. Yes.

Q. They have a studio, have they not? A. They do.

Q. Produce pictures? A. Yes.

Q. And distribute them nationally? A. Yes.

Q. Exchanges all over the country? A. That is true.

Q. In addition, you have other distributors in this country besides the eight here and the three you just mentioned? A. I don't think we have other national distributors.

Q. Well, they may be regional? A. That is true.

(771)

Q. That is, they operate in part of the United States? A. Yes.

Q. But the pictures get circulation throughout the entire United States, do they not? A. I imagine they do.

Q. And numerically they handle a great number of pictures? A. Well, I could not say that, Mr. Raftery, because I have not looked into the number that they handle; whether there is a large number or a small number, I do not honestly know.

Q. Well, yesterday you mentioned a Mr. Blumenfeld in answer to or in colloquy with Judge Bright. Mr. Blumenfeld is an exhibitor operating in opposition to Fox West Coast? A. That is true.

Q. And in your opinion Fox West Coast is a better customer for you? A. That is true.

Q. Now, some here may not share that opinion with you, is that right? A. Definitely.

Q. Well, Judge Proskauer's client might not share that opinion with you? A. Maybe not for their purpose, I don't know.

Q. Well, you will admit Mr. Blumenfeld is a good showman? A. Very good showman.

Q. And he gives Fox West Coast good, stiff competition wherever he operates? A. Good operator.

(772)

Q. And you have no quarrel with any of these defendants who prefer to do business with Mr. Blumenfeld? A. I have no quarrel with anyone.

Q. In this license agreement that Mr. Davis handed you yesterday, is that a license where you license the exhibition rights to a theatre exclusive in that theatre? A. That license agreement covers the license agreement to exhibit the picture in that theatre and that theatre alone, yes.

Q. And that exhibitor cannot sell or assign that license to anybody else, can he? A. Not without our approval, I don't believe.

Q. So when you make a license agreement for the exhibition of your picture in the Capitol Theatre in New York City under the agreement that was put in here yesterday, that picture must be exhibited in the Capitol Theatre and in the Capitol Theatre only? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Raftery: That is all.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, would you please define block-booking? A. Well, we have got away from block-booking for so long that I hesitate to define it other than to say that it has generally been accepted as the sale of a season's output of pictures at one time. However, that is not booking; that is licensing; but it has been referred to as block-booking. (773.)

Q. Now, you have been in this business for about 30 years, haven't you? A. 35.

Q. 35? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us when block-booking began to be indulged in by these companies? A. Well, my first experience in selling a number of pictures at one time was with the Goldwyn Company in 1917, I believe, when I first went with them. At that time, as I recall, we sold in two fashions: We planned to make 26 pictures in a year, and we would sell either a six month's supply or a year's supply; 13 or 26 pictures. Prior to that time we used to sell pictures in the old General Film Company per day or per week; but my first experience in selling a group of pictures at one time was in 1917, I believe.

Q. Didn't you state-right your pictures in the early days? A. I was never identified with the state-right organization, but there were others who did, yes.

Q. Well, don't you know that most of the companies who made their pictures in quantities did state-right their pictures for many years? A. No, I don't know that.

Q. Do you know when the practice of state-righting ceased? A. I could not tell you that either.

Q. Did Goldwyn state-right his pictures at any time? A. At the inception of the Goldwyn Company before he had commenced his distributing company he had gone into the producing of pictures, and I believe that he had made an arrangement with Jones, Linnick & Schaefer for the distribution of his products in the midwest area, and he had made another arrangement with Alfred Weiss for the distribution of pictures in New York State; but that was as far as he ever went in the state-right field, and they were never supplied; but he made some sort of an arrangement whereby they came into his distributing company which he later formed, and he never supplied pictures under a state-right basis.

Q. Did Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sell its pictures in block for an entire season to the exhibitors of the country? A. Yes, sir, for many years.

Q. And that took place all the way down to 1940 when you had the consent decree, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find that a profitable method of exploitation of your pictures? A. We have been profitable for many years.

Q. You made a lot of money with it, didn't you? A. Well, I don't know what you call a lot of money. We were profitable.

Q. Well, you found it an excellent method of disposing of your product each year, didn't you? A. It served its purpose then, yes.

(775)

Q. Have you found the new system of selling pictures in blocks of five more profitable than the old system of book-blocking? A. Well, I can't answer that, whether it has been more profitable or not. I am not prepared to say. We happen to be more profitable. I don't know whether it is attributable to that.

Q. Did you find any complaints from the exhibitors with your five block pictures since 1940? A. They complained very bitterly, yes, sir.

Q. Did your exhibitors complain more bitterly since 1940 with your five block pictures than they did with your block-booking prior to 1940? A. Well, I could not say that, no; they have complained a good bit over many years about many matters, and this is another subject on which they can complain; but whether it is more or less I am not prepared to say.

Q. Would you say, Mr. Rodgers, that block-booking was a very healthy and acceptable form of exploitation of pictures over the years? A. Yes, it was very good for those years, yes.

Mr. Frohlich: That is all.

Mr. Davis: Just one correction in the record, if your Honor please: I find on page 475 of the printed stenographic record a question and answer which in some way got off the rail. I read the question:

(776)

"Q. What other persons other than your own theatres, outside of Radio City Music Hall, do you license? A. We have played some pictures with the Globe and the Gotham operated by Mr. Brandt.

"Q. Is he an independent?" and then the answer is not relevant.

Mr. Davis: What is your answer to the question of whether Mr. Brandt is an independent?

The Witness: Definitely, yes.

Judge Bright: Page 475?

Mr. Caskey: Page 679 of the typewritten record.

Mr. Davis: You may inquire, Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: What is this correction?

Mr. Davis: I could not get an answer to a question which was responsive.

Judge Bright: What is the question?

Mr. Davis: The question is whether Mr. Brandt is an independent, and then the answer which the record shows does not refer to Mr. Brandt at all. I am just simply trying to get an answer to that question: Is Mr. Brandt an independent? It is folio 679, page 475 of the printed record.

Judge Hand: Yes, I see it. What is his answer?

Mr. Davis: His answer is ——

The Witness: Definitely yes, he is.

(777)

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, there were some of those definitions that were given yesterday that I would like to get cleared up; You defined a road show, I believe, as one where the charge was a dollar or more, $1.20? A. For the majority of seats at evening performances.

Q. Of course, all of these theatres on Broadway that are playing first-run charge more than that, do they not? A. Well, I believe they are at the present time, but that has only been of short duration.

Q. But those are not road shows? A. No, sir.

Q. The real definition of a road show is that it is a special showing which takes place without reference to the rights of the subsequent-run exhibitors; isn't that correct? A. Well, the subsequent-run exhibitors have no right in the picture until it is leased to them.

Q. Well, a road show is a special first-run showing that takes place prior to the time that you put the picture into regular release into first-run theatres, is that correct? A. It is a special showing, yes, sir.

Q. Your testimony, I believe, was, in response to Mr. Frohlich's question, that your company along with the others sold an entire season's product in a block before it was produced up until 1940. That was up until the 1941-1942 season was it not? A. Whenever the consent decree became effective, (778) whenever that was.

Q. You called that old method of selling—it was known as blind selling and block-booking, isn't that right? A. Well, it was defined by some as that, yes.

Q. Well, the exhibitor never saw the pictures until he bought them, or never had an opportunity to see them, with some exceptions, is that right? A. Lots of them had the opportunity if they wanted to, but they did not go.

Q. And the only season in which you were compelled by decree to sell in particular blocks or to trade show was the 1941-1942 season, was it not? A. If that is the year when the consent decree become effective, yes.

Q. I say, that insofar as its requirements were concerned, that applied only to the year 1941-1942? A. Is that when it became effective?

Q. As far as you know. A. Yes.

Q. And since the subsequent seasons you have pursued that method of selling voluntarily, have you not? A. That is correct.

Q. And you have, then, sold in those blocks simply because you found it more profitable to do business that way, isn't that right? A. Not necessarily.

Q. Well, in any event—— A. We have sold that way.

Q. You have sold that way? A. Yes.

Q. And not through any compulsion that is in the decree? (779)
A. No, except that we wanted to respect it. Why?

Q. No, I did not say why. A. I thought you did.

Q. You do not mean to suggest that there was any provision compelling you to sell that way? You merely wanted to continue the practice that you had been forced to adopt for the one season, isn't that right? A. There was nothing to compel us to do so lately, that is true.

By Judge Bright:

Q. You mean that since the decree went into effect you have been confining your block selling, or so-called block selling, to five or less pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There has been no blind selling? A. There has been no blind selling at all.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. And your trade showing of the films before they are released since the 1941-1942 season has been voluntary on your part also, isn't that correct? A. That is true.

Q. And would you say the system has proved in practice perfectly workable and profitable as far as you are concerned? Is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall the dire predictions that were made at the time it was first suggested that you abandoned season block booking?

Mr. Davis: That is objected to. I do not think we need to go into the dire predictions.

(780)

Judge Hand: No.

Mr. Wright: I think it is significant that this witness's company and this witness himself at that time suggested—made this same sort of suggestions that are being made now, that if you changed that method of doing business it was going to be unworkable and the industry could not possibly function. Now he has made the same suggestions about this loss of theatres.

Judge Hand: Well, he may answer that, but I do not think his criticisms at one time and those which he has now have any bearing on these issues.

Mr. Wright: Read the question.

(Question read.)

A. Yes, I recall it, but I do not ever remember saying that I considered it would be unworkable as you expressed it. It is workable, but it is a great hardship on everybody in the business.

Q. Well, your organization filed a brief, did it not, before the committee that was holding hearings on legislation to abolish blind selling and block-booking, do you recall that?

Mr. Davis: Objected to.

Judge Hand: Sustained.

Q. Now, I do not believe you defined, did you, on your direct testimony what is called a move-over first-run? (781)

A. I don't recall that it was asked, no.

Q. What is a move-over or continued first-run? A. Well, a move-over first-run is a picture that has been playing at one theatre that is moved into another theatre for a continued run.

Q. That is, there is no interval of clearance elapsing between the two runs? A. Not as a move-over.

Q. And your practice today and for the last couple of years has been to move pictures over rather freely in the metropolitan centers from one theatre to another, isn't that correct? A. In a number of places, yes.

Q. Without any clearance intervening at all? A. So long as the admission prices in the second theatre are identical to the first.

(782)

By Judge Bright:

Q. Is a move-over from a first-run theatre still considered a first-run? A. It is, generally speaking, operating as a first-run theatre, but it is moved in.

Q. Does not prolong the time of the second-run theatres to show the picture every time there is a move-over? A. It prolongs the showing or defers the showing until after the conclusion of the second theatre. If a picture is to be played four weeks in one theatre, it would not become available to the next run until the period after its conclusion. So whether it shows one week in one or three weeks in another, the picture is not delayed.

By Judge Hand:

Q. So it is really all a first-run? A. It is all a first-run.

Q. Even though the time of the two theatres aggregates the same as in one? A. The time in the two theatres sometimes might aggregate more than would be in one, but very often it would not; but that practice has been going on for many years in many places.

By Judge Bright:

Q. You figure the beginning of clearance time from the end of the move-over period? A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Rodgers, I call your attention to the provision (783) in this 1943-1944 license agreement of yours that is in evidence as Exhibit 278, the provision that reads:

> "If the run herein granted is other than first, Distributor always retains the right, without violating any right of Exhibitor hereunder, to exhibit or license for exhibition any or all of said pictures as a 'continued first run (i.e., a run immediately following conclusion of the initial first run and prior to any run except first, with admission prices not less than those of the initial first run) and in such case Exhibitor's availability as to any pictures so exhibited is to be postponed accordingly, and any clearance herein provided over the theatre wherein such 'continued first run' occurs automatically modified to authorize such 'continued first run' in such theatre."

Do you remember when it was you first put that provision in the license agreement? A. I haven't got the slightest idea, no, sir.

Q. Do you know it was not in the 1936-1937 agreement? A. It was not? I don't know.

Q. Don't you recall that the provision was inserted as a result of complaints made by subsequent-run exhibitors about the practice of moving over the films in the first-runs from one theatre to another, extending the playing time and (784) postponing their availability? A. To be frank with you, I don't remember having ten complaints in five years.

Q. Do you remember that such complaints were made? A. Oh, there may have been, but not numerous.

Q. You have heard the term "milking" a picture? A. Sir?

Q. You have heard the term "milking" a picture used in the trade? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was suggested that by this practice you were milking the picture of its value by exhausting the exhibition possibilities in those move-over runs before it got down into the subsequent-runs, isn't that right? A. Well, the term milking a picture does not necessarily apply to move-over theatres. It has been used very often where runs in an individual theatre have been extended. They talk about milking a picture when a man plays a picture for a week when he usually plays it only for four days.

Q. But, in any event, there were exhibitors who somehow did not understand that this additional run was just like a first-run and was not actually an additional run at all, according to your ideas, isn't that right? A. I don't recall who they were, but there may have been some complaints, but not many.

Q. And that problem was resolved by incorporating this provision in your license, isn't that right? A. Well, that I (785) could not say, Mr. Wright. I don't know whether that was the cause of it.

Q. Then I notice this other agreement that was offered here as Defendant's Exhibit L-1. That represents the latest revision of your license contract, does it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has the date marked 1945. Is that when it was revised? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what the purpose or occasion was for revising the agreement at that time? A. Well, the theatre owners at many times have asked us for a shorter form of contract, and we have been working on it for a good many years. I have been trying to persuade our legal department to take out all paragraphs they did not consider absolutely necessary to properly protect us, and that is the result of it, as far as I know.

Q. Well, do you know what particular changes were made, if any? A. I could not tell you that, no, sir.

Q. I will call your attention to one particular phrase which was omitted from your 1943-1944 agreement, Exhibit 278. The last sentence states of the provision entitled 10th Clearance and Run:

> "If clearance is granted hereunder against a specified theatre or theatres indicating it was Distributor's intention to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of Exhibitor's theatre, then (786) > unless otherwise provided in the Schedule such clearance shall be deemed to apply to and include any theatre hereafter opened in such vicinity."
>

Mr. Davis: Is that 1944?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Q. You recall that was dropped out of the 1945 revision, Defendant's Exhibit A? A. No, sir, I don't recall it.

Q. You don't know why it came out of there or how? A. I personally participated very little in the reduction of that license form.

Q. This revision was a straight lawyer's job, is that right? A. Well, it was not entirely a straight lawyer's job. My associates, some of them, participated in discussions with our attorneys; but as to the elimination of a particular clause, I could not tell you why it was.

Q. Now, in your direct testimony I believe you referred to clearance as the interval of time that elapsed between the two or more runs? A. That is right.

Q. Now, in so far as it is necessary to establish an interval of time between runs, you do not need any agreement with the first-run exhibitor to do that at all, do you? A. Well, the first-run exhibitor will usually discuss with you what period of clearance he thinks he is entitled to before it is shown in other theatres.

Q. I understand that, but you as a distributor, in so far as you may find it desirable to stagger runs and protect your revenue in the area by proper staggering, you can stagger those runs on the basis of what you call open booking, with no clearance agreements whatsoever, isn't that right? A. We have some agreements with open booking as runs get later, yes, where two theatres will play the pictures simultaneously, or, at least, they have the same opportunity.

Q. And an example of that, I suppose, is Baltimore where after you get through with your pictures in your first-run theatre and a move-over in your other theatre, it goes into 15 or 20 theatres simultaneously on second-run, doesn't it? A. No. We have a second-run theatre in Baltimore, and the clearance, incidentally, is very short.

Q. What is the theatre you refer to as your second-run theatre? A. The Parkway.

Q. So that you in Baltimore play a first-run at what theatre, usually? A. Usually at the Valencia, and Century.

Q. And then a move-over at the Century? A. We don't always move over; but then we play at the Parkway second-run, but we have to play in a very limited time because we have leased, as a general thing, pictures to be played in the neighborhood theatres 21 days after the conclusion of the downtown first-run.

Q. So, then, after you get through with the move-over first-run and the second-run at the Parkway, then they go into 15 or 20 theatres simultaneously? A. To a number, yes.
(788)

Q. And those are all independent theatres? A. In different areas, that is right.

Q. Those simultaneous runs? A. Yes.

Q. And you have as between those theatres what you refer to as open booking, isn't that right? A. Well, some of them do not compete with each other. They are in different zones. They have an availability of blank number of days after the conclusion of first-run, and they do not always have any relation with others. I do not say that we have any contracts that I know of that has so-called open bookings for 15 or 20 runs there, no. I would say they are due a certain time and they all have the same availability.

Q. Just give me a definition of open booking? A. Open booking is usually confined, generally speaking, to two theatres who are not, maybe, in direct competition but who are reasonably close to each other, and the picture is available to both of them at the same time. But that is usually confined to two theatres, when you refer to the term "open booking."

Q. I am just trying to get what the term means. And you do have the practice of having open booking in some of those situations where the prints become available to both at about the same time, and sometimes you move a print into one theatre first, and the next time it may go into the other theatre first, so neither has a fixed playing position in reference to the other. That is what open booking does? A. They have the same opportunity to book at the same time, and if we have the prints available they will get them at the same time.

Q. Yes; and I say, in that case, there is no clearance which gives one a fixed position over the other? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, booking I don't think has been defined. Perhaps you had better tell the Court what booking is as distinguished from licensing, or what you call selling. A. The booking of attractions after we receive the license agreements and the complete approval is had and they become a matter of record, we have in our exchange offices or branch offices, as they are sometimes termed, and dependent upon their size, anywhere from two to eight people who are engaged for the purpose of booking the picture to the theatres in accordance with the provisions in the license agreement. And very often they will send notices to the theatre that a picture is available at a certain time, and the theatre will then come in and book a picture at a time when he can best use it within that period that it is available; or he will write in. For as brief a description as I could give, I could more or less liken it to the same manner in which many years ago bookers routed vaudeville acts. We routed them all over the country in different theatres. I think we could give an act 30 or 40 weeks in New York by routing it to different theatres. The same thing is followed in booking of motion pictures.

Q. And these so-called bookers of yours in the exchange keep a chart, do they not, not only of the first-runs as they play in your theatres, but the first-runs in all of the theatres in the area, isn't that right? A. Well, they don't necessarily keep a chart of the first-runs in the area that are not playing our pictures. Their charts are maintained only for the pictures of ours that are leased.

Q. Well, for purposes of determining what the most advantageous times are to date or what you call setting in these pictures, it is necessary for your booker to know not only what Loew pictures are coming off the first-run, but when and what pictures of other distributors are coming off the first-run; is that right? A. No. I don't believe there is a single chart in any one of our offices maintained by a booking clerk that shows any such data.

Q. Well, whether there is a chart or not, I say, isn't it a fact that your booker in order to do his job properly has to know not only what pictures of yours are being shown first-run, and when, but the first-run play dates in the area for the other distributors' films? A. How can—— I was just about to ask you a question. But you are asking me.

Q. Can you answer that yes or no? A. I will say no, that we do not maintain such records in our exchanges, or the bookers.

Q. I did not ask you whether you maintained a record. If you will listen carefully to the question—— A. Give it to me again.

Q. Isn't it the fact that the booker in your exchange, in order to do his job properly, has to know and observe not only when and what pictures of yours are played in the first run theatres in the area, but when and what pictures of the other major distributors are played in the area? A. No, he does not have to know that.

Q. You say that is not a fact? A. No.

Q. Now, you gave a rather extensive testimony or explanation here as to what you call first-run theatres in these 92 cities of over 100,000 population. I don't believe you defined first-run theatre. Can you do that for us, as you used it? A. A first-run theatre?

Q. Yes. A. A first-run theatre, in my opinion, is any theatre that plays pictures first-run in its individual community.

(792)

Q. Plays anybody's picture first-run? A. Yes, I would say anybody's. I am talking about my own principally.

Q. Well, in this list that you gave us, then, you included theatres, did you, that played any product at all for the first time in the City? A. Played any product at all for the first time in the City, yes.

Q. All of the theatres in the cities named which played anybody's pictures at all for an initial exhibition in the town were included in the names you gave us of the first-run theatres in these towns? A. Oh, no. There are a lot of pictures that would never see the light of day for first-run in a number of the first-run theatres. You know that.

Q. Yes. That is what I am trying to get at. That is, what the basis of the selection of these particular theatres that you did include in the list was. A. I believe those theatres want to play the best motion pictures they can get.

Q. Those are the theatres which played the best pictures on the first-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the basis for your selection, is that right? A. They are theatres which play the best pictures first-run, yes, and maybe some of the poor ones; I don't know.

Q. Well, the Little Theatre that you gave us there in Washington has not played a first-class major picture on first-run in ten years, has it? A. It has not played any of mine, I hope.

Q. Why did you put it in the list as a first-run theatre? A. Because it is so considered. It plays some of the small pictures or some of the inconsequential pictures, I suppose, but it is listed as a first-run theatre and is so considered.

Q. Listed by whom? Where? A. Well, our records in New York would indicate that it was considered a first-run.

Q. Well, were you just testifying from some records that you had in New York or from any personal knowledge that you have about the theatre situation there? A. I was testifying principally from the records that I had in New York plus the knowledge that I have gained over a period of a good many years.

Q. As a matter of fact, you did not include in the list a Warner Theatre, the Ambassador, which plays many first-class major pictures, and first-run, did you? A. I never considered the Ambassador to be a definite first-run theatre in Washington.

Q. Well, the Ambassador actually has, in the last five years anyway, played more, or has played a substantial number of first-class major pictures, and first-run, hasn't it, simultaneously with the downtown play dates in the Warner theatres? A. It has not played any of ours first-run.

Q. Your list was not limited to the list which played your pictures first-run; that is right, isn't it? A. The list may not have been, but I was trying to establish the fact that we selected the first-run theatres where we thought we had the better opportunities for return——

Q. I understand that, but you went further than that, and you undertook to name the other first-run theatres in the town, whether they played your pictures or not; that is correct, isn't it? A. The other recognized first-run theatres, yes, sir.

(795)

Q. I am just trying to find out why you excluded the Ambassador and included the Little in your statements? A. Don't the Ambassador play also some single pictures?

Q. I suppose they do. A. That is not a customary thing, however. I would not class a theatre that played first and second, when they could get an occasional picture, first-run.

I don't consider that a first-run theatre. Certainly I would never seek that as a first-run outlet.

Q. Then you excluded from your tabulation those theatres which do not play first class pictures on first-run as a regular full-time policy, is that right? A. No, sir, I didn't exclude anything from that list. I listed the record that we maintain shows the recognized first-run theatres in all of these cities and the Ambassador is not a recognized first-run theatre in the City of Washington.

Q. What made the Little recognized first-run, according to your testimony? A. Because it has always been considered, and I suppose it plays such pictures as it can get first-run.

Q. It played constantly foreign pictures and three, and four and five-year old reissues? A. If I had a few foreign pictures and the possibilities were limited, sir——

Q. Can you just answer the question? A. I don't know what they play. I don't keep a record of their entertainments.

(796)

Q. Without knowing what they play, you cannot give any accurate classification as to whether or not it is an accepted first-run theatre in the trade, can you? A. Wouldn't you believe, or haven't I got a right to believe that our representatives in the field know what is a first-run theatre and what is not?

Q. I assume your representatives in the field might know.

Judge Bright: How do you get the reports?

The Witness: They are all sent to us by our branch offices in the field. Most of our representatives have been stationed in the individual area over many years.

Q. I have understood you were testifying here about something you knew. I suppose if your representatives in the field want to testify, they are available, isn't that right? A.

If I don't know fairly well, I have been fooling somebody for a long time.

Q. There are a very substantial number of theatres on that list that you gave us which you know as a fact never have or don't now play any regular run, regular first-run of first class pictures in those towns, is that right? A. Mr. Wright, what do you refer to as first class pictures? I consider every one of the theatres that are listed on there as being first-run theatres. Now, what they play, I have no knowledge of because I couldn't attempt to keep such a record. I only know of their record as first-run theatres.

Q. In other words, you are just giving us what your records in the exchange show, is that right? A. Plus my knowledge, yes. I possibly don't know every little theatre all over the country.

Q. You don't know anything about what the actual playing policy of the Little in Washington is, is that right? A. No, sir, I couldn't tell you that.

Q. Do you know anything about what the playing policy of the Little Theatre in Baltimore is, that you gave us as a first-run theatre? A. No, sir, I don't know what they play.

Q. You answer the same as to the Mayfair in Baltimore? A. Would be the same. I don't know. It would be the same as it relates to any first-run theatre in Baltimore. I don't keep track of their entertainment.

Q. And this Downtown Theatre in Detroit, you know as a matter of fact that theatre has never had a run of first-run pictures there, is that right? A. Not for some time. Been closed. Been closed for most of the time—for a number of years.

Q. Why did you put that on the list? A. Because I had a letter from Mr. Balaban inquiring for our first-run the other day, and said he had taken the theatre over and a brother of one of the officials of the firm wants first-run there.

Q. You put it down as a first-run prospect? A. Not a prospect for me. It is a first-run theatre now.

Q. You mean when somebody takes it over and says that he wants first-run, then it becomes a first-run theatre? A. I believe he notified me it had been so established and that he was seeking first-run.

Q. That State Theatre you named in Hartford, Connecticut, what first-run pictures did that theatre ever play? A. I believe some years ago it played some of ours. Did not do so well.

Q. How long ago? A. A good many years ago.

Q. Why was it put on the list as a first-run theatre now? A. Because I believe it is. So it has been reported to me as a first-run theatre. It has had a varied career.

Q. You haven't any idea as to what, if any, first-run product it has had? A. No, I haven't checked into it.

Q. You gave us two theatres in Louisville there, Mary Anderson and the National. A. Yes.

Q. Do you know anything about the playing policies of those theatres? A. I don't know what product they play, no.

Q. You know as a matter of fact that they don't have any regular first-run of any major product, is that right? (799)

A. No, I don't know that is a fact.

Q. Your knowledge is completely negative on the subject? A. On that, indeed it is.

Q. And in Philadelphia you gave us the Studio as a first-run theatre. Do you know what they play? A. No, I don't.

Q. And the Erlanger, I believe you already testified, was another closed theatre you gave us. A. Closed for a good many years, but I believe is open now. I don't know; I have heard it was.

Q. You gave us the World at St. Paul. Do you know what product, if any, that plays? A. No, I have been told that it plays foreign pictures and reissues and so forth, but I personally haven't any knowledge of what they play regularly.

Q. A theatre that plays foreign pictures and reissues is not what you would term a regular first-run theatre, is that right? A. I wouldn't sell it unless I had that particular type of product to sell. It is first-run to somebody.

Q. In that tabulation you gave us yesterday as to this number of theatres that lifted their admission price on this "As Thousands Cheer," I believe there were 300-odd out of 3000? A. I believe that was the record, yes.

Q. Did you make any check to see which of those were first-run theatres? A. I couldn't tell you that, no. I simply asked to have a statement made up that would show me the number of theatres that increased their admission price beyond the price provided for in the agreement. I did not attempt to differentiate between first, second and third.

(800)

Q. As a matter of fact, all those were first-runs, were they not? A. I don't know. I merely asked for the numerals. I haven't asked for the details.

Q. The other data is readily available, if you wanted to get it? A. Oh, the data is available, yes.

Q. On this question of what a satisfactory first-run outlet is, that is never solely determined by a consideration of the size or physical characteristics of the theatre, is it? A. Of the size? Not necessarily, no.

Q. That is, you have many situations where you may have a small theatre and if you can get sufficient playing time in it, you can make more money than you would ever get in a big theatre with less playing time, isn't that right? A. There may be such situations. A lot of things depend on it, however.

Q. There are other situations where, because of a low operating expense, a theatre may be able to pay you much more in first-run revenue than another theatre which, perhaps, has a flossier set of ushers, more expensive equipment and a fancier marquee, isn't that right? A. The additional (801)

expenses don't usually come from those reasons. It is many other reasons.

Q. I understand that, but it may be worth more to you than a high expense theatre which has a much finer appearance? A. Might be. There may be some situations.

Judge Bright: Isn't your take figured on the gross?

The Witness: My take is figured on the gross.

Judge Bright: What has expense got to do with it?

The Witness: The expense has got this much to do with it. Very often, if you are dealing with a theatre that has an unusually high expense, possibly an over-financed theatre, where the rent is high and their equipment is very expensive, and a charge-off, they are hardly in a position to pay you market terms and they want to buy pictures, because of their condition, at less than market terms because they cannot afford to pay the customary terms because of their high operating expense. So, as Mr. Wright pointed out, there are some theatres—we own a very small theatre in Toledo, Ohio, where our operating expense is not too high—but I can do better with our own theatre, as I tried to explain yesterday, than I could do with the Paramount Theatre in Toledo, which has an unusually expensive operation and seats many more people. I would rather do business with our own theatre in that case, where I would eventually do much better in the net result.

Judge Bright: You mean you could make a better deal with the lower-priced theatre than the higher expense theatre?

The Witness: Very true, over-financed and over-expensive theatre. I might be able to do just as well with something not too expensive.

By Judge Bright:

Q. Who determines what percentage you will get from any particular theatre? A. Well, we usually have a general policy. For instance, as I explained yesterday, we have a sliding scale. If I have a sliding scale that develops as the gross develops, for me to get an increased amount of revenue, a normally-operated theatre would have that scale developed in the proper order, whereas a fellow who has a very expensive theatre will object to the jumps of one percentage to another. He says, "You should leave a wider gap between 27½ and 30 per cent, or 30 per cent and 32 per cent," and in a theatre such as we operate in Toledo, as I say, it has been a very lucrative outlet for our product.

Judge Hand: All you mean is, really, there are situations where the exhibitor is in such difficulty, financially or otherwise, that he cannot and won't make the conventional trade with you?

The Witness: There are——

Judge Hand: And therefore you might do better with another exhibitor, yourself in your own theatre, or some other exhibitor who hadn't the apparent potentialities?

The Witness: That is correct, sir.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. And I suppose it is true that even where the same percentage terms are granted, you may get more out of the small theatre, if you play the picture there for a longer period of time, is that right? A. That, of course, would have to be specific, Mr. Wright. I couldn't answer that in a general way. I would have to know. Do you have any particular place in mind. I certainly couldn't hope to get as much money out of ten weeks at the Little Studio Theatre in Philadelphia as I could get out of the Stanley in two.

Q. But if you have a 1000-seat theatre and a 2000-seat theatre, you can get much more out of three weeks in the 1000-seat theatre than you can get out of one week in the 2000-seat theatre, isn't that right? A. You would have to talk——

Q. Same admission prices and same terms? A. You would have to talk to me specifically on that. I couldn't answer that.

(804)

Q. That is a possibility? A. Could be a possibility. I couldn't say it was or it was not until I knew what you were talking about or where you were talking about.

Q. In any event, playing time is a function of your profit possibilities? That is one thing that determines how much revenue you can take out of any first-run theatre, is how much playing time your pictures get, isn't that right? A. Playing time is the most competitive thing in this business today.

Q. But can you answer the question? A. Playing time is very important to us, very necessary, to get the best we can.

Q. The answer to my question is yes, isn't it? A. Well, I would have to ask you to read the question again.

Q. (Read.) A. That is one thing, yes, sir.

Q. And how much playing time is available to you in first-run theatres depends, of course, does it not, on what other product the theatre has available, right? A. I don't know whether it depends on what other product it has available or not. I know that when we have a product to lease we want it played in certain theatres, I would rather feel that the other product that is leased at that theatre depends entirely on what they have left after they play ours.

(805)

Mr. Davis: Will you raise your voice a little? We cannot hear you very well.

Q. I understand that is the arrangement you prefer but, as a matter of fact, how much playing time you line up with depends, at least to some extent, on what other comparable pictures are available to the exhibitor, isn't that right? A. Not necessarily the case. In the majority of places where we operate, and the types of theatres that I assume you are talking about, we have what are commonly known in this business, as you know, as hold-over figures. In other words, our picture can play at the Radio City Music Hall as long as the first four days reach a certain amount of money. The same holds true with our Capitol Theatre. So we won't go into a theatre of that type, in a good many other first-run theatres, for a given period of time. It depends on the public's support of the picture.

Q. Can you tell the Court just how you use this sliding scale formula of yours, that is, when you make a deal with an exhibitor, as I understand it, you have an option there, he can either buy on a flat rental—that is, in the exceptional case, a fact? A. Very small cases—small theatres.

Q. And the other alternative is that he can give you a minimum guarantee against a fixed percentage of the gross? A. No, I don't particularly care about the guarantee against the fixed percentage, but in some small situations, where it may work a hardship on the theatre to pay our terms in the way of percentagewise, we have agreed to take a flat amount of money, $50, we will say for illustration, and divide all the excess receipts beyond an agreed amount.

Q. And those are situations where you fill in on your columns—in those situations you fill in, in column 3 on your form there, a flat figure, which is a guarantee against a percentage of the rental, is that right? A. Well, I don't have many guarantees, Mr. Wright, against a percentage, no, sir. I have a guarantee rental with an excess receipts arrangement, but I don't have many guarantees against a fixed percentage.

Q. I am afraid I don't understand the difference. You have a guarantee and then you have a certain overage, which is dependent upon what the picture grosses, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And that overage is determined on this sliding scale of percentages, that is, it always slides up with the increase in receipts, does it not? A. That is a different type of deal entirely than the sliding scale. The sliding scale is predicated upon a figure that is agreed to by which we get a given percentage and before we can earn a larger percentage, the gross receipts must go up, and we agree with the theatre owner the different grosses that must be reached before our percentage can increase.

Q. Yes, I understand that, but you have on your column here headed "Sliding Scale Terms" spaces headed "When gross receipts per unit of playing time equal or exceed a certain amount." What is that figure that you inserted in there as a figure per unit of playing time? How did you arrive at that? A. A unit of playing time is this, that generally speaking in situations in this country, where theatres are open seven days, there are ten units charged, the assumption being that three units of the ten represents about the amount of business that a man does on Sundays, two units represents what he does on Saturdays, and one unit for each of the other five days of the week. So, therefore, when a unit figure is arrived at, it is set in that column——

Q. And that unit figure is a flat amount in dollars? A. That is true, and we get a certain percentage up to that figure and then beyond that it improves as the scale provides.

Q. How do you determine that unit figure? A. By negotiation.

Q. And that negotiation involves a consideration of what factors? A. Well, it involves, usually a factor— that is determined by the gross receipts, that we have a record of, that the theatre is doing with our pictures; and in other cases, where we have authenticated the operating expenses of the theatre, we have no hesitancy in making a deal based on the man's cost of operation.

(808)

Q. So that your unit or control figure there is closely related to his expense of operation? A. In some instances; in others, no. Some people won't let us audit expense, they won't tell us what the expense is.

Q. Your contract gives you the right not only to audit the gross receipts but to go in and audit his expenses, if his agreement with you is such that his film rental is computed in terms of profit as well as mere gross, isn't that right? A. Any contract that has anything to do with expense, we reserve the right to verify it, yes, sir.

Q. In negotiating in the past these percentage deals for a sharing of proceeds, after the gross reached a fixed amount, you always fixed that so-called split or control figure with reference to what the operating expenses of the house were, isn't that right? A. Very often what he told us they were.

Q. In any event, you did not expect to share 50-50 with him until he had at least gotten his expenses back and some, or usually some profit, isn't that right? A. That is true, but they aren't subject to audit. That is not subject to audit.

(809)

Q. I suppose that depends on the terms of the agreement? A. Exactly.

Q. You spoke of this competition between these affiliated theatres in these towns you named. You did not mean to suggest by that that there was any competition between them in so far as licensing of your films was concerned, did you? A. No, no, I wouldn't suggest that.

Q. And I take it you don't know enough about their operating policies, or such other films as they license, to have any very accurate idea as to the extent to which they might compete with each other otherwise? A. No, I only know that every one of the theatres that we operate are operated in cities where there is keen comptition, but I do not keep a record of what the other theatres play, nor do I know what they lease.

Q. You only know that there are other first-run theatres there? A. Yes.

Q. That is what it comes down to? A. That I know.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, just what do you mean by "affiliated theatres"?

Q. I take it in response to the last question you understood the term affiliated as referring to those affiliated with one of the defendant distributors here, is that right? A. I understood it as that, yes.

(810)

Q. In this question of selecting these so-called move-over or continuous first-run outlets, many of those theatres are of the character we were discussing where they are rather small and have a low operating overhead, isn't that true? A. No, not necessarily. Some of them are, but that is not the rule by any means.

Q. In those situations where you license your first-runs, that you described in your direct testimony, to these first-run theatres in the 92 cities where there were two or more of them, your films were generally licensed on what you call an "or" basis, is that right? A. That is true.

Mr. Dennis: On what basis, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: "Or".

Q. That is, you license them for such and such a theatre or the next one or the next one, so the exhibitor may play the film in any one or all three or four, as the case may be, is that right? A. We usually don't incorporate "or" unless the theatres are more or less comparable.

Q. In most of those situations you regard them as comparable for your first-run purposes? A. That is usually a negotiation. We are selling now by group, as to the manner in which our pictures will be played and what theatres they will be played in. I could cite you any case that you could ask me about in most any of the important cities, but I would not give a "or" to be played in any theatre they wanted to. Some of them are too small to give the proper presentation, first-run, or first showing, to one of our more important pictures.

Q. That Columbia Theatre that you used regularly as a move-over out in Washington for your pictures, that is a small and not particularly prepossessing theatre, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. When you compare it to the other first-run houses? A. Very great grossing possibilities. Doesn't cost so much as the Capitol.

Q. I understand that, and that is the kind of theatre I was referring to, small in size, and with low operating expenses and does not compare in appearance or appointments and front with your other houses. A. Yes.

Judge Bright: Is the dollar value to you the determining factor in your definition of a first-run theatre?

The Witness: It is a very important one, one of the most important. However, it is not the final, but it is most important. There are sometimes when people have offered us unusual terms hoping we would give the pictures and sometimes they might not be financially able to carry on, and it was just done with the thought of taking pictures away from an established customer, hoping that you would be selfish enough to pick it up, but generally speaking the determining factor, and the largest contributing factor, is the amount of revenue we can earn as film rental.

(812)

Q. In your list of these first-run theatres, you did not mean to suggest, did you, that there were no other theatres than those that you named on the list which might have been suitable for the so-called move-overs or continued first-runs? A. No, I did not list those at all.

Q. For example, in Providence, I think you testified that you moved over pictures into a theatre that Mr. Fay has there? A. One of them, yes. He did. I haven't looked at the records lately.

Q. I believe you testified you also had an interest in that theatre? A. Some sort of an interest, our theatre department has. I don't know the extent of it.

Q. That is an interest in the operating profits of the theatre? A. Yes, and I guess the losses.

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. And those profits and losses would be the profits and losses on all the pictures that that theatre played in addition to just those of yours? A. I should assume so. I am not in a position to testify on that, though, because I don't know.

Q. That is, these move-over houses, in which you say you had an interest in these various situations, do not play your pictures exclusively, they also play pictures of other distributors? A. Yes.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, in your use of the words "affiliated theatre" do you mean other than theatres in which the particular defendant has a stock interest, or is it broader than that?

Mr. Wright: No. As the witness and I have been using it, as I understand his testimony here, it includes those theatres in which one or more of these defendants has some kind of direct or indirect stock interest, actual interest in the profits of the house.

Judge Bright: Stock interest—any interest?

Mr. Wright: Yes, whether the interest—of course, in some cases it might be held by virtue of a pooling or operating agreement where the defendant receives a share of the operating profits by virtue of such an agreement without actually owning stock. In either case, I think we would both agree that those theatres would be classified as affiliated with the defendant in question.

Judge Bright: Is that the sense in which you have used it?

The Witness: I tried yesterday in my testimony to refer to them as associated with one of the defendants because I am in no position to know what financial interest they have in any other theatres; but I consider them associated with one of the defendants when it is necessary for me to deal with them in order to secure representation.

Judge Bright: Is it necessary for you to deal with the defendant?

The Witness: Yes, representative of the defendant.

Judge Bright: Of the exhibitor?

The Witness: Yes. As I illustrated here, in New Orleans between the United Theatres and the Theatres Service, whether Paramount has or hasn't any interest in those theatres, I am in no position to know, but I know if I want representation in them I have got to deal with the man who represents the Paramount Company and in those offices, so I consider them associated with Paramount. Whether they are affiliated through stock interest or not, I have no knowledge.

Q. Getting back to this Providence situation, that theatre of Mr. Fay's, prior to the time you had acquired an interest in it, was not used by you as a move-over for your first-runs in Providence, was it? A. No, sir.

Q. And it is only since you acquired the interest in the theatre that your pictures have been made available to that theatre on a move-over basis? A. That is true.

Q. And the same thing is true, is it not, with respect to these similar situations you described, I believe, in Richmond (815) and Norfolk, where you move over some pictures into some theatres that Fabian operates? A. I don't know that they move over as much as the product is, in some fashion, divided. We try to supply the pictures in any one of the theatres where we think the best results will be had.

Q. The product there is played in those theatres under a sort of pooling arrangement, isn't that right? A. I believe it is. I don't know the financial structure. I don't know the details other than we have interests there. Whether it is pooling or what it is, I don't know.

Q. You know you have a share—— A. We have an interest of some——

Q. —in the profits? A. —description.

Q. And that Rhodes Theatre in Atlanta, I think you testified that you operated it, the interrogatory answer says that Lucas & Jenkins operated it; I think Mr. Thompson said here in court it was operated by officers of Lucas & Jenkins. Do you know just what the relationship between your company and the Rhodes is? A. Well, if I testified yesterday that we operated it, I did so in error. I know we are interested in it and I don't believe that we have anything to do with the operation. I think that Lucas & Jenkins operates the theatre. I don't think we have anything to do in the operation.

(816)

Q. You share in the profits? A. Oh, yes, we have an interest in the theatre, definitely.

Q. And that share in the profits that you have, through operating agreement, includes, of course, such profits as are derived from the exhibition of films other than yours there? A. I should assume so.

Q. That is not limited to those pictures that you move over? A. Naturally.

Q. As in the case of the Providence theatre, it was not given the privilege of showing your films on a continued first-run until after you acquired an interest in the theatre? A. Never had any carry-over until after we acquired an interest, that is right.

Q. The same thing is true with respect to the Brown Theatre in Louisville, which you referred to? A. We have some sort of interest there too.

Q. An interest in the profits again? A. Profits or operation—I don't know—profit and loss—I don't know what it discloses.

Q. In many of those situations that you covered in your direct testimony, where you now sell certain theatres on first-run, you did not sell them when they were in independent hands, did you? Do you recall any of those instances? A. You would have to recite a specific instance. I couldn't deal generally with it. Sometimes we did, yes; other times, possibly, no. I don't know.

Q. Let us take the Minnesota Theatre up there in Minneapolis. Do you recall that? That is now named, I think, on your list as the Radio City Theatre. A. Yes.

Q. Changed the name? A. Yes.

Q. Originally built there by Paramount as a very large, de luxe first-run house? A. Yes.

Q. And then you recall that Paramount gave it up and it passed into the hands of bondholders? A. Yes.

Q. That was after the 1936-37 season and following the 1936-37 season it was one of your first-run outlets there? A. Yes, it was operating for a while first-run.

Q. And then after the bondholders took it over it was never offered any pictures by you for first-run exhibition, was it, during that period? A. No, because we never thought it was justified. As a matter of fact, I was never very happy with it when Paramount had it and very often refused to play pictures there. It was a bad location, high overhead, and while it was operated by bondholders, the business was very poor there.

Q. Then again, when Paramount took it back, however, and renamed it the Radio City, since that time your pictures have been playing there first-run?. A. The business is very good in Minneapolis now, yes, sir—in that theatre, unusually good.

Q. And substantially the same thing occurred with respect to the Oriental Theatre in Chicago? A. Oriental Theatre in Chicago?

Q. Yes. A. With the possible exception of "Gone With The Wind," I don't remember ever dealing with the Oriental first-run in Chicago—for many years—at least not since I have had anything to do with it.

Q. And the Oriental, prior to that, and while it was being operated first by Balaban & Katz back there in, let us say, the 1936-37 season, was licensed for first-runs of your pictures along with the other Balaban & Katz Loop houses, wasn't it? A. I don't think Balaban & Katz were operating that theatre in 1936, as fa as I can recall.

Q. When they last did operate it, before the bondholders took it over, it was licensed by you for first-run along with other B. & K. Loop houses? A. I don't recall that because I did not occupy my present position prior to 1936, and I didn't have anything to do with Chicago prior to that time.

Q. You know the Oriental Theatre? A. Very well—oh, very well.

Q. That was the newest, next to the largest and probably the best located of all the first-run theatres in the town, isn't that right? A. It is a very fine theatre.

(819)

Q. You say you did license Gone With The Wind there? A. As to one or two theatres, yes, we licensed.

Q. You licensed on a day and date in the Oriental and the Wood's? A. That is right.

Q. That is a term that means you—that is a term that you use that means simultaneous showing first-run? A. That is simultaneous showing. It is different than equal availability.

Q. You did not offer it then until after you had been unable to agree with Balaban & Katz on terms for the picture, isn't that right? A. That is correct.

Q. That was the only reason that it was made available to the Wood's and the Oriental? A. That is true.

Q. And it did have a very long run at the rather small W od's, did it not? A. Very long run.

Q. Paid you a very handsome—— A. Long run in both of them.

Q. Paid you a very handsome film rental? A. Very substantial.

Q. Are you familiar with the Main Street Theatre in Kansas City? A. No, not that I know of, not for years.

Q. Used to be operated first-run there as part of the Paramount, when the Paramount-RKO-Fox pool was functioning there, is that right? A. Yes, but I don't believe that theatre compares in any way at all with the Midland Theatre.

Q. Regardless of how it compares with the Midland, it was operated as a first-run theatre by the Fox-Paramount

RKO pool at the time the first-run theatres other than yours were pooled out there? A. I don't recall that. That was also, I am sure, before I had charge of Kansas City.

Q. Then when the pool dropped it and Mr. Shineberg got hold of it, do you recall that efforts were made to negotiate with your company for films for it? A. Never since I have been in my present position do I ever recall having anyone try to lease pictures for it first-run in Kansas City.

Q. In no event did you offer any films to the Main Street, and it is now, you say, closed and it has been closed for some years? A. I wouldn't offer any pictures. Our own theatre requires them.

Q. The theatre is now closed; you understand that it has been closed for some time? A. That I don't know offhand, no.

Q. There is a theatre in Omaha called the Town Theatre run by Mr. Goldberg out there, which is perfectly suitable, physically, for move-over or continued first-runs, isn't it? A. I don't know that it would. We recently made a deal with Mr. Goldberg for the use of our pictures in one of his other theatres down there and he isn't doing so well.

Q. My question is with reference to the Town. A. I don't know that it would be desirable. Omaha is rather limited in its possibilities.

Q. In any event, you have never offered any pictures to the Town for move-over or continued first-run? A. I doubt very much if I would approve it if it was even suggested.

Q. Then this policy you have adopted of only putting move-over runs in the theatres in which you have an interest, have you followed that same policy in dealing with theatres of the other defendants?

Mr. Davis: Excuse me a moment. It may be because I did not hear something that passed, but I don't remember that statement by the witness.

Ms. Wright: Perhaps I misunderstood the witness.

Q. I understood you did have the policy, in so far as move-overs of your pictures from your own first-run theatres were concerned, not to move them over to another theatre unless you had an interest in that theatre or an operating profit interest, is that right? A. I did not say that we had a policy in that direction.

Q. That has been the practice? A. I will tell you very frankly, I would not do it. If I was requested for a move-over, if we did not have an interest in the theatre, I would not grant it.

Q. And it has been your practice to grant them only where you do have—— A. Wherever our company owns it or operates it or has an interest, that is a different thing.

Q. That same practice has been extended, has it not, to theatres in which the other defendants are interested with respect to the showing of your pictures? A. To my knowledge we have not granted any move-over rights to anyone unless they were interested with the first-run there, yes.

Q. Specifically in Philadelphia, back several years ago, your pictures used to move over, or sometimes have the initial exhibition, in the Keith and the Carlton Theatres there, isn't that right? A. A few of them did, yes.

Q. And then do you recall when it was that Warner lost those theatres and Mr. Goldman took them over? A. A couple of years ago, I believe.

Q. And after Warner lost its interest in them and Mr. Goldman took them over, then you did not make your pictures available for a move-over run at those theatres, did you? A. We never had a steady move-over with either one of the theatres.

(823)

Q. Can you just answer the question?

The Witness: Read the question.

Q. (Read.) A. No.

Mr. Davis: I submit he has answered and the answer is responsive.

Q. And you in fact inserted a 14-day clearance between the Warner first-runs and the runs of your films in the Keith and Carlton, is that right? A. No, sir.

Q. You did not? A. No, sir.

Q. You did not license your films to him at all? A. Oh, yes.

Q. For the Keith and Carlton? A. Yes.

Q. On what terms? A. 7 days after.

Q. The clearance interval was 7 days? A. That is true.

Q. And your license agreements required him to charge the same admission price as Warner did for the first-run? A. No, he offered that. They were his admission prices. We did not require them.

Q. The admission prices that went in the contracts that you made with him, stipulated as minimum prices, were the same that Warner was getting for the first-run, is that right? A. They were his minimum prices, yes, sir.

Q. Then you sold a run to Warner immediately behind him at a 10-cent lower price, isn't that right, 10-cent lower admission price? A. Must have been at least 7 or 14. I don't know what their admission prices are.

Q. Perhaps more than that. Perhaps a 20-cent differential. A. How much differential?

Q. In any event, you sold Warner a run immediately following Goldman with no clearance interval, is that right? No question about that? A. I could not say that to be a fact. There was no change in the runs between the first-run in Philadelphia, the Keith and Carlton, and the following runs in Warner's. There was no change, generally speaking, in those runs after Goldman took those theatres.

Q. Can you answer this question yes or no? Did you or did you not make pictures available for Warner Downtown Theatre immediately following the conclusion of the Goldman run in the Keith or Carlton? A. We made it available following. Whether it was immediately or not, I am not prepared to say.

Q. That you don't know. And you know also, do you not, that the admission price that Warner's was required to charge for the following run was very substantially lower than what Goldman was required to charge for the preceding run? A. I cannot help but not answer the question the way you propound it. We did not require anybody to charge any particular admission price, Warner's or Goldman.

Q. I take it your contract does? You do not have any doubt about it? A. It is not what I require of them. It is their prevailing admission prices.
(825)

Q. You do know that the admission price that was incorporated as a minimum in your contract for the Warner following run was substantially less than the price at which—— A. No.

Q. —it was incorporated in the Goldman contract? A. I don't know that it was substantially less. I am willing to assume it was less but I am not willing to say it was substantially less because I don't believe it was.

Q. As far as immediately following over, a picture goes from one house to another without clearance, there isn't any practice or policy that you have that requires any common interest in those circumstances in the two houses? A. For moving over pictures? We haven't granted any. We haven't granted any.

Q. I did not say for moving over pictures. I said, with reference to licensing immediately succeeding runs, you do not have any practice or policy that requires the holder of the immediately preceding run to have an interest in the operation of the immediately succeeding run; that is correct, isn't it? A. No, we have no such policy.

Q. Of course, you have many runs here and in Chicago where they follow immediately with no clearance and they are opposition theatres, there is no unity of interest at all? (826)

A. I don't know that they follow immediately but they follow each other. I don't know whether they have interests or not. It depends on the way they are booked.

Q. You don't care? A. I am not interested.

Q. I think you said something in your direct testimony about staying with this Adams Theatre in Paterson, New Jersey, to the extent of one-third of your pictures and——

A. That is right.

Q. —you said you had originally sold that account as the result of some difference of opinion between you and the Warner Circuit back there in the early '30s? A. Yes.

Q. And at that time you were out of the whole circuit, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Philadelphia as well? A. That is true.

Q. You were then playing pictures in Philadelphia in the Chestnut Theatre Opera House? A. One of the Chestnut Theatres, yes.

Q. And then you said the succeeding season you and Warner resolved your differences of opinion and you were back in the circuit? A. Yes.

Q. Is that right? A. I don't know whether it was the succeeding season. I think it was the same season we straightened out our differences.

Q. You mean you had not played off the full season before (827) you got together? A. That is correct.

Q. But in any event, such pictures that had been released while the break was on, Adams had played all of those, hadn't he? A. Adams had? As far as I can recall, yes.

Q. Then when you got back together with Warner's, you have allocated ever since one-third of the season's product to Adams and two-thirds to Warner's, is that right? A. I believe that is the division, one-third and two-thirds, yes.

Q. And you make that division—when you have these so-called splits—mechanically, how is it determined who gets which of the pictures in the split? A. It is usually arranged between the theatres. One time one theatre will make up a list and divide it in three and give it to the other fellow to select. Next time, the other man will make up a list of three and give it to the competing theatre to select.

Q. You call that one making the split and the other making the selection? A. That is right. That is the way it is usually divided.

Q. In this last exhibit that you offered, where you gave us this substantial list of towns, on the last page there, which are labeled Saenger Replacements and Theatre Service Replacements, those towns are all towns in which you formerly sold the so-called Saenger Circuit or the theatres for which Mr. E. V. Richards negotiated licenses? A. That is right.

Q. And Mr. Richards has been for many years one of the directors of Paramount? A. Yes, I believe he is—I don't know whether he is a director, but he has been over there for a great many years.

Q. And as to many of these theatres, as I understand it, you say you have no knowledge as to the extent to which the Paramount Pictures Corporation itself was interested; you only know that the situations are those in which Richards negotiated the licenses? A. That is correct.

Q. And as a matter of fact, none of these independent theatres that are on that page there as having been sold in opposition to Paramount were offered any of those pictures until after you and Mr. Richards had been unable to agree to terms for his circuit, isn't that right? A. We wouldn't offer them to the theatres directly. Never dealt with the theatres direct, but these people we never offered, that is true, until after——

Q. Until—— A. —we fell out with Richards.

Q. —you broke with Richards, and your break with Richards extended to the entire circuit for which he bought? A. That is true.

Q. Have you had any negotiations with Richards since about getting back together? A. No, sir.
(829)

Q. And Richards is also the operator of the first-run theatres there that are associated with Paramount, is that not right, New Orleans? A. I believe he is, yes.

Q. And at the time you had this break with him do you recall what, if any, suggestion was made as to whether or not you could get together if he operated the Loew Theatre there or permitted to operate your theatre? A. No such suggestion was ever made to me.

Q. You never discussed that with him? A. Never.

Q. I see you list on here as independent for Albany the Fabian Circuit, is that right? A. I consider it an independent, yes, sir.

Q. Fabian, of course, is actually an operating partner of yours in a number of situations, theatre operating partner? A. Not there, he is not. He is in Richmond and Norfolk.
(830)

Q. And in Albany I see you have under the heading, "How long since?" "Always." As a matter of fact, for many years your first-run account was what was then called the RKO Warner pool, isn't that right? A. I can't recall whether we dealt with the RKO Warner pool; I don't think so. We had as an outlet Warner for a while in Albany, but for many years it has been Fabian.

Q. Well, you may have licensed the pictures, or negotiated with the representative of one company or the other, but you knew, did you not, that the first-run theatres there were pooled in a joint operation? A. That is possible, but it is so many years ago that I hesitate to express myself as to what was the pool, because I have been dealing with Fabian directly for many years.

Q. And you don't know what Fabian's relationships with the RKO theatres are there, do you? A. No, I don't know what his relationship is, except that I know that they have nothing to do with the buying of pictures there; nothing whatever.

Q. The buying of your pictures? A. That is right.

Q. Now, apart from this sell-away from the Richards circuit that is indicated on the last page or on the last two pages of your last exhibit here, which occurred, I believe—in 1942 or 1943? A. About three years since we have been dealing with him.

(831)

Q. Apart from that, can you point to any one of these situations on this chart where you took or where you transferred a product from an affiliated operator to an independent? A. Of course, I don't have the chart in front of me, but offhand I happened to think of Atlantic City.

Q. Look at it (handing). A. Thank you. I happened to think of Atlantic City, where a good many years ago we used to sell Warner pictures there and we took them away and sold them to the other people down there.

Q. That was at the same time that you were out of the Warner circuit in Philadelphia and in Paterson, isn't that right? That is, you were unable to make a deal with Warner——. A. We used to divide our product; we used to give Warner some and give the independent some; and at the time we had our differences, we gave the independent all and never took it away from him.

Q. And he has managed to keep all? A. Yes. And I recall—I don't know whether it is here or not; I guess it is somewhere—in Camden, New Jersey, we used to sell Warner all of our product there, and some of it goes now to the Savar Theatre, I believe.

Q. That occurred at the same time, did it? A. No, I don't think the Savar Theatre at that time was built in Camden. In fact, I am sure it was not.

Q. Well, when did that happen? A. Oh, that must have (832) been twelve, fifteen years ago.

Q. I do not see that in your list. A. I certainly overlooked something there. I don't see Camden either.

Q. Well, my question was confined to what you have got on your list? A. Yes. We took product away from the Paramount organization in New Bedford, Massachusetts. We used to supply all of our product to Paramount there.

Q. I don't see that on the list either. A. Oh, yes. That is divided.

Q. Where is it? A. On the first page, opposite Boston. We used to do business with Paramount completely in Portland, Maine, and took our product away from them and gave it——

Q. Now, wait a minute. This Boston situation, you are talking about a split there, aren't you? A. Yes, Paramount used to have it all.

Q. And then you gave half to Harry Zeitz? A. Harry Zeitz, yes, sir.

Q. Any others? A. Yes. We just finished taking some away from Paramount in Taunton, Massachusetts.

Q. I am talking again about the list here. Now you say in Portland you also gave half to another independent?

A. Yes. We took half of it away from Paramount and gave it to an independent. And in Taunton——

Q. What were you going to say about Taunton? A. I (833) say we just completed arrangements to take part of it away from Paramount in Taunton, Mass., and give it to an independent.

Q. That was pursuant to the settlement of a suit brought against you for treble damages and an injunction under the Sherman Act was it not? A. Not so far as my company was concerned. We had agreed to do it several months ago before any suit was filed or threatened to be filed.

Q. Well, in any event, he did not get any of your pictures until that suit was dismissed and settled, isn't that right? A. Well, if he did not, it was his own fault. He has had a contract for some of our pictures for months.

Q. Just answer the question. A. Well, he could have. He had a contract for them. Now, we took pictures away from Warner Bros. on this particular list in Olean, New York, I believe, and gave it to an independent there.

Q. Olean, New York? What is that under? A. That is on the first page. That is opposite Buffalo.

Q. When was that, you say, twenty years ago? A. I don't know how many years ago, but a good many.

Q. Well, it says twenty here. A. That was not twenty years ago. It could not have been twenty years ago. It was during the—I should say twelve or fifteen years ago.
(834)

Q. You think this is an error here? A. I know it is.

Q. That is during the same season when you were out of the Warner circuit generally, is that right? A. That is true.

Q. Any others? A. We must have taken away from Warner in Chillicothe, Ohio.

Q. Chillicothe? That is opposite Cleveland? A. Cincinnati.

Q. That was half, was it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That again was one of those situations where you sold the entire product to Meyers, while you were having this difference of opinion with Warner, and then when you got back together he kept half? A. That is right, but we had previously sold it to Warners.

Q. Before you had the difference of opinion? A. Yes.

Q. Any others? A. Well, we took product away from Warners in Bayonne, New Jersey.

Q. That was at the same time when you were out of the circuit? A. Yes.

Q. That is, when you went back to Warner you left half with the independent and gave half to Warner? A. Well, not immediately. The major part of it, if not all, with the independent for at least one year, and sometimes two; and then later we divided it between the independent and Warner; but we had originally taken it away from Warner. The same condition applies to a number of these other places that are listed here.

Q. Well, can you name them? A. Well, there is Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Warner had had it. In Shenandoah, Pennsylvania, we took half of our product from the Comerford-Publix interest.

Q. You just have prior to 1930-1931. Do you know when that happened? Have you any personal knowledge as to the circumstances there? A. I could not tell you offhand, no, sir.

Q. Any others there that you know about? A. Here is the Shea interest, and we divided our product there, one-third I think to Warners and two-thirds to Shea, as I recall. We used to do business with Warners completely there.

Q. That was prior to the time you had that break over the circuit? A. Yes. The same thing applied to Morgantown, West Virginia, New Kensington, Pennsylvania. I believe in Wheeling, West Virginia, there was a time when we dealt entirely with the Rex Theatre, with whom Paramount was associated, but we later divided the product there, I believe.

Q. You don't know the circumstances surrounding that, do you? A. No, except that we decided to take half of it away from the Rex Theatre and give it to the Osborne interests.
(836)

Q. You do not know why? A. No, I can't tell you offhand why.

Q. Any others? A. They are all that I can recall at the minute.

Q. Now, wherever the situation is first-run or second-run, it has been so noted here. I take it this list means if there is no run designation, that means it is subsequent run, it is not first or second, is that right—you just have a dash on the run? A. Well, there is no run designated in the contract, I suppose. It can be first or second run, depending on the situation. It can be either construed as what it says or just with no particular runs considered.

Q. Mr. Rodgers, you also testified in the Schine case in Buffalo. Do you recall that, last fall? A. Yes.

Q. And you gave testimony similar to what you have given here about dealing individually with theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And you recall that you were asked whether you had written a letter to Mr. Dickinson about the Palace Theatre there at Lockport? A. I recall such an instance, yes.

Q. You testified to writing the letter? A. I think I testified that I did write such a letter.

Q. And I will read this paragraph and see if you recognize that as what you wrote:
(837)

> "In our negotiations with the Schine interests it will very likely be that we will have to give them consideration for our product at Lockport as well as other situations, and as we are hardly in a position to forego or jeopardize the business from their other situations, and for the further reason that they have for a number of years been a very representative account, we feel that our interests will be best served by giving them such consideration."

That was part of the letter that you wrote? A. I believe, substantially, that was the letter. Was there any other testimony I gave in connection with that same letter?

Q. Yes. I believe you testified, did you not, that after Mr. Dickinson received the letter he came to see you and was somewhat abusive to you because you were not going to stay with him in Lockport; isn't that right? A. It was more or less—I think that I must have testified that we always considered him a very undependable man. There was justification. I think I attempted to justify the reason for writing the letter.

Q. Now, as to what you must have testified——

Mr. Wright: I move to strike that out. That is not responsive to any question I asked him.

Judge Hand: Motion granted.

Q. That Palace Theatre business was unquestionably the (838) best theatre in Lockport, wasn't it? A. Structurally, yes.

Q. And it was one of those situations where you had sold him the first-run when you had a disagreement with the Schine circuit, is that right? A. That is true.

Q. And when you got together with the Schine circuit again you took the pictures away from him with no further opportunity for negotiation; that is what happened, isn't it? A. That is correct.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until two-fifteen.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. Davis: I understand, if the Court please, it is suggested that we change our system of numbering the defendants' exhibits, which I think is a very happy suggestion. Our exhibits so far have been numbered Loew's adphabetically A, B, C; and I will ask the clerk and the reporter to begin those again with L-1, L-2, and so on.

Judge Hand: I think that is better.

Mr. Davis: Otherwise we are going to run clear ont of the alphabet several times over, I think.

Yesterday in examining Mr. Rodgers I used a list of first-run theatres in 92 cities in the United States, having a population of 100,000 and over. I have not yet introduced that list in evidence. I shall do so later. We are checking it, and I presume Mr. Wright will want to check it before it is introduced.

That is all for the present witness, Mr. Wright.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Paramount, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Zukor, are you Chairman of the Board of the defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc.? A. Yes.

Q. And how long have you been chairman of the board?

(840)

A. About ten years.

Q. And during that period what have your duties been? A. I have been out in California for about—up to the end of 1938. After I returned from California I took a trip and visited the various branches of our organization throughout Europe and Australia and South America.

Q. And more recently have you been—— A. More recently I have been in the home office and have acted more in an advisory capacity.

Q. Now, prior to 1935 when you became chairman of the board, were you president of Paramount? A. I was president of Paramount.

Q. And had you been president of Paramount and its predecessors back to 1912? A. From 1912 to 1935 I was president of the company under different names.

Q. And what were your duties as president? A. I was the chief executive of the organization.

Q. Now, when did you first have any connection with the motion picture business? A. As a producer in 1912.

Q. Prior to that time had you had some other connection? A. Prior to that time I was interested in motion picture theatres and vaudeville theatres.

Q. Now, wasn't your first connection with the motion picture business, as such, 1906? A. As an exhibitor, yes, sir. (841)

Q. Now can you tell us briefly what sort of pictures were exhibited at that time? A. At that time we had exhibited mostly single-reel pictures produced by different organizations, maybe ten or twelve individual organizations. Shortly thereafter there was organized what they called the Patents Company, which I think embraced about ten individual producers who released their product under the General Film Company.

Q. Well, dealing with the period before that, what was the general type of these one-reel pictures? A. Well, they were mostly comedies, very few that had a story to tell, because most of the pictures would not run over fifteen minutes.

Q. And were there some so-called "Chase" pictures among them? A. Well, they were mainly comedy pictures, and we also used "Chase" pictures. As a matter of fact the pictures were then used at the closing of a vaudeville show. At the end of a vaudeville show they put on a picture, and the audience knew the show was over and they moved out.

Q. Now, dealing with the places where pictures were shown, were many of those so-called nickelodeons? A. Yes, they were called nickelodeons, store shows.

Q. And the average place where the pictures were shown was in a store, a remodeled store? A. Yes, mostly in a remodeled store, anywhere from 150 to 300, 350 seats.

(842)

Q. Now, you had some interest in such a remodeled store in 14th Street, did you? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was the nature of that exhibition place? A. Well, in that place we showed pictures and vaudeville. We had four acts of vaudeville and one or two reels of pictures that constituted the show.

Q. Was that the place where you had the theatre set up like an observation car? A. No. The observation car preceded this arrangement.

Q. Tell us about that. A. When I first started in pictures, showing pictures, which was in 1906, we had obtained the rights to the Hale storing car, which was a car very much like an observation car today on a train, and it was equipped with all of the rocking, and the bell, and everything that looked like or created an illusion that you were traveling through the country; and on the farther end of the car where there was a screen, we showed travelogues, and it created an illusion that you were traveling and observing the scenic beauties of the various countries that we were able to obtain pictures of to show.

Q. Now, shortly after 1906 did you became associated with Marcus Loew in connection with some theatres? A. I became associated with Mr. Loew. I leased a theatre, the Bedford, in Brooklyn, in association with William A. Brady, (843).

who was also a legitimate producer of drama. He was associated with me in the Hale enterprise, and in association with Mr. Brady we took a lease on the Bedford Theatre. Subsequently Mr. Loew took over Mr. Brady's part of the Bedford; and so we became associated in the Bedford Theatre. That was our first joint venture in operating theatres generally.

Q. And then you continued for a relatively short time, interested with Mr. Loew, and subsequently in the Loew enterprises, and that terminated sometime around 1912 or 1913, is that right? A. I had been associated with Mr. Loew up to about 1911 as an officer.

Q. But after that you had no further association with Mr. Loew? A. I had no association except that I had stockholdings in the company which I disposed of a short while after.

Q. So that at or about that time you ceased any relationship to Loew or Loew enterprises? A. Yes.

Q. Now, when did you first begin to produce pictures? A. In 1912.

Q. How did you happen to get into that business? A. Well, I had watched the audience reaction to pictures, and I found that whenever there was a picture shown of two reels or more that had a story to tell, that the audience was very much fascinated and very much interested; and I had an idea that if we were able to obtain pictures with a story and with a good cast, that the audience would prefer a good motion picture to the ones that were then in existence.

Q. Now, had there been several longer foreign films imported into the United States? A. Yes. One in particular that comes to my mind was the Passion Play that was produced in France by Pathe that I—and of course we bought the pictures outright at that time—and I had shown the Passion Play for the first time in a store show in Newark; and the response from the audience was so good and so great, that I then and there made up my mind that there is definitely room for better pictures, feature length pictures in the motion picture theatre.

Q. Now had you arranged to produce abroad a picture called Queen Elizabeth, with Sarah Bernhardt? A. That came at the end of 1911 when they were making or planning to make this picture in France; and I financed the picture, or a good part of the picture for the American rights to Queen Elizabeth, which was enacted by Sarah Bernhardt.

Q. Now in 1912 you formed Famous Players? A. In 1912 I formed Famous Players.

Q. And you became president? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what sort of pictures did Famous Players produce? A. Famous Players produced their feature pictures, (845) and our first picture was the Prisoner of Zenda, in which we starred James K. Hackett.

Q. Was Famous Players the first company in the United States to produce feature pictures? A. To my knowledge, yes, sir.

Q. And you continued as president of Famous Players and its successors right down to 1935, when you surrendered the presidency of Paramount? A. I did.

Q. Now shortly after Famous Players began to produce feature pictures, did other companies come into the field and begin to produce feature pictures? A. Oh, quite a few.

Q. And were there a number of other companies producing feature pictures between 1912 and say 1917 or 1918? A. A great number.

Q. Now, what was the general source of material for pictures, for feature pictures at that time? A. Well, Famous Players concentrated on famous players and famous plays. We had endeavored to obtain the rights to make into picture shows or plays that had been presented on the stage, and we obtained in many cases the stars who had made the play famous.

Q. So that in general you were producing pictures made from stage plays with the stars who had made the plays famous? A. Yes.

Q. Were you also developing some stories of your own? A. We had developed stories and also stars of our own.

Q. Now, was Mary Pickford one of the stars that you developed? A. No. Mary Pickford was on the stage in a play called The Good Little Devil, if I am not mistaken, and that was produced by David Belasco. We had obtained the rights to that play and also the services of Mary Pickford to enact the leading role in that play.

Q. Now after that did Mary Pickford continue to play in pictures for Famous Players? A. After that Mary Pickford continued and remained with Famous Players for a number of years.

Q. Was Mary Pickford perhaps your most famous star? A. She was the most famous star in the business.

Q. Did Famous Players have other stars by 1918 or 1919? A. Yes; we had developed many other stars during that same period.

Q. Now, at that time, that is, in the period between 1912 and shortly thereafter, how were pictures that you produced distributed? A. The first year we were in business—I think in 1913 we made thirty pictures; and these thirty pictures we sold to State-right buyers throughout the country.

Q. Did those State-right buyers eventually form Paramount Pictures Corporation? A. They did.

(847)

Q. That is a different company from the present Paramount Company, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And some time after the formation of that company did Famous Players acquire some interest in it? A. After they were formed we acquired an interest in it.

Q. And Paramount Pictures Corporation distributed the pictures produced by Famous Players? A. Yes.

Q. And also certain other producers? A. Other producers.

Q. Now, shortly after Famous Players was organized, did that company merge with the Jesse L. Lasky Company? A. Yes.

Q. Was that also a producer? A. A producer of pictures. Their pictures also went to the Paramount Pictures Corporation which was the distributing company.

Q. And the result of that merger was the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now after 1912, and dealing with the period down to 1918 or 1919, had the number of exhibitors increased? A. Very materially.

Q. And had there been fine theatres prepared primarily for the exhibition of motion pictures? A. Yes. After we began to make feature pictures there were quite a number of theatres built throughout the country exclusively for pictures.

(848)

Q. And were there some very large theatres in the principal cities of the United States? A. Well, theatres seating a thousand and over, was considered at that time a very, very big theatre.

Q. Was there also a development of exhibition in smaller cities in the country? That is, were new exhibitors coming into the field? A. All through the country, yes.

Q. Now dealing with that same period, that is, 1912 to 1918 or 1919, was there a constant increase in the cost of making pictures? A. Constantly increased cost. From the technical point, we had to improve our quality, as well as the additional cost of stars and director, and so forth.

Q. Were stars' salaries going up during that period? A. Yes.

Q. And had circuits of theatres, circuits of motion picture theatres developed during that period? A. Well, circuits developed right through the time when there were more than one or two or three theatres in a particular locality or in a section, that were owned or controlled by the same people.

Q. And there were circuits of theatres from the very beginning of your interest in production, were there? A. There were circuits of theatres that were devoting their playing time to vaudeville and gradually turned to pictures; so the very same circuits that had played vaudeville and pictures, (849) eventually played pictures only.

Q. Now, dealing with the period 1917-1918, at that time did Famous Players-Lasky, Paramount producer, have any interest in theatres? A. Prior to 1917, no.

Q. Now when was Associated First National formed? A. Either in 1916 or 1917, as best as I can recall.

Q. Was that an organization of exhibitors originally? A. That was an organization of exhibitors.

Q. Can you tell us something about the importance of the original exhibitor organizers of First National? A. Well, they had controlled at that time the best theatres throughout the country, and they joined hands and organized the First National. First they organized to buy pictures and gradually developed into financing and producing pictures on their own.

Q. That is, one of the purposes of this First National organization was to acquire pictures for its members, first by financing others and later by producing its own? A. That is right.

Q. Now, did that organization make any attempt to take stories away from Famous Players-Lasky? A. Yes, sir. Made an attempt and succeeded, like in the case of Mary Pickford, where they had offered her so much more money than we had paid her at the time that we lost her services.

Q. Did they succeed in taking away any other stars? (850)

A. They had taken quite a number of stars. I don't remember. They took Norma Talmadge, I recall, and Milton Sills, and many others; some from us and some from other companies.

Q. Were they negotiating with other stars? A. Yes, as far as I know they had been negotiating with all of the other stars.

Q. Now at that time I think you said that Mary Pickford was the outstanding star in the motion picture industry? A. In the industry, yes.

Q. Did the taking away of such stars as Mary Pickford and others present any particular problem to Famous Players in connection with the marketing of its pictures? A. Well, it did create a situation whereby the publicity and the propaganda that was handed out, that eventually Famous Players would be losing all of their principal stars and they would be practically out of business.

Q. Was there any situation created in New York for Famous Players at about that time? A. Yes, there was a situation created here in the Strand Theatre in New York, which was built—which to my recollection was the first theatre devoted entirely to pictures, and it was largely due to the fact that I had prevailed on Mr. Mark, who built the theatre, that we are making the type of pictures that could stand by itself without any additional attraction, if he devoted the (851)

Strand Theatre to a picture policy, that we would supply the pictures, and told him what we had in mind and what we were doing then; and they decided to devote the policy of that theatre to pictures. And about—I think it was in 1917, in the fall of the year—Mr. Mark notified me that he was not going to play any more of the Paramount pictures—or, rather, the Famous Players at that time—because he had joined the First National and would play their pictures.

Q. What did you do about that? A. Well, we had no other choice; but we looked around and we finally acquired an interest in the Rivoli and Rialto, so we could retain a show window on Broadway for our product.

Q. Now, were there meetings of exhibitors that you heard about, First National exhibitors, held all over the country? A. Well, one time I recall that the First National happened to have a meeting in Los Angeles, and I was there at the same time, and I told them that I did not think that it was a good plan that they are following by trying to take away stars from producers and making big offers and going to the producing end of the business, because it would eventually bring about a situation where the producers, in order to protect their own business, they would have to go and get theatres so as to create a permanent outlet for their product.

Q. Did the First National pay any attention to your arguments? A. None at all. None whatever.

Q. I was thinking, were there meetings of exhibitors elsewhere in the country, which you heard about, where attacks were made upon Famous Players-Lasky? A. There was education, not all through the country, I don't necessarily say by First National or their group, but up to the time that the First National decided to sub-franchise smaller exhibitors throughout the country, in smaller communities, up to that time we felt that we would be able to cope with the situation, but when they began to sell sub-franchises throughout the United States, and within a short period they boasted that they had 3,500 additional exhibitors hooked up with the First National franchise, then we began to feel the competition very keenly.

Q. That is, in addition to these major exhibitors in the major cities, they had sub-franchised some 300 or 3500? A. Up to that time.

Q. (Continuing) Exhibitors in smaller cities?. A. That is right.

Q. Which bound them all to buy First National rather than Paramount or Famous Players-Lasky? A. That is right.

Q. Did you hear anything about the consequences of that development on Famous Players distribution in the South? A. Yes.

(853)

Q. From whom did you hear it and what did you hear? A. S. A. Lynch, who represented us in the South, came to see me and told me that he is having a hard time in selling the product in the South.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think this is not only irrelevant, immaterial, as I think the rest of it is, but wholly incompetent as to what Lynch told him at that time.

Mr. Seymour: I do not deny that it is hearsay, if there is objection to it, but it was the purpose of this, of course, to show how Paramount happened to get into the theatre business and this is one of the factors. It is technically objectionable and I won't press it.

Judge Hand: It certainly is.

Q. As a result of conversations which you had with Mr. Lynch, who was distributing Famous Players products in the South, did you discuss with your fellow directors in Famous Players the question of having Famous Players acquire an interest in theatres? A. I did.

Q. At that time what was the First National program of production, do you remember? Were they looking toward a program of producing a number of pictures a year? A. They had.

Q. Did they contemplate producing as many as 50 pictures a year? A. That was the general impression.

(854)

Q. And at that time how many changes a week were they leading exhibitors of the country making? A. About once a week.

Q. And the smaller exhibtors? A. Smaller, twice a week; and further, down the line.

Q. What would have been the effect on Paramount's or Famous Players' opportunity to license its pictures of having the major exhibitors exhibit First National pictures, 50 pictures, and the smaller exhibitors exhibit 50 pictures? A. If we couldn't have an outlet in the first-run houses throughout the country, we wouldn't be able to recoup the cost of the negatives let alone make a profit; but we could not exist without first-run representation.

Q. Would that also have affected your revenues in subsequent runs? A. It definitely did.

Q. Would it have had any effect upon your ability to retain your few remaining stars? A. It did.

Q. Did you at or about this time that you had this meeting with the exhibitors in Los Angeles, which you told us about and where you did not get anywhere, did you at that time believe it would be desirable for producers and distributors to stick to production and distribution? A. Yes.

Q. And not go into exhibition? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you were unable to persuade the exhibitors of (855) that? A. That is right.

Q. And did you then or shortly after change your own view on that subject? A. Well, I have.

Q. I think you told us that you did discuss the question of having Famous Players acquire an interest in theatres with your directors? A. Yes.

Q. Was it also discussed with others? A. In the organization?

Q. Yes, and outside. A. Well, it was generally talked about. It was not——

Q. What was the upshot of your discussions and your consideration of the problems which Famous Players was faced with at that time? A. Well, after Lynch had represented Paramount down South and he came up and told us about the difficulties he had in selling the product the same as in the past, then we agreed to go in jointly and buy theatres in the South. That was our first, as I recall it.

Q. You did decide to acquire some interests in theatres? A. We did.

Q. Then the first effort in that direction was with Lynch in the South? A. Yes.

Q. Was Southern Enterprises formed? A. So Southern Enterprises was formed and Lynch owned 50 per cent and we had the other 50 per cent.

(856)

Q. That was sometime around 1919, 1920? A. 1919, yes.

Q. And that company acquired theatres in the South? A. It did.

Q. Were those theatres just first-run theatres in large cities? A. No, they were all kinds.

Q. Some of those theatres were in smaller cities? A. Yes.

Q. Was there any particular reason for acquiring an interest in theatres beyond the first-run theatres in the large cities? A. Yes, because there were sub-franchise holders in the smaller communities and they had offered quite a resistance to buying our pictures.

Q. Did you consider it important to retain your market not only in the big cities, but also in some of the smaller cities? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At about the same time did you acquire some interest in theatres in New England? A. Yes, we did.

Q. From whom was that interest acquired? A. Mr Black, Alfred Black, I believe it was. He had a number of theatres in New England and we acquired 50 per cent interest in his chain of theatres.

Q. Did they include some theatres in smaller places, too? A. Mostly.

Q. As to both Southern Enterprises and the Black Circuit subsequently you acquired the balance of the interests of the other owners? A. That is correct.
(857)

Q. Who managed the theatres in the South? A. Mr. Lynch managed the theatres in the South and Mr. Black managed the theatres in New England.

Q. Did you about the same time arrange to acquire an interest in a theatre in St. Louis? A. Yes; there was a theatre being built in St. Louis and we acquired an interest in that theatre.

Q. Was there a First National franchise owner in St. Louis? A. Yes, there was a First National franchise holder in that same neighborhood, to whom we couldn't sell any of our product.

Q. Were there some other theatres at about the same time you acquired an interest in? A. He had some interests in some other theatres, and I think we were negotiating to acquire them but we could not get together with his associates and I don't think we had acquired any other interests to the best of my recollection.

Q. Around 1925 or 1926 Paramount acquired an interest in some other theatres, did it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any information come to you as to the activities of any of the distributor competitors of Paramount in that regard? A. Yes; at that time there were other producers actively engaged in acquiring theatres throughout the country.

Q. Did you learn of their activities? A. Yes.
(858)

Q. Did you compete with them for acquisition of interest in some of these theatres? A. We felt that we had been competing with them before, when we acquired circuits, yes.

Q. What was your interest in acquiring circuits in competition with the other distributors? A. We acquired the interest in the circuits because we wanted to perpetuate our outlet for the product, mainly.

Q. From 1925 or 1926 on, for several years, Paramount continued to acquire some interest in theatres in various sections of the country? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: What was that last date mentioned?

(Record read.)

Mr. Seymour: "on", until about 1929.

Q. Was there also some acquisition after 1929, Mr. Zukor? A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. In connection with Paramount's acquisition in theatres was there ever at any time any agreement or understanding with others, with other distributors or producers as to the territories in which Paramount should acquire its interest in theatres? A. No.

Q. In addition to acquiring an interest in existing theatres, did Paramount also build some theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And in 1919, when you decided that Paramount—Famous Players then—should acquire some interest in theatres for the reasons you stated, did you then have in mind acquiring the particular theatres in the particular areas which Paramount eventually acquired over the entire period? A. No, we had no such policy.

Q. Was each of the problems of acquiring an interest in a circ[illegible] and what kind of interest to acquire and where it shoul[illegible], a matter decided on the merits when the problem arose? A. Definitely on the merits.

Q. And sometimes Paramount acquired a 50 per cent interest, and sometimes it acquired a 100 per cent interest? A. Yes.

Q. And sometimes it acquired less than 50 per cent interest, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Generally, what was the purpose of acquiring an interest in theatres? A. The main reason was to have a permanent outlet for our product, and, of course, while we acquired theatres, we were careful to see that we should make our investment so the investment in itself would also bring a return.

Q. When Paramount first went into the acquisition of theatres, or at any later time, was any one of these acquisitions for the purpose of monopolizing the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is obviously incompetent. He is incompetent to testify in those terms.

(860)

Judge Hand: It doesn't have very much weight, that kind of testimony.

Q. Do you consider that at any time Paramount did monopolize the exhibition of pictures in the United States? A. No.

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

Q. From the beginning of the theatre acquisitions, Mr. Zukor, did Paramount set out to be the largest company in the motion picture business? A. Our aim was to be the best company, make the best pictures.

Q. But in 1919 you did not set out to reach a particular size or —— A. No.

Q. (Continuing)—or reach a particular interest in theatres? A. At any time.

Q. From your observation of the industry from 1912 on, Mr. Zukor, has the production of motion pictures been highly competitive? A. Highly competitive at all times.

Q. Are there new producers of motion pictures constantly coming into the field? A. All the time, every year.

Q. Are there more new producers today, more new independent producers—and I use that in the sense of being not defendants in the suit—are there more today than there were even ten years ago? A. There are quite a number of independent producers today, and I cannot make the exact comparison as to how they compare in numbers, but there (861) were, each year, quite a number of independent producers that came into the business.

Q. Has Paramount's interest in theatres in any way interfered with the opportunities for new producers?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is again a question he is not competent to answer.

Mr. Seymour: This is the dean of the business and I think he is the man who can tell us about it.

Judge Hand: I do not know that it does any harm. It doesn't do any good, to let him make such a general observation as he may.

Mr. Seymour: We will prove the rest of it. These are the dean's observations and we will call the other members of the faculty before we get through.

Q. From your observation has distribution of motion pictures always been highly competitive? A. Yes.

Q. And would you say that the exhibition of motion pictures has always been highly competitive? A. Yes.

Q. Is Paramount in competition with, not only the other defendants in this case, but with all independent producers and distributors and exhibitors? A. In competition with the industry, yes, sir.

Q. At all levels? A. In all branches.

Q. Do you consider that Paramount's interest in theatres has had any effect on its ability to produce fine pictures? (862)

A. A great deal.

Q. Would you explain that? A. Well, due to the number of pictures—number of theatres that we have, we are sure of our outlet, that we can exhibit our products, we are able to invest in the best type of pictures, that cost the most money, as we have a definite, certain outlet, for our product.

Q. How does the cost of feature motion pictures today, average cost of feature motion pictures today, compare with what it was when you first went into the business? A. When we first started in it the cost of a negative ran between 40 and 60 thousand dollars, and gradually each year thereafter increased and it continued to increase up to today, so that a first class picture today, with known stars and known directors and a good story, will run anywheres from a million and a half to two million dollars in cost.

Q. And do some pictures run more than that? A. Some pictures run even over three million dollars.

Q. From your experience in the business do you consider the production of the motion picture a speculative or a risky matter? A. It is highly speculative.

Q. Have you any interest in any other producer, exhibitor or distributor of motion pictures? A. No.

(863)

Q. Prior to the time, that is, in 1919, when Paramount, or Famous Players, first acquired any interest in theatres, were pictures distributed on the basis of successive runs? A. We sold our pictures then as a season's output at one time.

Q. But were the pictures shown in successive runs, that is, first-run in the large theatres? A. First-run was then in vogue just the same, where the best theatre in the community was the first-run house and showed the picture first before any other smaller community, or smaller theatre in the same community, showed the picture.

Q. Was there also something which, whether it was called clearance or not, was clearance as we know it today between runs? A. I am not so familiar with the clearances, with the distribution end of the business, but I feel that there was always a difference between the first-run. There was a lapse of time between the first and subsequent runs. Just what they consisted of or whether it was organized all through the country on the same basis or the same way, I don't know.

Q. What is your best recollection as to whether prior to 1919 some pictures were licensed to exhibitors on a percentage basis? A. Yes, there might have been a few, far between, that were percentage.

Q. But there are more now than there were then? A. Oh, (864) yes, have a great many.

Q. What is your best recollection as to whether prior to 1919 there was any reference in license contracts to admission fees? A. The admission fee we had in the very beginning. When we started to make feature pictures, we had a clause that they would have to charge ten cents, I believe, instead of five cents.

Q. And had the admission fee matter been familiar in show business long before motion pictures were produced? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to restrain competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States?

Mr. Wright: The same objection.

A. No.

Mr. Wright: Same objection we made before to that question, as calling for a conclusion. It is for the Court rather than the witness.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to aid and assist one another in the loaning and exchanging of production personnel and to deal with one another on uniform, non-competitive terms?

(865)

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

A. No.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Has there been any agreement or understanding to your knowledge to withhold any of the production personnel and equipment from any producer of motion pictures? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude independent producers from access to production personnel and to withhold production equipment owned by the defendants or any of them on the same terms on which they are made available to the defendants in this case? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to fix the terms upon which motion pictures would be licensed for exhibition to any exhibitor in the United States? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement among the defendants or any of them to license any pictures for exhibition in any theatre before the pictures have been produced and before any exhibitor has had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films have been completed or trade-

shown? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to condition the licensing of one or more films or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to condition the licensing of film in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of film in another theatre or group of theatres? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to enter into long term franchises with circuits of theatres or to suppress competition offered by competing theatres during the terms of such long term franchises or to preclude independent distributors from licensing their pictures to those circuit theatres? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to discriminate with respect to the license terms granted to circuit theatres because such theatres are part of the circuit? A. No.

of them in licensing their pictures to favor the theatres in which the defendants or any of them had an interest against the theatres of exhibitors not affiliated with any producer-distributor with respect to run, clearance, license fees or any other terms of licensing? A. No, sir.

or more of them to license pictures for exhibition in the theatres in which one of the defendants had an interest, on condition or in consideration of another licensing its pictures with respect to the pictures distributed by the other? A. No.

Mr. Seymour: I am awfully sorry that these questions are so elaborate, but they are designed to negative the charges in the complaint which the Government has not abandoned, and I am asking the questions.

Mr. Wright: Can't we stipulate that some representative of each defendant would take the stand and negative the charges in the complaint in the terms of the complaint? I suppose that would take care of it for all defendants at once.

Judge Hand: Why isn't that so?

Mr. Seymour: Well, I would like to run through these and then I would be willing to consider it. I have only a few more of them.

(868)

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Seymour: Then I would be willing to consider such a stipulation rather than burdening the Court with asking other witnesses from our company these questions, but I would like to think about it.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude independently produced motion pictures from theatres in which the defendants or any of them had an interest? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude unaffiliated exhibitors from the operation of competing first-run theatres in cities and towns where theatres affiliated with defendants or any of them are located? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude unaffiliated exhibitors from operating competing theatres on the same run as the subsequent-run affiliated theatres in the cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located? A. No.

control the film supply, run, clearance and admission price of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in the cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located, or elsewhere? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them as to the terms upon which each or any of them would license their film to unaffiliated exhibitors? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to deprive any theatre operator of the supply of film or to withhold film from an unaffiliated exhibitor or to limit the terms and conditions on which licenses would be made to any unaffiliated exhibitor? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to divide the available films among the affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them not to compete with one another in the licensing of motion pictures to be exhibited in cities or towns where two or more of them had interests in theatres? A. No.

(870)

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to enter into joint agreements with respect to a theatre whereby the film buying control or proceeds from the operation thereof is divided between two or more exhibitor defendants for the purpose of restraining competition unreasonably or monopolizing exhibition or distribution with respect to such theatre? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to refrain from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres? A. No.

Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to acquire a monopoly or to monopolize the business of exhibiting motion pictures in the United States or any city or town thereof? A. No.

Mr. Seymour: You may inquire.

Mr. Wright: Are there any other defendants who wish to inquire?

Mr. Seymour: Does any defendant wish to examine Mr. Zukor?

Mr. Caskey: We are content.

(871-2)

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Mr. Wright: I simply want to make a motion for the record first to strike out all of Mr. Zukor's testimony as either irrelevant and immaterial or incompetent. I assume that will be overruled.

Judge Hand: Motion denied.

Mr. Wright: I just want to ask a couple of questions.

Q. On that ten-cent admission that you talked about back in 1919, that was just a printed restriction in the form that was of general application, isn't that right? A. That was prior to 1919. In 1919 the admissions were much higher. When I referred to insisting on a ten-cent admission, that was in the beginning, 1913 and 1914.

Q. It was not until much after 1919 that you fixed admission prices for particular runs—graduated them in accordance with the runs? A. That was to have been higher than ten cents, because admission prices have gone up gradually.

Q. Yes, but I say, it wasn't until several years after 1919 that the present practice of fixing a different admission price for different theatres arose, isn't that right? A. I don't recall just when that was.

Q. You don't know when? A. No.

(873)

Q. I believe you said this ownership, the acquisition as far as Paramount, stopped in about—that is, by 1929 or 1930 you had pretty much the pattern of theatre control that you have now, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, it was about 1930, was it not, that you reached an agreement with Warner Bros. to stop invading each other's theatre-operating territories? A. We never had such an agreement.

Q. Do you remember what happened then, that prior to 1929 and 1930 you had been moving into areas where Warner was operating and Warner had been moving into some of your areas? A. We have never had any agreement with anybody where we would go or where we would buy theatres.

Q. Yes, but I think you did not get the last question.

(Last preceding question read.)

The Witness: No doubt we had, because we did not stop to figure whether Warner was in any area or was not.

Q. Then after 1930 you did not move into areas where Warner was operating and they did not move into yours, did they? A. That I don't know.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. You do know, Mr. Zukor, that there was never any agreement with Warners or anybody else about where you or they should operate or what you or they should do? A. Not as far as we were concerned.

(874)

Q. You never made any agreement with Warners or anybody? A. I never made an agreement with anybody.

Q. There was no agreement not to go into any territory where Warners had theatres or for Warners not to go into territory where Paramount had theatres or an interest in theatres, is that right? A. That is right.

(Witness excused.)

Y. FRANK FREEMAN, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Paramount, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Freeman, are you connected with the defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc? A. I am.

Q. What is your connection with that company? A. I am a vice-president and, until October 1944, I was in charge of studio operations in Hollywood.

Q. Is your headquarters still in Hollywood? A. Yes.

Q. You have come on here for the trial? A. Yes.

Q. Are you still generally familiar with the developments in the studio? A. I am.

Q. You were head of the studio from what year until 1944? A. December, 1938, until October, 1944.

Q. When did you first enter the motion picture business? A. 1914.

(875)

Q. Will you tell us briefly about the nature of your connection with the business from 1914 to 1922, when you left it for a time? A. First connection was manager of a theatre, Fitzgerald, Georgia; later I became associated with Mr. S. A. Lynch in the operation of motion picture exchanges in Atlanta, Georgia; later in the development of theatres; I assisted in the acquisition of theatres in the Southern States. Subsequently, general manager in charge of distribution of Triangle Pictures. And then later associated with Mr. Lynch in the operation of the business of Southern Enterprises in the South. I severed my connections in December, 1922, was not in the motion picture business from that time until 1933.

(876)

Q. I will come to that. I just want to ask you this: Southern Enterprises was the organization which Mr. Zukor has just mentioned in which Mr. Lynch and his colleagues and Paramount had a 50-50 interest, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And prior to that time, prior to 1919 you had been working with Mr. Lynch distributing Paramount's, or, as they were then called, Famous Players Pictures in the southern territories, is that right? A. That was true up to 1917.

And from 1917 until 1919 I was in New York having the distribution of Triangle Pictures.

Q. You came to Paramount in 1933? A. Yes.

Q. And in what capacity did you come? A. To work in connection with real estate.

Q. Did Paramount go into receivership in 1933? A. Yes.

Q. And subsequently into bankruptcy? A. Yes.

Q. And it came out of bankruptcy or out of reorganization in 1935? A. Yes.

Q. And what were your duties between 1933 and 1935? A. During 1933 I continued to work in connection with real estate properties and reorganization of the various properties that were then in receivership under the trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount-Publix.

In 1934 I served under the trustees as head of the New York office Theatre Division and continued in that capacity until the reorganization of Paramount in 1935, and thereafter, until 1938, I worked as vice-president in charge of theatre operations for Paramount Pictures, Inc.
(877)

Q. And then in 1938 you went to Hollywood in charge of the studio? A. Yes.

Q. And between 1935 and 1938 what was your official title? A. Official title was vice-president in charge of theatre operations.

Q. Were you also a director. A. I was a director, yes.

Q. I would like you to tell us something about the studio or production department of Paramount. First give us a general notion of its organization. A. The Paramount Studio in Hollywood is composed of a plant covering approximately 30 acres of ground, 240 or 250,000 square feet of stage space, 18 stages; executive buildings; mechanical equipment; technical buildings of various kinds; and an organization of people, actors under contract to Paramount, directors under contract to Paramount, producers under contract to Paramount; story properties that have been acquired by Paramount over many years; and a personnel organization of departments, department heads, people working under them. It employs——

Q. Tell us a little about them. A. It employs at its peak about 3500 people.

(878)

Q. Tell us about the general type of departments. A. Well, the talent department makes deals on contracts with personalities. The legal department handles all of the legal phases of the work. The story department supervises the acquisition and purchase of story material for making motion pictures. The executive producer supervises the creative talent and the casting and the final decision of certain scenes and things that go into the pictures, and approval of scripts.

Also in the story department the supervision of the writers takes place.

The so-called back lot where the physical operation is carried on is under the head of various departments, the production department, the camera department, the sound department, the wardrobe department, many groups, all headed under the one general manager in charge, or vice-president in charge of operations.

Q. Did you tell us how extensive the studio was, how much land it covered? A. I made that statement at the beginning, it covered approximately 30 acres of ground.

Q. Now, can you tell us approximately what sort of an investment the studio represents? A. It represents over the years an investment of millions of dollars.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not see how this is material, but if it is it seems to me it can certainly be put in in the form of a statement, without taking the time to getting it in this way.

Mr. Seymour: Well, I am going as fast as I can, if your Honors please; but the Government's charge and its failure to respond to suggestions to facilitate this have required us to go forward, and I think it will be more revealing to the Court to have it adduced by oral testimony. When we reach a point where I think we can properly stipulate, we will certainly try to do it.

Judge Hand: Well, go on.

Q. Now, how is a production program planned, Mr. Freeman? Tell us with whom it is discussed and what period is covered and what ingredients go into the planning of a program. A. We generally have a meeting in New York. I come in from the Coast, meet with the president of Paramount, with the head of the sales, distribution department, head of the foreign department, the advertising manager; and we discuss on a broad scale as to the total amount of investment we think we can make in a completed group of pictures for that year. And having determined that as a base, we then try to see what number of pictures we can make for that total sum of money. That is determined by the personalities available to us, the story material available, the capacity of the studio to make the pictures; and I go back to Hollywood with that as a general outline, and then we try to fit in what we have there to that program, knowing that it is not humanly possible for any studio to sit down 12 months ahead and plan and know what it will make within the 12-month period. Things happen, events occur, personalities are unavailable; it continuously changes. It is not anything that can be done upon a formula basis, like you can plan a production schedule of mechanical things.

Q. What problems of trying to appraise the public taste over a period of time are involved in planning a program? A. We try at our first meeting to get all of the information we possibly can from the sales and distributing department to help us on the type of picture we will make by having them tell us the types of reception of types of pictures by the public, and the personalities in those pictures, and all the information we possibly can obtain from them in that respect.

Q. Have there been any special problems, for example, during the war years in trying to plan a program? A. Well, the problem during the war years has been that a great deal of material has naturally been available to the studios from the things that happened during the war. Producers have taken ideas and made pictures around them; they have seized upon stories that have human interest—

Q. Can you give us any recent examples of that? A. Well, Paramount has one in the story of Dr. Wassel, which came from a radio speech by the President of the United States praising the great character of this man down in Java. We heard it over the radio, and within 24 hours we started the production of a motion picture, which had not been planned; and that is one of the things that I say you cannot plan ahead 12 months ahead. You are changing all the time.

Q. Does the unexpected success of a new play or new book, or something of that kind, affect the program? A. A story or a book may come out with very popular appeal; and if you are fortunate enough to buy that on the competitive market, why, you go ahead and make a motion picture out of it. A stage play may be produced that is very successful, and we attempt to buy that and make a picture out of it; and we would have no knowledge of that in January of any year when it might not occur until May or June or in the latter part of the year.

Q. Can you tell us just a little about how you budget your program? A. I stated that we try to arrive in the first instance at a total budget for the entire production schedule, based upon past experience of the possibility of revenue from the program, and from that point we try to break that down into the number of pictures we can make based upon the material and the personalities and the capacity of the studio to do it.

Q. How does the present year's production of Paramount compare with its production before the war? A. Before the war Paramount produced between 55 and 60 pictures annually. At present they are producing between 28 and 30 annually.

Q. And what is the chief reason for that difference; or what are the chief reasons? A. Well, one of the reasons is that during the war there has been our inability to get materials to make pictures; restrictions. The second reason is that prior to the war we made more cheaper pictures than we have made since 1938.

Q. Does the fact that some of the stars are in the service affect that too? A. To some extent, yes, but not to any great extent. It restricted us in maybe strengthening our pictures to the degree we would like because of our inability to have these stars.

Q. Has there been an increase in the cost of pictures since you first went to Hollywood in 1938? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us an idea as to the general increase and perhaps how the highest cost pictures compare over that time? A. At present it costs 100 to 150 per cent more to produce a top bracket picture than it cost to produce in 1937-38.

Q. Can you give us some figures, so we will have that in mind? A. A picture that we could make in the top bracket with top stars and personalities for a million, 1,150,000, will cost now from two and a quarter to three million dollars.

Q. Does Paramount make several pictures costing a million or more each year, in each year's program, or a number? A. Do we make?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us some rough idea of the overall cost of a program? A. The cost of the program in 1944 to Paramount Studio was $28,000,000.

Q. Now, where do you get your story material for pictures? A. We have a story department that reads all of the material available in the field of literature, books, magazines. They keep us advised as to those stories which offer possibilities of pictures. They are further read and discussed.

Q. Can you give us any general impression as to how many stories are examined by the story department annually? A. I think in the Paramount studios it ranges from six to ten thousand annually; some years maybe a little higher than others.

Q. Now, are new novels and plays a source of material? A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us something about how they are acquired and whether there is competition for them? A. In general a book or story—the handling of the sale of that by the author is handed over to an agent employed by the author. The agent is familiar with all of the producer companies and the producers that work for them, and he starts his approach by going to them all, submitting the story generally, developing a bidding contest, using all of the tricks of the trade that he can to sell it to the highest bidder for the highest price he can obtain for it.

(884)

Q. Does that include producers that are not defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. And the final upshot or the price which the agent arranged and which the author gets is the result of competition among all of them, is that so? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us some idea of the range to which those prices sometimes reach? A. Well, in stage material it ranges from $350,000 to $500,000.

Q. Have you had any recent experience in the kind of prices that competitive bidding brings about for Paramount? A. We have paid as high as $450,000 for a stage play, for the rights to make a motion picture from a stage play.

Q. How about novels and other stories? A. We have paid as high as $150,000 for novels, books.

Q. Now, in general, as to the material which is available, like stage plays, novels, stories, and so on, where the author still has rights—are they acquired on a competitive basis? A. Yes. I know of one deal made for a stage play very recently which gives a substantial advance against 50 per cent of the entire profits of the production. That also happened.

Q. Now, tell us something about development of new talent in the motion picture industry. What efforts are made with respect to new talent, actors, actresses, writers and so on? How are they discovered and brought along? A. Actors are found in one of several ways: They come from the stage, radio, and then from small community playhouses; and in some instances with no experience whatever. Now, when you find a person on the stage or in radio who has had the experience in the theatre world, that person is also represented by an agent; they have already engaged an agent, and an agent represents them. So he presents them to you. Even though you might have seen them on the stage and say, "I like that person," or "He offers possibilities in pictures," you would make your deal with the agent.

Q. Does the agent go around from one producer to another? A. The agent immediately, even before you see them, possibly, has contacted studios and tried to find out the market price for the person and to sell that person to the studio that can pay the most money and offer the chances of developing this particular person.

Q. Now, do you have a department or members of your organization who are seeing stage plays and observing the developments in radio in an effort to find new talent? A. Yes.

Q. And usually before you deal with them the agent appears and begins the process of competitive bidding, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, does that apply to writers as well? A. That applies to writers who in their contact with the studios are represented by the agents. The field from which you find writers is not the same. You will find sometimes a person who has written a book that has been successful, and you sometimes have young people from colleges, and you place them in a training school. Those people are not represented by agents in the beginning.

Q. Does Paramount have a staff of writers at the studio? A. Yes.

Q. And do you employ special writers on special projects from time to time? A. Yes; and also under long term contract.

Q. Now, tell us something about the competition, if there is some, for the acquisition of directors' service and the services of technicians of various kinds. A. There is complete competition among all the studios for any of the highly trained personnel in the technical fields, and also for directors whose contracts may be expiring at any studio or at any producer. All of those people are represented by agents, and the agents immediately approach all studios and all producers to make the very best deal for his client that he can possibly make.

Q. Why is there that competition among the studios? A. Hollywood attempts to produce around 400 to 425 pictures annually, and the personalities, the creative talent that is available makes it necessary to get these people in order to try to produce the best pictures.

Q. Now, I asked you about new acting talent and how it was obtained. I want to ask you something about stars and those who are not only the outstanding stars but perhaps the subsidiary stars. Having gotten a star under contract, take a star who has not yet proven himself or herself in pictures, what happens? A. You try that person out in parts that you think are suitable; you start a publicity compaign to create interest on the part of the public in that particular personality; and if you find the reception on the part of the public good, why, you continue to bill that particular personality and place him in more important parts in the next picture; and using all of the showmanship that you have at your disposal you try to develop him to the point where the public will be interested in going to see a motion picture that he might have a part in.

Q. Now, if you get a young actor or actress under long term contract, I assume the starting salary is rather smaller than that of an established star. Does the actor or actress continue to work at the contract rate through the life of the contract? A. No.

Q. What happens? A. At any point where there is any evidence whatever of success after the first newspaper critic says, "This girl or this person looks fairly good," the agent comes in to see you the next morning, and he says, "Now, based upon this, this is not a fair salary," although you may have had them under contract possibly no more than six or eight months or one year which has gone by. And it has been a practice in the industry that that contract is renegotiated. A person who had a starting salary of $150 a week, and proven that they had box office value, you would then make a new contract, and possibly the new salary would be $500 a week starting, $750 for the next year's option; $1000 for the succeeding year, and so forth.

Q. Why do you revise these contracts when you are not obligated to? A. In order to keep making motion pictures.

Q. Now, what happens when a contract with a star, whether revised or not, is about to run out? Is there any effort made by other studios to take the star away? A. Every effort that is possible is made by all studios to engage that star to work for them if their contract has expired with any other producer.
(889)

Q. How about before it has expired, before the contract has expired? Is there effort by other studios and other producers to arrange for the star to come to them after the termination of the contract? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us any examples of that? A. I can give you of my own knowledge an example that Paramount had with Fred MacMurray.

Q. What happened there? A. He was under contract with Paramount and had a year and a half to go, and he made a deal with Twentieth Century-Fox and started working for them at the expiration of his contract.

Q. Did they offer him more money, better terms? A. Yes.

Q. Has that happened to Paramount with other stars? A. It has happened; it has been tried, but sometimes we were successful in beating them.

Q. Sometimes the other producer is able to take him away and sometimes you are able to meet the terms? A. That is right.

Q. Now, is there any limitation on that kind of competition as to what producers try to take other producers' stars away from them? A. No, sir, not that I know of.
(890)

Q. And does that kind of competition occur not only between defendants who have an interest in theatres but also with defendants who have no interest in theatres, and also with producers who have not been joined by the Government in this case? A. It occurs with all people that make motion pictures in Hollywood.

Q. And are independents constantly trying to take stars away from Paramount and other companies? A. Yes. That is, I want my answer to be, when their contracts with Paramount have expired.

Q. I understand that. I am not talking about an attempt to break contracts but an attempt to get them away at the end of the contract term. And those negotiations begin before the end of the contract term, do they not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in recent years has there come to be an increasing practice, or, at least, an increasing attempt by stars to reserve their rights in contracts with studios to make pictures away from the studios? A. Yes.

Q. And does that happen with high-priced stars of all the studios or most of the studios? A. It does with all of the high-priced stars at Paramount, and, I understand, it happens at the other studios.

Q. And, generally what you have testified here about the competitive situation for talent and material and so on, is, from your observation, applicable to all the studios, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, where the star reserved the right to play a picture away from the studio, does she also sometimes reserve other rights? Does she reserve rights in connection with any occasions when her services may be loaned to another studio, some right to approve material, and so on? A. If a star is important enough in their position in the industry, where any studio would take them, they will possibly insert a provision in their contract that if they are loaned out to any other producer, that they shall have the right to approve the story, the director, and maybe some other things.

Q. Now, we will come to that a little later, I think. A. Where they make an independent picture on their own, why, they have all of their rights; they just reserve the right to make an independent picture. When I say "independent picture," I mean to make a picture on their own under no control or direction of the studio to whom they might be under contract.

Q. Now, does Paramount from time to time have occasion to obtain stars and featured players and personalities from other producers? A. Yes.

Q. And what are the reasons for doing so? A. We make 30 pictures a year in which there are two to eight parts, you might say, in each picture; sometimes more. It is impossible for any one studio to carry on its payroll enough people that would be available for all of those parts. It just is not possible to do it.

Q. So what do you do when you need a star of that kind? A. We attempt to contact free-lance people—when I say "free-lance people", I mean people who are under no contract with any studio, to work for anyone—find out if they are available, make a deal with them if we can, and, if not, if there is some personality under contract to a producer or to a studio in Hollywood, we attempt to negotiate for borrowing that particular personality to play the part in the picture.

Q. Is the term borrowing and lending used for that in the language of the business? A. Those are the phrases used in Hollywood, or the terms.

Q. Now, do other producers from time to time have occasion to borrow stars, personalities and other talent from Paramount? A. Yes.

Q. And is that for the same reason that you suggested as to why Paramount sometimes does it? A. Yes.

Q. What is the basis, when Paramount borrows stars or personalities, upon which the arrangements are worked out (893) with the studio from which the borrowing occurs? A. The present arrangement is that the studio will simply say, "We will permit this person to work in your picture for a given number of weeks for so many dollars." If it happens to be a greater number of weeks, or if they happen to use the person a greater number of weeks, then we specify in the contract that for each additional week you use them you pay the pro rata amount for that additional week.

Q. Is the consideration for borrowing and lending always the payment of such much in cash? A. Not always, no.

Q. What other kinds of consideration are sometimes used? A. Sometimes there is a possibility of a personality involved at the borrowing studio that the lending studio might desire to obtain for a part in the picture. So negotiations take place as to whether you will loan back that personality in return. It sometimes happens that a studio wants to acquire from you story material that you have and you have not found any way to make a motion picture out of, and they think they can, so they would say, "If you will sell us that story, then we will loan you this personality." It is strictly a competitive trading proposition.

Q. Why is a studio willing to lend its stars, aside from these things you just mentioned where they borrow a star in (894) return or get some other consideration in the story field, perhaps? Why are they willing to lend a star and receive cash for the star's period of being loaned? A. Well, in some instances the studio finds it impossible to use all of their available talent all the time that it is available to them under contract with a personality, and yet they have an obligation to pay that personality whether they use them in pictures or not. If an important part comes along with some good story at another studio, directed by an important director, produced by an important producer, or if it comes along from an independent producer in that field, the studio that has that contract with this particular personality would feel they were recouping a certain sum of money that they had to pay out; they would be advancing the career of this personality and thereby selfishly helping their own position in creating a more valuable asset for the production of pictures. It might be that in the hope that at some subsequent time, having done that, that the studio might loan you a personality when you needed him in a motion picture. I think those are the major controlling reasons.

Q. How is the amount to be paid for the borrowing of a star worked out? Is that a matter of negotiation? A. Yes. I will speak for the Paramount Studio: In the loaning of a star, if we had a contract with star X to pay them $100,000 per picture, and a producer wanted to borrow that star, and if in that year we had made, say, two pictures, could not make the third but had to pay for the third, it would cost that studio $100,000. If, however, we had not made but one picture with that star a year, and still had to pay the total sum of $300,000, we would charge $133,500 so as to distribute the write-off of one picture among the pictures that are made—I mean $150,000.

Q. You would try to get back at least the amount that you have to pay the star? A. Yes.

Q. And sometimes something more? A. Yes. With stars under weekly contract, and we have allocated two pictures annually to that star, we generally charge about one-third of the total annual salary.

Q. Now, does the studio have an interest in the vehicle in which the star is to be used by the borrowing studio? A. No.

Q. Is the lending studio interested in not having the star's value reduced, but enhanced? A. Yes, interest in having it enhanced, and definitely interested, of course, in not having it reduced in any way.

Q. Now, have there been occasions that you perhaps can mention when the reputation of a star has been enhanced in (896)
the hands of the borrowing studio? A. Well, I can go back and look over loans that have been made and things like that. I don't happen to remember offhand——

Q. Let me just mention a couple and see if it refreshes your recollection—— A. I will say that we have borrowed people whose reputations, I think, have been tremendously enhanced by their use in the pictures. I will cite the example of Ingrid Bergman playing the part of Maria in For Whom the Bell Tolls.

Q. From whom was she borrowed? A. She was borrowed from Selznick.

Q. And is he an independent producer, not a party to this suit? A. Yes.

Q. How about John Wayne? A. I think the part we gave John Wayne in Reap The Wild Wind, the Cecil B. DeMille production, took him out of the category of more or less in the cheaper type pictures and placed him at one of the top—not one of the top, but way up in the list of leading men in Hollywood.

Q. And who was he under contract to? A. Republic Studios.

Q. Is that an independent producer not a party to this suit? A. I understand they are not a party to this suit. They have a studio.
(897)

Q. Are they an independent producer in that sense? A. Yes.

Q. Was Wayne under contract to Republic at the time his value was enhanced by Paramount's exploitation? A. Yes.

Q. And did he go back to Republic and make pictures for them? A. Yes.

Q. Now, is Shirley Temple another example of the advantages to the lending studio of lending a star whose reputation increased during the period? A. That happened before I went to Hollywood, but Paramount borrowed Shirley Temple from Twentieth Century-Fox when she was practically unknown and gave her a part in Little Miss Marker that overnight made her a top-ranking personality in the industry.

Q. Now, do you know, or, to your knowledge, has there ever been any agreement or understanding amongst the defendants to restrict the borrowing or lending of stars to the defendants in this case? A. I know of no such understanding.

Q. Did you ever hear of any such understanding? A. I have never heard of any such understanding.

Q. As a matter of fact, is borrowing and lending limited to the defendants in this case? A. It is not.

Q. Now, have you had occasion to loan stars to a number of producers who are not defendants in this case as well as to defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. And have you had occasion to borrow stars from a number of producers who are not defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. And isn't it the fact that the practice of lending and borrowing exists in the industry quite indiscriminately without regard to any question of whether a defendant has an interest in theatres or whether he is a defendant in this case, or anything else; it is just the practice between all the producers, isn't it? A. That is right.

Q. Now, can you give us some examples in recent years in which you have borrowed or lent stars from or to independent producers having no interest in this case? And I will let you have this list before you in case you want to refresh your recollection, with the Court's permission (handing).

Will you give us the name of the star and the name of the borrower or lender, the independent producer——

Judge Hand: He has got a long list there. He may familiarize himself with it. Why do you want him to read all of it?

Mr. Seymour: This list includes all borrowings and lendings. Now, the Government's theory, although I cannot tell from day to day whether they are still standing on it, is that there was some kind of a restriction to have this practice between defendants. Now, I am not going into the extent to which it was done between defendants. There is no doubt it was done between defendants; but I am going to ask Mr. Freeman to cite instances of the catholicity of the practice, showing it was done between all producers, which I think can hardly be disputed. So I am not going to have him read the whole list, Judge Hand.

A. We in general have loaned our stars and personalities to all producers; and if you want me to—

Q. Give some examples. A. Nils Asther was loaned to Republic Pictures Corporation.

(900)

Mr. Wright: Does the list have the dates on there, and does it also have the information of the distributor who released the picture in question?

Mr. Seymour: I am not sure of that.

Mr. Wright: Why not put the whole list in with that data?

Mr. Seymour: We haven't got the names of the distributor; we have got the name of the independent producer who borrowed or loaned.

Mr. Wright: Well, it would be easy enough, I suppose, to add to the list the name of the distributor.

Mr. Seymour: I am not going to ask him to prove the whole list but just a few examples of borrowings or lendings to independent producers; and then if at a later time you want to put it in, we will supply the information.

A. (Continued) We loaned Barbara Britton to the Bogeaus production for a part in "Captain Kidd." We also loaned her to the Crosby Productions, which was an independent picture producer under the direction of the Crosbys. We loaned Robert Benchley to an independent production, Abbott-Solomon-Buchman, which was the name of the company producing it. Also Robert Benchley to the Abbott-Herbert Corporation. These were independent pictures produced under the direction of Jack Skirball, at one time (901) associated with Frank Lloyd. We loaned Robert Benchley to the Manhattan Productions, the same group. We loaned Rod Cameron to Republic Pictures Corporation; Johny Coy to the Felix Young Productions, an independent producer; Richard Denning to Republic Pictures Corporation: Ellen Drew to Republic Pictures Corporation; Ellen Drew to the California Movie Company, which was an independent production; Ellen Drew again—no, I believe that was radio; I don't believe that was a picture—Ellen Drew to London Studios for a part in a picture. Albert Dekker to Republic Pictures Corporation; Albert Dekker a second time to the Republic Pictures Corporation. Virginia Dale, Republic Pictures Corporation. Yvonne De Carlo to the Cardinal Pictures Corporation, all of these independently-produced pictuers. William Demarest to the Cinema Artists Corporation. Carl Esmond to Sam Wood Productions. Barry Fitzgerald to B. G. DeSylva Productions. Preston Foster to Edward

Small Productions. Preston Foster to Edward Small Productions a second time; Betty Field to Lester Cowan Productions; William Holden to Principal Artists Syndicate for a picture; Susan Hayward—

Q. I think that is enough. There are other examples of lendings and borrowings? A. Yes, a great many.

Q. And those happen to be largely lendings that you refer to? A. Where we have people under contract to Paramount who have been loaned to others.

(902)

Q. Loaned? A. Yes.

Q. Now, have you borrowed some? Have you borrowed some from independent producers? A. Yes.

Q. I do not know that you need to go into detail, but, in any event, is it true that the practice of borrowing and lending stars prevails in Hollywood between all producers, independent, non-theatre-owning, and producers who have an interest in theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And is the practice, would you say, indiscriminate among them? A. Yes.

Q. Now, also are there ocassions when Paramount rents either out or in equipment and props and costumes and things of that kind? A. Yes.

Q. Is that also done indiscriminately among producers? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any agreement or understanding to limit that practice to the defendants in this case? A. No.

Q. Can you give us an idea as to approximately how many independent producers there are in Hollywood at the present time? A. I think there are about 40, making all types of pictures. I mean by that, from the very cheapest westerns to the very highest price A-pictures.

Q. And that does not include the defendants in this suit? A. No.

(903)

Judge Goddard: How many elsewhere?

Mr. Seymour: Sir?

Judge Goddard: You confined your question to Hollywood. How many other independents are there?

Mr. Seymour: That is a good question, Judge Goddard.

Q. Are there other independents outside of Hollywood producing pictures? A. As far as I know, with very, very few exceptions, all pictures that are made in America are made in Hollywood; that is, except the so-called industrial films and pictures of that type.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, is there an organization of 24 independent producers? A. The Association of Independent Motion Pictures Producers, headed by Mr. Donald Nelson, I understand has 24 members. I only know that by a statement made by Mr. Nelson.

Q. Is there also another organization of so-called independent producers containing a somewhat smaller number? A. There is the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers composed of the group that produces the smaller bracket western pictures and action type pictures, generally released through P. R. C.

Q. Are there substantially more independent producers in Hollywood today than there were when you went there in 1938? A. Yes.

(904)

Q. Would you venture an estimate as to approximately how many more? A. A good many more, several times more than the number that were producing independently when I first went there.

Q. That has been a development of the last several years? A. Since I went to Hollywood in 1938.

Q. Now, are some of those independent producers very successful? A. Yes.

Q. Have some of them produced some of the most successful pictures of recent years? A. Yes.

Q. Can you mention some of the pictures produced by independent producers? A. Selznick produced "Gone With the Wind"; "Since You Went Away"; "I'll Be Seeing You"; "Rebecca"; two or three other very important pictures. Sam Goldwyn has produced several very important pictures, the last one being with Danny Kaye, "Up in Arms" and one with Bob Hope, "The Princess and the Pirate"; and two or three with Gary Cooper that were very, very successful.

Q. Now, are the pictures of the independent producers widely distributed? A. Yes.

(905)

Q. Is there a constant demand for the pictures produced by independents as well as others? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any instance where an independent producer of a good picture has had difficulty in getting his picture distributed? A. I do not know of any, no.

Q. Do you know of any picture, having merit, produced by an independent producer or anyone else since you went to Hollywood, which did not get distribution? A. I don't know of any.

Q. Has Paramount from time to time distributed pictures produced by independent producers? A. Yes.

Q. Has Paramount ever refused, so far as you know, to distribute a picture of an outside producer which it could obtain on satisfactory terms? A. Not that I know of, but there have been independently produced pictures that we have been asked if we would meet certain terms, and we have said no.

Q. That is the reason I asked you. The terms were unsatisfactory? A. That is right.

Q. And those pictures were distributed by other distributors, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Going back, Mr. Freeman, to the period when you were associated with Mr. Lynch, did you learn of the development of Associated First National? A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us your contact with the development (906) of that organization? A. I don't quite understand your question. My contact with the development of the organization?

Q. Let me put it this way. Did you learn of the formation of First National? A. Yes.

Q. And at that time you and Mr. Lynch, or Mr. Lynch's organization, were engaged in distributing Famous Players pictures in the South, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And did you learn of the banding together of the principal exhibitors of the United States to form First National? A. Yes.

Q. And did you learn of the development of sub-franchises by these exhibitors, bringing in some thousands of smaller exhibitors over the United States? A. Yes.

Q. And did you have occasion to discuss the impact of that development on the distribution of Famous Players pictures with First National franchise holders? A. Yes.

Q. Was there an occasion when you went to New Orleans and had a discussion about it? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us when that occurred? A. In March of 1919.

Q. Will you tell us what happened on that occasion? A. Well, we met with several of the First National Franchise holders, holding franchises in the Southern States. The Southern States I refer to are Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, (907) Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina. We generally referred to them as the eleven Southern States. And at this meeting there were, in addition to the principal franchise holders,

Mr. Hulsey, being the franchise holder of the States of Texas, Oklahoma and part of Arkansas, and Mr. E. V. Richards, representing the Sanger Amusement Company, that held franchises for Mississippi and Louisiana. There were present——

Q. First National franchises? A. First National franchises. (Continuing) —representatives of some then forty or fifty exhibitors. And they, at this meeting, asked our interests, S. A. Lynch Enterprizes' interest, asked Mr. Lynch and me if we would be willing to join in, that they were planning to organize a booking and buying company, meaning by that a company that would buy pictures for a given theatre and also that they would book that picture to the theatre, and that their plan was that each theatre who joined the organization would pay five per cent of its gross receipts into the organization for management, for buying the pictures and for services to be rendered, and that the organization would serve any of its members who might be involved in a situation, to go in, and if necessary, take over his theatre and run it for him until it could be put back on a profitable basis. They said they held franchises for First National Pictures in the States of Texas, Oklahoma and Delaware, (908)

Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana, and that they would like for the Lynch Enterprises to place the theatres that were then operated by the Lynch Enterprises, amounting to some fifteen or eighteen, into the organization and for the Lynch Enterprises to own this company along with Mr. Hulsey, Mr. Richards and two or three other important exhibitors in the territory, and the details to be further discussed and worked out, but the Lynch Enterprises would manage the business in Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, and Tennessee.

At that time we had a contract with Famous Players-Lasky for the distribution of Paramount pictures and we told them that we had, and we told these people that we had an obligation to Paramount to protect the outlet for Paramount pictures in that territory and that we certainly would do everything in the world we could to preserve and protect that against any competitive organization; and we felt under the situation of what was developing there that our obligation was to go and disclose it to Paramount, and tell them, and we intended to do that. If Paramount did not feel there was any threat to their future in this, that, after a frank discussion with them, we would come back and we might discuss some plan further, but until we had a chance to talk, (909) we would refer it to Mr. Adolph Zukor, we would not want to make any further commitment.

Q. Did you after that meeting go with Lynch to see Mr. Zukor in New York? A. Yes.

Q. Did you report the meeting to him? A. Yes.

Q. Did you express any views to him about what Paramount ought to do? A. We told him that, insofar as the interests that we represented, the Paramount interests in the South, we felt it was a direct threat to its future; that these were exhibitors that controlled practically all of the important theatres in the territory, that is, in the Southwest territory, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana, and that if they should decide they did not want to play Paramount pictures, there would be no outlet for them in that territory.

Q. Was it shortly after that that Mr. Zukor advised you that Paramount had decided to acquire an interest in the atres down there? A. We first talked with Mr. Zukor. He said he wanted a few days to give the matter consideration and discuss it with his associates. Very shortly after the first meeting he notified us that he would be interested, that Paramount would be interested, in joining with the Lynch enterprises in the organization of a company.

(910) Mr. Wright: All this conversation is improper. I have not objected to it because I wanted to get it over with, but if he can just say what happened there, it seems to me——

Mr. Seymour: It is almost over. Relax, it is almost over.

Q. Shortly after that, Southern Enterprises was formed with the Lynch interests having a half interest and Paramount having a half interest; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. What happened in the Hulsey area—where was he a First National franchise holder? A. He had the franchise for Texas, Oklahoma and part of Arkansas.

Q. What happened to Paramount or Famous Players pictures in his area? A. He had associated with him in the territory several very important exhibitors operating—I say important exhibitors—operating in the larger cities and he threw out all Paramount pictures in the important cities of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Q. So there was a time when Paramount pictures could not be shown in those important cities, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At or about that time did Southern Enterprises acquire an interest in some theatres in that part of the South? A. Yes, through a subsidiary corporation that they organized, known as Southern Enterprises, Inc. of Texas.

(911)

Q. I want to ask you a little about the theatre department of Paramount, Mr. Freeman. When you went to Paramount in 1933, had decentralization of theatre operation already taken place? A. Yes.

Q. Perhaps I should have asked you first, what was the method of operating theatres in which Paramount had an interest when you came to Paramount in 1933? Were they operated centrally or were they operated locally? A. They had been operating centrally in New York, controlled and operated out of New York. I wasn't any part of that. I wasn't there, but that had been their method of operation.

Q. When you got to Paramount, how were they being operated? A. Mostly by receivers.

Q. But at least they were being operated largely by receivers on the ground, isn't that so? A. Yes.

Q. Where they weren't operated by receivers they were being operated by their local managers? A. Yes.

Q. I would like to have you tell us a little bit about the period when you were at Paramount in New York and while you were in charge of the theatre department as to the independence of the theatre department from the distribution department. Was the theatre department advising the distribution department as to the film deals made by theatres in which Paramount had an interest through their local (912) managers? A. No, they were not.

Q. Was the distribution department advising Paramount —advising the theatre department as to the film deals which the distribution department was making in theatres in which Paramount had no interest? A. No.

Q. Did it keep the theatre department advised as to the film deals which were being negotiated or made with the theatres in which other defendants in this case had an interest? A. They did not.

Q. Would you as a director of Paramount have occasion to consider whether you thought it was desirable for Paramount to have an interest in theatres? A. I did not quite understand.

Q. You were a director of Paramount for a time? A. I was a director of Paramount, commencing December 7, 1935.

Q. Are you still a director? A. Yes.

Q. As a director of Paramount and an officer of Paramount, do you believe it is desirable, from Paramount's point of view and the point of view of Paramount's stockholders, for it to have an interest in theatres? A. Yes.

Q. Why? A. I feel that it offers the best chance of an outlet for pictures in different territories. It offers a chance to not be shut out by any combination that might want to restrict you from showing any, as happened to us in Dallas, (913)
Texas. And it gives to the distributing department a very direct knowledge of public appreciation of certain types of pictures, or dislike of certain types of pictures which the distributing department can convey to the studio and be helpful in deciding upon the production program. That is particularly helpful where the company must produce twenty-five motion pictures a year. It is much more necessary than it would be if I only had to make one motion picture, in which I could take all the elements of gamble on it. I have to follow through with a program of two pictures a month. And it is very important to the manufacturer to have knowledge that in going forward with that program that there is some protection to the gamble. The independent producer who makes one or two pictures, may take one or two gambles a year. I have to take, as head of the studio, twenty-six gambles, because every picture is a new formula; it is not tried or proven by the performance of the preceding picture. It is the only business, I think, that the product is manufactured out of human beings. The assembling of those human beings, to bring them together, and the making of the picture, is a very, very uncertain, unknown thing. It makes no difference how many known factors you may have to go into it, it may still prove very unprofitable.

So with that outlet there available to you, you at least (914)
have some protection.

If I may, without any discussion of the other man's motion picture, cite the example of one of the finest motion pictures ever made in the industry, picture called Wilson, I assure you that that is a very, very unsuccessful picture from the standpoint of its commercial value but it is one of the finest pictures the industry has ever made.

Now the fact that that would have, through ownership, some chance of an outlet, to at least carry on, would encourage the man who was producing that picture to go forward with it, and that happens all the time in the production of pictures, and I definitely feel that the interest of the producer and the distributor and the exhibitor can successfully be tied up in the ownership of the outlet for the product.

Q. You believe that Paramount has used its theatre interests to monopolize exhibition in the United States?

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright has an objection and my witness has hesitated to answer. Your Honor overruled the objection before.

Judge Hand: You may answer that, if you want to.

Q. (Continuing) You may answer.

Judge Hand: It is a general thing.

A. No, I don't think that Paramount has tried to monopolize.

Mr. Seymour: Now, Mr. Wright, I am prepared to stipulate with you that, if put to this witness, the questions negativing the conspiracy charge in the complaint, which I have put to Mr. Zukor, would be answered by him in the negative, and on the basis of that stipulation I will not put the question to him.

Mr. Wright: That is stipulated.

Mr. Seymour: And you may now inquire.

The Court: We will now adjourn until tomorrow morning at ten-thirty.

(Adjourned until Wednesday, October 24, 1945, at 10:30 a. m.)

(916)

New York, October 24, 1945, 10:30 a.m.

Trial resumed.

Judge Hand: Proceed.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think there is a correction that should be made at page 819 of yesterday's typewritten transcript on the cross-examination of Mr. Rodgers. You will note the question at page 819 in the middle of the page reads:

"Q. You did not offer it then until after you had been able to agree with Balaban & Katz on terms for the picture, isn't that right?" I think the question should be "until after you had been unable to agree."

And then the next question reads:

"Q. The only reason that it was made available to the Wood's and the Oriental?"—it should include the words "That was the only reason that it was made available to the Wood's and the Oriental."

Mr. Gillespie: It seems reasonable to me.

The Court: How should the first correction read?

Mr. Wright: The question as it now reads is: "Q. You did not offer it then until after you had been able to agree with Balaban & Katz on terms for the picture," and it should read, "unable to agree,"

(917)

Judge Goddard: "unable" instead of "able"?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: I might say, if your Honors please, that we have been from time to time suggesting corrections to the record to the stenographers, mostly of a grammatical nature, and at some convenient time we shall consult with the Government on those and have them made in the copies which your Honors are receiving.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Caskey: They are not of sufficient importance to call to your attention specifically.

Mr. Wright: All right.

Y. FRANK FREEMAN, resumed the stand.

Mr. Wright: Have you gentlemen any other questions of Mr. Freeman?

Mr. Gillespie: I don't think so.

Judge Hand: All right, Mr. Wright.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Freeman, can you tell us just what a producer of motion pictures is, as you have been using the term? A. A producer of motion pictures, as we use the term in Hollywood, is the man who supervises the development of the (918) story, the selection of the story from which the picture is to be made; also supervises the selection of the cast, and the designing of the sets, the costumes for the people, and as a supervisor of the complete production of the picture.

Q. In other words, the actual producer in every instance, I suppose, is an individual? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Paramount Pictures Company has under contract to it a substantial number of people that are called producers, executive producers, or associate producers? A. Yes.

Q. Titles of that kind? A. Yes.

Q. And those people have contractual arrangements with you; some are on a straight salary and others on a salary and percentage of profits of the pictures that they produce? A. All of the producers that work for Paramount are on a straight salary, not participating.

(919)

Q. Then there are some producers who produce on the Paramount lot, that is, you make your production facilities available to, where you finance the production and share in the proceeds? A. There is one such producer on the Paramount lot, in which we finance the production. There are other producers in the same category, but we don't finance.

Q. I was just wondering where you draw the line here as to what you call an independent producer. This producer on the Paramount lot, whose productions you finance, that is Mr. DeSylva? A. No, we don't finance Mr. DeSylva Mr. DeMille.

Q. Mr. DeMille? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. DeSylva was one of your salaried producers until quite recently? A. He was the executive producer until about a year ago—the first of this year.

Q. And I think he was one of those that you referred to as an independent, that is, according to your definition he became an independent when he set up his own unit although he continued to release through you? A. I consider Mr. DeSylva an independent producer.

Q. And you consider him independent because you say you don't finance his productions although you make production facilities available to him, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And you don't share in the profits of the production? A. We do.

(920)

Q. You have a percentage of the production profits as well as such profits as you make through distributing the picture? A. We have a distributing arrangement for the picture and then a share of the profits after all costs have been paid out of production.

Q. Are there any other of these producers you have referred to as independent which release pictures through you under a similar arrangement? A. Mr. Wallis—Hal Wallis sections of the country who are not connected by any over-all organization; and the manufacturer of a picture will sell (931)

outright the rights to distribute his pictures, say in Georgia or North Carolina, to an individual distributor in that section. He will also sell the rights to distribute, say any in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas to another State's rights distributor, who distributes pictures in that territory. They are not connected through any central organization; they are all individuals who operate on their own in that particular territory.

By Judge Hand:

Q. Do they still exist? I thought they did get into an organization, according to some of your testimony. I may have misunderstood it. A. No, there are a great many State's rights exhibitors today handling pictures, buying reissues from people, new issues that are made, principally the cheaper budgeted pictures, Westerns and what we call action type pictures that are sold to those State's rights distributors. I would think that there are from one to three of those State's rights exhibitors in each territory.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Do you mean distributors? I think you said exhibitors, Mr. Freeman.

Judge Bright: He said exhibitors once or twice. He meant distributors.

The Witness: I am sorry. I meant distributors (932)
in the different divisions of territory.

By Judge Hand:

Q. The division of territory you refer to is what, a State or a subdivision? A. It is an exchange center; it is a territory that is generally covered out of a central exchange, and that is pretty well defined in the national set-up.

By Judge Bright:

Q. They are not connected with any of these defendants or any of the national distributors? A. They are not connected with any of these defendants or any of the national distributors.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. It is another method of distribution? A. Yes.

Q. And are some of the national distribution organizations the outgrowth of original State's rights distribution? A. I think the P. R. C., Monogram and I think Republic is an outgrowth.

By Judge Hand:

Q. That is what I thought you said yesterday, didn't you? A. I did not, no.

Mr. Seymour: What he was talking about yesterday, Judge Hand, was First National—— Judge Hand: Who did say that? Didn't some witness say that?

(933)

Mr. Seymour: I understood yesterday that the testimony dealt with the Associated First National, which was an organization of original State's rights distributors in the First National organization. Now that was not the end of States' rights development.

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Seymour: And that has been going on constantly, is still in effect, and there is nothing in the world to prevent its growth.

Mr. Caskey: I have one matter that I cannot believe is really in dispute, but because it is incorporated in Appendix A of the trial brief at page 35, I should like to ask a question.

Recross Examination by Mr. Caskey:

(936)

Q. It appears, Mr. Freeman, that Paramount maintains an exchange in Atlanta, Georgia. Is that the natural distribution center of that portion of the United States? A. Yes.

Q. And is the same true as to Charlotte, North Carolina? A. Yes.

Q. And New Orleans? A. Yes.

Q. Dallas? A. Yes.

Q. Oklahoma City? A. Yes.

Q. And those exchanges were maintained in those distribution centers since your connection with the motion picture industry? A. I think possibly Charlotte was opened as an exchange center after my connection, and possibly Oklahoma City; I am not sure. They have been maintained for a long period of time.

Q. They are the natural distribution centers of the country? A. In that particular section of the country in which they are located, yes.

Q. And that would be equally true of Post Toasties? A. Of what?

Q. Of any commodity that is sold generally through the United States? A. Yes.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: Thank you, Mr. Freeman.

(937)

Mr. Seymour: I will call Mr. Reagan.

CHARLES M. REAGAN, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Paramount, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. What is your present position with Paramount? A. Vice-president in charge of sales for the United States and Canada.

Q. And are you also a member of the board of directors? A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. And how long have you been vice-president in charge of sales? A. Since May of 1944.

Q. What are your duties in that office? A. I am responsible for the distribution and merchandising of Paramount Pictures throughout the United States and Canada.

Q. And are you also a vice-president of Paramount Film Distributing Corporation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And does Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation distribute pictures? A. They do.

Q. And one operates in some States and the other operates in other States, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. So they are both engaged in distribution in the same way but in different parts of the country, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

(938)

Q. And your testimony will apply to the distribution by both companies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when did you first enter the motion picture business? Will you tell us briefly about your experience in the business down to the time you became vice-president in charge of sales? A. I entered the motion picture business in 1920 as a salesman in the Cincinnati exchange for Paramount; in 1921 I was made sales manager of that exchange. In 1922 I was sent to Minneapolis as branch manager of —releases through Paramount but not under exactly the same terms as the DeSylva arrangement.

Q. Of these 40 producers out there that you referred to as independent, how many of those 40 release their pictures through one or more of the defendants here, do you know? A. One or more of the defendants?

Q. Yes, the defendant distributors in the suit here. A. I would suppose about 12 or 14 of them. Just as a rough estimate. I haven't checked that.

Q. Do you know? A. Well, I can name those that I know.

Q. Which are those? A. Selznick, International Pictures, Preston Sturgis, Hunt von Stromberg, Lester Cowan, Eddie Golden, Edward Small, Charlie Rogers—did I name von Stromberg?

Q. Yes. A. Ben Borgeaus Productions. That is offhand.

Judge Bright: What did you say they did?

The Witness: They released through the different corporations in this case. That was the question asked me.

Q. Yes. This comparison you made between the 40 that are there now, that you say is substantially larger than the number there were when you went out there in 1938, as a matter of fact, of those 40 the only three which have any distribution facilities of their own—national distribution facilities—are Republic, Monogram and P. R. C., isn't that right? A. They are not defendants in this suit?

Q. I say, of these 40 producers that you named as independent, there are only three of those, that is, Monogram, Republic and P. R. C., which have any national distribution facilities of their own? A. I didn't name Republic, Monogram or P. R. C. I didn't mention those.

Q. I thought you had referred to them as independent producers in discussing this loaning and borrowing of talent. A. My understanding of the question was, those companies that were not defendant to this suit. Republic, as I understand it, is not a defendant, and they were considered in the independent group. I did not name them in that——

Mr. Wright: Will you read the last question?

(Question read.)

A. In so far as I know, those that I named haven't any national distribution arrangement of their own. They distribute through other distributors.

(922)

Judge Bright: Except the three mentioned?

The Witness: Except those three mentioned.

Judge Bright: Do I understand you to say that the other 37 distribute through some one or more of these defendants?

The Witness: Yes, one or more of these defendants or through the group that were excepted, Republic, Monogram or P. R. C.

Q. You don't know which ones distribute through which, other than those you named? A. I can give you, from my memory, the best information I have. Selznick distributes through——

Q. Yes; I say, other than those you covered in your statement. A. That is right.

Q. In any event, all of these producers of pictures out there, whether they are under contract to you or whether they free-lance, or whatever the arrangement they make for distribution, have a very vital interest in the way that their films are distributed and exhibited, isn't that right? A. I suppose they do.

Q. And the manner in which the films which these producers make are distributed and exhibited determines, in very large measure, does it not, the financial success of his pictures? A. I would answer that by saying that that contributes to it, and also the value of the product that he has made, whether it has box office value or not.

Q. Yes, but apart from the question of such intrinsic box office value as the picture might have because of its quality, its box office performance also depends in very large part on the kind of exploitation it gets in distribution and exhibition, isn't that right? A. That certainly is a help to the success of the picture.

Q. That is, whether it gets into the key runs or not, and when it gets in, and how much playing time it gets in key runs, those are—— A. Those are contributing factors to the success of the picture.

Q. Now, the question as to what kind of exploitation any particular picture gets is largely a matter of agreement, then, between the distributor and the exhibitors who show the picture, isn't that right? A. No, that is not entirely correct. The kind of exploitation and the publicity campaign nationally is one that is arranged between the producer of the picture and the distributor of the picture. The local campaign, where the picture is exhibited in any community, is of course one that is worked out between the distributor and the exhibitor.

Q. When you make a contract with a producer to distribute his pictures, you just make a contract to distribute them and that is as far as the contract with him goes, isn't that right? A. Oh, no.
(924)
Q. That is, you don't—— A. No, he imposes all kinds of —I am speaking now of the contract that we have for distribution.

Q. Yes. A. And from information of others. (Continuing) All kinds of conditions for the method and manner in which his picture will be sold, the terms, the amount of money to be spent in exploitation, his right of sitting in on the advertising campaign and approving the class and type of advertising that shall be issued on the picture; and in many instances, actually approving the individual contract that is made with the exhibitor for the exhibition of his picture.

Q. Yes, I understand that, but I say, assuming he does have the power under your distribution contract to approve or disapprove the particular terms or licenses that you, as a distributor, make with the various exhibitors, it is never determined what kind of play-off the picture is ultimately going to have until after the license agreements are made between you as the distributor and the various exhibitors that show the picture, isn't that right? A. I don't make those contracts, Mr. Wright. I am not in the distributing end and I could not answer just the type of contract made between the distributor and the exhibitor.

Q. You were yourself in charge of the exhibition field at one point? A. That was back in 1938. I did not make the contracts for the playing of the pictures in the theatre.

Q. In any event, there is a struggle which goes on in the course of releasing the picture between the distributor and exhibitors, on the distributor's part to secure a certain amount of playing time in certain theatres, and as to which differences of opinion arise between the distributor and the exhibitor, isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. Those are ultimately resolved in the terms of the contracts that are made between the exhibitor and the distributor? A. Continuous struggle.

Q. And your situation is, of course, always that your producer feels that he ought to have extended playing time in all of your key runs and that the picture ought to be held in there as long as it is making any money at all, isn't that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And your exhibitor, of course, may have different ideas and wants to pull or take out the picture and put in something else that he thinks may make more money before the other picture has played as much time as the producer thinks it ought to? A. That is generally a conflict between the two. What all the reasons are——

Q. Yes, you have a constant struggle over this question of what kind of playing time, but that is whether they get (926) the preferred days, the Sundays, Saturdays and the holidays, or whether it is played at some other time? A. It is always a point at issue.

Q. How those issues are resolved, of course, always has a very important effect on the box office results of the picture over-all, isn't that right? A. It has an effect on it. The problem is not as much of a problem in the case of important box office pictures because the holiday dates and all are covered generally by the arrangement of the runs. It becomes a problem in the towns farther down the line, where they play split week, and two or three days instead of a whole week.

Q. Roughly, the situation that you have today with your smaller number of features and your greatly extended playing times in the first-runs is simply that you have a glut of features in your first-run situations, key situations, and you have an acute shortage in your subsequent-runs, isn't that right? A. I am not entirely familiar with that. I am not handling distribution. I can't answer that, Mr. Wright. (927)

Q. You don't know what the facts are as to that, then, at all? A. I do not.

Q. But, in any event, the success or failure of any of these producers who make pictures depends ultimately on the consistency with which he can get in box office returns, the cost and the profit on the picture, isn't that right? A. I think the success or failure is dependent on his ability to create a box office picture, to build something that the public is interested in, and will pay to go to see.

Q. And in that connection the pictures that have the greatest appeal or that you are interested in marketing are those which have a nation-wide box office appeal for all ages and levels of education and experience, isn't that right? A. I should think that is correct, yes.

Q. In other words, you don't waste any time discussing terms with some producer who is simply seeking to reach a limited portion of the market, who might wish to make a picture that appealed, let us say, to a certain section of the country? A. I do not quite understand your question about wasting time. We would discuss with any producer the distribution of his picture, if it had what we considered material in it or box office value, public appeal. I would not know how to distinguish between wasting time with one or another.

Q. Well, of course you understand that there are and may be wide differences in the box office appeal of any particular picture in various geographical areas and various age levels, and perhaps in various educational levels? A. There is a wide difference of appeal, yes.

Q. And as I say, you do not offer distribution facilities except to such pictures as you believe have the broadest possible appeal, isn't that right? A. It would be, certainly, the first consideration to make the test, because the distributing company is interested in making money and distributing pictures from which they can get the broadest distribution and make a financial gain, make a profit out of it. That is their purpose and that is their job.

Q. And your distribution and marketing system is so set up, however, that you do not afford the facilities to somebody who may want to reach a particular segment of that whole domestic market?

Mr. Proskauer: I object to that, your Honor. It is speculative.

Judge Hand: I think we shall sustain that objection. I do not see that it has any pertinence. Why in the world should this company be regarded as a humanitarian trying to exploit pictures that only appeal to a small class and are not much profitable. It is merely absurd, unless you can show that there is a conspiracy to exclude those people. There is no such law in the world.

(929)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think it is quite apparent that one of the purposes of the Act, one of the purposes of competition, is to assure an opportunity for doing business in divers ways, and the opportunity for divergent methods of expression.

Judge Hand: We will sustain this objection. Go on with your next question.

Q. You say all of these films, of course, are copyrighted? A. I said that?

Mr. Caskey: What was that?

Mr. Seymour: We could not hear your question.

Q. I say everything you make is copyrighted, isn't that correct, all films? A. All films that Paramount makes are copyrighted. I suppose the others are.

Mr. Proskauer: May we have a stipulation as to something we have all tacitly assumed, that substantially all, or, in fact, all the films and motion pictures are copyrighted? I suppose we can agree on that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I merely wanted to point out the copyright issues as a matter of course.

Q. It is, is it not, as far as you know? A. It is in the conduct of Paramount business.

Q. You referred, I think, in your direct examination to each film representing some new formula. Now, so far as copyright is concerned, you get a copyright whether you (930) use the same formula seven times or whether there is any particular freshness or originality or anything else in it or not; isn't that right?

Mr. Proskauer: I object to that as irrelevant.

Mr. Caskey: I object to it.

Judge Hand: Yes. I do not see any use in putting things like that in the record.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Just one question: Do some of the independent producers that you mentioned distribute through Republic, Monogram and P. R. C.? A. Yes. Wait a minute. You say the ones that I mentioned?

Q. In the group of 35 or 40 which you did not name but which you gave the number of yesterday—— A. They do.

Q. Do a number of those distribute through Republic, Monogram and P. R. C., which are not defendants in this suit? A. Yes.

Q. Do others distribute through so-called State's rights distributors? A. A few, yes.

By Judge Bright:

Q. What are State's rights distributors? A. State's rights are defined as individual distributors in the various Judge Hand: I apparently misunderstood.

Mr. Seymour: It was not the end of that method. It is here, and there is nothing to stop its growing to any extent, or any kind of distribution growing to any extent.

Any other questions of Mr. Freeman?

By Judge Bright:

Q. Do these State's rights distributors distribute any of the product of the defendant producers? A. No, not unless there had been some deal to sell some of them an old picture that they reissued.

May I say that we recently sold to a man by the name of Harry Sherman, who is an independent producer——

Mr. Proskauer: A distributor?

The Witness: An independent producer.

A. (Continuing) —a series of Western pictures that had (934) previously been produced by him for our company. They had been played in all of the theatres available throughout the country, and we sold him back all of our rights, copyrights and everything in those pictures. Now he expects, as I understand it, to sell those pictures to these State's rights distributors. In other words, he paid so much in a lump sum for the whole; he expects to take each individual picture and sell to the State's rights distributor in Atlanta, Georgia, that territory, for X dollars; he expects to sell to the State's rights distributors in New England, that territory, for X dollars; in Chicago, that territory for X dollars, and of course, out of it all, to make a profit for himself. He has nothing then to do with the distribution or handling of it in any way. He has passed his rights to that picture in that given territory to these State's rights distributors.

Q. Are any of the pictures produced by Paramount that still are owned by Paramount, distributed through State's rights distributors? A. No.

Mr. Seymour: Are there any further questions of Mr. Freeman?

The Witness: May I qualify my last answer and ask, would that mean pictures that have been reduced to 16 millimeter size and have been licensed to independent distributors? Paramount does license pictures in 16 millimeters to a separate distributor who handles such products in schools and churches and clubs and other places, not in theatres, however.

Q. What do you mean by a separate distributor? A. Not connected with Paramount in any way.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Or with any of the other defendants? A. Or with any of the other defendants. It is strictly an independent distributor, but he can only distribute the pictures in 16 millimeter size.

By Judge Bright:

Q. What are they, original features reduced from 35 to 16 millimeter? A. Yes, pictures that have already been released in 35 millimeter size through the theatres, and they have played through most of the theatres in the country; and then he has the license arrangements to distribute those pictures in the United States, as I say, in certain localities where there are not theatres, in churches and clubs, and places of that kind.

Mr. Seymour: Anything else?

that exchange. In about 1926 I was made district manager with supervision of the Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Louisville exchanges; and in 1932 I was made district manager with supervision of the Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Indianapolis exchanges.

In 1934 I came to New York as division sales manager. That position I held until 1941 when I was made assistant general sales manager and continued in that capacity until May of 1944 when I got my present assignment.

Q. And in 1944 you succeeded Mr. Neil Agnew who had resigned? A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. And who is no longer connected with Paramount? A. No, sir, he is not.

Q. Now, will you tell us about the organization of the distribution or sales department of Paramount? A. The distribution organization is headed by myself as general sales manager. We have divided the country into what we call four divisions, which are supervised by four division sales managers; a further division of ten districts, each of which are supervised by a district manager. There are 31 branch exchanges, each of which are supervised by a branch manager. Those exchanges vary in size; and the number of salesmen employed in each exchange varies from about two to about seven.

Then in each exchange we have a booking department that books the pictures to the exhibitors with whom we do business.

We have an accounting department which arranges for the collection of the film rental that we earn.

We have a shipping department which ships the pictures to the theatres with whom we do business; and we have an inspection department which inspects the films after each engagement has been completed. If the films are found not to be in first class condition, they are put in first class condition before they go out for another engagement, so that the print is at all times in a first class condition before it has another exhibition or another engagement.

Q. Did you tell us how many exchanges there were (940)
altogether? A. Yes, sir, I told you there were 31.

Q. Now, do those 31 exchanges handle only Paramount release pictures? A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. Do they have any relationship or connection with the exchanges maintained by other distributors? A. No, sir, they do not.

Q. Does Paramount distribute the pictures of any other defendant in this case? A. No, sir. We have a shipping station in Butte, Montana, which is not an exchange. There we handle the physical shipment of pictures for United Artists.

Q. That is just at Butte, Montana, as a matter of shipping? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the only place in the United States where you handle the pictures of any other defendant, and that is just a matter of the shipment? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there are no salesmen employed in connection with the Butte, Montana, shipping station? A. There are none. It is just a shipping station.

Q. Now, was there a time when Paramount had more than 31 exchanges? A. Yes, sir. At one time I believe we had 36 or 37 exchanges.

Q. And why was the number reduced? A. The number was reduced because we felt that we could adequately sell and service the accounts with whom we did business with a lesser number of exchanges.

Q. Now, have the existing exchanges been maintained for a long period of time in the same cities where they are now located? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And can you tell us the basis for selecting the city where a particular exchange is located? A. Well, those cities were selected because they were, we believe, the best locations from which to adequately sell and service our accounts.

Q. Now, your paramount consideration is both to send salesmen out to get in touch with the theatres and handle the films back and forth, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And it is the combination of those two considerations in a central place which dictated the selection of the city for the exchange? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Approximately how many theatres does Paramount license pictures to? A. Well, it varies, dependent upon the box office quality of the picture. I should say from about 8000 to 14,000 or 14,500.

Judge Bright: What was that question?

(Question and answer read.)

Q. Approximately how many accounts are served by each exchange? A. Well, they vary in number, depending upon the size of the exchange. Our smallest exchange serves approximately 150 accounts, and our largest in excess of 700.
(942)

Q. Now, I wish you would tell us the physical method by which films are handled through a typical exchange, beginning with the assignment of prints. A. The number of prints that are assigned to an exchange is dependent upon, both the quality of the picture and the number of accounts in that exchange. Do you mean——

Q. Well, I would like to have you trace the method, the physical method of exchange operation, beginning with the assignment of prints and how they are handled in the exchange, in shipment to the customer, return to the exchange, inspection and so on, so we can have a better idea of how it is done. A. The number of prints, as I said, varies depending on the quality of the picture and the number of accounts in the exchange. After a picture is licensed to a customer, it is then booked to the theatre in which it is to play. After the booking has been made it is shipped——

Q. What does "booking" mean? A. The booking means the play date that the picture will play in the particular theatre.

Q. That is, the license does not fix the play date ordinarily? A. Not ordinarily.

Q. The play date is fixed by booking after the license is made? A. That is correct.

(942-A)

Q. The license merely provides that the exhibitor is to get the picture for exhibition on certain terms? A. Yes.

Q. And then the picture is booked by the booker for the particular play date by discussion with the exhibitor? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Then the exhibitor indicates when he would like to play that picture, and it is booked on that basis? A. That is correct.

(943)

Q. And then the films are shipped from the exchange? A. After the booking has been made, the picture is shipped to the theatre in which it is to play. After this engagement is completed, it is returned to the exchange where it is inspected in order to make certain that it will be in first class condition before it goes out to the next theatre in which it is to play.

For instance, it may be found that the print has been damaged. If that occurs, the damage is corrected as a result of the inspection, the damaged part is replaced and the print is brought up to first-class condition so that it will be ready for its next engagement.

Q. Are the films inspected after every engagement? A. Yes.

Judge Goddard: Would you tell us what determines what picture a certain theatre will get and what determines which run they will get?

Mr. Seymour: I am coming to that, if your Honor please. I am going to develop that at length, if I may do it a little later on.

Judge Goddard: Yes, I will just withdraw the question.

Q. You have the film coming back for inspection. Is it immediately shipped out again? A. Well, during its early period of release, I should say for the first 12 or 14 months, it is pretty much in use either in the theatres or in the time it takes to be shipped to and from the theatres.
(944)

Q. So that throughout the period of greatest playing time for the picture, the picture is either playing in engagement or in transit or under inspection? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Almost continuously? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Is it quite a problem to see that the limited number of films get around to all the theatres when they are supposed to get there? A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. How do you ship them to the theatres and how are they returned? A. We ship principally either by parcel post or by express or by film trucking companies.

Q. And is it necessary to use whatever method will get them there on time? A. We use the fastest method that we can, because the prints are in such great demand that we try and reduce to a minimum the shipping time to and from the theatre.

Q. Are they then returned in the same manner? A. Yes, same way.

Q. How many prints are made by Paramount of pictures which it produces and distributes? A. They vary in number, again depending upon what we believe to be the box office quality of the picture, from about 150 to 325.

Q. That is of each picture? A. Yes, sir, of each picture.

(945)

Q. Whatever the number of prints is, that particular picture has to serve from 8,000 to 14,000 theatres? A. That is correct.

Q. Approximately what is the cost of each of these prints, just the negative cost? A. You mean the positive print cost?

Q. Positive print; I beg your pardon. The cost of the positive print. A. The cost varies, depending upon the length of the picture, whether it is in black or white or whether it is in technicolor. I should say a black and white print costs on an average of about $125 to $150, and a technicolor picture from $500 to about $750, depending upon its length.

Q. Of course, that cost hasn't anything to do with the cost of production? A. Nothing at all.

Q. That is just the cost of the print? A. Cost of the positive prints.

Q. Why is the number of prints made so limited? A. Well, the number of prints that are made is limited for two reasons, or, rather, for several reasons. First, the cost of the prints, plus the cost of production, plus the cost of distribution, are an influencing factor in the profit that we make from that picture. Then also, the number of prints is limited because the film rental that we earn or that we receive in many theatres does not cover but only a small fraction of the actual cost of the print itself. We could not afford to make a great number of prints, because the income—or greater number of prints than we do, because the income that we get from them, as I say, in many instances, is limited to just a fraction of the actual cost of the print itself in the particular engagement.

Q. Would you say a majority of all the theatres you serve pay, in film rental, very much less than the cost of a single print? A. Yes.

Judge Bright: How many theatres will one print serve?

The Witness: One print will serve from——

Judge Bright: I mean, how many engagements?

The Witness: I should say from about 45 to 60.

Q. Was there a time when a single print served even fewer engagements? A. Yes, there was such a time, but as a result of improved projection, as a result of the improvement in the stock of the prints themselves, the number of engagements that they serve has been increased over a period of years.

Q. What is the approximate life of a print? A. That depends on how much it is used, of course, but I should say on the average of about 18 months to two years.

Q. Will you tell us in a general way about the current cost of production of Paramount pictures, that is, the production of an average picture, or even an average top picture? A. Well, production costs vary. We make pictures for as little as $150,000 in negative, and we make them for as much as three and a half million dollars, negative.

Q. In recent times, at least, Paramount has been making more and more of the very expensive pictures? A. We have been, yes.

Q. Has the cost of production of pictures generally been rising? A. Pardon me?

Q. Has the cost of the production of pictures been going up? A. It has been, yes, sir.

Q. Is the cost of Paramount pictures today, cost of production, greater than it was even a few years ago? A. Much greater.

Q. Do you have any part in the planning of a production program? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. What part do you play? A. Well, when our program for a season is discussed, I sit in on those discussions with

Mr. Balaban, president of our company, the head of our production department, the head of our foreign department, and, as best I can, I give my ideas with respect to the number of pictures that I believe that our company should produce, also the type of pictures that I believe the market can best absorb, the casting of the pictures; I am often asked my opinion as to whether a story should be bought or a play should be bought; all the things that go to determine what type of program we should have.

Q. Why do you have contributions to make on those subjects? A. I am supposed to know something about what the public wants in the way of entertainment, what type of entertainment that is most acceptable to them.

Q. Why do you have something to do with suggestions about casting? A. Because that would be an influencing factor in the determination of pictures that would be most acceptable to the public.

Q. How do you learn about questions of casting in connection with your work? Do you learn about the appeal of particular stars? A. Well, of course, that is part of my job.

Q. Does a program have to be planned a long time ahead? A. Yes, it is planned a year, a year and a half ahead, as nearly as we can plan that far in advance.

Q. And after program discussions, eventually a tentative program is worked out? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then there are changes made from time to time for some of the reasons Mr. Freeman mentioned yesterday? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Are you consulted from time to time as to possible changes in the program? A. I am consulted almost every day, or at least several times a week.
(949)

Q. In connection with the distribution of Paramount pictures, are sales conventions held? A. We hold sales meetings, small sales meetings, two or three times a year.

Q. Has there been any change in the nature of the sales meetings of Paramount since the consent decree went into effect? A. Yes, sir, there has been.

Q. Will you tell us what the system was immediately before the consent decree went into effect and what the system is now? A. Prior to the consent decree, when we sold a year's group of pictures at one time, we usually held a big sales convention, what we called a national sales convention, and we had present at that convention our bookers, and our salesmen, and our branch and our district managers, and our division managers, and home office officials along with production officials, and that was a very important affair, because it was at that time that we attempted to enthuse them to sell the pictures that we had decided to produce for the next year to our own people, so that they in turn could go out and sell them to our customers, and we stressed that very greatly.

Q. You talk of selling to the customers, is that right? A. I mean licensing.

Q. That is the license contract. And you use the word "sell" in the sense of persuading them to license? A. Yes. (950)

Judge Bright: Were these sales meetings attended only by employees of Paramount, or were there outsiders there?

The Witness: Generally only by employees of Paramount.

Q. I think what Judge Bright wants to ask you is whether representatives of other distributors were present? A. Oh, no, sir. Only our own people.

Judge Bright: No exhibitors?

The Witness: Very seldom. Once in a while we would invite an important exhibitor or a few important exhibitors.

(951)

Q. These sales meetings, I suppose, occasionally had social aspects? A. Yes, we tried to entertain the boys and enthuse them all we could.

Q. Has there been a change in that system of conventions since the consent decree? A. Yes, there has been a change because we no longer sell an entire season's product at one time. We sell only a limited number of pictures, maximum of five at a time, and as a result, we have meetings two or three times a year, and we have smaller meetings, rather, regional meetings, where we can go out and discuss our problems more intimately than we used to do in the old days.

Q. Those regional meetings are still attended only by Paramount people, is that right? A. Yes, that's so.

Q. And you don't have any joint sales meetings with other distributors? A. No, sir, we do not.

Q. Whether they are defendants in this case or anybody else? A. We couldn't do that.

Q. You regard your distribution activities as—— A. As pretty—not pretty much. It is our own affair.

Q. Prior to the consent decree, how was the date for the sales conventions determined? A. Well, as soon as we had our production program in shape so that we could discuss it with our sales department, we then set a date for our convention and we set that as early in the season as we could.

(952)

Q. Why was that? A. In order to enable us to beat our competitors, well, to the punch, I guess you would call it.

Q. Who are your competitors? A. All of the distributing companies who distribute pictures.

Q. Including the defendants in this case and others? A. Yes.

Q. Did the date of the sales conventions tend to creep up earlier and earlier as a result of that? A. We tried to make it as early as we could and each year we tried to hold it earlier so we could get started before our competitors got started.

Q. What was the theory of that? How did it help to hold your convention earlier? A. The more sales we could make prior to those of our competitors, the better off we were, we had that much behind us.

Q. Was the selling or the licensing of the pictures started immediately after the convention? A. Generally, but it became so highly competitive that the time came when we even started to sell our year's product before we had our convention.

Judge Bright: Were your pictures in being at the time of these conventions?

The Witness: No, they were not. They were not completed. The plans were for the number of pictures that we would distribute and most—many of the titles were made, some pictures were cast and some were not, but we got to the point where, without even waiting for having our program complete, we would go out and start to sell our pictures and sell them to whoever we could based on the past experience they had had with Paramount pictures and the faith they had in the ability of the company to make good pictures.

Q. So that before the decree you would go out and try to license on the basis of a year's program? A. In most cases.

Q. Since then you have been licensing in not more than blocks of five, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. There has been a trade showing of the blocks which were being licensed in blocks of five? A. We trade-show them before we——

Q. You continue to follow the requirements of the decree, though its requirements are no longer effective? A. Yes, sir, that is true.

Q. Do your salesmen in the exchanges work on fixed salary only or do they receive any other compensation? A. No, they get salary plus their expenses and then our salesmen also participate in what we call an incentive plan. (954)

Q. Does that operate so that the better showing of the exchange, the more participation they have? A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. Does the showing of the exchange depend upon all the transactions in the exchange area? A. The better the result is that they have with Paramount pictures, the more incentive money they earn.

Q. Does that apply to license fees or rentals received from independent exhibitors and also from theatres in which any defendant has an interest? A. Yes, sir, from all the license fees that come into an exchange.

Q. Do you still have sales drives? A. Yes, sir, we have just completed one.

Q. What is a sales drive in your business? A. Well, a sales drive is a drive where we try and improve the business that we are doing.

Q. Do you have a Paramount sales drive or is there a joint sales drive by all the distributors? A. Oh, no, we have one of our own.

Q. Do the other distributors have drives of their own? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What type of improvements do you seek to work in your business by these sales drives? A. We try to improve our film rentals as a result of the sales drives. The more pictures we can license, the more playing time that we can secure for our pictures, the better the result is for us and the more detrimental to our competitor.

Q. What is the effect of a successful sales drive, does it tend to take business away from your competitors? A. Yes, the more playing time that we can get during that period from a theatre, the less is available to our competitor.

Q. By "competitors" you refer to all the distributors? A. All the distributors.

Q. Does your department have anything to do with the advertising and exploitation of Paramount pictures? A. Yes, sir, we do.

Q. What does your department have to do with that? A. Well, the advertising and exploitation department is under my supervision.

Q. Does Paramount do any advertising itself of Paramount pictures? A. We do.

Q. Will you tell us how and why Paramount does the advertising? A. We do it because we try to establish the picture. We try to create a desire on the part of both the public and the exhibitor for our pictures and to stimulate the desire on the part of everybody to want to see the picture.

Q. What form of advertising does Paramount use? A. Well, we advertise in magazines, we advertise by way of radio, we advertise by way of billboards, we advertise in the trade papers.

Q. Much of that advertising is quite unrelated to the showing of a picture in any theatre? A. It is what we call a national campaign, prior to the time that the picture goes into release.

Q. And following such advertising of the salesmen of the Paramount exchanges engaged in procuring licenses for the pictures so advertised? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And following the advertising, the pictures are exhibited, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. Do the other distributors also advertise? A. They do.

Q. Is there any joint advertising by the distributors about all their pictures? A. No, sir, there is not.

Q. Can you tell us approximately how much Paramount spends in the type of advertising that you have referred to annually? A. This year we will spend about three million dollars.

Q. Do you have anything to do with the advertising done by exhibitors of Paramount pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what do you have to do with that? A. Well, we have what we call cooperative newspaper advertising campaigns.

Q. Will you explain that? A. I mean by that—perhaps I can best illustrate it this way: A theatre has an advertising budget of, let us say, a thousand dollars a week, which they normally spend on advertising a picture. We will go to that theatre and say, "We would like you to spend an additional thousand dollars over and above what you normally spend. If you will do that, we will share part of the cost of that additional expenditure." That is usually made in the form of newspaper advertising and that is what we call cooperative advertising.

Q. And the result of that is more extensive publicity for Paramount pictures? A. Surely.

Q. Is that system of cooperative advertising confined to first-run exhibitions? A. No, sir, it is not confined to first-runs. We do that with all types of theatres.

Q. Is cooperative advertising arranged only with theatres in which Paramount or some other defendant in this case has an interest? A. No, sir, it is arranged with not only the theatres in which the defendants and this company have an interest but independent theatres as well.

Q. Worked out with Paramount customers indiscriminately, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I guess you have given us an example of how that works. Why does Paramount engage in cooperative advertising? A. Because we hope to help establish the picture throughout the United States and create a desire on the part of the public to want to see it.

(958)

Q. Does it have any effect on the gross of the particular theatre in which the advertising is done? A. It not only helps the gross in the theatre in which the campaign is used but it also helps to establish the picture in the surrounding territory.

Q. Do the subsequent exhibitors benefit from that advertising? A. Oh, yes, of course they do.

Q. And does Paramount benefit from the advertising? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are the amounts contributed by Paramount to the cooperative advertising determined? A. They are determined by negotiation between our sales representative and the exhibitor.

Q. Aside from the cooperative advertising, is it customary for first-run exhibitors to spend substantial sums on advertising? A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. Do they usually spend somewhat more on advertising than subsequent-run exhibitors? A. Oh, yes, they spend much more. For instance, we play a picture in—well, I will use as an illustration the Rivoli, and they spend $35,000 or $40,000 in advertising before the picture even opens, and then ten, twelve, fifteen, eighteen thousand dollars a week during its engagement. There isn't any subsequent-run exhibitor that spends that much money.

Q. Do you consider that the advertising of the first-run, whether cooperative or not, benefits the subsequent-runs? A. It does if it is a good picture, they get the benefit of the word-of-mouth advertising as a result of it.
(959)

Q. What is the effect on the business of the theatres showing Paramount pictures of the advertising done by those theatres? A. It improves our film rental.

Q. Does it tend to draw patrons from other theatres to the Paramount theatres to see those pictures? A. Yes, sir—we hope so. Spend a lot of money on it.

Q. Do you do advertising for the Paramount pictures and do the exhibitors do advertising on precisely the same basis, whether there is a first-run competitor affiliated with one of the defendants in this case or not? A. Will you repeat that question?

Q. In a community where there is a theatre operated on a first-run policy, in which one of the other defendants in this case has an interest, does the theatre in which the Paramount pictures are shown advertise extensively? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any diminution of the advertising expenditures where there is competition from a theatre in which one of the other defendants in this case has an interest? A. There is not.

Q. I would like you to tell us the functions of the (960)
various members of the distribution department, beginning with the salesmen, in connection with the licensing of Paramount pictures. A. Well, the salesman is responsible for the licensing of our pictures generally with the smaller accounts in the exchange territory in which he is employed, he calls on those accounts, endeavors to make contracts or, rather, applications for contracts. After he does, the contracts or the applications are submitted to the branch manager for his consideration. If they meet with his approval, they are then sent to the district manager for his consideration, and so on up the line until they get to the division sales manager, at which time he either approves or rejects them, depending upon whether they meet——

Q. And they may be disapproved at some stage along the line where the higher officer determines that the proposed terms are not satisfactory? A. They may be disapproved by the branch manager, the district manager or the division manager.

Q. Generally speaking, do these applications for licenses, or these proposed contractual terms, come to you for approval? A. Not generally, no, sir, unless——

Judge Bright: Is there a regular form of application for license signed by the exhibitor?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

(961)

Judge Bright: In that form does he state the preference he has, what he wishes, when he wishes to show the picture or what he wishes to pay for it?

The Witness: He states what he is willing to pay for it, yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Does he state whether he would like any particular run or any particular clearance or any particular show date?

The Witness: The play date is not stated, generally, in the contract.

Judge Bright: I am talking about the application.

The Witness: Well, I call it an application. Perhaps that is confusing to you. We call it an application for contract until it has been approved, but that is really the same as a contract.

Judge Bright: It is made on the form that is ultimately approved as the license form?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: There is no separate paper——

The Witness: No, sir, there is not.

Judge Bright: —called an application?

The Witness: No, sir, it is the same.

Judge Bright: And on that he lists the pictures that he would like to show?

The Witness: The pictures that we license, the titles are listed, and the terms that he agrees to pay are also listed.

(962)

Judge Bright: He can choose some of those pictures but he does not have to choose all of the five?

The Witness: We try, usually, to sell all the five. Sometimes we sell less than that.

Q. I show you, Mr. Reagan, this white form which has at the bottom "Exhibitor's Copy", Form 4B40A5, and ask you whether that is the form of contract or license agreement now in use by Paramount? A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. What you described as the application is a blue copy of that same form, having merely the red legend "Exhibitor's Copy of Application for Contract" printed across its face? A. That is correct.

Q. In all other respects it is the same, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: Just so the record will be clear, I am going to offer the white copy as Paramount's Exhibit 1 and furnish a copy to Mr. Wright and I will hand up to the Court copies which are identical except for a difference in color and the fact that in the lower lefthand corner they are for a different part of the business, but in other respects they are identical.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-1.)

Q. After the license contract has been approved by the (963)
member of the Paramount distributing organization who finally approves that contract, what is done with the exhibitor? A. He is notified of the approval.

Q. And he receives back, does he, a copy of the license agreement? A. Yes. That is how he is notified, with a copy of the agreement that he signed.

Q. Do the branch managers, district managers, division managers and general sales managers occasionally conduct negotiations in the licensing of a Paramount product? A. Not occasionally, but often.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. Not occasionally, but often.

Q. Can you tell us why some accounts are negotiated with by persons other than salesmen in the distributing organization? A. Well, a salesman may negotiate with an account and not be able to make a satisfactory deal and, in that event, the branch manager may try and make the kind of deal he believes we are entitled to, or a district manager may do that, or the division manager may do that. Then there are some accounts that it is the responsibility of the branch manager to license our pictures to. Other than that, it is the responsibility of the district manager or the division manager, as the case may be.

Q. Generally speaking, unless the reason for the negotiation is some breakdown by somebody down the line in negotiations, the particular member of the distributing organization who is to do the negotiating is determined by the importance of the account, isn't that so? A. That is true.

Q. Is the importance of the account in any way affected by the question of whether the account represents theatres in which another distributor has an interest? A. No, sir, it is not. Determined by the value of film rental that we receive from each account.

Q. Who negotiates for the licensing of Paramount product in theatres in which the defendnat Loew has an interest? A. Mr. Hugh Owen, one of our division sales managers, and myself.

Q. With whom are those negotiations conducted? A. Well, for the theatres that Loew operates outside of the City of New York, Mr. Owen negotiates with Mr. Joseph Vogel; and for the theatres that Loew operates in the City of New York, Mr. Owen and myself negotiate with Mr. Charles Moscowitz.

Q. In that connection do you have any negotiations with Mr. Rodgers, who was here as a witness? A. No, no. He is a distributor.

Q. Do you have anything at all to do with him in connection with negotiations? A. No, sir, do not.

Q. At the time of the negotiations with Loew for the (965) licensing of Paramount pictures to the theatres in which Loew has an interest, do you obtain any information as to the negotiations or arrangements which Loew has made or may be making with theatres in which Paramount has an interest for the exhibition of Metro pictures in those theatres? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. I will develop that further. Is there any relationship at all between your negotiations or that of your colleagues with Loew for the licensing of Paramount pictures in Loew theatres and the negotiations or arrangements which have been made or are being made for the licensing of Metro pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest in both? A. No.

Mr. Wright: We have the same objection we made heretofore to that sort of testimony as calling for his conclusion, a conclusion which the Court should draw.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Who negotiates for the licensing——

Judge Bright: Did he answer the question?

The Witness: No, sir, I started to answer.

Q. Let us be sure. What is your answer? A. No, we don't. I am not interested, Mr. Seymour, in what Loew does with their pictures in Paramount theatres. My interest is in distributing Paramount pictures to the best advantage possible so that we can get the maximum return for those (966) pictures. That is my only interest.

Q. I shall come back to that subject. Who negotiates for the licensing of Paramount pictures in theatres in which the defendant Fox has an interest, Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Mr. George Smith, another one of our division sales managers.

Q. Do you know where he conducts those negotiations and with whom? A. He conducts them with the heads of the various Fox companies in the cities in which they have their headquarters.

Q. Do you know whether or not when those negotiations are conducted the Paramount representative has any knowledge or information as to negotiations or arrangements for the exhibition of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. He has no information. He is not interested.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not see how this witness can testify to what Mr. Smith's information was or what Mr. Smith was interested in.

Judge Hand: No, I do not see how he can either.

Mr. Seymour: He is in Mr. Reagan's department.

Q. Do you sometimes participate in those negotiations? A. I do, occasionally.

Mr. Seymour: We can call all these witnesses, if we have to call them.

(967)

Judge Hand: Perhaps you can get a stipulation. I am afraid you will have to call them if you cannot, because I do not see how a statement of some supervisor as to what somebody knows or doesn't know is competent. It probably isn't competent and if it is competent, it has only the slightest weight.

Mr. Seymour: I won't press that question, in view of the objection.

Q. Mr. Reagan, when negotiations are conducted by Mr. Smith with representatives of Twentieth Century-Fox do you have any information as to negotiations or arrangements which are being made or which have been made for the exhibition of Twentieth Century-Fox films in theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. I don't have any information, and I am not interested.

Q. So far as you know, does Mr. Smith have any such information? A. No, sir.

Q. Do the results of those negotiations come to you for final approval usually? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of that approval do you have any knowledge or information as to the negotiations or arrangements for the showing of the Fox films in theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. I don't have. I don't care, Mr. Seymour. All I am interested in is my own pictures and getting the best results we can for them. That is my only interest.

Q. So far as you are concerned, is there any relationship between the arrangement with Fox for showing Paramount pictures and whatever arrangement there may be for the showing of Fox pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir, I am not concerned with that.

Q. Who negotiates for the showing of Paramount pictures in theatres in which Warner has an interest? A. Mr. William Erb, another one of our division sales managers.
(969)

Q. Do you know with whom he conducts the negotiations? A. Mr. Clayton Bond.

Q. And where are they conducted? A. Here in New York.

Q. And after negotiations are concluded do they come to you for final approval? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of those negotiations and your final approval thereof, do you have any knowledge or information as to the negotiations or arrangements which may be under way or which may have been made for the exhibition of Warner pictures in which Paramount has an interest? A. I do not.

Q. So far as you are concerned, is there any relationship whatever— A. I don't care; I am not interested.

Q. (Continuing)—between the arrangements made between Paramount and Warner and the arrangements, if any, which Warner may have made with various theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. I have no interest in that.

Q. Now, who negotiates for the showing of Paramount pictures in theatres in which RKO has an interest? A. Mr. Hugh Owen.

Q. And with whom are those negotiations conducted? A. Mr. Harold Marish.

Q. And after they are completed are they generally submitted to you for approval? A. Not generally in that instance because the business that we do with RKO is not sufficient volume to make it very important.
(970)

Q. In any event, so far as you have any connection with it, do you have any knowledge or information as to negotiations or arrangements which may have been made or are in the process of being made for the showing of RKO pictures in theatres in which Paramount has some interest? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. And so far as you are concerned, is there any relationship whatever? A. None at all. It is none of my business.

Q. Now, don't you make an effort to ascertain that the rentals paid to Paramount by the theatres in which other defendants in this case have an interest will bear some kind of relationship to the rentals which may be paid to those companies by theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Well, I would like to know, but I don't know how to do it, because if I found any of the companies paying better terms than I am getting for my pictures, I would like to sell them at better terms, too.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you do not have any information on the subject as to what terms or arrangements may have been made by the theatres in which Paramount has an interest with those companies? A. I do not have.
(971)

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. May I have the previous answer read?

(Previous answer read.)

Q. Do you mean by that, Mr. Reagan, if you could find out what United Detroit, for example, a company in which Paramount has an interest, was paying for the exhibition of Loew pictures, it puts you in a better position to try to get a higher film rental from United Detroit on Paramount pictures? A. If they were paying more money I would certainly try to get more myself, yes, for my pictures.

Q. Are you able to get the information as to arrangements or negotiations by the theatre operating companies in which Paramount has an interest with any of the other defendants in this case? A. No, sir, I am not.

Q. Have you tried to get such information from the Paramount theatres department? A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Does the Paramount theatre department furnish you any of that information? A. They do not.

Q. Now, it seems odd to one unfamiliar with the business as to why there should be no exchange of information between the distribution department and the theatre department. And I wish you would explain that to us. A. Well, Mr. Seymour, in the first place, I am responsible for the distribution of Paramount pictures at our company. The head of our theatre department is responsible for the operation of those theatres. I am not interested in what the results are as far as the theatre operation is concerned, and he is not interested in what my results are; but I am interested in obtaining the best results possible as far as the distribution of my pictures are concerned.

Q. Do you have an incentive compensation which is affected by the success of the operation of the distribution department? A. We do, yes.

Q. Do you personally have? A. I do have. The better results I can get on Paramount pictures the more my compensation amounts to.

Judge Hand: What you are saying now does not seem so very convincing, because you just said before that you would like to know these things and have tried to get them and could not. Now you say you have no interest.

The Witness: Well, what I mean is this, sir: My interest is to do the best I can so far as the distribution of Paramount pictures is concerned. That is the only interest I have. Now, if I could improve the distribution of Paramount pictures by learning the terms that companies in which Paramount are interested are paying for competitors' pictures, and those terms are higher than my own, I certainly would like to have that information in order to improve my own terms.

Judge Hand: Well, that is what I thought.

(973)

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors will bear with me just a moment—unfortunately I cannot prove all this through one witness—I shall establish that the film transactions, the film licenses to the theatres in which Paramount has an interest are entirely negotiated and arranged in the field by the local operators of those theatres, with which Mr. Reagan has no connection and to which he has no access. I know the difficulty of understanding such an elaborate method of doing business, but I am satisfied myself that even where the theatre department and the distribution department are in the same company and they deal in the same office building, which is not the case with Paramount, there is the great secrecy between the two departments; and I am told that has always been so in the business.

Q. Is that your experience, Mr. Reagan? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: Well, if we are going to have testimony, it had better be from the witness.

Mr. Seymour: I think that is right, Mr. Wright; I am not going to imitate you on that score.

Judge Hand: Yes. Strike that out.

Mr. Seymour: That was an explanation and not testimony, of course.

Q. Now, are there other accounts with Paramount customers where the negotiations are conducted by division managers in the first instance, in addition to the accounts which you have mentioned? A. Yes, sir, there are.

(974)

Q. And are those accounts the accounts of exhibitors which have no connection with any defendant in this case? A. Yes, sir; they are independent accounts where the film rental involved is important enough for the division manager to conduct the negotiation.

Q. Now, can you mention some of the accounts which are handled by division managers? A. Well, starting from the west and coming east, the Gibraltar Circuit, which operates theatres in New Mexico and Wyoming and Colorado, negotiations are conducted by Mr. Smith, one of our division managers.

Mr. Wright: What was the name of the circuit? I did not get it.

The Witness: Gibraltar.

In St. Louis, Fanchon & Marco, an independent account, who operates the first-run theatres with whom we do business in St. Louis—Mr. Smith always conducts those negotiations. Mr. Donoghue, who supervises the territory in the Middle and Southwest, he conducts negotiations with Robb & Rowley, an independent circuit; Griffith Bros., an independent circuit; and Mr. Owen conducts negotiations with all of the independent circuits in New York, and many others I don't happen to recall.

(975)

Q. Why are the negotiations with those circuits or exhibitors conducted by division managers? A. Because the amount of film rentals that we receive from those circuits is of sufficient importance to justify their handling it.

Q. Is that the sam reasons for the negotiations by division managers with Loew's, and RKO and Fox and Warners which you have referred to? A. It is.

Mr. Seymour: Now I am going to pass, Judge Goddard, to the subject you raised before.

Q. Are negotiations with an exhibitor usually conducted on the basis of a particular run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some negotiations are conducted on the basis of a first-run of a product, some second, some subsequent? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: You mean the particular run is established before the negotiation with the exhibitor?

The Witness: Sometimes it generally is established, although that has been the result of years of experience that we have had in negotiating with our customers.

Q. You do not mean that each time there is a negotiation the whole question of run is opened up again? A. No, it is not.

Q. The policy on which the theatre is operated has usually been established over a long period of time? A. Yes.
(976)

Judge Bright: How about a new theatre or new exhibitor?

The Witness: There is nothing established there, and we consider all the factors there and make a decision on whether we want to do business with him on the run that he would like to have.

Q. Now, how is the matter of terms upon which Paramount films will be licensed, determined? A. Determined by negotiation based upon experience we have had with the particular theatre with whom we are negotiating.

Q. Is there any minimum which you expect to get by way of film rental in any of these theatres? A. Well, we have a minimum that we authorize our salesmen to negotiate for, and they negotiate and try to make a deal for terms that are better than that minimum, but they can't make a deal when they can't get at least the minimum.

Q. That is a restriction on the salesmen's authority? A. Yes.

Q. Now, have you had the experience at one time or another with most of the exhibitors?

The Witness: Will you repeat that question?

(Question read.)

The Witness: I don't understand it.

Q. Has the Paramount distribution department had experience at one time or another with most of the exhibitors? (977)

A. Yes, sir, I think we have.

Q. What are the various kinds of terms on which Paramount licenses its pictures? A. Well, we license them on straight percentage terms, flat rental terms, guarantee and percentage terms.

Q. What is a flat rental term? A. A flat rental is a definite price or a certain number of dollars that an exhibitor pays for a license for a picture.

Q. Are some pictures licensed for first-run exhibition on a flat rental basis? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are some pictures licensed on subsequent-runs on a flat rental basis? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there are some pictures which are licensed in the earlier runs on a percentage basis which are licensed in later runs on a flat rental basis? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, what is the general nature of the percentage contract or license? A. Well, a percentage contract is a contract where we receive as film rental a percentage of the gross receipts that the exhibitor takes in at the box office.

Q. Now, are there various variations of the percentage arrangement? A. There are.

Q. Including guarantee and percentage? A. Guarantee and percentage is a contract where an exhibitor agrees to pay, let us say, a price of $1,000 plus a share in the receipts in excess of a certain figure.

Q. Now, when you have a percentage arrangement or any variation of a percentage arrangement, do you consider that Paramount is sharing in the profits of that theatre? A. No. The variations that we might have—for instance, we might make a deal for a picture at, let us say, 25 per cent of the gross receipts until such time as a splitting figure is reached and that splitting figure is arrived at by applying the 25 per cent of the receipts plus the overhead of the theatre, plus a certain amount of profit, and then in excess of that splitting figure we share in an increased amount of the receipts.

Q. Do you consider that makes Paramount a sharer of profits with that theatre?

Judge Hand: That is a most objectionable question.

Mr. Seymour: I won't press it.

Judge Hand: "Do you consider".

Mr. Seymour: My difficulty, if your Honor please, is that we have got such an amorphous case to meet.

Judge Hand: All right, but do not ask questions like that.

Mr. Seymour: Perhaps I ought not to add to its amorphous character.

Q. Are you familiar with leasing transactions in which the rental is determined by percentage of the gross receipts of the business?
(979)

The Witness: Will you repeat that, please?

(Question read.)

Q. Leasing of real estate. A. I know there are many forms of leases made, dependent upon the business that a company does——

Mr. Wright: I assume that is within the Court's judicial notice.

Judge Hand: What is that?

Mr. Wright: I assume it is within the Court's judicial notice that there are other forms of agreement where percentages of the receipts are shared.

Mr. Seymour: If the Court is satisfied and it is within the Court's notice, I am satisfied.

Judge Hand: I am satisfied to hear this answer to this question.

Judge Bright: Read the question.

(Question read.)

A. Yes, I am. I know there are many instances where the rental is dependent upon the basis of the gross receipts that the business does. That is a common practice.

Q. Do you know whether or not in the Paramount Building in New York there is such a lease —— A. I know we have a lease with the Walgren Drug Company, or the drug-store in our building, and the rent that they pay is dependent (980) upon the amount of business that they do, the gross receipts.

Q. Will you explain what is meant by a guarantee against percentage arrangement? A. That is where an exhibitor agrees to pay a certain amount of money against a percentage of the gross receipts. For instance, a guarantee may be $1,000 against 30 per cent of the receipts, and if the receipts amount to $10,000, he would pay $3,000, $2,000 more than the guarantee.

Q. Now, does Paramount license many of its pictures on one or another of these variations of the percentage basis? A. We do.

Q. And does Paramount prefer to license its pictures generally on a percentage basis? A. We do.

Q. And does it have percentage license agreements with exhibitors in no way connected with any defendant in this case? A. We do.

Q. Does it have a number of such license agreements? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it also have percentage agreements with theatres in which defendants in this case are interested? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the type of arrangement, whether it is percentage or flat rental, or a particular variation of percentage, have anything to do with the question of whether a theatre is an independent, owned by an independent exhibitor or one (981) in which the defendants in this case have an interest? A. It does not.

Q. What determines which form of rental term is the one that shall be included in the agreement? A. Well, that is determined by our desire to make a deal that we believe is the most fair, is the fairest with the theatre we are doing business with, and any of these types of agreements can be made in order to accomplish that purpose.

Q. Do you try to work it out with the particular theatre or with the particular exhibitor? Is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And there are all kinds of transactions with exhibitors who are independent and exhibitors who have some connection with a defendant in this case, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And the deals are indiscriminately negotiated on the best basis that you can make, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Now, how does the distribution department determine the precise percentage terms on which it desires to license a picture? A. How do we determine?

Q. Yes. A. The precise percentage terms are determined by negotiation.

Judge Bright: Don't you have any minimum requirements?

(982)

The Witness: We have, yes.

Q. Generally speaking you try to get at least a certain minimum, I suppose? A. We have made all kinds of deals, but we try to obtain a minimum, a minimum percentage of the gross; but we deviate from it sometimes.

Q. Why is it that Paramount licenses some of its pictures on a percentage basis and others on a flat rental basis? A. We would like to license them all on a percentage basis, but we can't successfully do that.

Judge Bright: Why?

The Witness: Exhibitors object to percentage because they generally have to pay more money for film rental than on a flat rental.

Q. Why do you consider a percentage arrangement desirable from the point of view of the distributor? A. Because that is the fairest method, in my opinion, in which to license pictures.

(983)

Q. Why do you say that? A. Well, you may sell a picture flat rental, and the flat rental price may be low or it may be high. In other words, you may have misjudged the grossing possibilities of the picture; the exhibitor may be hurt or we may be hurt, depending on what price you finally arrive at, flat rental price.

Q. Do you consider that the percentage arrangement gives the distributor a reward for the license measured by the quality of the picture? A. That is the best measure, yes

Q. Is there a relationship between the quality of the picture and the box office performance? A. There certainly is.

Q. Do you consider a percentage arrangement fair from the point of view of an exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why? A. Because if you were to sell an exhibitor a picture flat rental, you may oversell it or you may undersell it. If you sell it percentage, you get only what he agrees is a fair percentage of his receipts for the film rental for that picture.

Q. Now is there a term in the business known as preferred playing time? A. There is.

Q. What is that? A. Preferred playing time are those days in the week in which the exhibitor does the most business, Saturday, Sunday, holidays.

(984)

Q. Does that vary somewhat with particular localities, or is that generally so? A. It is generally Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

Q. Now in the negotiation of film license contracts, is the preferred playing time an important factor? A. It is very important.

Q. And when Paramount representatives are negotiating license contracts, what part does that preferred playing time have in their negotiations? A. Well, they endeavor to license pictures, if they are sold under a percentage, or guarantee and percentage, to include the preferred playing time, because their film rental is based upon the gross of the picture, and the gross will be better if it receives preferred playing time than it would if it receives what we call off playing time.

Q. Do the salesmen or representatives of the Paramount distributing organization find that representatives of other distributors are seeking to obtain similar preferred playing time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when the Paramount representative learns that representatives of other distributors are seeking to do it, does the Paramount representative then defer to them? A. We try to sell our pictures on preferred playing time because that is where we get the best results, and we try very hard to do it because that plays an important part in the film rental that we earn.

Q. What is extended playing time? A. Extended playing time is the time that is in excess of the initial engagement of a picture. For instance a picture may be sold to play seven days with a provision that if it grosses a certain amount of money in the first three or four days it is extended for another seven days.

Q. Is the distributor interested in trying to get extended playing time? A. Very greatly, because again that determines the film rental we will earn.

Q. And is whether he gets it or not usually affected by the quality of the picture? A. It is.

Q. And is the arrangement to try to make a provision for extended playing time one of the terms in the negotiation of many film rentals? A. It is an important consideration, yes.

Q. And in that respect are the Paramount distribution representatives meeting similar demands of representatives of other distributors? I mean, finding similar demands from other distributors with the same exhibtor? A. Preferred playing time is an important factor for everybody distributing pictures because it has a great influence on the film rental that they earn.

Q. Now, do you make license agreements with exhibitors who have no connection with any defendant in this case, involving terms for preferred playing time and also extended playing time? A. We do.
(986)

Q. And do you also make agreements on those subjects with theatres in which the defendants in this case have an interest? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Are they standard terms which you try to get where you can from any exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you find, Mr. Reagan, that there is or is not competition in the distribution of pictures?

Mr. Wright: That is objected to, if the Court please. I do not see that it advances any of the issues to have him give his opinion.

Judge Hand: We will take it.

Mr. Davis: May I hear that question, Mr. Reporter?

Q. (Question read.) A. There is very keen competition.

Q. Will you tell us something about that competition and why it exists? A. Well, in our business the number of customers to whom we can license our pictures is limited by the number of theatres that are in operation or in existence. Our business is not like any other business where the market is as wide as you can make it. Our market is restricted only to the theatres that are being operated. Those theatres have only a certain amount of playing time. They also have only a certain amount of preferred playing time, and we try very hard, as do our competitors, to sell those theatres, to sell our pictures for as much of the playing time as we can get, and for as much of the preferred playing time as we can get, because that is where our income from film rental must come from; and the competition for playing time, preferred time, and for the licensing of pictures in those theatres is very keen.

Q. Now, in those respects are you constantly meeting competition from other distributors? A. You bet we are.

Q. And is there any difference between the quality of competition so far as the Paramount distribution department is concerned, whether the competition is from the distribution department of one of the defendants or from another distributor? A. They all try just as hard as we do to get as much of the playing time and as good terms as possible.

Judge Hand: What have you to say about the returns for distribution where it is played in theatres of Paramount and other theatres?

The Witness: I don't believe I quite understand.

Judge Hand: Well, who fixes what the film belonging to or licensed by Paramount, will get when played in its own theatres?

The Witness: We negotiate for the license for those pictures with the heads of the various operating companies, just the same as we do with a competitor. As a matter of fact sometimes the discussions or the arguments that we have are more keen with them than they are with theatres in which we have no interest.

Mr. Seymour: I was going to develop that a little further a little later on, if your Honor please.

Judge Hand: All right.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Now I would like to have you tell us upon what basis Paramount distribution department decides upon what run it will license or negotiate for the licensing of its pictures; and I would like to have you tell us as fully as you can the various factors which enter into that decision? A. Well, there are a number of factors that enter into that consideration. First, the size and location of the theatre; the exhibitor operating the theatre; his ability as a showman to produce the maximum film rental income possible. For instance, there may be a theatre that, let us say, has a thousand seats, operated by an exhibitor that, in our opinion, is not as good a showman as another exhibitor who operates a theatre that has eight hundred seats. We may decide that we want to sell the theatre that has 800 seats because we believe we can earn more film rental in that theatre than we could in the theatre that has a thousand seats.

Q. How could that be so, Mr. Reagan? A. It can be so because the ability of the showman in operating the theatre of 800 seats is better than the ability, or he has greater ability than the exhibitor operating the theatre which has 1000 seats, as a result of which he gets in more gross at the box office. All of our experience in the business based over a period of years, the experience of our salesmen, our branch district managers, division managers and myself, we apply in trying to determine what run, or whether we will sell one theatre a first-run as against another theatre; and it is pretty hard to put into words all of those factors. I have given them to you as best I can.

Q. Now do those factors particularly apply to the choice of a customer who will be licensed on the basis of a first-run? A. They apply to all customers, whether it is first-run or any run.

Q. Are there any other factors that are particularly applicable to the selection of a first-run customer? A. Well, a good first-run customer, a showman, can help us a lot in establishing the Paramount pictures that he plays throughout the entire territory. If he is a good showman, properly advertises and publicizes our pictures, it helps us throughout the country; and we are desirous, of course, in getting the best showmen that we can, particularly for those first-run theatres, keeping in mind the size of the theatre, the location of the theatre, the appointments of the theatre, and all of the factors that enter into consideration.

Q. Now, of course, generally, or perhaps universally, Paramount's pictures are licensed to the theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the first-run showing of Paramount pictures where there is a Paramount theatre qualified for first-run exhibition, is in the theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, from your experience are the local operators of those theatres generally what you would call good showmen? A. I think that the Paramount operators across the country generally are the finest operators of motion pictures in the country. I believe as a group they are the finest, best qualified.

Q. Now it has been developed in the evidence here that in some cities, aside from the theatres in which Paramount has an interest, theatres in which other defendants have an interest, exhibit Paramount pictures first-run in different cities, and also—and I will develop that further—in other cities independent exhibitors have Paramount pictures first-run, and in some of those cities there are theatres affiliated (991) with a defendant who do not get Paramount pictures first-run. Now, in all those cities what is the basis of the selection of the customer who is to have the first-run? A. Well, the thing we are after is the most film rental possible, and that is the basis on which we determine who we are going to do business with.

Judge Goddard: A little louder, please.

The Witness: Do you want me to repeat that?

Judge Goddard: No, I heard that, but speak a little louder.

Q. Now, are you always able to license your pictures in every respect to the best theatre? A. No, we do not always have the ideal situation. There are some times when we can't license our pictures in what we consider the best theatre in the town, and in that event we do the next best thing. We take the theatre that is next best if we can license our pictures there, and sell them to that theatre.

Q. Now, in making the selection of the theatre to which Paramount pictures are to be licensed first-run, do you apply any different criterion to the theatres in which the defendants in this case have an interest, than you do to theatres in which no defendant has an interest? A. No, sir, we do not.

Q. We will develop that further later on. Now generally (992) speaking, are the rentals received from customers exhibiting first-run, higher than those received from subsequent run theatres? A. Much higher.

Q. And why is that? A. Well, because the first-run theatres gross substantially more money than the subsequent runs; they are bigger theatres; generally they are better theatres, as a result of which they gross more money, and we earn more film rental.

Q. Now, would you give us some rough idea of the variations between the rental received by Paramount for films in a large first-run theatre or exhibitor on a first-run, and the film rentals received on a late run of the same picture? A. well, we may earn $100,000 or $150,000 as film rental for a picture in a first-run; and that same picture in a subsequent run may earn as little as ten dollars. As a matter of fact, the same print for which we earned the $150,000 may be licensed to an account from which we receive a film rental of ten dollars.

Q. When you first came into the motion picture business do you recall whether pictures were being licensed on successive or different runs? A. Yes, sir, they were.

Q. And was there clearance of one run over another? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I wish you would explain why it is that pictures are licensed on successive runs; and then I will ask you to explain why clearance is included in the license agreements? A. Well, pictures are licensed on successive runs, because that is the way in which we can get the most film rental out of a picture. You could not play the same picture in all of the theatres in a locality at the same time, because I do not think it would be good showmanship, in the first place—I mean by that that if you were playing the same picture in all of the theatres in an area at the same time, it may happen that on a particular night there is a big event that is taking place; the President broadcasting or something of that sort, and people don't want to go to the theatre that night, and your gross receipts are affected, which in turn affects the film rental.

There is also another factor. If you license the picture to play in all theatres in the area at the same time, I think you would dilute the gross from the receipts of each of those theatres or at least in some of them to the point where it would not be profitable for them to play that picture. You would spread that gross over too many theatres at the same time.

There is another factor: you do not have enough prints and it is not economically sound to buy enough prints to exhibit pictures in all theatres at the same time.

Q. What would happen if you tried to do that, tried to make enough prints for simultaneous exhibitions? A. Well, every exhibitor would want to play the picture at the same time; you would have to have twelve thousand or fourteen thousand prints, which you cannot do.

Then there is another factor: By selling pictures on different runs, the first-run may charge an admission price of let us say 75 cents; and there are a certain type or class of people who are willing to pay 75 cents for the privilege of seeing that picture first. There are other people who may not want to pay 75 cents but would pay let us say 50 cents, because while they do not want to see it first, they do not want to wait until it gets to the tail end of the run and pay 20 or 25 cents. So the question of admission price is a factor because the people can see the picture at varying admission prices when varying runs are sold.

Q. And do you consider that the system of successive runs gives the widest possible opportunity for public patronage of the picture? A. It does, yes, sir, I am sure of it.

Q. Does it, therefore, give the widest possibility of film revenue to the distributor? A. Yes, sir, that is so.

Q. Are films distributed by all the distributors on the basis of successive runs? A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. That includes all the distributors who are parties to this suit and all other distributors, does it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is clearance? A. Clearance is the period of time agreed upon between the exhibitor and the distributor that intervenes between the completion of the showing of a picture in one theatre and the beginning of the showing of the same picture in another theatre.

Q. Between whom is clearance agreed upon? A. Between the exhibitor and the distributor.

Q. And is it confined, the system of, or the custom of having a clearance provision in a license contract, confined to clearance of first-run over second-run or does it prevail through many or most of the runs? A. Through most of the runs.

Q. How is clearance determined? A. It is determined by negotiation between the exhibitor and the distributor and it is the result of the experience that we have had in the business over a period of many years.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact——

Judge Bright: How can that be determined between the exhibitor and the distributor? If that is so, how can it be based upon your experience over many years?

The Witness: It is the result of the experience that we have had over a period of many years, and what we have determined between the exhibitor and the distributor.

Judge Bright: Then you, after an experience over many years, the distributor, fixes the clearance?

Mr. Seymour: Perhaps I can clear that up.

Judge Bright: Let him clear it up.

The Witness: We agree upon it with the exhibitor. We don't fix it, no, sir. We agree with him on the period of clearance and that is the result of what we believe will return to us the best film rental or the greatest amount of film rental from all the theatres in a given area.

Judge Bright: No, but if an exhibitor says he would like seven days clearance, not more than seven days clearance over a prior run, and your experience is that he must take not less than fourteen or twenty-one days, there isn't much he can do, is there?

The Witness: Well, I should say most—I shouldn't say most—all exhibitors will take as much clearance as they can get one over the other because they are interested in the business they do in their theatre, and we grant the clearance that we believe is fair to these exhibitors with whom we are doing business in order to get the maximum film rental out of a picture in each of those theatres.

Judge Goddard: The prior theatre wants a long clearance?

The Witness: The prior theatre wants as long a clearance as he can get.

Judge Goddard: The subsequent ones want short ones?

The Witness: The subsequent one wants as long a clearance as he can get over the succeeding theatre.

Q. And your interest in clearance is to protect your revenue in all those runs? A. I want to get the most revenue I can for a picture from all those runs.

Judge Goddard: I want to ask this question: There is no uniform standard, as far as you know, that can be applied——

The Witness: No, sir.

Judge Goddard: —to clearances?

The Witness: There is not.

Judge Goddard: It depends on the elements of each particular situation?

The Witness: Yes, sir, each situation you must consider as and of itself and based upon the experience that we have had in business, we arrive——

(998)

Judge Goddard: All the different factors?

The Witness: All the different factors.

(Continuing) —we arrive at the clearance.

Judge Bright: You mean it differs in different localities?

The Witness: It differs in different localities and differs in different theatres in the same locality.

Q. You don't mean to say, Mr. Reagan, of course, that every time there is a negotiation for a film license of a block of pictures the subject of clearance that that theatre is to take over other theatres is negotiated anew? A. No, I don't mean that because the clearance you have agreed upon is understood; unless either the exhibitor or the distributor wants to change that clearance, you assume and he assumes that the clearance will be the same as it was at the time the last sale was made.

Q. In other words, once having been negotiated it continues until one or the other of the parties—— A. Until one or the other wants to change it.

Q. And there is a difference in interest in the period of clearance between the exhibitor and the distributor, is there? A. There is always—not always, but generally, many instances, difference, yes.

Q. The distributor would like to protect his revenue all (999) the way along and the exhibitor would like to protect the one film in which he is interested? A. Yes. We want to get the most we can in film rental out of all the theatres in a given area and, in order to do that, we sit up and try and agree with each of the exhibitors with whom we do business upon clearance that we believe is fair and that will return to us the greatest amount of film rental, whereas from the exhibitor's standpoint, he is interested in only getting as much clearance as he can over his succeeding run because he has no interest in the succeeding run. We do have.

Q. It has been stated, and perhaps there is evidence in the case on this, that frequently, and perhaps in most cases, the clearance granted by one distributor to a theatre is identical or nearly identical to the clearance granted by another distributor to the same theatre. First, is that a result of any agreement or understanding between the distributors?

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

A. No, it is not the result of any understanding or any agreement but in practice here is the way it works out: If we agree with an exhibitor and believe that, let us say, seven days clearance is the proper clearance for that theatre to have over the succeeding run, and we have done that based (1000)

upon the experience that we have had in the business of the theatre, considering all the factors that we are familiar with, if it is best for Paramount pictures playing in that theatre, it would pretty generally follow that it would be best for the other distributors' pictures too because that is the thing that has been proven to be right over the period of time.

Q. How would they find out about it? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. You do not furnish copies of your license contracts to the other distributors. How would they find out what clearance Paramount granted? A. Let us say we were doing business with an exhibitor and we agreed upon a seven-day clearance over the succeeding run. Then one of the competitors came in to sell pictures and he wanted 14 days clearance. Of course, the exhibitor would say, "Well, I buy Paramount pictures with a clearance of seven days, and if you don't sell me your pictures with the same clearance, I am not going to buy them."

Q. Would you say that the uniformity in the clearance is, then, the result of ordinary competitive negotiation? A. Yes, it is.

Q. And once having been established in license agreement, it continues sometimes for a long period of time? A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. And have clearances been modified from time to (1001) time? A. They have.

Q. As a result of agreement between exhibitor and distributor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And have clearances been modified in a number of arbitration cases under the consent decree? A. Yes, sir, they have.

Q. Where the clearances have been modified under the consent decree have the resulting clearances been uniform? A. Yes, sir, that is the case.

Judge Goddard: What do you mean by that, resulting clearances uniform?

Mr. Seymour: Well, the natural consequence of an award, reducing clearance, is to reduce the clearance as far as all distributors are concerned. In other words, if——

Judge Goddard: As to that particular theatre?

Mr. Seymour: As to that particular theatre—uniform as to that theatre.

Judge Goddard: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: That is all I want to make plain, and that is inevitable in the operation of competition and of a system for reviewing the results of competition, I think.

Q. Mr. Wright asked Mr. Rodgers yesterday a question——

Judge Hand: Is that true even though the returns and the success of the picture are entirely different?

Mr. Seymour: Well, you see, the clearance arrangements are made between them before the success of the picture is determined and that is the arrangement upon which the film is licensed. I think I will develop also in a moment the exhibitor's interest in the uniformity, but I would like to ask this question.

Q. Mr. Wright suggested to Mr. Rodgers yesterday that the distributor could get the same film revenue and would be just as well off if, instead of providing clearance in license contracts, he just licensed runs in accordance with his own whim but on the same basis as they are now licensed with the period of clearance in between but without saying so. Have you any comment to make on that? A. I don't think you could. I don't think you could license the pictures that way because when an exhibitor agrees to pay you certain terms or certain film rentals, one of the considerations for making that agreement is that he knows that there will be a certain period of time between the time he completes his engagement of that picture and the time it starts in another theatre, and that is an important factor. There is lots of money involved in those license agreement, and I think—and I am sure he would not just let you say, "Well, I am going to sell you this (1003) picture first-run and then you go ahead and do what you want to after you get through with that." He wants to know how long—in addition to licensing the picture first-run, he wants to know how long a period of time is going to elapse between the time he finishes and when it is made available to the run that plays it after him.

Q. In your opinion would the exhibitor pay as much film revenue if the question of how soon after him a competitor theatre would play were left to the whim of the distributor? A. No, sir, he would not, because that is an important part of the consideration.

Q. Why is that so? A. Because his ability to pay is based upon the amount of business that he does and if he is charging, let us say, 75 cents admission for a picture and the subsequent-run theatre, the theatre that follows, charges 50 cents, the period of time that intervenes between the time that he finishes and the time that the other man starts determines how many people are going to wait to see the picture at 50 cents and how many are going to see it at 75. His gross is affected. In turn our film rental would be affected if that clearance were left just to the whim of ourselves.

Q. In the cases where there is a difference in clearance granted by particular distributors, have you any experience as to whether the subsequent-run exhibitors would prefer to (1004)

have a clearance over other theatres identical? A. Will you repeat that, please?

Mr. Seymour: Strike out that question and let me put it this way:

Q. From your experience in the business, is there an advantage to a subsequent-run exhibitor in having the clearance of all pictures which he exhibits identical in the immediately preceding run?

Mr. Wright: I do not think he is in a position to speak for the subsequent-run exhibitor, as to what advantages he may have. You have never been one, I take it?

The Witness: No, I have not.

Mr. Seymour: I think from his experience in the business he can give us an answer. The weight is for the Court.

Judge Hand: I will sustain the objection.

Q. Where there is a difference in clearance of the prior run, that is, one distributor grants seven days, one distributor grants 14 days, one distributor grants 8 days, so on, would that have any effect on the steady flow of pictures to a subsequent-run? A. Yes, it would. If the pictures became available at different times to a subsequent-run exhibitor, it may be difficult for him to book his theatres. He may not have an even flow of pictures.
(1005)

Q. Does the distribution department of Paramount advise the distribution department of any other defendant in this case as to the terms or provisions of the license contracts which it makes with any exhibitor? A. No, sir, we do not.

Judge Bright: Does the question of clearance in any way depend upon the quality of the picture to be exhibited?

The Witness: No, I would not say it would, sir. Depends on the other factors that I have mentioned Clearance, once it is agreed upon, we go along on that clearance unless somebody is dissatisfied or we are dissatisfied. In that event, we then sit down and discuss it, but the same clearance generally applies to all pictures, whether it is one of our best pictures or whether it is one of our lesser pictures.

Judge Bright: Are your license contracts uniform in every instance?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Makes no difference whether it is between the independent and the defendant producer——

The Witness: No, sir, none whatever. Same license.

Judge Bright: The same license in every instance for all pictures?

(1006)

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Bright: And for all theatres?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the basic agreement is the same; there is a variation in terms, of course? A. The terms, yes.

Judge Bright: I mean, the printed portion of your license agreement.

The Witness: That is the same with all.

Mr. Seymour: I am coming to another subject, if your Honors are ready to recess.

Judge Hand: Yes, we will adjourn until 2:15.

(Recess to 2:15 p.m.)

(1007)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

CHARLES M. REAGAN resumed the stand.

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Reagan, when we were discussing clearance, you gave an example of the negotiation with an exhibitor which as I remember it, you put somewhat this way: if Paramount should agree to a seven-day clearance and another distributor should come in and offer a fourteen-day clearance, the exhibitor would say, "Why should I take a fourteen-day clearance when I can get a seven-day clearance from Paramount?" Now I should like to have you tell us whether you intended to put the example that way, and correct it if there was an inadvertance in it? A. I meant the reverse. I meant if he could buy other companies' pictures with a fourteen-day clearance he would not buy mine if I were only willing to grant a seven-day clearance.

Q. And that is, of course, because the exhibitor wishes to get as long a clearance as he can? A. As he can, yes.

Q. Now let us assume that as to the prior run exhibitor, in the case of distributor A, there is a fourteen-day clearance, and in the case of distributor B, there is a twenty-one-day clearance in the license agreements, so in that case there happened to be a difference, in the case I have put; and when distributor B comes to negotiate with a subsequent run exhibitor, will the existence of that different clearance on the prior run have any effect in his ability to negotiate with the subsequent run? A. Well, in that case, if somebody is granting 21-day clearance, some of the other distributors are granting 21-day clearance, and I only want to grant 14, then he won't want to buy my pictures.

Q. No, I am talking now about the subsequent run exhibitor. A. I don't believe I followed you there.

Q. Let me make my example clearer. Suppose as to a first-run or any prior run there is a difference in the clearance granted by two distributors. Distributor A grants 14-day clearance and distributor B grants 21-day clearance. Then the two distributors negotiate separately with the exhibitor having the next run. Would the fact of difference on the clearance in the prior run affect the ability of the distributor to negotiate for a license contract with the subsequent run? A. No, I do not think so.

Q. Would not the subsequent run exhibitor be inclined to refuse to buy the product of the distributor who sold him subject to a longer clearance than the other distributors? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. In that sense it might have some effect on creating similarity in the clearances granted on the earlier runs, is that so? A. Yes.

(1009)

Q. And that would be as a result of competitive negotiations? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now does Paramount include in its license contracts a reference to the minimum admission price to be charged by the particular exhibitors licensed? A. Yes, sir, we do.

Q. Now, do you know approximately how long in the business provision for minimum admission prices have been included in some license contracts? A. Well, it has been ever since I have been in the business.

Q. That is at least since 1920? A. Since 1920, yes.

Q. Have you from time to time during your connection with Paramount had occasion to negotiate with exhibitors the terms of license contracts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the course of those negotiations has the question of minimum admission price come up? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, who is it, as a matter of practice, who actually determines the minimum admission price which is to be included in such license contract?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I should think he should be confined to what actually happened relative to this, rather than his conclusions as to how these things are determined.

(1010)

Mr. Seymour: He has stated he participated in such negotiation.

Judge Hand: I will allow it.

The Witness: Will you repeat that question, please.

Q. (Question read.) A. The exhibitor.

Q. Is it a special admission price in connection with the particular license which he determines, or is it his regular admission price? A. It is the admission price that he regularly charges.

Q. And that is ascertained and included, is it? A. Yes, sir.

By Judge Bright:

Q. Well, does that fix his right to a particular run or to clearance? A. It would have an influence upon the run and clearance, yes, sir.

Q. What do you mean by influence? A. Well, I would not sell an exhibitor who was charging an admission price of let us say 25 cents a first-run if I thought that the first-run admission price should be higher, 40 or 50 cents; or I would not permit or I would not sell an exhibitor who was charging 25 cents with clearance over another exhibitor if the other exhibitor charged the higher admission price, in most instances.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Why are you interested?

(1011)

Mr. Seymour: I do not mean to interrupt you, Judge Bright.

Judge Bright: No, no interruption.

Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price or the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures.

Q. That is the thing which you get a percentage of? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When translated into gross receipts at the box office? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is it a part of a license contract with Exhibitor A on a prior run what Exhibit B on a subsequent run shall charge as admission price?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is an extremely general term. I submit that those contracts themselves show exactly what the situation is there.

Judge Hand: I think they really do. That is a conclusion that you are asking for that you can argue in support of from the contract. It depends on your view of the law how you would answer that.

Mr. Seymour: No, not this question I think, if your Honor pleases. I do not want to labor it, but the Government has made some selection among license contracts. Now as we know here, there are thousands of license contracts every year by each company, and what I am asking generally is this, whether there is a reference in the contracts to the admission price to be charged by a subsequent run. I do not believe there is any contract in evidence which contains it, and I am merely asking that generally.

(1011-A)

Judge Hand: That question you may ask, whether there is a reference in the contract.

A. No, sir, there is not.

Judge Bright: It is only with reference to the particular exhibitor?

The Witness: Yes, sir, that is correct.

(1012)

Q. Is the admission price to be charged by a subsequent exhibitor an element in the negotiations with the prior run exhibitor? A. No, sir.

Q. From time to time are there special attractions which are licensed with a provision for a higher admission price than regularly charged by the exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the case of Paramount how often has that happened, say, in the last five years? A. Let's see. We have had three pictures, "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Northwest Mounted Police," and "Reap the Wild Wind," which we licensed at prices, admission prices, that were higher than the theatre normally charged, and that has been in the last several years. I don't know just exactly when.

Q. Were there any special qualities about those pictures which induced you to ask that the theatre exhibit them at a higher admission price? A. We thought so.

Q. What were they? A. They were highly successful box office attractions and they were very costly pictures. We felt that we were justified in asking for increased admission prices on those subjects.

Q. Were they different in length from the ordinary feature picture? A. Yes, they were longer than the ordinary feature length picture.

Q. Can you tell us how much longer? A. Well, an ordinary feature length picture runs from about 60 to 90 minutes. In the case of "For Whom the Bell Tolls," it was 2 hours and 37 minutes, I believe.

(1013)

Judge Bright: Full performance?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Did those extra admission prices apply in the case of third, fourth or fifth runs?

The Witness: Yes, sir; it applied in the cases of all runs.

Q. That is, you tried to get a higher film revenue and to get it asked them to charge higher admission prices? A. Yes.

Q. In those cases why was Paramount interested in having the exhibitors charge a higher admission price? A. Because it would improve our film rental returns.

Q. How is the admission price to be charged on such special attractions negotiated? A. By agreement between the exhibitor and the distributor.

Judge Bright: Did I understand you to mean that the same scale of admission prices was made mandatory on all of the runs?

The Witness: We sold those pictures for increased admission price whenever we sold them, yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Were they the same increase on all runs?

(1014)

The Witness: Well, in the case of "For Whom the Bell Tolls," we released that picture at increased admission prices and whoever played it, played it at a minimum admission price of 75 cents matinee, and 75 cents and $1.10 at night.

Judge Bright: On any run?

The Witness: Any run, yes, sir, until we released it at regular prices a year later.

Q. That is, this was a special opportunity to show it in advance—— A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continued) —at increased admission prices, but if the exhibitor preferred to wait and take it at regular run, then he exhibited it at his regular admission price? A. That is correct.

Mr. Seymour: One of my colleagues, Judge Bright, is anxious that you should have heard that last question and answer, and if you did not, I would like to make it clear. I wonder if the stenographer will read it.

(Question read.)

Judge Bright: How is it that in my case I paid only the regular admission price when I saw it?

Mr. Seymour: That is the distinction.

The Witness: "For Whom the Bell Tolls"?

Judge Bright: "For Whom the Bell Tolls." I thought they were giving me a special price.

(1015)

Mr. Proskauer: Would your Honor let me suggest that we cannot quite hear Judge Bright over here and we want to get in on these questions.

Judge Bright: I will try to keep my voice up.

Judge Hand: This is a confession.

Mr. Proskauer: I want to hear Judge Bright.

Judge Hand: Apparently extorted because of the examination.

Q. Do exhibitors generally, in your experience, ordinarily charge the same admission price over a long period of time? A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. And do you know why that is? A. Well, that is because they have found that the admission price that they were charging——

Mr. Wright: If the Court pleases, for him to tell us what these exhibitors have found is not competent.

Mr. Seymour: A man who has been in the business for 25 years.

Judge Hand: What is the question?

(Question read.)

Judge Hand: We will allow that.

A. They do it because they have found that the admission price that they are charging is the most profitable at which they can make the most profit for their theatre.

Q. Would there be difficulties created in that business (1016) if they changed their admission prices from picture to picture, or repeatedly? A. I think the public would object because they would not know what price they had to pay when they came to the theatre. I think a theatre can be most successfully operated by charging the same admission price generally.

Q. Is there any difference in that regard whether an exhibitor is a so-called independent operator or whether the exhibitor is a theatre in which one of the defendants in this case has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. It is said that it frequently happens that the minimum admission price in contracts with a particular exhibitor, from several distributors, refer to the same admission price. Does that result from any agreement or understanding between the distributors? A. No.

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

Judge Hand: Same ruling.

Q. What is the cause of that similarity? A. I believe the reason is the same that I just gave, he has found that the admission price he is charging is the one that he can most profitably operate his theatre at.

Q. Occasionally it appears that the admission price in a particular license contract is left blank. Can you tell us why that is? A. Well, it is probably——

(1017)

Mr. Wright: That is far too general. In some cases it may be left blank with a purpose, I suppose, in others it may be through inadvertence, but I do not think he is competent to give testimony in this general form as to what happens in unspecified instances.

Mr. Seymour: Let me pin it down a little more closely then.

Q. It appears that in some of the Paramount license contracts occasionally the blank for admission prices is not filled in. Why does that occur? A. Well, it is either through inadvertence or anxiety on the part of the man making the deal to get the contract signed and get them out of the way and behind him, and he knows there would be no change in the admission price, otherwise he would be told so.

Mr. Wright: I move to strike out as to what he knows. This witness cannot know that.

Judge Hand: Yes, I will grant that.

Mr. Seymour: May I understand how far your Honor's ruling goes? Does it go to the whole answer?

Judge Hand: What he knows.

Q. As a matter of fact, is there a discussion or a negotiation with respect to the minimum admission price on each occasion when a new license contract is negotiated by Paramount? A. No.

Q. Why not? A. Well, because they know the same admission prices will apply.

(1018)

Q. Do the license contracts generally contain any reference to a maximum admission price? A. No, sir.

Q. Do the exhibitors from time to time have a higher admission price than the one included in the contract? A. Yes, sir, oftentimes charge a higher admission price than the minimum specified in the contract.

Q. Is that so of first-runs and also on subsequent-runs? A. That is true of all types of runs.

Q. If the exhibitor is charging more than the minimum in the contract, is that his decision or the distributor's decision? A. It is his decision.

Q. From your experience in the business is it generally true that the first-run theatres in a particular area have about the same admission price? A. Yes.

Q. And is it generally true that the various subsequent-runs have about the same admission prices in the same area? A. Yes, in the same area, that is true.

Q. Does that result from any agreement or understanding between the distributors? A. No.

Q. Can you tell us how that general situation comes about? A. Well, one exhibitor will decide to charge a certain admission price and if the theatre is being successfully operated, the others pretty quickly copy it.

Q. Do you consider that the distributor has any business interest in the admission price to be charged by an exhibitor to whom he licenses his pictures? A. Yes, sir.
(1019)

Q. What is the interest? A. Well, our film rental income is directly affected by the admission price that he charges.

Q. Does that apply only to percentage pictures or licenses made on a percentage basis? A. It would apply to all pictures.

Q. Why does it apply to a flat rental picture? A. Because the flat rental price is based on what we believe the theatre will gross, or a percentage of what we believe it will gross, and if we are wrong in our belief, the admission—pardon me, will you read the question again, please?

(Question read.)

A. (Continuing.) —because the flat rental price is based upon what the exhibitor believes he will take in at the box office.

Q. What effect would it have from the distributor's viewpoint if the prior-run theatres in a given area were to—the prior-runs with which he deals—were to lower their admission prices? A. Well, it would not only affect the film rental income in those theatres, but it would also affect, finally affect, the film rental income in the subsequent theatres, because if the prior-run theatres reduce their admission prices, then the subsequent theatres could not continue to charge the admission prices that they have been charging.
(1020)

Q. How would that affect the revenue of the distributor? A. Well, because the revenue is dependent upon the gross receipts that the theatre takes in.

Judge Bright: Are your flat rentals based on admission prices?

The Witness: No—you mean the rental that we charge for flat rentals?

Judge Bright: Fixed rentals.

The Witness: They are not based upon the admission prices—yes, they are specified in the contract, too, the admission prices that they charge on all pictures, flat rental or percentage, minimum prices.

Q. Do you charge a different rental on the same picture in the same locality to a theatre that has a 15 cents admission and one that has a 25 cents admission? A. No, sir.

Q. Then—— A. Because, if we are right, or if we know the gross of the theatre, what we believe the gross to be, that would be the determining factor of what the film rental we would charge would be.

Judge Bright: In other words, you charge as much as the tariff will permit?

The Witness: That is correct.

(1021)

Judge Bright: Regardless of admission price?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. And you attempt in your flat film rentals to get as much as you can based upon your estimate of what the—— A. Picture will gross.

Q. (Continuing) —the picture will gross in that theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the gross in part dependent upon the admission prices of the theatre? A. Yes, it is.

Q. Let us assume that instead of the prior-runs reducing their admission prices, with the consequences you mentioned on the distributors' revenue, the subsequent-run exhibitors substantially reduced their admission prices, would that have any effect on the distributors' revenue? A. It would have.

Q. And why? A. Well, the differential in admission prices between the various runs is an influencing factor upon the film rental income that we earn, and if subsequent-runs reduced their admission prices too greatly, it would then affect the gross of the prior-runs and our film rental in those prior-runs would be reduced.

(1022)

Q. Now, does the restriction or the provision for minimum admission price in license contracts extend beyond the showing of the particular pictures licensed? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: It seems to me, if the Court pleases, this is entirely argument that is being put in the mouth of the witness here as to how far the contract extends.

Mr. Seymour: I am asking about the generality of agreements in these provisions rather than putting in thousands of them.

Judge Hand: All right.

Q. Is there any restriction in the agreements on the ability of the exhibitor to revise his prices downward, if he wishes to, his admission prices downward if he wishes to after the expiration of the license? A. No. After that particular contract has been completed he can.

Q. After a picture is played do exhibitors from time to time ask the Paramount distribution department for adjustments? A. They do.

Q. Is that a relatively common occurrence? A. Quite common.

Q. Can you tell us why such requests are made and what disposition is made of them? A. Well, an exhibitor will play a picture or pictures, and after he has played them tell us that the result is not profitable to him and ask for an adjustment in terms; and if we feel that that is the case we make an adjustment.
(1023)

Q. Why do you make such adjustments? A. Because we think that it is the right thing to do; that an exhibitor is entitled to it; we want to keep him for our customer.

Q. Do those requests for adjustment come from independent exhibitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do they also come from time to time from theatres in which a defendant has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you treat such requests on any different basis depending on the theatre interest involved? A. We do not.

Q. And, as a matter of fact, you have regular forms for applying for modification of agreements, have you not? A. We do.

Q. Does it occur occasionally that after a license contract is made the exhibitor asks to have some pictures cancelled out or removed from the agreement? A. It does.

Q. Why does that happen? A. Well, it can happen because after he has bought the picture he does not believe that it will do business for him, and he asks that we cancel it; or, in the instance where after he has bought it he feels it is not the type of picture that is suitable for showing in his theatre, without regard to the profit element, he will ask that it be cancelled.

Q. And how do you dispose of such requests? A. Sometimes we cancel and sometimes we do not, depending on the circumstances.
(1024)

Judge Hand: I do not see what this is all about. Is it just to show that Paramount is a lovely fellow to its customers?

Mr. Seymour: I am trying to show, if your Honor pleases, contrary to the contention of the Government, the ambit of which I have difficulty in appraising, that Paramount treats all its customers alike; that there is no element in this case which could give rise to an inference of combination or conspiracy; and your Honors realize, I think, the undisclosed, or, at least, undefined character of this charge; and I therefore have to hit it from as many angles as I can. I realize it is burdensome, but I shall proceed as rapidly as I can.

Q. Is there any difference in the consideration given to such cancellations depending on the source of the request? A. No, sir, there is not.

Q. Do requests for cancellations occur as frequently now as they did before the consent decree? A. No, sir, I do not believe they do.

Q. Why is there a difference? A. Well, because they have an opportunity to see the pictures now before they buy them. They did not before the consent decree.

Q. Does it sometimes happen that in some situations you split the product between two exhibitors? A. We do.

(1025)

Q. And in some situations that is between two independent exhibitors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in some between two theatres in which defendants have an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in some with a theatre which is an independent, and the other being a theatre in which one of the defendants has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why is product split? A. Product is split because we want to get the maximum returns for each of our pictures; and if we can get more money by dividing the pictures between two theatres or two or more theatres than we can by playing all of it in one theatre, we do that.

Q. Is that the only reason? Does the fact of whether a defendant has an interest in a theatre or not affect whether you split your product? A. No, sir.

Q. Does Paramount have in effect any franchises at the present time? A. I do not believe we have any in existence now.

Q. What is a franchise? A. A franchise is an agreement for the licensing of our pictures for a period of time.

Judge Bright: For what period of time?

The Witness: For more than a year.

Q. It has been suggested that there are four Paramount franchises still in effect. Does that refresh your recollection? A. I had forgotten those. There are a few. I had forgotten that there were any.

Q. Was there a time when Paramount made a large number of franchises? A. Yes, sir, there was.

Q. And why were franchises made? A. Well, we made franchises a number of years ago because it assured us of an outlet for our product in those situations where we made them, and the more selling that we could complete and get behind us the better off we were.

Q. It provided an assured outlet for a time, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, were franchises made with exhibitors who had no connection with any defendant? A. They were.

Q. Were they also made in some cases with theatres in which Paramount had an interest? A. They were.

Q. Were they also made in some cases in theatres in which one of the defendants in this case had an interest? A. They were.

Q. Did the fact of whether a defendant in the case had an interest or not determine the policy as to whether a franchise would be issued? A. It did not.

Q. Do you know whether, in fact, there were more franchises made with exhibitors in which no defendant had an interest than with those in which a defendant had an interest? A. There were many more franchises made with independent exhibitors than there were with exhibitors who are connected or who are defendants in this case.

Q. Has a recent search of the files indicated that there were approximately 157 franchises made—— A. There were 157 franchises made with independent exhibitors——

Mr. Wright: Haven't you got a list that you can put in? We can't cross-examine him.

Mr. Seymour: I am just going to ask him the number, and I will give you the list to cross-examine from, Mr. Wright, if you like.

A. (Continuing) There were 33, I believe, with companies with which Paramount is affiliated, and I think there were 13 with companies that are affiliated or were affiliated with the defendants in this case.

Q. And with respect to the franchises to independent exhibitors, were some of those made to so-called independent circuits, including a number of theatres? A. There were.

Q. And some made to exhibitors with one theatre? A. There were.

Q. Now, did Paramount discontinue the making of new franchises some time before the entry of the consent decree? A. We did.

Q. Will you tell us why that occurred?

Mr. Wright: How about when, first?

Q. Well, can you tell us when? A. Well, it has been, I should say, eight or ten years ago. I do not believe we made (1028) any franchises over that period of time.

Q. Well, anyhow, sometime before the consent decree? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did Paramount decide generally not to grant further franchises? A. Well, we found this to happen: When we made a franchise that covered a period of time, if the terms were favorable to the exhibitor, of course, he continued to play pictures; and if the terms were unfavorable to him, he had the pictures under franchise but he would refuse to play them, and all we could do was to adjust the terms of the franchise to meet with his satisfaction, or to his satisfaction. And with the increased cost of production and the additional expense in making of pictures, we found that it was unprofitable to continue franchises, and we therefore discontinued making them.

Q. Now, does Paramount license some of its pictures under so-called master contracts? A. We do.

Q. What is a master contract? A. A master contract is a contract that lists the terms on which pictures are sold for a number of theatres.

Q. And are master contracts made with groups of theatres unconnected with any defendant in this case? A. They are.

Q. And are they also made with theatres in which defendants have an interest? A. They are.
(1029)

Q. Is the question of who owns the theatre the determining factor in whether a master contract would be used? A. No. A master contract is used only as a matter of convenience by putting the terms for a number of theatres on one contract rather than making separate contracts for each of those theatres.

Q. Now, the things which are attached to the master contracts are so-called deal sheets, are they? A. Yes, they can be deal sheets, the regular contract form applies, and you attach to them the terms that you list on a deal sheet, or on a separate sheet of paper, whichever is most convenient.

Q. And they are really riders to the contract? A. That is all.

Q. And there are contracts with all kinds of riders, is that right? A. All kinds of riders and with all types of exhibitors.

Q. Do you consider that there are any favors granted in the licensing of Paramount pictures to the theatres in which any defendant in this case has an interest——

Mr. Wright: I submit, if the Court please, it does not make the slightest difference what he considers are favors. What were granted and what were not is shown by the transactions which occurred between them. If he wants to show them, I do not see any reason why he should not show it.
(1030)

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Seymour: I do not believe I finished my question.

(Question thus far propounded read.)

Q. (Continuing) —in which the other defendants in this case have an interest——. A. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. Seymour: I had not finished.

Q. (Continuing) —which are not granted to the theatres owned or operated by independent exhibitors? A. There is not any difference.

Q. Now, does Paramount license its pictures to the theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. We do.

Q. And are those pictures licensed to those theatres on terms which are called a formula deal? A. They are.

Q. And are those terms, the formula deal terms, worked out with all the companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, not all the companies.

Q. Now, is that formula deal term merely a convenient method for determining the rental to be received from those theatres? A. It is.

Q. And can you tell us generally the way that is worked out? A. Well, it is worked out in this way: Prior to the year that we sold a formula deal we found out what percentage of our national gross that we received for film rental from a particular Paramount affiliate was; and let us say that was one per cent of our national gross; to that one per cent we added an increase; and then for the first year of the formula deal they paid us that increased percentage of our national gross for the Paramount pictures in that circuit.

Q. Do you consider that that method of computing the film rental gives Paramount a fair film rental? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Do you consider that it gives Paramount a higher film rental than it could get on another basis? A. I believe I have gotten higher film rentals as a result of the formula deal than I could have gotten if I had sold my pictures at regular percentage terms.

Q. And are the terms of that deal negotiated annually with the operators of those theatre companies? A. They are.

Q. Now, do you have a somewhat similar basis for computing film rentals in connection with certain theatres in which Fox has an interest? A. We do.

Q. And why were those arrangements made on that basis? A. Well, they were made because after a protracted period of negotiation that I had, and Mr. Smith, a division manager who handles the sale of our pictures to the various Fox affiliates, also had, and we were unsuccessful in making a deal, we finally worked out the formula deal with the Fox affiliates, which is similar to the deal which we have with our own.
(1931a)
(1032)

Q. Do you consider that you get a satisfactory film rental that way? A. I am sure in the case of the Fox affiliates that I could not have gotten the percentage of increase over the past several years for my pictures by selling them at straight terms than I got by selling them under the formula deal.

Q. Now, in the distribution of Paramount pictures, do you usually sell or license from year to year to the same customer? A. We do.

Q. And is that true of the licenses granted by Paramount for first-run exhibition and also for licenses granted for subsequent run exhibition? A. It is.

Q. Why is that so? A. Because over the period of years we have found that the exhibitors that we were doing business with are, in our opinion, the exhibitors who can return the best film rental possible in each given situation for the Paramount pictures.

Q. Would it be practicable or desirable as a matter of distribution, where you have a satisfactory customer, to shop around and offer Paramount pictures on the same run to all the competitors or some of the competitors of that theatre? A. Would it be practicable or would it be possible?

Q. Or desirable. A. No, it would not.

Q. Why not? A. Well, I do not want to sell my pictures (1033) on the same run to every exhibitor because I do not think I can get the maximum returns for my pictures by selling them that way.

Q. Isn't it possible in a given situation that you would leave an old customer and perhaps get some other theatre to bid a higher film rental for a particular block of pictures? A. Oh, I am sure I could do that, but if I did, and finally the stronger exhibitor bought the pictures, he may not be able to pay for them what he agreed to pay; he is simply bidding for them in a market that would give the pictures, and then after he got them he may not be able to play them at the price he agreed to pay.

Q. Do you find that by sticking to an old customer that you get better exploitation for Paramount pictures? A. I think—I don't think, I know—the customers that I do business with, I am confident that I get the best treatment that is possible for my pictures in each of the situations where I sell them.

Q. Now I should like to put to you a question which Judge Bright asked Mr. Rodgers yesterday or the day before, and see what your answer will be, and I am sure Judge Bright will correct me if I haven't got the question quite right. How can you tell in a given situation where you have a first-run customer whether some other theatre in that area would not pay you higher film revenue unless you negotiate with that theatre? A. Well, we have been doing business for a matter of—I have been doing business for a matter of twenty years selling pictures or distributing pictures, and I believe I pretty well know what a theatre can afford to pay for pictures; and while I do not do business with all of the theatres in the United States, I believe that my sales department also knows what a theatre can pay and what they can't pay; and we select our customers based upon what we believe will get the best results on Paramount pictures.

Q. But how do you know you could not get better ones by negotiating with some other theatre if you have not negotiated with them?

Mr. Seymour: I think that was the essence of Judge Bright's question.

Q. (Continuing) Is it because you can tell by looking at the theatre and your general experience? A. Well, we have had a lot of experience in this business and we should know what a theatre can pay and what a theatre can't pay for pictures. We believe we do.

Judge Bright: Doesn't that apply to the other distributors as well?

The Witness: I think it does. Then there are some theatres I would like to play my pictures in and can't get in, and so I do the next best thing, take the next best theatre in which I can get it in; and I think the same thing applies to other distributors. I am sure it does.

Q. Could you offer your pictures or offer to license on the basis of competitive bidding effectively? A. No, I know we could not.

Judge Bright: Why not?

The Witness: Because I think an exhibitor might —not might, but would be willing to give more for pictures than he could afford to pay, and once he had the pictures under contract he could not play them, and I would finally be in a position where I would not get my pictures played in the situation where I had sold them, because the man who bid the highest—it would be an unprofitable arrangement from his standpoint and for mine, simply getting the pictures and then not being able to play them; buying them for more than they are worth.

Mr. Seymour: Have you any further questions, Judge Bright?

Judge Bright: No.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. What is a circuit? A. A circuit is a group of four or five or more theatres.

Q. Under common ownership and management? A. Yes. (1036)

Q. Are there a number of circuits of theatres in the United States? A. There are.

Q. Which are not connected with any distributor? A. There are.

Q. Tell us approximately how many? A. Oh, there are hundreds. I do not know exactly.

Q. Several hundred? A. Several hundred. I do not know the exact number.

Q. And are some of those circuits composed of twenty, thirty, fifty and some more than a hundred theatres? A. There are.

Q. Are there also a number of theatres independently operated who do their buying and booking through a common agency? A. There are.

Q. Now, when you came into the business were there a number of independent circuits? A. There were.

Q. And has the number grown since you have been in the business? A. Yes. There are more today than there were then. There are more independent circuits now than there were when I came into the business.

Q. What is a buying combine? A. A buying combine is a group of theatres that have gotten together and appointed one man to do their buying and booking.

Q. Do you know how many such buying combines there are in the United States? A. I think about fifty.

(1037)

Q. And those are unconnected with any distributor? A. What?

Q. I am talking about buying combines which are unconnected with any distributor? A. They are not connected with any distributor.

Q. Have you had any experience or dealings with these buying combines? A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Have there been occasions when the members of such combinations agreed collectively not to deal for Paramount pictures? A. There have been.

Q. Can you tell us something about those occasions? A. Well, I recall the Cooperative Circuit in Detroit, which is a buying combine made up of more than a hundred theatres, refusing to buy my pictures about three years ago because I wanted percentage terms on a limited number of pictures, and they refused to pay it. I did not sell them for about a year or a year and a half.

Q. Have you had any experience with exhibitor groups combining and refusing to buy or license Paramount pictures? A. I have.

Q. Can you give us some examples of that? A. Well, subsequent run exhibitors in the city of Minneapolis came in to see me, or appointed a committee to come in to see me several years ago, and said they were not going to do any business with us because we asked percentage, wanted to sell our top pictures on percentage, and they wanted to know if we would not change our policy; and if we would not change they were not going to buy Paramount pictures.

Q. And did they fail to buy? A. They did not buy for some time. Since then they have bought a limited number.

Q. Have you had any other experiences of that kind in recent years? A. We had an experience in Philadelphia several years ago where a group of subsequent run exhibitors complained that we failed to deliver a picture on one season's contract that they said we had completed and should deliver, which was not the fact. They said if we did not deliver it they would not do any business with us, or if we did not make an adjustment in their contract they would not do any business with us, and they did not for about a year.

Q. Do you consider that it is important to Paramount's business, and particularly to its distribution business, to have some interest in theatres? A. I do.

Q. Why? A. Well, it gives us an assured outlet for our pictures; it gives us the opportunity to advertise and exploit those pictures; it is sort of a show window for us; and it also enables Paramount as a company to make profits out of the operation of those theatres.

Q. Do you know what the total number of theafres is (1039) in which Paramount has some interest? A. I think between fifteen and sixteen hundred.

Q. And do you know how many theatres there are in the United States? A. About seventeen thousand.

Q. So that Paramount has an interest in somewhat under ten per cent of the total theatres in the United States? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, we were talking this morning about the fact that in distributing Paramount pictures you do not get any information as to what kind of negotiations or arrangements are being made by the theatres in which Paramount has an interest; and I want to ask you some questions on that subject: is the distribution department at Paramount wholly separate and distinct from the theatre department? A. It is.

Q. Do you receive from the theatre department details or information with respect to the film deals negotiated or made by theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. I do not.

Q. Do you receive from the theatre department any extracts or abstracts of contracts made by the theatres in which Paramount has an interest with other defendants for the exhibition of their pictures in those theatres? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Is there communicated to you by the theatre department or by the operating heads of the theatre operating companies, the terms upon which they have licensed pictures of any other distributor? A. They do not. There is none.

(1040)

Q. Does the distribution department or any member of it communicate to the theatre department information as to the film deals made on Paramount pictures in the territories in which other distributors have theatres? A. We do not.

Q. Now do you receive from the theatre department telegraphic reports showing the grosses on certain motion pictures played in certain theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. We do.

Q. Do you receive those regularly? A. Daily.

Q. Do those reports contain any information as to the terms on which the theatres have licensed the pictures shown? A. They do not.

Q. And can you tell us generally the nature of the information contained? A. It lists the name of the city, the theatre, the picture, the gross receipts on the picture by days, and a comparison of the gross receipts between that day and the same day a year ago.

Q. Now, some of those pictures are pictures produced by other distributors? A. They are.

Q. And are you at the time you receive those, licensing pictures in competition with those pictures? A. I am.

(1040½)

Q. Why are you interested in receiving those reports? A. Because it enables me to find out not only what my own pictures are grossing, but also what my competitors' pictures are grossing.

(1041)

Q. In those selected theatres? A. In the theatres listed on that schedule.

Q. Why are you interested in the grossing results of the pictures of other distributors? A. The more I know of the grossing possibilities of my competitors' pictures, I think the better qualified I am to make the proper deals for my own pictures.

Q. Are those the only reports you receive from the theatre department? A. That is the only report.

Q. Is information of that general character available in the trade press? A. It is.

Q. Why don't you get it from the trade press? A. Well, I can get it faster because these are daily reports and they are more accurate than the information I would get from the trade papers.

Q. Have you any personal interest in theatres? A. I have not.

Q. Have you any financial interest or any other kind of interest in any other producing, distributing or exhibiting company? A. I have not.

Q. Do you ever discuss with the sales or distribution representatives of any other company the terms upon which you have or are licensing the exhibition of Paramount pictures to any exhibitor? A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Have you discussed with the sales or distribution representatives of any other company the exhibitors whom you will or have or have not licensed on Paramount pictures? A. I do not.

(1042)

Q. Do you consider the terms upon which you license Paramount pictures a business secret of Paramount? A. It is a business secret of our own company.

Q. Does it sometimes happen that a picture which hasn't had a high production cost is a great box office success? A. It does.

Q. Does it sometimes happen that a very expensive picture is not a box office success? A. That happens also.

Q. Can you give us some examples of those two things in Paramount? A. Well, I think of a picture called "High, Wide and Handsome", which we released a few years ago, and which cost us $1,800,000 and it grossed less than a million dollars. I think of another very expensive picture called "Angel", which was very disastrous at the box office and very unprofitable to us, and I think of a picture that was comparatively inexpensive, "Going My Way", which cost about a million dollars and grossed about seven million in this country.

Judge Bright: That is because Bing Crosby was the star?

The Witness: Not because Bing Crosby was the star. He has been a star in a number of our pictures, (1043) but we have never had a picture in which Crosby appeared that grossed half of that money. It was because of the picture itself, popular appeal.

Q. Has it been the practice of Paramount to distribute pictures produced by independent producers? A. It is.

Q. How do you define independent producer? A. An independent producer is a producer who makes pictures independently but has no national distributing facilities for the distribution of those pictures or of the pictures that he makes.

Q. Such a producer distributes through some other distributing organization? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us some examples of pictures produced by independent producers which Paramount has distributed in recent years? A. Well, we distributed the Harry Sherman pictures, which were the Hopalong Cassidys, that were independently produced. We distributed a picture called "Jamaica Inn", which was independently produced in England and distributed by us in this country. We at present distribute the Pine Thomas pictures which are independently produced. We also distribute the Hal Wallis pictures, which are an independent production, and the Buddy DeSylva pictures, which are also independently produced.

(1044)

Q. In your observation is there competition among the various distributors for an opportunity to distribute a high quality independently produced picture? A. Keen competition for that opportunity.

Judge Bright: Do you call all those pictures you just mentioned high quality pictures?

The Witness: They aren't all high qualities, no. The Harry Sherman pictures, Hopalong Cassidys, were made—they are Western pictures of good quality but they cannot play the A theatres or the better theatres, of course, in the United States.

Q. They are good Western——

Judge Bright: They play in most of the double feature picture theatres?

The Witness: No, they play a lot of theatres that play single feature too but they play on the weekends, Friday or Saturday, when the youngsters are out of school and have a chance to see them.

Q. The "Beachcomber," which you mentioned, Charles Laughton—— A. I did not mention the "Beachcomber." I had forgotten it. I mentioned "Jamaica Inn." "Beachcomber" [redacted] also a picture which we distributed, which was independently produced.

Q. Was that the Charles Laughton picture? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether Paramount distributed a picture about the Mississippi called "The River"? A. We did.

(1045)

Q. Was that a high quality picture? A. Yes, that was a fine quality picture.

Q. Did you distribute a picture called "The City That Stopped Hitler"? A. We did.

Q. Who was that produced by? A. I think it was produced by the Russian Government.

Q. That was a picture about Stalingrad? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in the average large size community, where there are some theatres operated on a first-run policy and other theatres operated on various subsequent runs, do you consider that all those theatres are, to a degree, in competition with each other? A. I do.

Q. Why do you think so? A. Well, they are all in competition with each other because they are showing the pictures and the customers go to one or the other. They may go to a theatre that charges 75 cents—first-run theatre—one time, next time they may go to the second-run that charges 50 cents; another time may go to a one that is a subsequent-run, that charges 35.

Q. They have their choice among the theatres and the admission prices and the pictures? A. That they want to pay, to see them at.

Q. From your observation and experience is there any separate group of the population which is a definite first-run market and only sees pictures first-run? A. No, sir, I don't think there is.

(1046)

Q. Any member of the public sometimes goes to first-run, sometimes later runs, and so on? A. I think that is so.

Q. Does Paramount sometimes license its pictures on what is called a move-over run? A. We do.

Q. What is a move-over run? A. A move-over run is a run where the engagement is started in one theatre and then moved to another theatre at which the same admission price is charged.

Judge Bright: Another theatre of the same owner?

The Witness: Yes, sir, the same owner, always the same owner.

Q. Why is that? A. Well, because the man who buys the picture first-run does not want to share that first-run engagement with somebody else. He wants it for himself. And the reason for the move-over is because he may play the picture first in a big theatre where the overhead is very high and then, as the gross begins to go down, he moves it to another theatre where the overhead is lower and completes the engagement there.

(1047)

Q. You said "always the same owner." I suppose that was another way of saying "same operator"? A. Yes.

Q. Two theatres may possibly be in different ownership but operated by the same hands? A. Yes.

Q. Does Paramount have any policy that it will only grant a move-over to a theatre in which it has an interest? A. No, we sell move-overs wherever we think it is to our advantage to do so and where it will improve our film rental.

Q. Are some of those move-overs licensed to independent exhibitors? A. They are.

Q. And are they sometimes licensed to exhibitors in which a defendant has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are they sometimes granted to a theatre in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It has nothing to do with it; the question of whether a move-over is granted is unaffected by precisely who owns the theatre as long as the second theatre is operated by the same person or interests as the first theatre, is that right? A. That is, as long as the admission price is the same.

Judge Bright: Does the move-over have to occur in the same time period as mentioned in the original license or is there additional time given for that purpose?

The Witness: You could really call it an extended (1048) run except it is moved from one theatre to another because of the difference of the overhead in the second theatre.

Judge Bright: I don't mean that. You license A for a first-run on a picture in a particularly named theatre?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: You permit a move-over, however. Has he got to move it over within the period of time that he is permitted to exhibit under that license or is additional time given to him?

The Witness: In the original instance we may sell a picture for its engagement in one theatre for, let us say, 14 days. The business is good. He wants to move it over to the other theatre for a continued run. We agree to do that.

Judge Bright: After the 14 days?

The Witness: Immediately following the 14 days.

Judge Bright: What effect does that have on the clearance as against a second-run?

The Witness: There are some instances where the clearance applies after the completion of the original engagement in the first theatre. There are some instances where it applies after the completion of the (1049) engagement in the move-over.

Judge Bright: When is it determined that he may move over?

The Witness: When?

Judge Bright: When is this additional time given to him by which he may take advantage of this move-over?

The Witness: He may do it on any picture that the business justifies.

Judge Bright: During the period of operation of the first showing? What I am getting at is, what effect does it have on the second man, does it just postpone his opportunity to exhibit?

The Witness: It may postpone it. In some instances the clearance starts from the completion of the move-over; in others, it starts from the completion of the original engagement.

Judge Bright: When is that determined?

The Witness: Determined at the time the contract is made.

Q. And the subsequent-run exhibitor, who knows what clearance he is subjected to from the other theatres, knows that the picture may be moved over? A. Depending upon its box office success or appeal.

Q. And the move-over feature—the theatres operating on a move-over policy in a particular community are well known in the trade, are they not? A. They are established, yes, (1050) sir, they are established.

Q. So it is no surprise to the subsequent-run exhibitor when the first-run exhibitor, having a right of move-over, actually exercises that right? A. No, he knows that picture will be moved over whenever it has sufficient box office strength to justify the move-over.

Judge Bright: Does that apply only to first-run theatres?

The Witness: Yes, we have move-overs only in first-run theatres.

Judge Hand: Do you have simultaneous exhibitions of first-runs in different regions?

The Witness: Well, we have simultaneous engagements, for instance, in Los Angeles. We have our pictures play simultaneously between the Paramount Los Angeles and the Paramount Hollywood.

Judge Hand: At the same time, I suppose, they are exhibited in the East?

The Witness: It may be at the same time, it may be earlier or later, depending upon how pictures become available for booking and for how long they run.

Judge Hand: So "first-run" is really a relative term that relates to regional exhibitions?

The Witness: The first exhibition in each city, that is the first-run.

(1051)

Judge Hand: Yes.

Q. There is a difference between, or there may be a difference between, an extended run and a move-over, isn't that so, Mr. Reagan? A. An extended run is where you sell a picture, let us say, for seven days in a theatre, the business is good, and the exhibitor decides to play it for 14 days. That is an extended run.

Q. But that is played in the same theatre? A. Played in the same theatre.

Judge Bright: There the same question arises again, what effect does that have on the next fellow, second-run, on the subject of clearance? He buys his picture to have 14 days clearance?

The Witness: He buys the picture following the completion of the first-run showing.

Judge Bright: Can he go on 14 days after the completion of the first-run showing or after the end of the extended term?

The Witness: No, after the completion of the first-run showing, although there are cases where because —no, I don't think there are any extended run engagements. I was going to say that I think there are instances where the clearance starts—no, it couldn't be with an extended run. It is after the completion of the engagement. In an extended run engagement clearance applies——

(1052)

Judge Hand: After completion. Clearance applies at the end of the extension; it begins to run at the end of the extended run?

The Witness: Yes, it begins to run.

Q. Does the subsequent-run exhibitor, who knows what clearance he is subjected to and negotiates his film rental with the distributor with that knowledge, also know that his clearance may start at the end of an extended run? A. He does.

Judge Bright: Suppose he has booked that picture?

The Witness: He could not book it until after he receives a notice of availability and a notice of availability cannot be sent out until they know when the engagement will be completed in its first-run showing.
(1053)

Q. Isn't it the fact that every exhibitor is desirous of extending the run of the picture on which he is doing good business? A. Yes, of course, the longer a picture runs, whether it is first-run or irrespective of the run, the better result he will get.

Q. And that would apply to the subsequent run exhibitor? A. Any run.

Judge Bright: Can a subsequent run exhibitor run longer?

The Witness: Yes, you can sell a subsequent run exhibitor—you may sell him three or four days, five or six or seven. He will run the picture for whatever length of time business justifies.

Mr. Seymour: I have to emulate my distinguished friend, Mr. Davis, and take you on a short national tour. I won't take you as far as he did.

Mr. Davis: I did not catch the result in which I was being so flattered.

Mr. Seymour: I said I was not going to take the Court on quite as extended a tour as you did.

Judge Bright: He wants to retill your soil.

Mr. Seymour: I am going to plow only the north forty, though.

Mr. Davis: There is no copyright on mine, Mr. Seymour.

Q. I want to inquire, Mr. Reagan, about the 92 cities (1054) with populations of over 100,000, and I will first eliminate 48 of them. Is it the fact that in 48 of those cities Paramount licenses Paramount pictures first-run to theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. And do you consider that those theatres are the best or comparable to the best theatres in those cities? A. They are certainly the best from our standpoint.

Q. Are there any of Loew's theatres in those cities? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: There seems to be some difference of view about the respective qualities.

Just for the record, I am going to read into the record the names of the cities which will be excluded from our tour because theatres in which Paramount has an interest are the theatres which Paramount licenses first-run there:

Atlanta, Ga.
Birmingham, Ala.
Boston, Mass.
Buffalo, N. Y.
Cambridge, Mass.
Charlotte, N. C.
Chattanooga, Tenn.
Chicago, Ill.
Dallas, Texas
Des Moines, Iowa
Detroit, Mich.

Somerville, Mass.
South Bend, Ind.
Springfield, Mass.
Tampa, Fla.
Toledo, Ohio
Worcester, Mass.
Yonkers, N. Y.

Q. In the remaining 44 cities out of the 92 having a population of over a hundred thousand, in some of those cities the theatre which licenses the first-run of Paramount pictures is a theatre in which one of the defendants other than Paramount is interested, is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in some of those cities the theatre is independently operated, is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am going to take you through those cities. Are you generally familiar with the first-run accounts, Paramount first-run accounts, in those cities? A. I am.

Q. Starting with Akron, Ohio, will you tell us who the first-run customer is and why that customer was selected? A. Well, in the case of Akron, we presently split our product between Loew's and Harry Katz. Until a few years ago we sold all our pictures to Loew. We weren't satisfied with the playing time that we were able to get for our pictures, as a (1056) result of which we took half the product away from Loew's and sold it to Harry Katz. I believe at present that by splitting our pictures between Loew's and Harry Katz, which is the Loew Theatre and the Palace Theatre, it is the best outlet for Paramount pictures in Akron, Ohio.

Q. Is Katz an independent operator? A. Yes, sir, he is.

Q. Who is your first-run customer or customers in Albany, New York? A. In Albany we split our product between the Palace Theatre, which is operated by Fabian, and the Strand Theatre, which is operated by Warner. We would prefer to sell all our pictures to Fabian because he has the biggest theatre. We couldn't do that, though, so we did the next best thing, we sell half of them to Fabian and the other half to Warner, who has the second best theatre.

Q. Does it sometimes happen that a customer is only able to buy half your product because of other circumstances? A. That is the instance here.

Q. How about Baltimore, Maryland? A. In Baltimore, Maryland, we divide our product between the Stanley Theatre, which is operated by Warner Bros., and Keith's Theatre, which is operated by Mr. Schanberger.

Q. Is Schanberger an independent operator? A. He is. (1057)

Q. Will you tell us why the product is divided there? A. Because in the case of Baltimore I believe we get the best results for Paramount pictures by splitting our product between the Stanley and the Keith theatres.

Q. Bridgeport, Connecticut. A. In Bridgeport, Connecticut, we sell our product to Warner Bros. and they play Paramount pictures on a day and date basis between the Warner and Merritt theatres. "Day and date" means that they play at the same time in each theatre.

Q. Camden, New Jersey? A. In Camden, New Jersey, we sell our pictures to Warner Bros. there. They have the most desirable theatre in town, the largest.

Q. Canton, Ohio. A. In Canton, Ohio, we sell our pictures to Loew. There again Loew's have the biggest theatre and a theatre that, I believe, can gross the most money for Paramount Pictures. Therefore we do business with them.

Q. Cincinnati, Ohio. A. Cincinnati, Ohio, we at present sell our pictures first-run to RKO, who operate the Palace, the Albee, Capitol, Lyric, the Shubert, Keith, the Family and the Grand theatres.

We previously sold our pictures in Cincinnati to a gentleman by the name of Libson, who was an independent exhibitor. A number of years ago he made a deal with RKO for an interest in the theatres and continued to operate (1058) them for them. During all that time we have done business with the same theatres, first when he operated them as an independent, secondly when he operated them for RKO.

Q. Columbus, Ohio. A. In Columbus, Ohio, we sell our pictures to Loew's there in their State, Stillman and Ohio theatres. These theatres were previously—wait, I am wrong. In Columbus, Ohio, the names of the theatres are the Ohio and the Broad. Those theatres were formerly operated by a gentleman by the name of Billy James, an independent exhibitor, and we did business with him until such time as he disposed of his theatres to Loew's and then we continued to sell our pictures to Loew's in the same theatres in which they had been exhibited prior to the time they took over their operation.

Q. Will you give us the next city on your list? A. You skipped Cleveland. In Cleveland we sell our pictures to Loew's, who operate the State, Stillman and Ohio theatres. The reason for selling Loew's there is because they have the biggest theatre in town, the State; they have two very fine theatres in the Stillman and the Ohio. We feel we get fine representation for Paramount pictures in those theatres.

Q. Denver, Colorado. A. No, the next is Dayton.

Q. Dayton, I am sorry. A. In Dayton we sell our pictures to RKO, who operate the Keith, Colonial, and State theatres. These theatres were also operated by Mr. Libson prior to the time of the sale of his interest to RKO, and when they were operated by him we did business with him, and when he sold his interest to RKO and operated for them, we continued to do business with him for the RKO interests.
(1059)

Q. Denver, Colorado. A. In Denver, Colorado, we do business with the Denham theatre.

Q. Is the Denham an independently operated theatre? A. That is an independently operated theatre, operated by a gentleman who in my opinion is one of the best showmen in America.

Q. Are there theatres in which other defendants have an interest? A. There are.

Q. Which exhibit first-run in Denver? A. There are.

Q. Why do you sell or license your product first-run to the Denham? A. Well, originally Paramount operated the Denver and the Paramount theatres in Denver. During our bankruptcy we lost those theatres. Their operation was taken over by a gentleman who was operating one of the other theatres there at the time, the Aladdin. The terms he offered us for our pictures were such that we were unwilling to accept them. The Denham Theatre was then operating on a legitimate policy. Mr. Cochrell, who is the exhibitor presently operating it, went in and took it over. We started to do business with him and we have done business ever since, and he is one of the most satisfactory accounts we have, in addition to which the revenue that we earn from that theatre is very fine.

Q. That is not the largest theatre in Denver? A. It is not the largest theatre but in my opinion, by a wide margin, is the best operated, in addition to which we get longer runs there than we would get or we could get if we played our pictures in the other theatres, and by virtue of the longer run we get as much film rental as——

Q. That is an example of what you stated this morning where you might take a smaller theatre but because of the showmanship and skill of the operator, you believe it would be a better account for you, is that right? A. That is it.

Q. How about Elizabeth, New Jersey. A. In Elizabeth, New Jersey, we sell our pictures to Warner and Skouras.

Q. Erie, Pennsylvania. A. In Erie, Pennsylvania, we sell to Warner Bros. They have the biggest theatre there, the best.

Q. Fall River, Massachusetts. A. In Fall River, Massachusetts, we sell Yamins.

Q. Is he an independent operator? A. He is an independent exhibitor, yes.

(1061)

Q. For Wayne, Indiana. A. In Fort Wayne, Indiana, we sell our pictures to the Harrison Theatre and Realty Company. They operate all of the first-run theatres in the town with the exception of one, a very small one, which has a seating capacity of 575.

Q. That operator is an independent exhibitor? A. That is correct.

Q. Indianapolis. A. In Indianapolis, we sell our pictures to the Greater Indianapolis Theatres, which is an independent operation, operating the Circle and the Indiana and Lyric theatres. The Indiana is the largest theatre in town, the Circle is next to the largest; the Lyric is a Move-over house.

Q. The defendant Loew has a theatre there, first-run theatre, has it not? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: Best theatre in town?

The Witness: I don't think so.

Q. But you sold the independent competitor of Loew's? A. I sold these theatres in Indianapolis before Loew came in to the town, and have continued to sell them since.

Q. The Lyric, which is one of the theatres that you license there, is an independently operated move-over house, is it not? A. That is correct.

Q. And that is an example of your licensing for move-over to independent exhibitors? A. We license move-overs (1062) to anyone.

Q. Jersey City. A. In Jersey City, we divide our pictures between Warner Bros. theatre, the Stanley, and Skouras, who operates the State. The Stanley is the largest theatre in town by about a thousand seats. The State is the fourth largest.

Q. Kansas City, Kansas. A. In Kansas City, Kansas, we sell our pictures—license our pictures to the Electric Theatre, which is an independently operated theatre and the largest in Kansas City, Kansas.

Mr. Caskey: May I interrupt there just a moment. The Electric is the theatre that Mr. Rodgers testified about as possibly having some connection with the National subsidiary in Kansas City, Kansas. You know it to be independently operated?

The Witness: It is operated by the Rubel interests, and a gentleman by the name of Baker operates it, been operating it for a number of years. It has no connection with National Theatres at all.

Q. Does the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox have an interest in a theatre in that city? A. They have an interest and operate the Granada Theatre in the same city.

Q. But you license the Electric? A. Yes.

Q. Long Beach, California. A. In Long Beach, California we license our pictures to the Fox Westcoast, who (1063) operate the West Coast, United Artists, Imperial and Long Beach. The two best theatres in town are the West Coast and the United Artists. That is where we try to play all our pictures that we can.

Q. Louisville, Kentucky. A. Louisville, Kentucky, we license pictures to the Rialto and Strand Theatres, which are operated by the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, an independent exhibitor.

Q. Does the defendant Loew have a theatre in Louisville? A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. But you license to the independent? A. I do, because I am sure in the case of Louisville that the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, on the Rialto Theatre, gross more money than Loew's does, and I get more film rental out of it.

Q. Milwaukee, Wisconsin. A. In Milwaukee we are presently licensing our pictures between the Wisconsin, the Palace and the Strand theatres, all of which are operated by Fox-Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises. Prior to the time that the Palace was leased to the Fox-Wisconsin Amusement Corporation, we licensed our pictures in the Palace, which was then operated by an independent exhibitor.

Q. Nashville, Tennessee. A. In Nashville, Tennessee, we license our pictures in the Paramount and Princess Theatres, (1064) which are the two largest in town, operated by the Crescent Amusement Company.

Q. Is that an independent operator? A. That is.

Q. Does the defendant Loew's have a theatre there? A. They do have.

Q. Norfolk, Virginia. A. In Norfolk, Virginia, we license our pictures to Fabian Theatres. Used to be operated by Wilmer & Vincent. We licensed to Wilmer & Vincent when they were operating them, and when Fabian took them over we continued to do business with them. That is the Norva and Granby Theatres.

Q. The defendant Loew's has a theatre there? A. They have, that is correct.

Q. You license the independent. A. We do and have been for as long as I know.

Q. Oakland, California. A. In Oakland, California, we license our pictures to Fox Westcoast. They operate the Fox, which is by far the finest theatre in the city of Oakland. As a matter of fact, it is one of the finest theatres in the United States. They also operate the Paramount, which is the next best theatre in town. They operate the Orpheum and they operate the Grand Lake. We license our pictures in Oakland to Fox Westcoast because they operate the best theatres in town and the biggest theatres in town, and I am sure also we get a better film rental return from them than if we sold them to anyone else.

Q. Could you tell by your general familiarity with conditions there, knowing these theatres that you do license first-run, that the Blumenfeld theatres would not be able to pay as good revenue, without negotiating with Blumenfeld? A. You bet I could.

Q. How could you tell that? A. Well, the Fox Theatre seats 3,300 people; the Paramount seats 3,400 people; the Orpheum seats 2,500 people, and the Grand Lake seats 2,200 people. The theatres operated by Blumenfeld seat 1,075, 1,300 and 2,800.

There are no finer theatres in America than the Fox and Paramount theatres in Oakland. They are magnificent buildings, magnificently built and constructed and Blumenfeld's theatres cannot compete by way of gross with either the Fox or the Paramount, I am sure.

Q. Philadelphia. A. In Philadelphia we license our pictures to Warner Bros., who operate the Aldine, the Boyd, the Capitol, the Earle, the Fox, the Mastbaum, the Stanton and the Stanley.

Q. Pittsburgh. A. In Pittsburgh we license our pictures to Warner Bros.—we split between Warner Bros. and Loew's. Part of them play the Warner Bros. Stanley, Warner or Ritz theatres.

Q. Portland, Oregon? A. In Portland, Oregon, we license (1066)
our pictures to the Hamrick-Evergreen Circuit who operate the Paramount, Orpheum, Oriental, Playhouse and Music Box theatres. Prior to the time that Paramount was leased to Hamrick-Evergreen, we sold our pictures to this theatre when it was operated as a Paramount theatre by one of the Paramount affiliates or subsidiaries. We lost it in the bankruptcy and we have been doing business since that time with Hamrick.

Q. Providence, Rhode Island? A. We sell our pictures in Providence to the Strand Theatre, which is operated by a gentleman by the name of Silverman. We have been doing business with Mr. Silverman for, well, ever since he has had the theatre, 20 years or more.

Q. Is he an independent exhibitor? A. He is.

Q. Does the defendant Loew have a theatre in Providence? A. They do.

Q. Does the defendant RKO have a theatre in Providence. A. They do.

Q. Reading, Pa. A. In Reading, Pa. we sell—license our pictures to Fabian, that is, in the Embassy and Ritz Theatres.

these theatres were formerly operated by Wilmer & Vincent, an independent exhibitor, or exhibitors, and when they were operated by them we also licensed our pictures to those houses.

Q. Is Fabian an independent? A. He is.

(1067)

Q. Does the defendant Warner Bros. have a theatre there? A. They do.

Q. Does Loew's have a theatre there? A. They do.

Q. Richmond, Virginia. A. In Richmond, Virginia, we license our pictures to the National and Colonial Theatres which are operated by Fabian Theatres, previously having been operated by Wilmer & Vincent. We licensed our pictures to Wilmer & Vincent when they operated the houses and have continued that since Fabian took them over.

Q. Does the defendant Loew have any theatre there? A. They do have.

Q. St. Louis, Missouri. A. In St. Louis we license our pictures to Fanchon & Marco. They operate the Ambassador, the Fox, Missouri, the St. Louis and the Shubert theatres.

Q. Is Fanchon & Marco an independent? A. They are.

Q. Does the defendant Loew have theatres in St. Louis? A. They do have.

Q. First-run theatres? A. They do have.

Q. Sacramento, California. A. In Sacramento we license our pictures to Fox West Coast, who operate the Senator, the Alhambra and the Capitol theatres, best theatres in town.

Q. San Diego. A. In San Diego we license our pictures to Fox West Coast, who operate the Fox, the State, the (1068)

California, the Adams, the Orpheum and the Mission.

Q. Seattle. A. In Seattle we license our pictures to Evergreen Theatres Corporation, who operate the Fifth Avenue, the Paramount, the Music Hall, Orpheum, the Blue Mouse and the Music Box.

Q. Evergreen is a company in which Fox has some interest? A. They do have, yes.

Q. Spokane. A. Spokane, we license our pictures in Spokane to Evergreen Theatres Corporation also. They operate the Fox, Orpheum and the State theatres.

Q. Syracuse. A. In Syracuse we license our pictures to RKO, who operate the Paramount, the Eckel and the Empire.

Q. Tacoma, Washington. A. In Tacoma we license our pictures to Mrs. H. T. Moore and Mr. J. Ousley, who operate the Rialto Theatre.

Q. Are they independent? A. They are independent, yes. We used to sell Mr. Moore before he died and since his death we have continued to sell his widow.

Q. Trenton, New Jersey. A. In Trenton we license our pictures to RKO, who operate the Lincoln, Capitol, State, Trent and Palace.

Q. Tulsa. A. In Tulsa we license our pictures to Ralph Talbot, who operates the Ritz, the Orpheum, Majestic and Rialto theatres.

(1069)

Q. Utica. A. In Utica we license our pictures to Warner Bros., who operate the Stanley and the Avon theatres.

Q. In Washington, D. C. A. In Washington, D. C. we divide our pictures between Warner's and Loew's.

Q. Wichita, Kansas. A. In Wichita we license our pictures to Fox Midwest, who operate the Miller, the Orpheum, the Palace, the Wichita, the Sandra and Boulevard.

Q. Wilmington, Delaware. A. We license our pictures to Warner Bros. in Wilmington, who operate the Queen, the Warner and the Grand Opera House.

Q. Youngstown, Ohio. A. In Youngstown we license our pictures to the Palace Theatre. It is operated by Mr. Ed Printzsen.

Q. Is he an independent operator? A. He is.

Q. Is there a Warner Theatre in Youngstown? A. Yes, sir, there is.

Q. Speaking generally, do you consider these first-run customers that you have mentioned to have the best theatres or theatres comparable with the best in the several cities involved? A. I do.

Q. And do you consider them in each case the best outlet for Paramount pictures first-run? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Is your choice of which outlet to license first-run determined or influenced by the question of whether any (1070)
defendant in this case has an interest in it? A. Has nothing to do with it.

Q. In all these cities are there also a number of other theatres in addition to the first-run theatres? A. Yes, there are.

Q. And are all the theatres in the town in competition, or in the city in competition? A. They are.

Q. And in most of these cities are there other first-run theatres which are in competition with the theatres showing Paramount pictures first-run? A. There are.

Q. Dealing with the theatres in cities with populations under 100,000, would you say generally that the theatre selected by Paramount for exhibition first-run was considered by it to be the best outlet for Paramount pictures? A. I would.

Q. And generally would you say that that theatre was the best theatre or comparable with the best in that city? A. Well, it is either the best or comparable with the best or the best that we could do.

Q. In any of those cities of any size, leaving aside theatres in which Paramount itself had an interest, was the theatre selected as the first-run outlet because any defendant had any interest in it? A. No, sir, they were not.

Judge Goddard: In any theatre owned by Paramount, average theatre in a large city, how many pictures are used a year?
(1071)

The Witness: In a theatre owned by Paramount?

Judge Goddard: Yes; take any one of the large cities, what is the average number of pictures?

The Witness: Well, it may run—it depends on the size of the city.

Judge Goddard: Take Oakland, California, which you have just been describing, those are——

The Witness: Those are operated by Fox West Coast.

Judge Goddard: Take a city where Paramount operates.

The Witness: Say Detroit?

Judge Goddard: All right.

The Witness: The United Artists theatre there is operated by—— Judge Goddard: No, in a theatre, how many pictures do you run in a year?

The Witness: In one theatre?

Judge Goddard: In one theatre.

The Witness: In the Michigan Theatre I should say 40 pictures.

Judge Goddard: 40 pictures, and of those 40 how many are made by Paramount?

The Witness: Probably 20.

(1072)

Judge Goddard: Who produces the others, any one company or, if not one company, how do you select the pictures?

The Witness: I don't know how they select the pictures that are used outside of our own. That I have nothing to do with.

Mr. Seymour: I will have a witness, Judge Goddard.

Judge Goddard: You see what I am getting at?

Mr. Seymour: I will have a witness who can answer that question, yes.

Judge Bright: Are these 92 cities about which you have just been talking the same 92 that the Government picked out?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, they are just selected on the basis of population.

Judge Bright: Your tabulation does not agree with the Government's, does it, on any particular theatres in which you play Paramount pictures?

Mr. Seymour: I think so, because what the Government did was to take 73 cities out of the 92.

Judge Bright: I have been watching this tabulation in the Government's brief and it does not check at all with some of this testimony.

Mr. Seymour: Well, I have not compared it precisely. We were on the same 92 cities but the Government has limited itself to 73 selected cities. Some (1073) of my cities, obviously, are not in the Government tabulation because they aren't within the tabulation.

Judge Bright: Some of the cities which you mentioned, which are in the Government's tabulation, do not show the same outlets for Paramount pictures first-run.

Mr. Seymour: I am sorry to say I have not compared them but I will.

Judge Bright: I have been watching it as we go along. There were a number of instances where I found there was a difference.

Mr. Semour: My own preference as to who is probably right about it is the man who is in charge of distributing.

Judge Bright: I didn't ask you that.

Mr. Seymour: No. I will make a check. I haven't followed it, I am sorry to say. I was examining from a different list and I haven't personally checked the two, but if we can throw any light on corrections, we would like to do it, as I am sure Mr. Wright would like to do.

Judge Bright: I was wondering whether you were giving your testimony as of a different date. The Government is the 1943-44 season. I did not know whether you were questioning at the same season.

Mr. Seymour: My own is current but the information ought not to differ.

(1074)

Mr. Davis: I should like to ask whether I am mistaken in thinking that Government tabulation contained in their trial brief has never yet been offered in evidence in this case.

Judge Bright: I just referred to it. I read it like I did the other.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the tabulation is merely a summary of the data contained in the admissions of fact which are in evidence and which each of these defendants undertook to state. It is first-run outlets for the 1943-44 season. That material is in evidence. I think that your Honor may be confused by the fact that the outlet here in the tabulation merely shows the name of the distributor who is affiliated with the particular exhibitor who has the first-run account. There may be a different name for the exhibitor.

Judge Bright: In some——

Mr. Wright: Which would not appear here.

Judge Bright: In some instances you put down one of the defendants when this gentleman testifies that his outlet is an independent theatre.

Mr. Wright: Could you——

Judge Bright: I did not mark it, but there were half a dozen at least.

Mr. Wright: They should be the same except in (1075) so far as a change may have been made as of now and the 1943-44 season.

Mr. Davis: I think we are prepared to say, if the Court please, that even if there is no conflict, and there is some conflict between the testimony and the summary, the testimony itself amplified and added to the summary. Your Honors may recall that in opening the case I called attention to the statement about New York in that summary, which said the Loew's in New York divided their product between themselves, Paramount and an independent, and I pointed out what has since been shown by testimony, that the so-called allocation to Paramount consisted of one single film sold during a period of some ten years, and I argued then, and we shall at a later time argue again, that the Government's summary is both inaccurate and, by reason of its generality, misleading.

Mr. Seymour: Now, Mr. Wright, in order to give you an opportunity to cross-examine Mr. Reagan while his testimony is fresh in your mind, I suggest that we stipulate as we did yesterday, that if I put to Mr. Reagan the questions negativing conspiracy, which I did put to Mr. Zu or yesterday, he would answer in the negative and that that stipulation shall have the same force and effect as if he so testified.

Mr. Wright: Entirely agreeable.

Mr. Seymour: You may examine.

(1076)

Mr. Caskey: I have a few questions.

Mr. Seymour: Oh, wait a minute, Mr. Caskey wants to examine first.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Reagan, are you familiar with Kansas City, Missouri? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Theatres in Kansas City, Missouri? A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. Your first-run is licensed to which theatre? A. Paramount's first-run?

Q. Yes. A. To the Newman Theatre.

Q. That is operated by whom? A. Paramount.

Q. Second-run is licensed to whom? A. I don't recall the name of the theatre.

Q. The Plaza Theatre? A. Yes; that is correct.

Q. Do you know the Plaza Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a theatre is it? A. It is a fine theatre in the neighborhood section of Kansas City, the Plaza section.

Q. And adjacent to a large number of private residence and apartment houses? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, you recently produced a picture entitled "Going My Way", did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you played it first-run at the Newman Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did the operator of the Plaza Theatre know (1077) when it could play that picture? A. After it had completed its engagement at the Newman Theatre.

Q. The picture played a week at the Newman Theatre. When was it decided to play it for a second week? A. When?

Q. Yes. A. Well, when that picture started to play at the Newman Theatre they knew they were going to play it for more than one week.

Q. All right. But what I am getting at is, is it not a fact that in a theatre like the Newman the decision to extend the run is made each week, depending upon the success of the picture? A. Depending upon the gross that the picture does.

Q. And a picture may run two weeks, three weeks, four weeks, or five weeks, or, in the case of "Going My Way" six weeks; is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. And until it has completed its engagement its availability to the second-run theatre cannot be determined? A. That is correct.

Q. And that is true whether the second run operator is a subsidiary of National Theatres or is an individual? A. That is correct.

Q. It is no different in Kansas City than any place else? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you consider that the Plaza Theatre is in (1078) competition with the Newman Theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that a great many people went to the Plaza Theatre to see "Going My Way"? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Even though you had exhorted them to come downtown to the Newman Theatre to see it there? A. That is right.

Q. Now, I want to ask you a question about the exploitation of pictures in connection with the testimony you gave as to selling pictures to the highest bidder. Are you familiar with the Fifth Avenue Theatre in Seattle? A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. What kind of a theatre is it? A. It is a fine theatre, well located.

Q. How is it operated? A. Well operated.

Q. Do you know the Fox Theatre in Spokane? A. I do.

Q. What kind of a theatre is that? A. A fine theatre.

Q. How is it operated? A. Well operated.

Q. They are both operated by subsidiaries of Evergreen? A. That is correct.

Q. And those are the two largest theatres in the State of Washington, are they not? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, tell the Court what effect, if any, the exploitation, advertising and handling of your pictures in those two theatres have upon your revenue from the picture from your other accounts in the State of Washington? A. Well, (1079) it enhances our revenue or improves our revenue any time we can play a picture in the Fifth Avenue Theatres in Seattle and the Fox Theatre in Spokane, because if the picture can play in those houses it has established the picture in the surrounding territory.

Q. And it is of benefit to you to play "Duffy's Tavern" in the Fifth Avenue Theatre in the revenue that you will receive from Wenatchee? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, I asked Mr. Rodgers yesterday a series of questions regarding this theory of cross conditioning of licenses, and I should like to shorten it as much as I can, but I want to ask you the question: With whom do you deal——

Mr. Wright: I will stipulate that he will give the same answers.

Mr. Caskey: You will stipulate that if the same questions were put to Mr. Reagan in regard to the licensing of Paramount pictures and the fact of non-conditioning, he would testify in similar manner?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Q: That is true, is it not, Mr. Reagan?

Judge Bright: What is true?

Mr. Caskey: That there is no conditioning one on the other?

A. There is not, no, sir.

Mr. Caskey: I accept the stipulation.

Mr. Proskauer: Can't we have it understood that (1080) that answer of Mr. Reagan applies to all the co-defendants?

You did not condition your licensing of pictures to any defendant on whether they licensed to you?

The Witness: We did not, no, sir.

Mr. Caskey: One other question, Mr. Reagan.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Do you know what the clearance between the Newman Theatre and the Plaza Theatre in Kansas City is? A. I believe it is 28 days, although I am not certain.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: Anybody else?

(No response.)

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, the witness is yours.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. You are familiar, are you, Mr. Reagan, with the agreement that has been put in evidence here as Government's Exhibit 243, an exchange of letters between Mr. Moskowitz and yourself regarding the terms under which Paramount pictures were played in the Loew Metropolitan Circuit here? A. No, sir, I am not.

Q. You had better take a look at it (handing exhibit to witness). A. Yes?

Q. Now, this series of documents that have been marked as 243 have been identified as the agreement under which your 1943-1944 pictures were exhibited in the Loew New (1081)
York Circuit. That is correct, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I shall call your attention to the date—or I will ask you to read it to the Court so they can understand what the agreement says there, calling the date to their attention. A. It is dated May 17, 1945. (Reading):

"The following confirms the settlement agreed upon between us.

"For the Circuit"—

Mr. Seymour: What kind of procedure is this, Mr. Wright? If you have got a document that you want to offer, offer it.

Mr. Wright: The document is in evidence. I propose to examine him on it.

Mr. Davis: What is the document, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Exhibit 243 in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: And I think it might be easier for you to read it.

Q. Go ahead, Mr. Reagan. A. (Continuing reading):

"Season 1940-1941, as per contracts in existence with the three lowest grossing pictures on the long-half as the reversion pictures.

"Seasons 1941-1942, 1942-1943 and 1943-1944, the long-half film rentals are settled on the following formula:

(1082)

"Combination of two pictures starting at 30% for the two pictures and graduating up allowing the Exhibitor 25% of the film rental as profit at all times until the Distributor has 40% of the gross as film rental, the balance of the gross divided 50% to the Distributor and 50% to the Exhibitor.

Where the second feature is that of another Distributor, the same method was used and then the actual cost of the second feature deducted from the total film rental, except for TWO YANKS IN TRINIDAD, SINTOWN, BEAUTIFUL BUT BROKE, where the costs used are amounts agreed upon between us, the balance being Paramount film rental.

Where Screeno and Vaudeville were involved, the costs of these items were deducted from the gross before computing the film rental. In the instances of Equal Billing Shows, these were computed as agreed upon and are shown on various schedules rendered.

In the instance of any 'B' picture played with some other company's 'A' picture, agreed film rental is $20,000, less $100.00 for the Century Theatre and $300.00 for the Ziegfeld Theatre, if played after these theatres were closed. 'C' Pictures—$8,000.00 except those played after the Century Theatre closed in which $50.00 was deducted for each picture.

(1083)

State Theatre—Season 1940-1941, as per contract in existence. Seasons 1941-1942, 1942-1943 and 1943-1944 figured on the following basis: Twenty-five per cent of the receipts after deducting the actual cost of the stage show, stage hands and musicians until such time as the Exhibitor has 50% of the film rental as profit, the balance of the gross divided 50% to the Distributor and 50% to the Exhibitor. If, however, at 25% the Exhibitor does not get 50% of the film rental as profit, in that case it reverts down to a point where the Exhibitor has 50% of the film rental as profit, but in no event does the Distributor receive less than 20% as film rental.

Embassy Theatre—Season 1942-1943, at the agreed figure—$5,783.42.

Advertising—Reimbursement of $19,397.22 for extra advertising.

By the foregoing, settlement is made for all prior years to and including 1943-1944, it being understood however, that as to the years 1942-1943 and 1943-1944, the settlement is subject to your approval of the figures submitted for those two years.

(1084)

The summary sheet covering the four years is attached hereto.

Upon receipt of your confirmation of this letter, we will promptly forward check for the amount due you."

Judge Bright: What does all that mean?

Mr. Wright: That is what I want to examine the witness on.

Mr. Seymour: It obviously means a settlement of a controversy. I do not see what it has got to do with this case.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. The date of that letter is May 1945, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that it was not until 1945 that you had reached any final determination with the Loew's organization as to the terms on which they had been playing your pictures in the Metropolitan Circuit, or for a four-year period, is that right? A. For the years mentioned, that is correct.

Q. And as to that 1943-1944 season, you had been continuously negotiating with them about the playing of those pictures in the circuit for how long?

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I object to that question as incompetent, and for this reason: he imports into it the concept that there has been no prior agreement about playing pictures. If you will look at this correspondence, anybody looking at it will know that a controversy had arisen as to some prior agreements, and that they were settling the controversy; and yet these questions are framed in such a way as to give the impression to the Court that this was the first time they had ever agreed on anything.

Judge Hand: I will overrule your objection. Let him answer if he can.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

A. There had been a dispute with Loew about the terms under which they would play Paramount pictures. When I took over my present position——

Judge Goddard: Could you sit back and speak up so we can hear better?

The Witness: Pardon me.

A. (Continued) When I took over my present position in May of 1944, I found that the agreement had not been completed because the question of expense figures were involved, and the audit which our company was making of the expense figures submitted by Loew was not finished for a long period of time. I think it took them about a year and a half to complete the audit.

By Judge Hand:

Q. Whose pictures were being played? A. Paramount (1086) pictures in the Loew houses.

Q. All right. They were played under some thing which purported to be a contract, were they not? A. For the season 1940-1941, a contract had been completed and agreed upon, and for the succeeding seasons I don't know—— I think in one instance a contract was signed but it was subject to a review after the audit was finished, or to final settlement; rather. This was a very involved situation in so far as I was concerned. I not only had to make the deal for the current season's product, but I had to settle the deals that were incomplete because of the prior seasons because the audit had not been finished.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. My question called your attention specifically, Mr. Reagan, to the 1943-1944 season. Now, it is the fact, is it not, that prior to the date of that letter there was no written agreement of any kind between you and Loew with respect to those 1943-1944 pictures? A. I can't answer that without checking my files, Mr. Wright.

Q. Well, I had previously asked you if that exhibit contained the agreement which was made with respect to those pictures. Now, are there any other documents or aren't there which are part of it? A. I do not believe there are.

Q. Well, then, the answer to my question, the previous question, is Yes, isn't it; there was no prior agreement in (1087) writing? A. For 1943-1944?

Q. Yes. A. I don't believe there was.

Q. And those pictures for the 1943-1944 season began to be released when? A. To Loew's probably about the first of 1944.

Q. I mean released generally, for general exhibition? A. In October of 1943.

Q. And then they were played here in New York as they were released by your Paramount Theatre first-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then they were held up in so far as any further exhibition in New York was concerned during the time of these negotiations, isn't that correct? A. Yes, sir; we were negotiating continuously and we did not release the pictures to the succeeding runs during the period of our negotiations.

Q. So from the period of September, 1943, until May, 1943, none of your 1943-1944 releases were made available for exhibition to any subsequent-run exhibitor in the New York Metropolitan area, is that right? A. No, I do not think that is correct, Mr. Wright. You say from the period of September, 1943, until March of 1945, none of the pictures were played in the Loew Theatres, or were they made available to any of the subsequent-run theatres?

Judge Hand: And then what? What is your argument?

(1088)

Mr. Wright: I am simply pointing out that without any written agreement at all the relationships between Paramount and Loew are such that the entire availability of pictures to other exhibitors in the area is entirely dependent on Loew's and Paramount's negotiations with each other, and that until such time as they see fit to get together a deal, the entire distribution of the films in the area is blocked, and is controlled by them.

Judge Hand: Are you claiming now that there was a particular conspiracy between Paramount and Loew that did not involve the other people?

Mr. Wright: Oh, if the Court please, in each particular——

Judge Hand: How can they tie up all the other people because of this kind of a pre-existing conspiracy?

Mr. Wright: I just wanted to show that it is implicit in the nature of the prior-run arrangement that they make with each other that where there is a delay of this kind, or one of them does not choose to exhibit the pictures in their theatres, they simply do not become available to competitors; that by their agreements they actively and effectively control the entire subsequent exhibition of the film in the area; and that that control is arbitrarily exercised.

Judge Hand: We will now adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10.30.

(Adjourned to October 25, 1945, at 10.30 a.m.)

(1089)

New York, October 25, 1945;
10.30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

CHARLES M. REAGAN, resumed the stand.

Cross Examination Continued by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Reagan, you testified yesterday with reference to this Loew agreement marked in evidence as Exhibit 243. After that agreement was signed, then the 1943-44 pictures began to play in the Loew or Metropolitan Circuit here? A. No, sir. What is the date of the agreement?

Q. May 17, 1945. A. The 1943-44 season's pictures, the play-off was completed in February of 1945.

Q. When did the play-off of the 1943-44 pictures begin? A. I cannot give you the first date but I would assume along in October or November of 1943.

Q. In the Loew Circuit? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As of that time, while they were playing off, there then was no written agreement covering the terms on which they played at all, is that right? A. No, sir, there was no written agreement for the reason that the audit of the expense figures had not been completed and we therefore could not complete our agreement until after the audit had been finished.

(1090)

Q. And the terms of the agreement as finally reflected in these attached sheets were simply that you got so much playing time in the Loew Circuit here in exchange for a share of the profits of the Loew theatres in exhibiting the pictures, isn't that right?

Mr. Seymour: I must object to that as wholly argumentative.

Judge Hand: Let me hear the question.

Q. (Read.)

Mr. Seymour: Your Honors will recall that when I asked whether there was any profit-sharing, Mr. Wright objected to it. He is trying to interpret the arrangement.

Judge Hand: His objections were addressed to questions of yours which called for very sweeping conclusions. This is pretty well limited to a particular thing. I will allow it.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, may I suggest that the vice in that question is the use of the words "profits of the theatres." The exact method of compensation is defined in the agreement and it was profit on the exhibition of certain pictures, not of the theatres. There wasn't any pooling, as I read those agreements.

Judge Hand: That is a matter of argument.

(1091)

Mr. Wright: The question is——

Judge Hand: Go on, go on.

Q. Will you answer the question? A. Will you read the question?

Q. (Read). A. No, sir.

Q. I call your attention to this first column on the sheet, which lists the names of the features, is that right, that are licensed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the next column with the words "Number of Tenths" underneath it, what does that indicate? A. That is playing time.

Q. The number of tenths assigned after the name of each feature then represents the total playing time that was assigned to each feature in the circuit, is that right? A. That is the amount of playing time that we were successful in obtaining on each of the pictures, yes, sir.

Q. Then the next column is headed "Gross Receipts." That represents gross receipts of the circuit in exhibiting this particular picture? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Then the next column "Vaudeville Deduction," that represents the expenses of—a deduction for such expenses as were incurred in showing vaudeville in connection with the features? A. That is correct.

Q. The next column is headed——

(1092)

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, I have difficulty in hearing you over here. Will you bear that in mind, please?

Mr. Wright: I shall speak louder.

Q. Then the next column headed "Net Receipts" represents the gross less the vaudeville deductions? A. That is correct.

Q. And the next column entitled "House Expense", that represents the actual operating expenses of the circuit in playing the picture, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. Then the film rental, that represents what? A. That is the film rental that we received based upon the terms for which we had sold our pictures.

Q. And those terms are the terms set forth in the letter agreement here which describes the computation of the film rental as an amount which enables the exhibitor to earn a certain profit, is that correct? A. It enables the exhibitor to earn a certain profit to a point where we then get an increased percentage of the gross for film rental.

Q. And then your next column after "Film Rental" is headed "Tax." What does that mean? A. That is City of New York tax.

Q. Is that an allocated portion of the taxes imposed by (1093) the City on the theatres? A. That is, I believe, the gross sales tax.

Q. Imposed on the film rental? A. I am not sure whether it is on the film rental or whether it is on the admission.

Q. Well, you don't know whether you are referring to a tax on admissions there or on film rentals? A. No, sir, I don't know which that is.

Q. Well, in either event the figure opposite the picture is the amount of the tax allocated to the particular picture in the circuit's theatre? A. It is the amount of the tax that has to be paid on the particular picture, yes, sir.

Q. Then this next column headed "P. & L." What is that? A. That is the profit or loss that Loew made on each of the pictures that were licensed to them.

Q. And then the column headed "Percentage of Combined Film Rental as Profit." That means what? A. That shows the profit that they made.

Q. And then your next column headed "Percentage of Film Rental to Gross"? A. That shows the film rental that we earned based upon the deal that we made.

Q. And the "Cost of Second Feature"—what is in that column? A. That is what the cost of the second feature amounted to.

Q. That was where they played a double bill, and that (1094) was what was paid for the second feature, and that was deducted from the film rental, is that right? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Now, when you make a deal with an independent exhibitor—first, tell us how you use the term "independent exhibitor"? A. Independent exhibitor is an exhibitor who is not affiliated with any of the defendants in this case nor affiliated with any of the companies who produce and distribute pictures.

Q. Now, the average independent exhibitor is an operator of a few theatres, one to we will say four or five? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in dealing with that exhibitor you deal with him on your standard form of contract which requires him to play the pictures licensed in a particular theatre at a particular time, isn't that correct? A. In a particular—well, it may be one theatre or two theatres. There may be a choice of theatres in which you can play the pictures.

Q. But ordinarily your agreement will provide the particular time that the film plays and the theatre in which it plays, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And the admission price at which it will play? A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. And in connection with this agreement which I just handed you, Exhibit 243, there are no restrictions in that agreement as to what admission price Loew would charge in any theatre in that circuit, is there? A. There were no admission prices included in the agreement, because we assumed and knew they would be the same as they had been charging at the time the last contracts were signed.

Q. I didn't ask you why. I just asked you what the fact was. If you will just confine your answer to the question it will go faster. Now, there was also no requirement that Loew play any one of these pictures that are named here in any particular theatre in the circuit at any particular time, is that right? A. At the time the bookings were submitted we then considered whether the playing time was satisfactory and whether the list of theatres in which they wanted to play the pictures met with our approval.

Q. So that you just arranged the play dates as a matter of booking convenience between your booker and their booker, is that right? A. Oh, no, sir. We argued about the playing time and the theatres in which the pictures would play.

Q. In any event, all of the theatres in the circuit played those pictures before they were exhibited by any independent exhibitors who were operating theatres in opposition to any of the Loew theatres, isn't that right? A. They played them prior to the time that the theatres over which they had clearance played them, yes, sir.

Q. Well, there is not any clearance specified in this agreement at all, is there? A. No, sir, there is not.

Q. And such clearance as the Loew theatres got, then, was simply the product of the booking arrangements made between your booker and the Loew's bookers? A. No, sir. It was the clearance—they got the same clearance that had been in effect.

Q. You mean that priority that they enjoyed had been well established over a long period of time? A. We had agreed with them on the clearance that they would receive, yes, sir.

Q. And that, of course, is also true of the division of film products in the New York metropolitan area between the Loew Circuit and the RKO Circuit, isn't that right?

The Witness: Will you please repeat that question?

Q. (Read.) A. I don't believe I understand it, Mr. Wright.

Q. Well, you are familiar with the term the "Loew split"? Do you know what that means? A. Loew split?

Q. Yes, what is the Loew split in New York?

Mr. Goddard: You mean L-o-e-w split or l-o-w?
Mr. Wright: L-o-e-w.

(1097)

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. You never heard that term used in the trade? A. I know that the pictures that we sold to Loew are the pictures that—well, I don't know whether you would call Loew's the Loew's split or not, but that is whom we sell pictures to.

Q. Just answer my question.

Mr. Wright: Read the question again.

Q. (Read.) A. Some pictures in the subsequent-run houses in New York are sold to Loew and some are sold to RKO.

Q. And which are the companies that are in the Loew split?

Mr. Proskauer: I object to that as incompetent. It is assuming that there is something known as a Loew split or that it has any special significance.

Judge Hand: Overruled. We will give him a chance on cross-examination.

A. We sell pictures to Loew's subsequent-run theatres; Metro sell pictures to the Loew subsequent-run theatres; United Artists sell pictures to the Loew's subsequent-run theatres. I believe Columbia sells some pictures, and I also believe Universal does too, but I am not sure about the last. (1098)

Q. Half of Universal, isn't it? A. I am not sure about that.

Q. And then the RKO split consists of what? A. I don't know. I know they play RKO pictures, and I know they play Fox. I don't know what else they play.

Q. And Warner and half of Universal, isn't that right? A. Yes, they play Warner. I am not sure about the Universal.

Q. And as I understood your prior testimony, you do not contend that there is any competition whatsoever in so far as licensing your films are concerned among the theatres which are affiliated with the defendants, isn't that right? A. That is right.

Mr. Davis: Read that question. I missed part of it.

Q. (Read.)

The Witness: I don't believe I understand what you mean, Mr. Wright.

Q. What did you mean when you were talking about competition in your direct testimony?

Mr. Seymour: He talked about it in a lot of connections. I think he ought to specify.

The Witness: If you will be more specific I will try to answer.

Judge Hand: Overruled. Let him answer.

(1099)

The Witness: I don't know what you mean, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the last question?

Q. (Read.)

Mr. Leisure: When was he talking about it? The witness testified a full day. I don't know what Mr. Wright means.

Mr. Davis: I submit, your Honors, that where the witness asks the examiner to explain his question, it is the duty of the examiner to make his question plain to the witness if he wants an answer.

Mr. Wright: I am asking him to explain his direct testimony.

Q. Now, you are unable to explain what you meant when you used the word competition in your direct testimony; is that correct?

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, that is a very objectionable question.

Judge Hand: I will sustain that objection. You have got to point out what you are driving at. I don't know, and none of the Court knows.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, Mr. Reagan, that there is no effort made by the operators of theatres which are affiliated with one or more of these defendants to bid in opposition to one another for the privilege of licensing the exhibition (1100) of the films you distribute in their theatres? A. Well, I know that some of the defendant companies would like to play Paramount pictures——

Q. Well, would you just answer the question? A. I am trying to.

Mr. Wright: Well, listen to it.

Read it again.

Judge Hand: Let him try to answer it and then go after him again if you are not satisfied. Go on.

A. (Continuing) I know that some of the defendant companies in this suit would like to play Paramount pictures and have tried very hard to license them; but we have not in many instances sold pictures to them because we prefer to do business with the customers who we are at present selling.

Mr. Wright: Now read the question.

(Question read as follows: "Q. It is a fact, is it not, Mr. Reagan, that there is no effort made by the operators of theatres which are affiliated with one or more of these defendants to bid in opposition to one another for the privilege of licensing the exhibition of the films you distribute in their theatres?")

Mr. Wright: You can answer that yes or no, can't you?

A. No, that is not the fact, no, sir.

(1101)

Q. Now, in licensing films here in New York City, can you recall any time when the RKO Circuit made you an offer of any kind for the exhibition of your films in that circuit instead of in the Loew Circuit? A. No, sir, I cannot.

Q. Now, is the national gross of film rental that you receive on a picture a business secret?

Judge Hand: Are you arguing, really, that RKO did not come into the Loew Circuit at all? I do not understand you.

Mr. Wright: I am arguing, if the Court please, that there is a set pattern of distribution as among these defendants in which there is no room for competitive negotiation at all; that it is cut and dried and set——

Judge Hand: All right. You are arguing that RKO did not come in and obtain licenses at all for their theatres in the Loew Circuit?

Mr. Wright: No. If the Court please, each of them has a circuit in the New York Metropolitan—— Judge Hand: All right, that may perhaps be true of the others. Are you arguing what I have just suggested?

Mr. Wright: Frankly, I did not quite understand what you suggested.

Judge Hand: Are you arguing that RKO will (1102) not ask for or obtain Paramount pictures within the Loew Circuit for exhibition within the Loew Circuit?

Mr. Wright: Well, the asking, if any, would be for the exhibition of the pictures that the Loew's Circuit now uses, for exhibition in the RKO Circuit. The two circuits both operate in the same area here in New York; and I am suggesting that not only Loew but RKO and Paramount all understand perfectly well how and which is to play the pictures of each major distributor.

Now please read the last question.

(Question read as follows: "Q. Now, is the national gross of film rentals that you receive on a picture a business secret?")

A. We don't like to have it generally known, no, sir.

Q. Well, if an independent exhibitor came up and asked you for a statement as to exactly what any one of your pictures grossed in the United States, would you tell him? A. It would depend upon who it was. I might and I might not. I have in many instances, yes, sir.

Q. Would you give him an audited statement? Would you? A. Oh, no, I would not do that.
(1103)

Q. Generally, those gross figures are certainly not revealed by you as a matter of course to the trade press or to anyone else, are they? A. Not as a matter of course, no, sir.

Q. What are these telegraphic reports you get as to the grosses in certain theatres of other distributors' pictures? A. What are they?

Q. What theatres do you get those from? A. That is a list of theatres in which Paramount has an interest.

Q. What are the theatres, where are they, how many are there? A. I can't tell you the number, but they are pretty well scattered all over the country.

Q. Does it vary, does the list vary from day to day or week to week or have you a set group? A. No, the list is the same.

Q. Can you give us the list? You have a record of it somewhere, haven't you? A. Yes, we do have.

Q. Could you produce that for us? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: If you will bear with me just a moment I will give you a copy of the form.

Mr. Wright: I don't want a copy of the form. I want a copy of the list of the theatres. You understand.

Mr. Seymour: It is on there. Bear with us just a moment.

Q. While he is looking——

(1104)

Mr. Seymour: Just take a second.

Q. What do you do with those figures after you get them? A. I look at them, familiarize myself with the gross of all the pictures included in the list.

Q. Then what do you do with them? A. I send them to my division managers.

Mr. Seymour: I hand Mr. Wright a copy of the form.

Mr. Wright: Have that marked with the next plaintiff's exhibit number. Mark it as 375 for identification.

(Seven sheets marked Government's Exhibit 375 for identification.)

Q. You say after you have looked at the data on the list there—that is filled in and telegraphed to you daily, is that right? A. It is not telegraphed to me. It comes to me daily. It is compiled by the statistical department.

Q. And it is given to you; you get a report for each day's play? A. Yes, I get one of these every day.

Q. For every day in the year? A. Yes.

Q. For how long has that been going on? A. I have gotten these lists ever since I have been in New York.

Q. That is, you got them as a division manager here? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before you became the general sales manager? A. (1105) Yes.

Q. Then you turn them over, you send them to the division managers? A. And they go to file.

Q. Then they are sent to the files, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. When was this formula deal that you described in your direct testimony first worked out with the theatres in which Paramount is interested? A. I believe it was the 1940-41 season.

Q. That was at the time Mr. Agnew was general sales manager? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And which are the companies that you do business with on that formula deal basis? A. I do business on the formula deal basis with some of our own theatre affiliates and I also do business on the formula deal basis with the various companies that comprise the Fox circuit of theatres.

Q. Any others? A. No, sir, that is all.

Q. Which are the affiliates of yours that you do business on that basis with? A. I can't give you that from memory, but I can get the information for you.

Q. You have a list of those corporations that you could give us? A. Yes.

Q. A sample of that deal is this agreement that has been marked in evidence here as Exhibit 241 between your company and Evergreen Theatres Corporation? A. Yes.

Q. That is a Fox affiliate? A. Yes, sir.

(1106)

Q. And that is one of the Fox affiliates you refer to. Do you recall when it was that you first began to use that formula deal with Fox. A. I think that was in 1940-1941.

Q. You have used that with them ever since? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understood you, in originally negotiating that deal how was it that you arrived at the particular percentage formula that you used? I will withdraw that. Perhaps to make it clearer you had better read one of those agreements to the Court so they will have some idea of what is in there. I think it is only a page long, isn't it? The one I am going by, I think, is the first. A. Want me to read the whole thing?

Q. Yes, read whatever there is. A. "Agreement made this 5th of June"——

Judge Hand: Isn't that a very cumbersome way of presenting something?

Mr. Wright: It is rather difficult——

Judge Hand: Can't you state what it is without contradiction with the other people?

Q. What you have there is, isn't it, a sliding scale agreement whereby the exhibitor pays to you a stipulated percentage of the national gross of the feature as rental for the use of the films for a certain amount of playing time on certain runs in his circuit, isn't that correct? A. That is right, except the sliding scale feature, it is an actual percentage, a definite percentage of what we gross on a picture nationally.

Q. Yes, and the fixed percentage, then, also varies in accordance with the national gross, that is, you have a higher fixed percentage if you have a higher national gross and a lower fixed percentage if you have a lower national gross, isn't that right? A. We have three diffrent percentages, depending upon the type of picture.

Q. I understand you have, even on the one picture there, your agreement provides for a variation in the fixed percentage of the gross that the circuit pays depending upon what the picture does nationally, isn't that right? A. No, the fixed percentage is the same.

Q. I call your attention to page 3 of the agrement here, where it says, "No. 1: In excess of $1,250,000, the exhibitor shall pay as a license fee for such photoplay .74778 per cent of such total license fees; 2, equal to or in excess of $500,000, but not in excess of $1,250,000, the exhibitor shall pay as a license fee for such photoplay .70115 per cent of such total license fee; 3, if less than $500,000 the exhibitor shall pay as a license fee for such photoplay .65431 per cent of such total license fee."

Well, now, the first figure referred to in each case there is the national gross of that particular picture, isn't that right? (1108)

A. That is correct.

Q. And the percentage that is paid does decrease as the national gross decreases, isn't that right? A. That is right. I misunderstood your question. This percentage of .74778 applies on any picture that grosses in excess of this amount.

Q. That is, you apply the same formula to all pictures, isn't that right, that you license? A. Yes, sir, that formula that percentage may change from time to time and does.

Mr. Caskey: May I hear that last answer?

(Record read.)

Mr. Caskey: On each picture? This contract is for one picture, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: There is no question about that. I am asking him whether he uses the same formula that is in that contract for each picture or whether he uses a different formula each time for each picture.

Q. What is the fact of that? A. We may use the same percentage for five or six or ten pictures, and we may change the percentage.

Q. That is, you handle them in brackets, is that right, one set of percentages for one group and then a different one for another group? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Goddard: You mean group of pictures or distributors?

(1109)

The Witness: No, these are pictures, individual pictures released by Paramount.

Judge Goddard: Yes, I understood that, but when you referred to group, you referred to group of distributors or group of pictures?

Mr. Wright: No, group of pictures.

Judge Bright: As I understand it, that is the rental price for those particular pictures in this particular circuit in place of a percentage of the gross of the exhibitor?

The Witness: No; in place of the percentage of the gross of a picture for each theatre, we agree upon them paying a percentage of what we do nationally for each theatre that is included in this deal, from what we do nationally. Let me start over and see if I can make it clear. If we gross a million dollars on a picture nationally, the theatres that are included in this contract pay us a percentage for those theatres of whatever their share of that million dollars is. Is that clear?

Judge Bright: That is in place of their paying a percentage of their particular gross in each theatre?

The Witness: Yes, sir, they pay what we can do nationally on a picture, they pay a percentage of that.

Judge Hand: So, instead of having a percentage on the transaction with that particular exhibitor, you allocate the burden among all the exhibitors?

(1110)

The Witness: They pay——

Judge Hand: You fix some kind of percentage or percentages of the——

The Witness: Of our national gross.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Q. Now, under that agreement, of course, there is no final settlement on the picture until perhaps two years or a year and a half after the picture is first released and played, isn't that right? A. No final settlement, no, sir.

Q. Because you provide for an audited statement there at the end after all runs have been exhausted throughout the country? A. We furnish a statement showing what we finally gross on a picture.

Judge Bright: There is no way of anticipating it?

The Witness: Yes, they pay—we estimate what we thought we grossed at the time they begin to play the picture, and if that is $20,000, they pay that $20,000 over a period of 17 weeks, and then when we finally furnish a certified statement of what the gross is, we adjust the payment upward or downward.

Q. In so far as determining what the film rental is for any particular theatre in the circuit, that is something that is never ascertainable until long after the picture is played, is that right? A. Well, I cannot ever tell what film rental is charged to any individual theatre.

(1111)

Q. That is right, even when you finish, you simply have —— A. They pay me based upon a percentage of what I do nationally with the picture.

Q. And how that rental is allocated among the various theatres in the circuit, I suppose, is entirely a concern of the exhibitors? A. Yes.

Q. You have nothing to do with that? A. Yes, I don't know how they do that.

Q. In that series of contracts you have there for the 1943-1944 season on this formula deal, what, if any, provisions are there as to when and at what admission prices the circuit plays those films? A. I am not sure without looking at the contract. (Examining papers.)

Wil you ask that question again, please?

(Question read.)

A. Well, the question of when they will play them is governed by this clause, "The clearance and availability with respect to the theatres licensed hereunder shall be the same as are in effect at the date hereof unless otherwise noted on schedule A attached hereto."

(1112)

Q. All that you have on Schedule A is just the name of a run opposite the theatres, is that right? A. It says that the clearance and availability shall be the same as is in effect at the time the agreement is signed unless we change it by a notation on Schedule A, which is attached.

Q. I understand that. Now will you look at Schedule A and answer the question I just asked you? A. Schedule A does not list the clearance and availability.

Judge Bright: I thought the question was first aimed at the admission price.

Mr. Wright: That is also included in my question.

Q. I take it there is nothing there refers to what admission prices shall be charged? A. There is nothing in the contract with respect to admission prices but, again, the same admission prices apply, it is understood, that were in effect at the time that the contract was signed.

Q. That is simply an oral understanding between you and Fox? A. It is oral, if it is not in here.

Mr. Seymour: Do you mind inquiring, just so the Court will know—you haven't shown the Court the exhibit—whether the standard regular form of contract is annexed to those papers? It is, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Q. I take it every time you make a deal with anybody you always annex the standard form and then superimpose (1113) whatever——

Mr. Seymour: I mean Paramount standard form.

A. It is a part of this contract, yes.

Q. No question about that, but in the standard form there are no minimum admission prices filled in, are there? A. No, there is not.

Q. And I take it whatever is in the printed form is, of course—which may be in conflict with whatever you have got in the typewritten rider—is superseded by the rider? A. That is correct.

Q. In selling the opposition to that circuit, the independent opposition, that standard form is used and you fix the minimum admission prices and the times when those pictures are to be played by the opposition, isn't that right? A. Well, in many instances the admission price is included, in some it is left out.

Q. When it is left out, you expect them to maintain——. A. The same admission prices.

Q. —the customary price? A. That they have been charging, as we do in the case of Fox.

Q. In the case of Fox, however, in the event that they decide for some reason or other to lower the admission price or change the policy, there is nothing in the contractual relations between you as expressed in that exhibit which would prevent them from doing so, isn't that right? A. There isn't anything in this contract that would prevent them from doing so, but if they were to do so, and it was injurious to our business, we certainly would stop it.

Q. That would be done by agreement with Fox? A. We would try and get them to correct it immediately, and if they did not, we would not continue to make a deal where we thought our business was being injured.

Q. And the extent to which corrections are made, I suppose, is just like any other modification that you may make in any—or any adjustment of any agreement—comes down to a matter of, ultimately, the bargaining strength of the parties, does it not? A. It is a matter of negotiation, yes, sir.

Q. What happens under that form of agreement if during the time it is operative Fox picks up some new theatres or, let us say, drops some? A. Well, if they add theatres, we increase the percentage. If they drop some, we decrease the percentage.

Q. On that again, although you have nothing about that in the agreement itself, that is just your practice? A. Yes, because these agreements only cover one, two or three pictures—five at the most.

Q. Yes, but they are effective for a period of as long as a year and a half, isn't that right?

Mr. Caskey: That is objected to, if your Honor please.

(1115)

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Judge Bright: Did you answer?

The Witness: Will you read the question?

Q. (Question read.) A. No, they are effective only for the period of—only for the pictures included in each agreement.

Q. But in order to liquidate the contract, that cannot be done until after the period of at least a year and a half, isn't that right? A. The final settlement cannot be made——

Q. Yes. A. —until after eighteen months.

Q. There is one other thing I want to call your attention to on that agreement: will you look at the schedule, there in the first-run theatres in Seattle. A. Yes.

Q. That lists how many theatres where the picture can be played first-run in Seattle? A. Fifth Avenue, one; Paramount, two; Orpheum, three; Palomar, four; Roosevelt, five; Music Box, six; Blue Mouse, seven; Music Hall, eight. That is for the first-run and the move-over.

Q. Yes; and according to that agreement the picture can be played by Fox in all of those eight or any one of them before it becomes available to subsequent-run exhibitors, isn't that right? A. It could play in any of them or in the (1116) move-over, yes, sir.

Q. Or in all?

Mr. Caskey: Just a moment, please. Will you read the previous question and answer.

(Question and answer read.)

Q. Or in all? A. Yes, sir, it could play in all of them, but it would not be practical.

Q. Well, I suppose that would depend upon what Fox wanted to do with it, isn't that right? A. It would depend upon the box office drawing power.

Judge Bright: You mean play in all of them simultaneously or consecutively?

The Witness: They could play simultaneously or they could play on a move-over policy.

Q. And the judgment as to what should be done there is Fox's, not yours, isn't that right, according to the agreement? A. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Wright: Will you mark this for identification with the next Government exhibit number?

(Marked Government's Exhibit 376 for identification.)

Q. I will hand you this list marked Government's Exhibit 376 for identification, with the heading "Paramount Franchises with Exhibitor," and the date, October 1, 1945, prepared by Charles Brouda, and ask you if that is the list you used to refresh your memory in testifying yesterday (1117) about what franchises had been made with independents and what with affiliated companies? A. I was advised that the number that I gave yesterday of franchises that had been made was the correct number. Whether that was prepared from this list, I don't know.

Q. Who is Mr. Brouda? A. Mr. Brouda works for—he is a lawyer, I believe.

Mr. Seymour: He is in the legal department of Paramount, Mr. Wright.

Q. You were not given the data as to which particular accounts were supposed to be independent and which were supposed to be affiliated; you were just given numbers and you testified as to the numbers, is that right? A. Yes; I was assured that those were the numbers, yes, sir.

Judge Hand: Do you and the defendants differ seriously as to this particular thing you are on now?

Mr. Wright: I do not see how there can be any particular difference of fact. I was going to offer it in evidence but first I wanted to simply clear up some apparent discrepancies as to theatres which are listed here as independents, which is difficult for us to understand why they were classified as independents, in view of Paramount's or an affiliate's or another distributor's interests which are involved. That is what I wanted to ascertain. There is no need to bother the witness with it if we can do it some other way.

Mr. Seymour: Of course we are perfectly willing to sit down with Mr. Wright and his staff and go over the thing and get an agreement on the correct facts. These were prepared from the files by a lawyer from the legal department, which we have made available to Mr. Wright. There is no mystery about it at all.

Mr. Wright: I submit this all could have been avoided if we did not have the witness put on here to testify to things about which he obviously does not have any firsthand knowledge. He undertook to make some sweeping statements about the franchises, and I wanted to get the correct facts in the record.

Judge Hand: Can it be avoided now, or do you want to examine him?

Mr. Wright: My only purpose in examining him is simply to show that he did not know what he was talking about. If that has been established, we are perfectly willing to sit down and go over the list and get an accurate list put in.

Mr. Seymour: I hardly think that when a witness is told by the fellow who prepares a list, how it adds up, that you can say that the witness does not know what he is talking about.

By Mr. Wright:

(1119)

Q. Well, you had no knowledge, did you, at the time you gave the testimony as to what the precise interest in the theatres involved in those numbers were or were not, isn't that right? A. I was informed that we had a certain number of independent franchises, a certain number——

Q. And that is all you were told about? A. I did not have the detail, no, sir.

Q. Now, as to this testimony that you gave with respect to your present first-run outlets in these cities over a hundred thousand population, were you testifying there from any personal knowledge or was that again just a question of repeating something that had been told to you by the Legal department? A. No, I know the situation pretty well in those towns of a hundred thousand or over.

Q. Well, calling your attention to the town of Yonkers, New York, I think you testified that was one of the towns, you stated, which was among those which were excluded because you licensed a Paramount theatre there, is that right? Do you recall that? A. Yonkers was one of the towns, I believe, in which Paramount is interested.

Q. I call your attention to the admission of facts which was previously—first, has there been a change there between the 1943-1944 season and now? A. I am not sure about that. I do not believe there has been.

Q. Well, your admission of facts has this statement as to (1120)

1943-1944:

> "32 feature motion pictures were licensed to RKO-Proctor Corporation for exhibition first-run in Loew's Yonkers Theatre."

Is that right, or is there an error here? A. I can't answer that without examining my records.

Q. I take it then that none of the testimony that you gave can be regarded as—certainly not as accurate as records that you have got available in the New York office; isn't that right?

Mr. Seymour: I object to any such question as that. If there is any error about Yonkers, I take the responsibility, because I excluded arbitrarily certain ones in asking him about this yesterday, and I read a list which I believed to be correct. If there is a difference on Yonkers, we will straighten it out; but to base what a lawyer excluded from examination—to base on that a statement that he did not know what he was talking about on anything, seems to me slightly extreme.

Q. As I recall the testimony, you read into the record the list of towns in which you said you licensed Paramount theatres; that is, those affiliated with Paramount, isn't that right? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: I read into the record the list.

Q. Did you have any independent knowledge on that, or (1121)
was all you knew about it that that was the list that was supplied by counsel; is that right? A. That was the list of theatres which was supplied by counsel in which we were interested.

Mr. Caskey: Just a moment. I call your Honors' attention to the fact that in the trial brief on page 6 it is stated that Paramount has an interest in a theatre in Yonkers.

Mr. Wright: Do you want to testify?

Mr. Caskey: That is a statement by the Government.

Judge Hand: If there is nothing more going to be done about this, all right. But if you have got something here that you know can be straightened out by a little work between you, what is the use of taking pages of the record showing that some witness does not know all the details which were stated? What is it for, to discredit him generally as to his other conclusions, or what?

Mr. Wright: No. I want to get the facts into the record. Now there were a number of discrepancies between his testimony and our data, based on these admissions of fact, some of which Judge Bright noted. I wanted to get the facts in the record. I had assumed that the most accurate data the company had with respect to this first-run distribution was what they furnished us in the form of admissions of fact. Now he has testified to certain data which was reported to us in the admissions, and there are discrepancies; and I do not like to take up the time of the Court and the witness in straightening out discrepancies; I would be glad to do it with counsel; but I do not like to leave the record in a position where he has given this positive testimony as to what happened there, if it is understood we are going to be furnished with an accurate list as to what this first-run distribution is——

Mr. Seymour: I do not understand why all this fussing around. I excluded arbitrarily 48 cities because I was advised in those 48 cities Paramount licensed theatres in which it had an interest, first-run. Yonkers was one of those cities. I examined the witness about 44 cities. I did not examine him about the 48. If there is a dispute between the Government and ourselves as to one of those cities or several of those cities as to which I excluded, I will sit down and talk about it; but we do not need to take your Honors' time, which we know is precious, arguing about it here.

Mr. Wright: There are discrepancies as to other cities about which he testified.

Mr. Seymour: Why don't you ask about those?

Judge Hand: Go on.

Mr. Wright: I have no desire to ask about it; but if counsel insists I do it that way, I have no alternative.
(1122-A)

Mr. Seymour: I have just suggested the opposite.

Mr. Wright: Now, will you supply us with an accurate list of the information that was testified to yesterday in all of the cities?

Mr. Seymour: We will reverify the information which was testified to yesterday, and if there is any change we shall advise you.
(1123)

Judge Hand: Now, we have been going an hour and a half, and a great deal of time has just been occupied by this thing which, as I understood, you were going to correct if there was any correction to be made yesterday, and we are getting kind of sick of this futility, because it won't do anything except to show that there may be some mistakes which you apparently mean to agree about. We cannot just sit here and listen to stuff which makes a confused record which you cannot understand at all except when you go over it say it is inconclusive as to everything.

Mr. Wright: I agree with your Honor; but when a witness is put on the stand to testify to these generalities, and counsel refuses to produce the records instead of the witness's testimony, it leaves us, as I say, no other alternative.

Judge Hand: No. He did not refuse to produce.

Mr. Seymour: There is no such thing. Your Honors have a ton of stuff.

Judge Hand: Don't get up and argue about that. If you are going to make this adjustment, why, make it. If not, let him go on and just drag around here about what this witness has said, and we won't have any idea about anything except that this is an uncertain and changing world.

(1124)

Mr. Seymour: I want to assure your Honors that we are ready to sit down and discuss this, as we have spent the bulk of our time for the last year trying to help the Government out on its side of the case.

Judge Hand: I don't doubt your diligence.

Mr. Wright: We have no further cross-examination.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. With reference to this Fox agreement about which you were examined, Mr. Reagan, will you tell us the situation that existed as between Fox and the Paramount distribution department at the time the agreement was worked out originally?

Judge Bright: That is this formula?

Mr. Seymour: That is right.

A. I had been negotiating with the various Fox companies trying to work out a satisfactory deal for my pictures. Those negotiations had gone on for a matter of months. As a matter of fact, I made a trip to all of the Fox division offices where I had meetings and tried to sell my pictures; and I was unsuccessful in making the kind of a deal that was satisfactory to me; and finally I hit upon the idea of working out a formula deal with them the same as I had worked out with some of my own theatre affiliates, and finally was successful in doing that.

(1125)

Q. Now, do you consider that that formula deal gives Paramount as good or a better film revenue from various groups of Fox theatres as you could have worked out on an individual basis?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is wholly immaterial what he considers in that connection.

Judge Hand: Let me hear the question.

(Question read.)

Judge Hand: Overruled. Let him answer.

A. I do not think I could possibly have gotten the film rentals that I am getting under this formula deal by selling the Fox affiliates under straight terms or percentage terms. I have gotten the highest percentage of increase in my film rentals from the Fox Circuit since this formula deal has been in effect of anybody with whom I am doing business.

Q. Now, at the time the formula deal was originally negotiated on the first group of pictures, did you have any knowledge or information as to what negotiations or arrangements were being made all over the country by the theatres in which Paramount had an interest for the showing of Fox pictures? A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did any such negotiations or arrangements at any time have anything to do with the fixing of the percentage or any other phase of the formula deal with Fox? A. It did not.

Q. Now, Judge Hand asked you a question about the formula deal, and I want to be sure that you answered it completely. I think Judge Hand understood that the effect of this percentage arrangement with Fox might somehow burden other exhibitors so that in some way they were carrying a part of the Fox rental. Now, is that the effect of the formula deal? A. Oh no——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is a pure matter of argument as to what the effect is.

Mr. Seymour: I think when the Court asks a question I should try to help get an answer.

Judge Hand: Overruled. Go ahead.

A. (Continuing) No. The income from the Fox theatres or the film rental from the Fox theatres that were earned is dependent upon what we gross in the other theatres in the United States. It has nothing to do with anything other than that.

Q. So that if a picture is more successful nationally you get more out of Fox? A. That is correct. The more I can gross on a picture nationally the greater the film rental is that I get from Fox.

Q. Now, do you think that the percentage that you fixed in the formula deal represents less than Fox's normal or fair share of the total national gross? A. Well, it represents a (1127) substantial increase over what I was getting prior to the time that I made the formula deal.

Q. Does it have the effect of in any way burdening or putting any special handicap on other exhibitors? A. No, sir, it does not.

Judge Hand: I do not see why you necessarily get more than you would get under a straight percentage deal.

The Witness: Well, actually that is what has happened because if a circuit of theatres paid me a certain percentage of my national gross on a picture prior to the time that I made the formula deal, when

I made it I increased that percentage. Let us say it was one per cent. When I made the formula deal I increased that to more than one per cent. Then the more that I could get for my pictures nationally, the better my film rental income is, the greater the film rental is from Fox; and that has been a very substantial increase, better, I am sure, than I could have gotten if I had sold Fox at the normal or straight percentage terms.

Judge Bright: Does this formula deal only apply to this Evergreen Circuit?

The Witness: No. We sell the formula deal to all of the separate affiliates of Fox, of which there are about five, I believe.

Q. And a separate formula deal with each one? A. Yes; (1128) we do have a separate percentage.

Q. And a separate contract with respect to each group of pictures? A. The percentage is different, and the contract is separate with each affiliate.

Q. And in each case the regular form of Paramount license contract is included among the papers making up the final terms? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Judge Bright: How did you arrive at the percentages of those film receipts which you apply to the several formula contracts?

The Witness: Well, for instance, let us take as an illustration the Evergreen Theatres: If they had paid me for my pictures the season prior to the time I made the formula deal one per cent of my national gross on those pictures, I used that one per cent and added an increase to it, and then they were to pay me that increased percentage of what I did from that time on, what I did with my pictures, what I grossed with my pictures from that time on.

Q. Now, turning to the Loew papers that Mr. Wright examined you about: Are they before you? A. No, sir, they are not.

Judge Bright: What is Exhibit 376?

Mr. Wright: That was a list of Paramount franchises prepared by Mr. Brouda dated October 1, 1945.

(1129)

Judge Bright: May I see it?

Mr. Wright: Yes (handing). I do not think that is in evidence. It is merely for identification, as I understand it.

Mr. Seymour: We are to check it over with Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: Oh yes.

Q. Now, are you familiar with the developments and course of negotiations with Loew which resulted in the letter or agreement which is marked in evidence as Government's Exhibit 243? A. I am.

Q. And will you tell us what those developments were and what the negotiations were that led up to the making of that agreement? A. We were dissatisfied with the film rental income that we were getting from the Loew theatres in New York. The terms that we had been receiving for our pictures we were not satisfied with. Loew contended that they could not pay more. We insisted that they should pay more, and finally we began an examination of their books to determine their expense. That audit covered a long period of time.

Q. Do you remember who conducted the audit? A. It was conducted by us by some of my statisticians or auditors.

Q. Does that relate only to the New York City theatres? (1130)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you insist on that audit? A. I did, because the point at which they were willing to pay me an increased percentage of the gross receipts for film rental was too high—I thought it was too high. They said they could not lower it because their expense amounted to so many dollars. I said, "Well, then, let us audit the expense and see whether the figures that you use are correct." That audit started in December of 1931.

Q. Not 1931. A. Pardon me?

Q. Not 1931. A. 1941, excuse me. It ran until some time in 1944. We were completing the play-off of the 1943-44 pictures. We had still not settled all of our differences, and I said, "Gentlemen, we are not going to play any more pictures starting with the 1944-45 season without our having an agreement on the terms on which those pictures will play settled before we begin to play them."

We began our negotiations—and we still had the settlement to make of these previous years—we began the negotiations in the fall of 1944, and I submitted to Mr. Moscowitz, the buyer, a proposition for my pictures.

Q. Now, was that proposition accepted by Mr. Moscowitz? A. It was not.

Q. Was that submitted in writing? A. It was.

Q. And the upshot was finally the agreement that is in (1131) evidence, is it? A. No; this agreement covers the pictures that had played in the circuit prior to the 1944-45 season.

Q. Oh yes. A. I had to make this settlement also because the question of the point at which we would get an increased percentage was in dispute, and that could not be determined until after the audit was completed.

Q. Was there a time, then, when you refused to allow Loew to show Paramount pictures? A. There was a period from the completion of the pictures in the 1943-44 season, which was in January of 1945—that is, when the last picture started to play in the Loew Circuit from the 1943-44 season—until May of 1945 before a picture for the 1944-45 season started to play.

Q. I show you this document dated October 26, 1944, and ask if this is a copy of the proposal which you made to Loew at that time in connection with the proposed adjustment? A. It is.

Mr. Seymour: I offer that. I am sorry I haven't got any copies, but I will provide the Government and the Court with copies tomorrow, if I may.

Is there any objection, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Do you mind if I finish reading it?

Mr. Seymour: No.

Mr. Wright: I have no objection.

(1132)

Q. Now, following the making of the settlement agreement with Loew's, which is in evidence, and to which is annexed one of the standard forms of Paramount contracts, did you in June 1945 complete negotiations and execute contracts for the showing of Paramount pictures in Loew theatres in New York? A. We did. I do not think it was June, though. I think we completed our negotiations in May for the first combination.

Q. But was the result of that 12 contracts involving individual pictures for exhibition in the Loew theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And aside from any reference to the particular picture, and perhaps special terms, is this contract with refefence to "Frenchman's Creek" in the same general form as the remaining contracts? A. It is.

Q. So that it would be a fair sample of the remaining contracts? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Seymour: I offer that.

Mr. Wright: May I ask why these were not produced with the others when we asked for the contracts for the 1943-44 season?

Mr. Seymour: These are not for the 1943-44 season.

Mr. Wright: Oh, these are for the 1944-45? I beg your pardon.

(1133)

Mr. Seymour: I am only offering one of them. They are all substantially alike. If the Government wants us to offer all of them or offer the rest, we would be glad to do so.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection to this going in. We would like to look at the others, of course.

Mr. Seymour: Yes. We will provide copies for the Court and the Government tomorrow, if the Court please.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-3.)

Q. So there won't be any doubt—I may have made a misstatement when I asked the question, Mr. Reagan—these are contracts for individual pictures of the season and not for the season, isn't that so? A. They are for individual pictures released during the season.

Q. During the season? A. Yes.

Q. But they do not cover a full season? A. Oh, no, they cover individual pictures.

(1134)

Q. Has Paramount considered from time to time whether it would be desirable for it to exhibit its pictures in some other theatres than the Loew Theatres? A. We have.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think that is objectionable. I do not see what materiality it has here as to what he considered or he did not consider in that connection.

Mr. Seymour: I think it is very material. With this contract being offered and the imputation that somehow there is something peculiar about it, it seems to me the business judgment of Paramount as to why it did what it did is relevant.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

The Witness: Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

A. We have.

Q. From what point of view was that question considered by Paramount? A. From the point of view of where we could get the most film rental.

Q. Did you reach any conclusion on that subject? A. We did.

Q. What did you conclude? A. We concluded that we could get more film rental for our pictures by selling the Loew theatres than we could by selling anyone else.

Q. Why did you feel you could not get as substantial film revenue from other theatres as you could from Loew? A. Because there isn't any other combination of theatres that can gross as much money or pay as much money for film rental as the Loew group in existence in New York. We investigated the situation very thoroughly, we made a number of surveys, made trips around the City of New York, Mr. Owen, our branch manager, Mr. Randall, and myself, trying to find out and learn if there was a possibility of selling our pictures any other way or any way that would return a greater film rental than we got from Loew. We came to the conclusion that there was not because we not only would lose the Loew business, but if we tried to replace that business with other theatres that we are now serving, we would lose that business also.

Q. Referring to the period when you refused to release pictures to Loew, while you were still negotiating settlement, why didn't you release those pictures subsequent-run without prior showing in Loew theatres? A. Because I was negotiating with Mr. Moskowitz from day to day and hoped to conclude our negotiations, and I did not want to lose that revenue.

Q. Could you have received anything like the substantial revenue if you had released them on second-run or subsequent-run? A. No, sir, we could not.

Q. You said, I think, and the papers indicate, that there (1136) was no written agreement for the 1943-44 season? A. That is correct.

Q. Was there any oral agreement? A. There was an agreement that we would make a deal based upon the results that came from the audit which would enable us to determine the place at which we would get—the point at which we would get an increased percentage.

Q. In the meantime, they simply played the pictures? A. Played the pictures and made a payment on account.

Q. That was subject to final adjustment in connection with the final audit or after the final audit, is that right? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Have there been occasions when you had disputes or controversies with independent exhibitors? A. There have been.

Q. When you have allowed them to play the pictures pending final adjustment of your controversy or your disputes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that happened frequently? A. Yes, it happens every day.

Q. Was the general nature of the arrangement for film rental with Loew a percentage to a split? A. It was.

Q. And the dispute was as to where the split should come? A. That is correct.

Q. Are percentage arrangements with split used by Paramount in distributing its pictures to independent exhibitors? A. They are.
(1137)

Q. And are they also used for licensing its pictures in theatres in which other defendants have an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they common percentage arrangements? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do other distributors also distribute on the basis of a percentage to a split? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked something about what Mr. Wright described as Loew's split in New York. Is it correct that—have you heard that term used in connection with the fact that the product of some distributors is played in Loew's theatres? A. Some is played in Loew's, some played in RKO.

Q. So far as Paramount Pictures are concerned, are they played in Loew theatres? A. They are.

Judge Bright: In Loew's theatres only?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: In Greater New York?

The Witness: Yes, sir; or there may be an isolated instance where we play pictures in an RKO theatre.

Q. That does not apply to all runs, does it? A. You mean are Paramount pictures only played in Loew theatres?

Q. Yes. A. Oh, no.

Q. They are only played in Loew theatres on what run?
(1138)
A. They play in Loew theatres following the completion of the first-run in New York and Brooklyn.

Q. And then in—— A. Then they play in subsequent-theatres following that.

Q. And they play in all sorts of subsequent-run theatres? A. All that we can sell.

Q. So it is only that intermediate run, or whatever you call it, in which they are played only in the Loew theatres? A. We sell to Loew rather than to RKO, who is Loew's competitor for those runs.

Q. Is the selling or the licensing of Paramount pictures to Loew in that particular run, or those particular runs, and the licensing of the product of other distributors either to Loew or to RKO, the result of any understanding or agreement between the distributors? A. No, it is not.

Mr. Wright: Same objection.

Judge Bright: There must be an understanding between some of the distributors, isn't there?

Mr. Seymour: It is the result of an understanding between——

Judge Bright: I am asking him.

The Witness: Only—I don't know what the understanding is with respect to the others. I know in our case we would prefer to sell Loew's because we think we can earn more film rental there.

(1139)

Judge Bright: As the result of an understanding because of this so-called Loew split in Greater New York.

The Witness: You have to sell either Loew or RKO. Some sell Loew.

Judge Bright: Why do you have to sell?

The Witness: Because there are no other theatres that can return the revenue that those two groups of theatres can return.

Judge Hand: Well, you have an understanding that this will be your course of business with Loew?

The Witness: Well, I have tried to sell Loew because I think we can get more film rental selling Loew than I could if I sold RKO.

Judge Bright: What has this so-called Loew's split go to do with that?

The Witness: I don't know. I don't know what points.

Q. What I was inquiring about—I am afraid I did not frame my question correctly—was this: Is the fact that Paramount licenses its pictures to Loew in the runs in which it licenses them a result of any agreement between distributors other than Paramount and Loew? A. No, sir, it is not.

Q. Well now, is it what I understand to be the fact that following the run of the Paramount pictures in Loew theatres, they are shown in all kinds of subsequent-run theatres in New York? A. Yes, sir, that is correct.
(1140)

Q. Is that true of the other pictures which play in Loew theatres, as far as you know? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is it at that stage, when they are playing in the subsequent-runs indiscriminately, among all kinds of theatres, that they are described as the Loew split, meaning that they were pictures that played in the Loew theatres? A. That is a good description, yes, sir. It did not occur to me. Pictures that played the Loew theatres are talked about as the Loew split, by the subsequent-run exhibitor, and the pictures that played the RKO theatres are talked about as the RKO split by the subsequent-run exhibitors.

Q. Have you ever heard the expression used in that connection before I used it? A. Yes, sir. That did not occur to me. That is correct.

Q. Judge Bright asked you yesterday about extended runs, and I would like to be sure that we have got that adequately covered so that his question is answered. What type of pictures are usually played on extended runs? A. The most successful box office attractions.

Q. What is it that determines whether a picture shall have extended run? A. Its gross at the box office.

Q. Does the playing, from your experience in the business, does the playing of a picture on an extended run have a detrimental or a beneficial effect on the subsequent-run exhibitor? A. Well, a picture——
(1141)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he is not competent to give testimony as to what it does to the subsequent-run exhibitor. He is not a subsequent-run exhibitor and has no interest in it.

Mr. Seymour: I think he can give it and your Honors can weigh it.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. A picture that has an extended-run in the first-run theatres also does a better business in the subsequent-run theatres because the pictures that do well first-run also do well in the subsequent-run, because they are successful box office attractions.

Q. Is it usual for the first-run theatre playing on an extended-run to continue its advertising during the period of the run? A. They do.

Q. And does the advertising by the first-run benefit subsequent-runs? A. Yes, sir, I believe it does. I am sure it does.

Q. Would the continuance of the advertising over a longer period benefit them more greatly? A. The longer the first-run, the more successful the picture is in the subsequent-runs.

(1142)

Q. Is it your observation that the more people who see pictures or who see advertising about pictures, the more that want to see them? A. More that want to see them.

Q. I asked you yesterday, Mr. Reagan, about the special attractions which had been distributed by Paramount at advanced admission prices, and you mentioned, I think, "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Reap the Wild Wind"—— A. And "Northwest Mounted Police."

Q. (Continued) ——and "Northwest Mounted Police." And I think I asked you a general question as to whether—or perhaps Judge Bright did—as to whether the same advanced admission price was required of all theatres, whatever their run, and was there any difference in that regard as between those pictures. A. Well, in the case of "For Whom the Bell Tolls" it played at an admission price of 75 cents for matinees and 75 cents and $1.10 at night wherever it played. That was in a limited number of first-run theatres. It did play in a few subsequent-run theatres, but not many, a few here in New York and I think a few in Los Angeles.

In the case of "Northwest Mounted Police" and "Reap the Wild Wind," the admission prices were increased about 10 to 15 per cent in each theatre over what they normally charged.

(1143)

Q. So that the existing differential between the admission prices for various runs was maintained but there was some slight advance in admission prices all along the line? A. That is correct.

Q. And eventually all those pictures were played at regular admission prices? A. They were. They were all released at regular admission prices after the advanced admission price engagement.

Q. Could you tell us approximately how many pictures the average first-run theatre in the average city requires for an annual program? A. Well, that varies depending upon the size of the city. Depending upon the size, they may use 104 pictures, they may use 70, or may use 50. In an important city, probably one picture a week or fifty a year, or two.

Q. There are some theatres like Paramount in New York which play a picture for a number of weeks? A. Well, they only use 10 or 12 pictures a year.

Q. But dealing with smaller communities than New York, even communities of 500,000 or so, does the first-run theatre usually play for more than a week on the average, first-run? A. Well, again, that depends upon the size of the city. It may be——

Q. In any event—— A. A theatre may play five or six (1144) pictures a year for a period of two weeks and the rest for a week in a town of 500,000.

Q. In any event, is it fair to say that many first-run theatres require 52 or more pictures a year? A. Many of them do, yes, sir.

Q. And some require substantially more than 52? A. That is correct.

Q. How about subsequent-run theatres, on the average do they generally require substantially more than 52 pictures a year? A. They do.

Q. Do many of them require more than 104 pictures a year? A. Some of them make two changes, three changes a week; some of them run double bills, requiring 156 to 204 pictures a year.

Q. Do you know what is the largest number of pictures distributed annually by any distributor of quality pictures in the United States at the present time? A. Well, we distributed 27 last year. I should say that 35 or 40 would be the maximum any of the——

Q. Is it the fact, then, that with few exceptions, no first-run or subsequent-run theatre could exist on the product of any one distributor? A. That is correct.

Q. I want to ask you just one question about Exhibit 243. There is a column on it headed "House Expense." Does that mean all overhead items, do you know? A. Yes, sir, it does, means the operating expenses of the theatre.

(1145)

Mr. Seymour: Judge Proskauer got me to ask that question. Now he would like to clear it up, so I will let him inquire.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. That means but the actual out-of-pocket operating and running of the theatre; it does not include such items as rent or anything of that sort? A. It does include rent.

Q. It does include rent? A. It includes everything except the film rental. This is the house expense exclusive of film rental.

Q. Then you have an item there of taxes. Does that include any general taxes, or does that just refer to taxes on amusement? A. Yes, that is the New York—I am not sure whether it is a New York sales tax on admissions or whether it is on film rental.

Q. But it does not mean any such thing as real estate taxes? A. No.

Q. Or general corporate taxes or anything of the sort? A. No.

Mr. Seymour: I have no further question.

Mr. Wright: I have just one question.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Did I understand you to say, Mr. Reagan, that if a picture is played first-run, let us say, for six weeks and then moves into a second-run house for a run of one week, that the second-run will make more money than if the picture had played, let us say, one week in the first-run before it moved into the second run? A. The more successful a picture is——

(1146)

Q. See if you can just answer that yes or no.

Mr. Seymour: I do not think the witness should be confined to yes or no.

A. I can't answer it just yes or no without explaining it.

Q. Answer it first and then explain it.

Mr. Wright: Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

Q. (Continued) That is, more money in the second-run exhibitions? A. No, I don't think it would, but——

Q. Would not make as much, would it? A. But there is more to the answer than that, if you will let me make it.

Q. Go ahead. A. Let us take a picture like "Going My Way." It played, for instance, in the Paramount Theatre ten weeks. That was a very long engagement of that picture yet that picture in the subsequent-run theatres in New York was one of the best gross pictures that they have ever had, and, generally speaking, the longer the run—the more successful a picture is in the first-run, the longer the run, the more successful it will be in the runs that follow, because it is a better box-office attraction.

Q. All you are saying is that the better box-office attractions do better everywhere and they are played longer in the first-runs as well as in all runs, is that right? A. They do do better everywhere, yes, sir.

Q. But you have had, have you not, a number of complaints from subsequent-run exhibitors in many situations where they objected to the fact that you have virtually exhausted the patronage for a picture in a town by continued first-runs and move-over first-runs before they ever got it? A. Yes, they would like to play them only about a week or four days, the shorter the better, because they would get—they think they would do better with it. I don't agree with that in many instances.

Mr. Leisure: May I ask the witness a question?

By Mr. Leisure:

Q. Just one point, Mr. Reagan, on cross-examination that is not quite clear in my mind. Whenever you have a known, established customer, is it customary for an opposition theatre, which has sufficient product for its own operation, to bid for product you offer to your regular customer? A. No, it is not customary, no, sir.

Q. And would your answer to that question be the same or different whether or not the theatre was a so-called affiliate or independent theatre? A. It would be the same.

(1147-A)

Mr. Leisure: Thank you.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Seymour: Would your Honors give me a couple of minutes before I call the next witness?

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Short recess.)

(1148)

LEONARD H. GOLDENSON, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Paramount, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. What is your position with Paramount? A. I am vice-president in charge of the theatre department.

Q. Are you a member of the bar? A. Yes.

Q. And when did you first come to Paramount? A. In early 1933, just at the time they went into receivership.

Q. You have been with Paramount ever since? A. Ever since.

Q. Will you tell us the various positions you have held? A. When I first went with Paramount I was sent up to New England to take charge of the reorganization of the corporations in which Paramount had an interest, and after several years I worked together with the administrators of that business. I believe I stayed there until about the middle of 1937, at which time Mr. Frank Freeman asked me to come to New York to act as his assistant, which was about the middle of 1937.

Q. Mr. Freeman who has testified here was then head of the theatre department? A. That is right. He left the theatre department in the latter part of 1938 to take charge of the production and I succeeded to his position at that time and have remained in that position since.
(1149)

Q. And are you also a director of Paramount? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you describe generally the nature of Paramount's interest in theatres? A. Paramount is interested in corporations that have theatres in approximately 40 states. This is through stock ownership in these various corporations. That interest varies from as low as 12½ per cent up to 100 per cent. In this way Paramount has an interest in approximately 1550 theatres, of which I would say approximately 500 are in corporations in which Paramount has better than a 50 per cent interest, and the remaining theatres are in corporations in which Paramount has a 50 per cent or less interest.

Q. Do you know the approximate amount at which the investments of Paramount in these various companies are carried on Paramount's books? A. Yes, it is approximately $63,000,000, I believe.

Q. How are the companies in which Paramount has the interest which you have generally described operated? A. They are operated by local theatre executives who have the complete charge of the operation of those theatres. In the case of where Paramount has less than a hundred per cent interest in those corporations, those local executives generally speaking own the remaining portion of the stock. In the case of where Paramount has a hundred per cent interest in those corporations, the local theatre executives have management contracts under which they share in the profits of those corporations.

(1150)

Q. So that successful management increases their reward? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Generally speaking, are the managers or operators of theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has a 50 per cent interest or less the people who operated and managed them before Paramount had any interest? A. I think in every instance that is so, yes.

Q. Are those managers or operators for the most part old hands in the theatre business? A. I think most of them were pioneers in the business.

Q. Are many of them men who have been in the business for 25 years or more? A. I would say the very minimum 25 years.

Q. Do some of those operators or managers go back to the days of Associated First National? A. Go back long before them, I would say.

Q. In New Orleans Paramount has a 50 per cent interest in the theatres in which Mr. Richards and his group are the other 50 per cent owners? A. We have a 50 per cent interest in a corporation called Paramount-Richards Theatres with Mr. Richards——

Q. And Mr. Richards and perhaps others have the other (1151)
50 per cent? A. Mr. Richards and I think three or four other people in his employ have the remaining 50 per cent, yes, sir.

Q. Is Mr. Richards the gentleman who was mentioned here by Mr. Freeman as a First National franchise holder in that area? A. That is right, sir.

Q. That is, he was a First National franchise holder? A. Was at that time, as he testified.

Q. With respect to the companies in which Paramount has more than a 50 per cent interest, including those in which it has a hundred per cent, where did Paramount procure the managers or operators who are presently managing and operating those Companies? A. I think in every instance most of those men were or have been with our company for a great number of years, long time before the reorganization of Paramount, and when Paramount was decentralized back in early 1933, at the time of the receivership, most of those men were sent by the trustees in bankruptcy or their advisers to these various areas throughout the country to become the local theatre executives in charge of those particular corporations, at which time they received contracts for the full right to manage those corporations and receive a percentage of the profits together with a fixed salary as their compensation and, I think, generally speaking, those contract arrangements have remained in existence ever since.

Q. Are those theatre operators or managers in the companies which we are now talking about, that is, where Paramount has more than a 50 per cent interest—— A. Oh, yes, I thought——

Q. —are they experienced theatre men? A. Oh, yes, most of them, I believe, have been in the business over 25 years. I don't know of a man who is the head of any of our theatre companies that has not been in the business over 25 years.

Q. Do you know the theory on which the theatre operations were decentralized? A. Well, I came into Paramount just at the time that Paramount went into bankruptcy, and having been in one phase of it, I know that the centralized system of operation was a complete financial failure. Paramount was in bankruptcy, and the trustees and those who immediately preceded the trustees realized that the only way to try to overcome this was to completely decentralize the theory of operation of Paramount theatres.

What had been the trouble, I believe, was that Paramount was trying to operate their theatre operations on a national standard policy or formula. That policy, if it were used in the Paramount Theatre in New York, they were trying to use that same policy in a small town of five or six thousand. Well, that just wouldn't go. As an example, in a small country town of three or four thousand people, you might have, if you put a tuxedo on the manager and dressed the ushers up with ushers' uniforms, and it happened to be a farming community, the farmers coming into town, they just wouldn't go into the theatre, they would be ashamed to go in, seeing this manager and the people dressed up that way. So business suffered in small town operation.
(1153)

When Paramount was decentralized, what happened was that these local theatre executives, living in the communities, getting to know the communities, knowing the habits of the people, they were able to talk to people as they came into the theatre, got to know them, and as a result the theatres became part of the communities and in that way, I believe, Paramount's interest in theatres started to make money.

Q. Are all the operating companies in which Paramount has an interest operated locally? A. Every situation except two theatres. Those theatres are the Paramount Theatre in New York, which almost exclusively runs Paramount pictures, and the Newman Theatre in Kansas City, which runs almost all Paramount pictures, except that it runs, I think, some Warner pictures, I think maybe as much as half of the Warner pictures.

Q. Aside from those two, every theatre in which Paramount has an interest is operated by a local manager? A. Entirely.

Q. Do you consider the local management or operation the desirable method for the operation of those theatres? A. I certainly do. After all, the motion picture business is show business and show business requires a man to have knowledge of the local tastes, the local habits of the local people, know how to advertise pictures so as to appeal to those local tastes and those local habits, and that will vary in different sections of the country. And in that way, I think, our local theatre executives, knowing those habits and those customs and knowing about the nature of the communities where they live, they can, with the greatest amount of efficiency, accomplish the purposes.

Q. What matters are left to the local management for complete decision? A. All matters of operating policy are left with the local management. They have the full right to pass upon all advertising; they have the full responsibility to set all admission prices; they have complete authority and responsibility for the booking and buying of pictures; they have the full responsibility for the hiring and firing of personnel, and to make ordinary repairs to theatres.

Q. With respect to the local operating policy of the character which you have mentioned, I am not sure, Mr. Goldenson, how about licensing pictures? Did you mention that? (1155)

A. Yes, they have the complete right and responsibility, if it is a hundred per cent interest, they have by the management contract; and in the cases of less than a hundred per cent, it is generally original agreements that were made with them or by management contracts. They have the complete right to manage all theatres and buy all pictures.

Q. Does Paramount in any way interfere with the decisions of local management with respect to those operating policies? A. They do not.

Q. Does the theatre department in any way interfere with them? A. It does not, sir.

Q. If I understand you, those questions are left to local management, even where Paramount has a hundred per cent of the stock? A. Absolutely right.

Q. Will you describe generally the nature of your duties as vice-president in charge of the theatre department? A. As vice-president, the theatre department and I are obligated to look after Paramount's investment in these theatre corporations. That is done by constantly consulting with these various local theatre executives, and we have submitted to us by these local theatre executives the following things: Any capital expenditures that they recommend to be made are submitted to us for our approval; any new leases or the extensions of old leases; the purchase of any properties or the conversion of leases to fees, or the borrowing of any money.

That always originates with these local theatre executives and then, after they have arrived at their own conclusions as to whether they want to do anything, they submit it to us for our approval, and if it meets with the approval of the theatre department, we then ordinarily, maybe immediately or later, ratify at a meeting of the board of directors their actions in making such capital expenditures or leases or extensions of them.

Q. And if I understand you, there are operating policies which are left entirely to local management, and matters of investment or substantial expenditures which are submitted to Paramount? A. That is right.

Q. Is that distinction maintained whether or not Paramount has a hundred per cent interest or a 50 per cent interest? A. It is the same irrespective of the interest.

Q. Are you an officer and director of many of these theatre-operating companies? A. I think I am an officer and director of almost every one, yes, sir.

Q. Are other members of the theatre department officers and directors of some of the companies? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us how the officership and the board (1157) is generally divided in companies where Paramount has a 50 per cent interest or less or more than a 50 per cent interest? A. In cases where Paramount has less than a 50 per cent interest, the board is usually constituted of the members of the theatre department, of less than half of that board. As a matter of fact, in some cases, where we have less than half the interest, we don't have any members on the board. In the cases of where we have a 50 per cent interest in the corporation, generally speaking, half of the board is made up of members of the theatre department, and where we have better than a 50 per cent interest I would say, generally, we have a majority of the board of directors of those corporations.

In every case, I believe, the local theatre executive is the president of that corporation and, generally speaking, the vice-president is either myself or a member of the theatre department, and the treasurer is a member of the Paramount theatre department. I think the secretary is selected locally by our theatre associates.

Q. Is any member of the distribution department or its general sales department or sales department an officer or director of any one of these companies? A. They are not, sir.

Q. Do questions of local operating policies come up at meetings of the boards of these companies? A. No, they (1158) don't. I think that policy was set at the time of the reorganization of Paramount. It was, I believe, established by Mr. Freeman and has been adhered to ever since by we members of the theatre department, that is, that only matters of capital expenditure and leases, extensions of leases, borrowing money and matters of that nature come to the attention of the board. All other matters of operating policy, such as buying of films and booking of films and the advertising policy and all those things are handled by the local executives.

Q. Of course, you are aware, in general, of the extent of expenditures for those matters? A. Oh, definitely. We know every bit of expenditures.

Q. But the decision as to the policy is left to the local management, is that right? A. That is right, sir.

Q. I wish you would describe for us the personnel and divisions or departments of the theatre department. A. The theatre department has one man who is generally in touch with the theatre executives in the northern portion of the United States, has another executive who is generally in touch with the local theatre executives in the southern portion of the United States, and those two executives together with myself travel throughout the United States almost constantly with the view of looking firsthand to see whether (1159) these theatre properties are properly maintained and operated.

In addition, we have the director of the Paramount Theatre in New York, who is trained in stage presentation, who is an expert on it, and he is available for advice and consultation at the instance of any of these local theatre executives at any time. We have a man who is trained in maintenance and construction, who is constantly visiting factories, manufacturing plants, with the view of studying the trend in construction and maintenance and he is available at all times to these local theatre executives, if they want to use his services for the purpose of suggesting ways to improve the theatre construction and maintenance. We have a man who is trained in finance and taxes and who is head of the theatre auditing department. We have a man who is an expert in insurance, who is available to these local theatre executives, if they wish it. We have a man who is an expert in candy merchandising, who is available to these local theatre executives, if they wish it. We have a man whom we consider an expert in real estate matters who is available at any time if these local theatre executives should care to call on him for advice or consultation. I think by and large that is all.

(1160)

Q. Is there a lawyer connected with it? A. Oh, yes. We have a man who is very well trained in all theatre problems who is available for consultation or advice at all times.

Q. And he is separate from the general legal department? A. Yes, he is separate from the general legal department.

Q. Now, does the theatre department participate at all in the negotiations by these local theatre companies for the licensing of film of any distributor? A. They do not, sir.

Q. Between whom are the negotiations conducted for the licensing of Paramount pictures in the theatres owned or operated by those companies? A. They are conducted by the local theatre executives with the various distributors that happen to have——

Q. I am asking now about Paramount first. A. They are conducted by the local theatre executives with the Paramount distribution department. That would be through their local representatives in that particular exchange area where their theatres happen to be, or, I suppose, with a district or division or general sales manager.

Q. Does the theatre department participate in those negotiations for Paramount pictures? A. No, it does not, sir.

Q. Now, with respect to the pictures of other distributors, where are those negotiations conducted? A. They are conducted in the exchange areas where these local theatre executives have their main offices.

(1161)

Q. And they are conducted between representatives of the several distributors and the local theatre operators? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Does any member of the theatre department have anything to do with those negotiations? A. None whatsoever.

Q. Does anybody else connected with Paramount have anything to do with those negotiations? A. None whatsoever.

Q. Now, by whom are questions as to such licenses—that is, the licenses of any distributor—decided as far as the theatre companies are concerned? A. By the local theatre executive in charge of those operations.

Q. Does the theatre department give any instructions to the local theatre operator as to what films he shall license, as to what distributors he shall deal with, or as to what terms he shall license pictures upon? A. It does not.

Q. Now, in the course of the negotiations between the local theatre operator and any distributor, does the theatre department participate in any way in those negotiations? A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any procedure that you know of by which any one group of theatres owned by a theatre operating company in which Paramount has an interest, exchanges information with another group of theatres in which Paramount has an interest, as to pending negotiations or film licenses with any distributor? A. There is not.

Q. As a matter of fact, is there any relationship whatever between the terms negotiated by a particular group of theatres in one company in which Paramount has an interest for the films of any distributor other than Paramount and the terms or contracts of any other group of theatres with that distributor? A. No. As a matter of fact I think they vary to a very great extent.

Q. That is, you say there is a variation between the terms arranged by one group of theatres with a distributor and another, is that so? A. That is right.

Q. Now, can you tell us how you know that? A. Well, our theatre auditing department gets in every week for purposes of certification, all the expenses of each respective theatre, and the grosses on each respective theatre, and in this way we know how much is being paid for film, and in that way I can tell whether the terms vary from circuit to circuit or from theatre to theatre; and they vary from circuit to circuit and they vary from theatre to theatre.

Q. That is, sometimes the theatres in one company vary (1163) among themselves as to the terms with the distributor, is that right? A. That is right, sir.

Mr. Seymour: My brother Phillips thinks I misspoke myself. May I have the last question read?

(Last question read.)

Q. Now, does the theatre department regularly furnish to the theatre operating companies any information which may be of use in their decisions as to license negotiations or what pictures they ought to play? A. Yes.

Q. And what is the nature of that information? A. When pictures first break in theatres in which Paramount is interested throughout the United States, they break, ordinarily, I would say, in key spots geographically; the local theatre operator will send in to us how the picture did, namely, whether it did very good business or a good business or mediocre business or a poor business. It will also advise us as to audience reaction, whether the audience reaction was good, whether its box office appeal was to adults or to children or to women or to men, or to the family trade, or to general appeal. And sometimes they will set forth the nature of the type of campaign that they used in the selling of that picture; as an example, we may get that report in from the field and send it out, and in one instance I can recall, or a few instances, Mr. Reagan used High, Wide and Handsome yesterday as a picture in which Paramount had an investment of a million eight, and they lost money. Yet some of our associates, I can remember one in particular, Mr. Hudson, who is in charge of United Detroit Theatres, saw that the audience reaction to that picture was good even though it was not doing business; so he hit upon a different campaign than Paramount had used, or the theatres that had played that picture had used. He decided to sell it in the financial pages of Detroit to the financial people as to the tremendous investment in a picture; in the society pages and in the women's pages he sold it to the women; in the sports pages—there was a tremendous fight in there—he tried to sell it to the male audience because of the tremendous fight that appeared in that picture. Now, notwithstanding the fact that that picture did badly throughout the United States, according to Mr. Reagan, we know that Mr. Hudson did much greater in proportion than any place in the United States. So that brings up the fact that men who are trained showmen can see these things and use them to try to help those pictures at the box office.

(1164)

Q. Now I understand that you get reports in the theatre department from the theatres in which a picture plays in which comment is made upon it in the respects that you mentioned? A. Yes, that is right, sir, and transmitting.——
(1165)

Q. And then you transmit that report to the other theatre operating companies for their information? A. That is right, sir; and then in addition——

Q. Now wait just a minute. Is this a copy, or is this one of such reports as you send it out (handing)? A. That is right.

Q. Now there is one reference on there I wish you would explain. The word "good" is opposite the entry which says, "Possibilities in second or subsequent run." What does that mean? A. Well, if the picture generally has an appeal to family trade, or has got a general appeal, the local fellow will figure that that picture has very good possibilities in second or subsequent runs, and he will so state that. And then when this goes out to the field the bookers see how the picture played in a given area, and they will take that into consideration in arriving at their independent judgment.

Mr. Seymour: I offer that in evidence. I am sorry I haven't got copies, but I shall supply them as promptly as I can.

Mr. Wright: Are you going to offer a copy of the form on which the information comes in, or is that the form that is already in evidence?

Mr. Seymour: No, this is something different. I don't know in what form it comes in. This is the form in which it goes out.
(1166)

Q. And this contains the information that is received from the field? A. Yes. This is just as it comes in from the field, and as it comes in we send it out to each of the theatre corporations in which we have an interest.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-4.)

Q. Now, in addition to receiving information which is sent out on forms like Exhibit P-4, do you also receive telegraphic information as to the gross business done by pictures in certain cities in the United States? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after receipt of that information, is the form of which a blank copy is Government's Exhibit 375, made up? A. That is right.

Q. And then after it is made up is it sent out to the field? A. It is sent out to the head of each of these local theatres, or executives.

Q. What is the purpose of having that report made out and sent out to the theatre operators or managers? A. When a booker gets that he sees the kind of business the picture has opened to; it shows a comparison of what a similar day did in a previous week or previous year, and he can judge as to the box office value of that attraction; and, accordingly, he knows exactly how to book the picture. He sees what the (1167) grosses are in different sections; he may know that certain sections are somewhat comparable to his, and then he will book it accordingly, to his best judgment.

Q. I notice there is a reference in the report to the temperature on that particular day. A. There is not in that report. I looked for that but I do not find it in that, sir; but there is in our regular reports.

Q. In your telegraphic report? A. In our telegraphic report, the weather the previous day.

Q. What has that got to do with it? A. Well, if on a particular day there happened to be a strike or happened to be a storm or happened to be a cold weather spell, and say a picture in town X at a given theatre opens to $2000, and say it should have opened ordinarily at $4000, there may have been extenuating circumstances. So before booker will come to an independent judgment as to that picture on its opening date, he will look and see what the weather report was, or whether there was a strike, or what the conditions were. There may have been a circus in town, may have been a fair, or circumstances of that nature.

Judge Hand: We will now take a recess until two-fifteen. Tonight we shall adjourn at four o'clock.

(Recess until 2:15 p.m.)

(1168)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

LEONARD H. GOLDENSON resumed the stand.

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Just before the recess, I was asking you about the reports which you mentioned and which are in evidence, which are received and furnished. Now the information is received from Paramount theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. That is right.

Q. And is furnished to theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. That is right.

Q. Now, is any of that information received from any other distributor? A. No, sir.

Q. Is any of that information furnished to any other distributor? A. No, sir.

Q. Does the information which is received and furnished, of the character which you have referred to, give any information as to the terms upon which any theatre has obtained the pictures which it is playing and which it has referred to?

Mr. Wright: I think he has already answered that question, if the Court please.

Judge Bright: Doesn't the exhibit show what information is furnished?

Mr. Seymour: What I am asking about is information with respect to terms, if your Honor pleases.

(1169)

Mr. Wright: He is calling now for a conclusion. I think the witness already covered it.

Mr. Seymour: If it is a conclusion, that is one objection; but on the ground that it is already covered, I do not think that is so.

Mr. Wright: We object on both grounds.

Judge Hand: Overruled. Go on.

A. It does not contain any terms.

Mr. Wright: What was the answer?

(Answer read.)

Q. Now as to Exhibit 375, which are the so-called telegraphic reports, they do not include reports from all theatres in which Paramount has an interest, do they? A. No. They contain reports from certain key theatres throughout the United States. I would say 175, 200; I have never counted them, but I imagine about that.

Q. Now, are the film license agreements made by the operating companies with distributors, furnished to the Paramount theatre department? A. Contracts? No contracts are furnished to the theatre department.

Q. So far as you know, are they furnished to any other department of Paramount? A. They are not.

Q. Now, after license agreements have been made, do you receive from any of the theatre operating companies abstracts or summaries of any of the provisions of the agreements? A. In some cases in theatres where we have a hundred per cent interest we do receive some summaries, but it is not as a general practice or a general rule. In the cases where we have less than a hundred per cent, I do not know of any cases where we have ever received the abstracts.
(1170)

Q. Now, does the theatre department furnish such abstracts to any other department of Paramount? A. We do not, sir.

Q. And, of course, not to the distribution department? A. Certainly not.

Q. Does the theatre department make any effort of any kind to see to it that the operating companies deal on the same terms or on any particular terms with any distributor? A. We do not, sir. The film buying and the booking is done exclusively by the theatre operators, by the theatre executives in the field, and we have nothing whatsoever to do with that. That is entirely their jurisdiction and their responsibility.

Q. What is the relationship between the theatre department and the distribution department? A. Two separate departments.

Q. Do you furnish the distribution department in any shape, manner or form, with any details as to film license agreements made by the theatre operating companies? A. We do not, sir.

(1171)

Judge Bright: Do you have any such information in your department?

The Witness: The only time that we have such information is from some of the hundred per cent theatres; we may get some summaries of contracts that may have been made, but outside of that, generally, we do not have them.

In the reports, audit reports that come in each week, that cover each of the items of expense in each theatre and the grosses, in those reports we know what they have paid for film. Now, in some cases they may set forth in those reports whether the pictures played on a percentage or a flat split. If it played percentage, they might compute what the final percentage was. In other words, if a picture was 35 per cent to split and that split had earned sufficient to get it up to 37½ per cent, they may just indicate the 37½ per cent of the gross that was paid for the picture, but we do not know exactly what that contrac was but we know simply what the sum total of film rental was.

Q. So you can figure out a term from that report? A. That is right, only in that way.

Q. Do you receive from the distribution department any information as to the terms upon which Paramount licenses its pictures in theatres connected with any other defendant or with independent exhibitors? A. No, sir, we never get (1172)
such information.

Q. Do you receive any information regularly, even as to the terms on which Paramount distribution department licenses to theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Oftentimes I never know even how Paramount licenses to its own theatres. It may be, if I am talking to a theatre associate and he says he has just made a deal for a picture with Paramount, I might find it out that way, but as a practice, no, there is no information that comes in as a regular practice.

Q. You occasionally ascertain that in informal discussions with theatre operating companies, that is, as to the terms on which they do get Paramount pictures? A. That is right.

Q. But there is no regular interchange or no formal interchange of information with the distributing department? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Do you have any information at all as to the terms on which Paramount Pictures are licensed to other defendants in this case? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you make any attempt to see in any fashion whatever that the theatres in which Paramount has an interest pay license fees to the other distributors with any relationship whatever or any connections whatever, with the license fees which other defendants in this case pay to the Paramount distribution department? A. No, sir. In the first place, I don't have any idea what other companies pay to Paramount distribution, so I wouldn't know that. And in the second place, I have nothing to do with the buying of pictures. That is handled exclusively by the theatre operators in the field. As to both of those things, I would know nothing about it.
(1173)

Q. You mentioned the fact that you receive from the theatre operating companies weekly reports in the theatre department as to their operations? A. That is right, sir.

Q. That shows the various details of their operations, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. But in respect of film licenses, only the percentage appears? A. Or, if it is a flat rental, it might be there just in dollars. I can't always tell.

Q. Is any of the information received by the theatre department in those weekly reports furnished to the distribution department? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you feel free to furnish such information to the distributing department?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I object to how he feels. I do not see that has anything to do with it, any relevance.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. I could not and would not furnish that information to (1174)
the distribution department. If the distribution department got that, they would be the profits that the theatres were making and they are liable to use that information to try to get greater film rentals. We happen to have interests in corporations where men have stock interests in those corporations and if Paramount would use that information against these theatre corporations, those men would suffer as a result, in their profits, and in our hundred per cent situations the men have profit-sharing contracts, and if Paramount was to use that information against those corporations, the men would get less in the way of a profit-sharing contract, so we, in the theatre department—I happen to be a director of every one of these theatre corporations, I happen to be an officer, and I stand in the position of a fiduciary. If I were to give that information over to Paramount distribution, it could be used against the best interests of those corporations and I would be violating my duty as an officer as well as a director of those companies, and that is my responsibility as head of the theatre department, not to divulge any of that information.

Q. Have you ever been told by any of the theatre operating companies that you were not to disclose that information? A. Why, certainly. As a matter of fact, our theatre executives in the field would not send that information in (1175) if it were ever divulged.

Q. For those reasons the fact is you give no information to the distribution department? A. Absolutely not.

Q. Mr. Rodgers, when he was on the stand, made reference to the Theatres Service Company and United Theatres, Inc., in New Orleans, and stated that it was his impression that Paramount had some interests in those companies. Does Paramount have any interest in those companies? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Richards, in acting for those companies, is he representing Paramount? A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Richards has interests separate and apart, theatre interests separate and apart from his interest in Paramount-Richards? A. That is right, sir.

Q. And are those companies private enterprises of his? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do those companies buy and book films for theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Mr. Wright: What was the preceding question? What was referred to by "those companies"?

Mr. Seymour: The companies that I am referring to, Mr. Wright, are Theatres Service Company and United Theatres, Inc.

Q. What is the interest of Paramount in Paramount-Richards? A. Fifty per cent.

Mr. Seymour: Now I am going to take the balance (1176) of the tour of the 92 cities, which Mr. Goldenson is prepared to testify about, and I will do it as rapidly as I can.

Q. I am sure there will be no objection to your having a memorandum before you to refresh your recollection. I am going to ask you now about the cities in which Paramount has an interest, cities over a hundred thousand population, to which the Government has referred, where Paramount has an interest in a theatre or theatres operated on a first-run policy. Are you familiar with the theatres in those cities? A. Generally, I am familiar, yes, with most of these theatres.

Q. I wish you would proceed with the 48 cities alphabetically by States, indicating which theatres, operated on a first-run policy, are theatres in which Paramount has an interest, and describing the theatre and appraising its quality vis-a-vis the other theatres operated on a first-run policy in that city. A. Birmingham, Alabama. Paramount is interested in a corporation that has the Alabama Theatre, 2567 seats; the Lyric, 1192 seats; the Pantages, 2038 seats; the Ritz, 1479 seats; and the Strand, 799 seats. The Alabama Theatre is one of the finest theatres I believe in the Southeast. The opposition theatres that are on a first-run policy are the Empire, which has 960 seats; the Galax, which has 800 seats, and the Royal, which has 400. The Alabama and the Pantages are more than two and a half times as large as the next of the opposition theatres.
(1177)

Q. Would you say that those were the best theatres in Birmingham? A. Yes.

Q. Now, how many other theatres are there in Birmingham in which Paramount has no interest? A. There are 20 other theatres in which Paramount has no interest. That is, besides those three theatres that are in a first-run position.

Q. That is right. So there are other first-run theatres in Birmingham operated by other interests, and there are also 20 subsequent-run theatres operated by other interests? A. That is right, sir.

Q. And would you say that all the theatres in Birmingham are in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now will you go on to Hollywood or Los Angeles? A. In Hollywood, California, we have an interest in a company that has the Paramount Theatre, Los Angeles, which has 3,387 seats, and the Paramount Hollywood, which has 1451 seats. I would say that the two theatres in which we are interested are at least comparable to the best theatres in Hollywood and Los Angeles.

Do you want me to name all the competitive theatres?

Q. I do not think you need to. There are a number of other theatres operated on a first-run policy, is that right? A. That is right; and there are about 209 theatres in addition to that which are on a subsequent-run policy.

(1178)

Q. And Paramount has no interest in those 209 theatres? A. They do not.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, of course, as to all these theatres which you are mentioning, unless you make an exception they are the theatres enjoying the first-run of Paramount product? A. Yes.

Q. In those localities? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, will you go on down the list, if you please. Take San Francisco. A. In San Francisco, Paramount is interested in the Fox Theatre, which has 4,651 seats; the Loew's Warfield, which is 2,669; the Paramount, which is 2734; the St. Francis, which is 1495, and the State, which is 2315 seats. In my opinion, the Fox, the Warfield and the Paramount are the three of the finest theatres in San Francisco. There is opposition on a first-run policy, the Golden Gate Theatre, which has 2800 seats; the Esquire, which has 1,008 seats; the United Artists which has 1465 seats, and the Orpheum, which has 2,440 seats. I would say the other theatres are nice theatres and well located, but I feel that our theatres are at least as good if not better than the competitive theatres.

Are these theatres actually operated by Paramount? (1179)

A. No, they are not; they are operated by Fox-West Coast. Paramount operates no theatres. They only operate the Paramount, in New York City and the Newman, in Kansas City, Mo. None of the theatres I mentioned are operated by Paramount. They are operated by the local theatre operators.

Q. They are not operated by Paramount theatre operators? A. No, they are operated by Fox-West Coast.

Q. Now, how many other theatres are there in San Francisco in which Paramount has no interest? A. 75 other theatres.

Q. And are there other theatres operated on a first-run policy in San Francisco? A. Well, I already named the Golden Gate, the Esquire, the United Artists and the Orpheum.

Q. And are all the theatres there in competition with each other? A. Yes.

Q. Now will you go on down the list. Take Hartford. A. In Hartford we are interested in a corporation that has the Allyn Theatre, which is 1998 seats. In addition there is the Poli Theatre——

Q. I do not know that you need to mention the others. I think it will take too long. There are other theatres operated on a first-run policy in Hartford? A. That is right.

Q. And in addition there are other subsequent-run theatres? A. Yes, there are nine other subsequent-run (1180) theatres. I would say our theatre is not as large as some of the other theatres, but I think its appointments are just as good, if not better, and I think it is well located.

Q. Is it comparable in quality? A. Comparable in quality.

Q. And are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. New Haven. A. In New Haven we have an interest in a corporation that has one theatre there with 2,348 seats called the Paramount Theatre. There are four other theatres that are on a first-run policy. Do you want me to name those theatres?

Q. I do not think you need to bother with the names. There are also other theatres in New Haven on a subsequent-run policy. A. Yes.

Q. How many? A. There are 14 other theatres on a subsequent-run policy. In Hartford I failed to mention——

Q. You did mention. A. Did I?

Q. Now, are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider the theatre in which Paramount has an interest there comparable with the best theatres in town? A. I do, sir.

Q. Jacksonville, Florida. A. Paramount is interested in (1181) a company that has the Florida Theatre, which is 2,185 seats; the Arcade, which is 1,115 seats; the Palace, which is 1,314 seats, and the Temple, which is 889 seats.

Q. Are they the best theatres in Jacksonville? A. In my opinion they are the largest and the best theatres in Jacksonville.

Q. And is the Paramount also interested there in some subsequent-run theatres? A. Yes. We have seven subsequent-run theatres there.

Q. And are there also subsequent-run theatres in other hands? A. Yes. There are six subsequent-run theatres in competitive hands.

Q. And is there another first-run theatre there operated on a first-run policy? A. Yes. The St. John's Theatre, which has 815 seats, is on a first-run policy and in competition.

Q. Are the theatres in which Paramount has an interest the best theatres in Jacksonville? A. That would be my best judgment, yes, sir.

Q. Now, Miami. A. In Miami we have two theatres, the Olympia, 2125 seats, and the Paramount, 1134 seats. In my opinion those two theatres are better than any other theatres in the town of Miami. In competition with those two theatres of ours there are two theatres on a first-run policy in the hands of competitors, namely, the Capitol with 1234 (1182) seats, and the Miami with 472. Paramount has an interest in a corporation in addition which has an interest in five subsequent-run theatres, and I believe there are 19, or I think 18, other subsequent-run theatres in the hands of independents.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. They are, sir.

Q. Tampa. A. In Tampa, Florida, we are interested in a corporation that has an interest in the Park Theatre, 1281 seats; the Strand, 742 seats; the Tampa, 1554 seats, and the Victory, 1381 seats.

Q. Are there other first-run theatres in Tampa? A. Yes. There is the State Theatre with 604 seats and the Lincoln Theatre, which caters to colored patronage, with 800 seats.

Q. Are the theatres in which Paramount has an interest there the best theatres? A. In my judgment they are.

Q. And are there a number of subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has no interest? A. There are seven subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has no interest; but in addition we have four theatres ourselves that are subsequent-run.

Q. When you say "we have four theatres ourselves," you mean—— A. The corporation in which we are interested.

Q. And are all the theatres there in competition? A.
(1183)
Yes, sir.

Q. Atlanta, Georgia? A. In Atlanta, Georgia, we are interested in a corporation that operates four theatres there called the Fox, which is 4500 seats, and by far the largest theatre in that whole area; the Capitol Theatre, 2100 seats; The Roxy, 2500 seats, and the Paramount, 2476. There is in competition on the first-run policy the Grand Theatre, 1850 seats——.

Q. I do not think you need to mention the others. A. All right.

Q. There are four other theatres operated on a first-run policy in competition? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, are there other subsequent-run theatres in Atlanta? A. There are 43 other subsequent-run theatres in Atlanta in which we have no interest.

Q. And are all those theatres in competition? A. They are all in competition.

Q. In Chicago? A. In Chicago we have an interest in a corporation which operates the Apollo Theatre, 1340 seats; the Chicago, 3872; the Garrick, 980 seats; the Roosevelt, 1535 seats; the State-Lake, 2684 seats, and United Artists, 1736.

Q. Are there other theatres in Chicago operated on a first-run policy? A. There are.
(1184)

Q. And how many additional theatres or subsequent-run theatres is Paramount interested in in Chicago? A. 39 subsequent-run theatres.

Q. And how many other subsequent-run theatres are there in Chicago? A. There are 185 other subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has no interest.

Q. And are all those theatres in competition? A. They are, sir.

Q. Now, referring to the theatres operated on a first-run policy, are they the best or comparable with the best theatres in Chicago? A. In my opinion they are at least as good, if not better, than the competitive theatres.

(1185)

Q. Peoria, Illinois. A. In Peoria, Illinois, we are interested in a corporation that operates three theatres that are on a first-run policy: The Madison Theatre, 1797 seats; the Palace 1816 seats and the Rialto 1560 seats.

Q. Are they the best theatres in Peoria? A. In my opinion they are, sir.

Q. Are there any other subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. There are three.

Q. And are there subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has no interest? A. There are seven subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has no interest.

Q. And is there competition between those theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Indiana. Gary. A. Gary, Indiana, Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates two theatres, named the Grand, 600 seats, and the State, 1200 seats.

Q. Are there other first-run theatres in Gary? A. Yes, sir, there are. In the case of Gary I would say our State Theatre, although not equal in size—the competitive theatre is much larger—I think our theatre as far as appointments is just as good if not better than the competitive theatre.

Q. Now, are there other subsequent-run theatres in Gary in which Paramount has no interest? A. That is right, sir.

(1186)

Q. How many? A. Eight subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest.

Q. Are all the theatres in Gary in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. South Bend. A. Paramount has an interest in a corporation which operates three theatres: The Colfax, 2069; the Granada, 2387, and the Palace, 2977 seats.

Q. Are they the best theatres in South Bend? A. In my opinion they are, sir.

Q. Are there subsequent-run theatres there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does Paramount have an interest in any of them? A. In one.

Q. How many others are there? A. There are nine others.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes.

Q. Des Moines, Iowa. A. In Des Moines, Iowa, we are interested in a corporation which operates the Des Moines Theatre, 1679 seats; the Paramcunt, 1708 seats, and the Roosevelt, 600 seats.

Q. Is there another theatre in Des Moines operated on a first-run policy? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are there subsequent-run theatres in Des Moines? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In how many does Paramount have an interest? A. They have an interest in seven.

(1187)

Q. In how many does it have no interest? A. Eleven.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir, they are; and I would say our theatres are as good as if not better than the competitive theatres.

Q. Now, New Orleans, Louisiana, what are the theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Paramount has an interest in the Sanger Theatre, which is 3430 seats; the Tudor, which is 710; the Globe, which is 474, and Loew's State, which is 3294.

Q. Are there other theatres operated on a first-run policy in New Orleans? A. Yes.

Q. And are there a number of subsequent-run theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many subsequent-run theatres? A. 64.

Q. Does Paramount have any interest in them? A. They do not.

Q. And are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the first-run theatres in which Paramount has an interest there the best or comparable to the best theatres? A. In my opinion they are better than any competitive theatres.

Q. Now, Boston, Massachusetts. A. In Boston Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates the Metropolitan Theatre, 4267 seats; the Paramount, 1797 seats; the (1188) Fenway, 1382 seats; the Scollay Square, 2542 seats, and the Olympia, 1912 seats.

Q. How many other theatres operated on a first-run policy are there in Boston? A. The records here show that there are 11 other theatres operated on a first-run policy.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with the other theatres operated on a first-run policy? A. In my judgment the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston is the largest and best theatre in the entire New England; and the other theatres that are operated by the corporation in which Paramount has an interest are at least comparable if not better than any of the competitive theatres.

Q. Are there a number of subsequent-run theatres in Boston? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does Paramount have an interest in some of them? A. Yes.

Q. And are there 22 in which Paramount has no interest? A. There are 22 in which Paramount has no interest.

Q. And are all the theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now will you tell us about Cambridge? A. In Cambridge, Massachusetts, Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates the Central Square Theatre, which has 2123 seats.

(1189)

Q. Is there another somewhat smaller theatre operated on a first-run policy there? A. There is the University Theatre, which is a very nice theatre, but I think our Central Square is larger and better.

Q. Are there subsequent-run theatres in Cambridge? A. Yes.

Q. And is Paramount interested in any of them? A. Yes, they are interested in one.

Q. How many others are there? A. There are five others in which Paramount has no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Lowell. A. Lowell, Massachusetts: Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates the Strand Theatre, with 1637 seats, and the Merrimac Square Theatre, 1640 seats.

Q. Is there another theatre operated on a first-run policy in Lowell? A. Yes.

Q. How many subsequent-run theatres are there there? A. There are five subsequent-run theatres there in which Paramount has no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes.

Q. New Bedford. A. New Bedford: Paramount is interested in a corporation that has the Olympia Theatre, 2472 seats. There are three competitive theatres in the town operating on a first-run policy.

Q. How does the Olympia compare with the other theatres operated on a first-run policy? A. In my opinion it is a very much larger one than any of the other theatres, and in my opinion better located and better appointments.

Q. Now, are there subsequent-run theatres in New Bedford? A. Yes. We have one. We have an interest in the corporation which operates one subsequent-run theatre, and there are six subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest, Paramount has no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Somerville, Massachusetts. A. Somerville, Massachusetts: Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates the Capitol Theatre, which has 1735 seats, and the Ball Square, which has 1248 seats.

Q. Are there other theatres there operated on a first-run policy? A. There are.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with them? A. They are very much larger and in my opinion are much better.

Q. Does Paramount have an interest in any subsequent-run theatre? A. Yes, two.

Q. Is there another subsequent-run theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. In my judgment, yes.

(1191)

Q. Springfield, Massachusetts. A. Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates two theatres, the Paramount Theatre, with 2758 seats, and the Broadway with 1765 seats.

Q. Are there five other theatres operated on a first-run policy in Springfield? A. There are, sir.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with them? A. In my opinion the Paramount Theatre is by far the best. It is certainly the largest and in my opinion it has got the best appointments and as good if not better location than the other theatres.

Q. Now, are there subsequent-run theatres in Springfield? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In how many has Paramount an interest? A. One.

Q. And how many others are there? A. There are five others.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Worcester. A. In Worcester we have an interest in a corporation that operates one theatre there, the Capitol Theatre, 1884 seats.

Q. And there are four other first-run theatres in Worcester? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how many subsequent-run theatres? A. There are five subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest.

Q. And how does the theatre in which Paramount has an interest compare with the other first-run theatres? A. Our theatre is not as large as the two other theatres in the town named the Poli or the Elm Street, but in our opinion our theatre is comparable to in appointments and certainly I think it is a better location than any of the other theatres.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes.

Q. Detroit, Michigan. A. Detroit, Michigan: We are interested in a corporation that operates four theatres. The Michigan Theatre with 4029 seats; the Broadway Capitol with 3367 seats; the Palms State with 2967 seats; the United Artists with 2018 seats.

Q. And are there several other theatres operated on a first-run policy in Detroit? A. There are three others.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount have an interest compare with those? A. In my opinion our theatres are comparable to the other theatres in the town. The Fox Theatre is a little larger, I think a thousand seats larger, but our Michigan Theatre in my opinion the appointments are as good if not better, and I think it as well located as the Fox Theatre.

Q. In how many subsequent-run theatres in Detroit does Paramount have an interest? A. 13.

(1193)

Q. And do you know approximately how many other subsequent-run theatres there are in Detroit in which Paramount has no interest? A. Approximately 124 in which we have no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes.

Q. Now, Flint, Michigan. A. In Flint, Michigan, we are interested in a corporation that operates four theatres: The Capitol with 1951 seats; the Palace with 1390 seats; the Garden with 917, and the Strand with 1076.

Q. Now, those theatres are owned, are they, by the Butterfield Circuit? A. They are, sir.

Q. What is the extent of Paramount's interest in the Butterfield Circuit? A. We have 25 per cent interest.

Q. How do those theatres compare with the other theatres in the town? A. Yes, they compare very favorably. As a matter of fact, they are the best theatres in the town.

Q. Now, does the Butterfield Circuit have an interest in other theatres there? A. Yes, four subsequent-run theatres.

Q. And how many in which the Butterfield Circuit has no interest? A. There are 13 other theatres in which the Butterfield Circuit has no interest.

Q. And are all those theatres in competition. A. Yes.

Q. Grand Rapids, Michigan. A. We are interested in a corporation there that operates four theatres: The Regent, 1829 seats; the Majestic, 1135 seats; the Kent, 1081, and the Center, 872.

(1194)

Q. Are those theatres also owned by the Butterfield Circuit? A. They are.

Q. Are those the best theatres in Grand Rapids? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many subsequent-run theatres are there also owned by Butterfield? A. Six subsequent-run theatres.

Q. And how many are there in which Butterfield has no interest? A. There are 18 other theatres in Grand Rapids in which Butterfield has no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Duluth, Minnesota. A. Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates four theatres in Duluth, Minnesota: The Norshore, 1209 seats; the Lyric, 1053 seats; the Garrick, 963 seats, and the Strand, 475 seats.

Q. Are there other theatres operated on a first-run policy in Duluth? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with the others? A. They are by far the best theatres in the town, much larger, better appointments, and better located.

Q. And are there six subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has no interest? A. That is right.

(1195)

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Minneapolis. A. Minneapolis, Paramount has an interest in a corporation that operates seven first-run theatres: The Radio City, 4013 seats; the State, 2288 seats; the Century, 1632 seats; the Lyric, 1078 seats; the Gopher, 1028 seats; the Aster, 797 seats, and the Orpheum, 2832 seats.

Q. Are there any other theatres regularly operated on a first-run policy in Minneapolis? A. Yes. There is the World which operates on a policy I think of foreign films.

Q. A much smaller theatre? A. Yes.

(1196)

Q. And are there other subsequent-run theatres in which Paramount has some interest? A. Yes, eight.

Q. How many are there in which Paramount has no interest? A. 45.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. St. Paul. A. In St. Paul, Paramount has an interest in a corporation that operates 5 theatres, the Paramount, 2362 seats; Riviera, 1268 seats; Strand, 755 seats; Tower, 1046 seats; and the Orpheum, 2183 seats.

Q. Is there another theatre there which shows some pictures first-run? A. Yes, I think the World.

Q. Is that also largely engaged in showing foreign films? A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Are there some subsequent-run theatres in St. Paul in which Paramount has an interest? A. There are five in which we have an interest and there are 31 in which we have no interest.

Q. Would you say all the theatres there are in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Kansas City, Missouri. A. Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates the Newman theatre, 1914 seats.

Q. How many other theatres operated on a first-run policy are there in Kansas City? A. I believe there are seven.

(1197)

Q. How does the Newman Theatre compare with the other theatres operated on a first-run policy? A. I don't think the Newman Theatre is as large, but I think it is the best located theatre in Kansas City. I am certain that the appointments are comparable with the best.

Q. Does Paramount have an interest in any subsequent run theatres in Kansas City? A. They do not.

Q. How many other subsequent run theatres are there? A. 56 subsequent run theatres in which we have no interest.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes.

Q. Omaha, Nebraska. A. Paramount is interested in a corporation which operates three theatres, namely, the Omaha, 2500; the Orpheum, 2975; the Paramount, 2750.

Q. Is there another theatre operated on a first-run policy in Omaha? A. Yes.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with that? A. They are by far larger. Their appointments are in my opinion as good, if not better, and I think they are better located.

Q. Does Paramount have any interest in any subsequent-run theatre? A. No.

Q. How many other subsequent-run theatres are there? A. 25.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes.

(1198)

Q. Newark, New Jersey. A. We have an interest in a corporation that operates two theatres, the Paramount, 2000 seats, and the Adams, 1917 seats.

Q. Are there several other theatres operated on a first-run policy in Newark? A. Yes, there are three others.

Q. How do the theatres of Paramount compare with them? A. Our seating capacity is not as large as the other three but I think the appointments are at least as good, if not better, and I think the location is as good if not better than the other theatres in town.

Q. Does Paramount have an interest in any subsequent-run theatres in Newark? A. They do not.

Q. How many subsequent-run theatres are there? A. 46 others.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes.

Q. Are there any other theatres comparable with them? A. No, sir.

Q. Is Paramount interested in one subsequent-run theatre there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many other subsequent-run theatres are there there? A. There are seven subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes.

Q. Toledo, Ohio. A. In Toledo, Ohio, we are interested in a corporation that operates two theatres, the Paramount with 3408 seats, and the Princess with 940 seats.

Q. How many other theatres operate on a first-run policy there? A. Five other theatres.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with them? A. Our Paramount Theatre by (1203) far is the largest and the best theatre in Toledo.

Q. Paramount is not interested in any subsequent-run theatre there? A. No, sir.

Q. How many subsequent-run theatres are there? A. 21.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Oklahoma City. A. In Oklahoma City, Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates five theatres first run, the Criterion with 1397 seats, the Tower with 919 seats, the Midwest with 1474 seats, the Liberty with 1308 seats, and the Warner with 1849 seats.

Q. Is there another theatre there operated on a first-run policy. A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do those theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with the other theatre. A. In my opinion they are bigger, better, finer appointments, and better located.

Q. Does Paramount also have an interest in five subsequent-run theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many other subsequent-run theatres are there? A. There are 18 other subsequent-run theatres in Oklahoma City.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Scranton, Pennsylvania. A. In Scranton, Pennsylvania, we are interested in a corporation that operates four (1204) theatres, namely, the Strand with 1542 seats; the Comerford with 1600 seats; the State with 920 seats, and the Capitol with 1770 seats.

Q. Are those the best theatres in Scranton? A. Yes.

Q. Is Paramount also interested in some subsequent-run theatres there? A. Yes, we have an interest in seven subsequent-run theatres.

Q. How many other subsequent-run theatres are there? A. There are four others in which we have no interest.

Q. Are the Scranton theatres owned by the Comerford Circuit? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the extent of Paramount's interest in the Scranton theatres? A. We have a 50 per cent interest in the common stock. The preferred stock is owned by Mr. Frank Walker, M. E. Comerford, and M. B. Comerford Estate—they are both estates, and Frank Walker is living, and they have an A preferred stock and until that is paid off they have a majority of the board of directors.

Q. Chattanooga, Tennessee. A. We have an interest in a corporation that operates three theatres, the Tivoli with 1781 seats, the State with 856 seats, and the Rialto with 800 seats.

Q. Are those the best theatres in Chattanooga? A. Yes, sir, by far.

Q. How many subsequent-run theatres are there? A. (1205) There are 12 subsequent-run theatres.

Q. Does Paramount have any interest in them? A. They do not.

Q. Are all the theatres there in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Knoxville, Tennessee. A. Knoxville, Tennessee, we are interested in a corporation that operates three theatres, the Tennessee with 1996 seats, the Riviera with 1012 seats, and the Strand with 799 seats.

Q. Are those the best theatres in Knoxville? A. In my opinion they are by far the best.

Q. Does Paramount have some interest in subsequent-run theatres there, and, if so, how many? A. Five subsequent-run theatres.

Q. How many other subsequent-run theatres are there? A. There are nine other subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest.

(1206)

Q. How about Memphis? A. In Memphis we own 50 per cent of the stock of the corporation that operates there. Mr. M. A. Likeman is the theatre operator.

Q. Will you go through these Texas cities? Dallas. A. In Dallas, Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates six first-run theatres, six theatres in which there is a first-run policy, the Majestic with 2,415 seats, the Palace with 2,332 seats, the Melba with 1,841 seats, the Tower with 1,295 seats, the Rialto with 1,332 seats, the Capitol with 1,052 seats.

Q. How do those theatres compare with the other theatres in Dallas? A. By far the largest and the best.

Q. And is Paramount also interested in 11 subsequent-run theatres there? A. They are, sir.

Q. How many other subsequent-run theatres are there? A. There are 29 other subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest.

Q. Who operates the theatres in Dallas? A. Karl Hoblitzelle and Robert J. O'Donnell. They own 50 per cent of the stock of the corporation operating these theatres and Paramount owns the other 50 per cent.

Q. Fort Worth. A. We are interested in a corporation that operates three theatres, the Worth, with 2,358 seats, the Hollywood, with 1,700 seats, and the Palace with 1,468 seats. (1207)

Q. And how do those theatres compare with the other theatres in Fort Worth? A. By far the biggest and the best.

Q. Is Paramount also interested in some subsequent-run theatres there? A. They are.

Q. How many? A. Nine.

Q. How many others are there there? A. 13 in which we have no interest.

Q. Are the Fort Worth theatres also operated in the same way as the Dallas theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Houston. A. In Houston we have an interest in a corporation that operates four theatres operated on a first-run policy, namely, the Majestic with 2,081 seats, the Metropolitan with 2,320 seats, and the Kirby with 1,464 seats, and the Iris with 1,069 seats.

Q. Is there another theatre operated on a first-run policy in Houston? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do the theatres in which Paramount has an interest compare with it? A. The Majestic and Metropolitan, in my opinion, are not quite as large as the competitive theatre, but, in my opinion, as good, if not better as far as appointments and location.

Q. Does Paramount have some interest in subsequent-run theatres there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many? A. 16.

Q. How many others are there? A. There are 27 others (1208) in which we have no interest.

Q. Are the Houston theatres also operated on the same basis as the other theatres? A. By Mr. Hoblitzelle and Mr. O'Donnell.

Q. And Paramount's interest is 50 per cent. San Antonio. A. In San Antonio Paramount is interested in a corporation that operates four theatres on a first-run policy, namely, the Majestic with 3703 seats, the Aztec with 2433 seats, the Texas with 2752 seats, and the Empire with 1497 seats.

Q. Are those the best theatres in San Antonio? A. In my opinion by far they are the best theatres.

Q. Does Paramount have some interest in subsequent-run theatres there? A. Yes; 11 subsequent-run theatres.

Q. Are there other subsequent-run theatres there? A. There are eight other subsequent-run theatres.

Q. Salt Lake City, Utah? A. In Salt Lake City we are interested in a corporation that operates four theatres on a first-run policy, the Utah, with 1823 seats, the Centre with 1627 seats, the Capitol with 1200 and the Studio with 350 seats.

Q. Are there other theatres in Salt Lake City operated on a first-run policy? A. Right.

Q. How many? A. There are four.

Q. Does Paramount have any interest in subsequent-run (1209)
theatres there? A. They do not—wait a minute. We have one that is a subsequent-run theatre.

Q. Are there other subsequent-run theatres there? A. Yes, there are seven other subsequent-run theatres in which we have no interest.

Q. Are all those theatres in competition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have asked you about whether these theatres in various cities were in competition, and I want to be clear as to the sense in which you used that. Are all motion picture theatres in a general area in competition? A. In my opinion they are, yes, sir.

Q. In what sense? A. In the sense that when a patron decides to go to a place of amusement, he or she has a choice. They can go to a theatre in a downtown area that is on a first-run policy, where the admission price is high and where they have an opportunity of seeing the picture first. Generally speaking, that theatre is much larger than any other theatre in town and its appointments are much better.

Or they have a choice of waiting 28 days, or whatever the clearance happens to be in a given situation, and going to the next house where the admission price may be only 50 cents, where the appointments in the theatre are very good, very nice, might be in their particular neighborhood and they might not want to go downtown. Or they can wait until it gets into the next subsequent-run house, which may be 35 cents, where the house won't be a large as the two previous houses, where the appointments may be not quite as good, but yet be very nice, where they have everything that the first-run theatre has except that they do not have the, possibly, the size, as I said, and do not have, maybe, the fine appointments. Or they can wait for another subsequent run, I mean, go to another subsequent-run where the admission prices are 25 cents.

So that a patron going to seek amusement can go to a cross-section of any type of theatre at any price that will fit their pocketbook on that particular evening, or any program that will fit their taste that particular evening. There may be a picture playing in a first-run situation that has a star they don't like, or probably a story or picture they don't like, so they may, though they want to go to the first-run, they may decide to go to another one.

So you are always in competition, and every theatre, in my opinion, is always in competition with every other theatre for that particular patronage.

Q. Is there in your experience a segment of the population which is a separate, first-run market? A. I don't think so. I don't think so at all. As a matter of fact, I would say the depression—the period in which we rode through the depression—proved anything but that. Where people did not have the money in their pockets, the subsequent-run theatres did a greater business in proportion than any other theatres, because people were waiting to get it at a cheaper price. They could not afford to pay the higher prices. As a matter of fact, most of the theatres that went into bankruptcy during the depression period—my experience, I remember,—were first-run theatres, because they had terrifically high costs, they had many millions of dollars in those first-run theatres, because they built luxurious palaces for the tastes of the people, but the people didn't have the money during that period. So the subsequent-run theatres benefited.

Q. My brother Phillips asked me to ask you whether there aren't many subsequent-run theatres with admission prices under 25 cents? A. Oh, yes, they are run as low as ten cents, I believe.

Q. Dealing generally with the cities under 100,000, are you generally familiar with the quality of the theatres in which Paramount has an interest in those cities? A. Yes, I am, generally speaking.

Q. Would you say that the theatres in which Paramount has an interest in those cities, operated on a first-run policy, were the best or comparable to the best theatres in those localities? A. That would be my judgment.

Q. Do the theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest make a consistent effort to keep their theatres up? A. They do, sir. We spend a tremendous sum of money. I know I have to approve each year a tremendous sum of money for expenditures on those theatres, and it has been, I know, the policy of these theatre operators, who are operating these theatres, to want to keep their theatres ahead of the standard of the times, because, generally speaking, you will find that in small towns today merchants and everybody are alert to constant changing of construction and maintenance of properties, and our people, being in the local areas, can judge how the merchants are improving their store fronts and their places of business. So our people want to do the same with respect to their theatres and, as a consequence, we spend millions of dollars a year in maintenance of those theatres.
(1212)

Q. For example, is air conditioning installed in many of those theatres? A. I think by far the vast majority of our theatres have air conditioning.

Q. The distinguished counsel for the Government read into the record one day week before last the names of a number of towns having population of 25,000 or less, in which he stated that Paramount was interested in all the theatres in each of those towns. Some of those towns had a population of under a thousand, some of them were up close to twenty-five thousand. Do you know whether in many of (1213)

those towns there is only one theatre? A. Yes.

Q. And in others there are only two theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in others, in a few others, there are more than two theatres? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Is there any rough gauge by which one can approximate about how many theatres a town can support? A. I couldn't do it on the basis of theatres, but I could do it on the number of seats in a town.

Q. Is there any rough gauge for that? A. Yes. Generally there has grown up in the business a formula that there generally should be one seat for every ten people living in the town. There are exceptions to that, of course. Say a town is a good show town, they would want to have a greater ratio of seats to patrons because the people have a tendency to want to go to pictures more often. If it is a poor show town, your ratio may be different, it may be 1 to 15 or 1 to 20.

You have situations in some towns, such as are called summer towns or winter towns, where the people go for vacations. There you have got to keep off season a lot of extra seats in order to accommodate during the season the number of people that flow into those towns.

You have your large metropolitan areas throughout the United States where the people like to trade in those metropolitan areas, so when they come to town, they get tired in the evening, and they like to go to the moving pictures, and so, as a result, you have to have, perhaps, there a larger ratio of seats to the patrons than you would in a small town, as an example, where the patrons are drawn out of small towns, to go to the larger trading area, so certain small towns need a lesser number of seats to the total number of patrons.
(1214)

But by and far we use the standard of 1 to 10, and then we have to use the exceptions for areas in a given situation, and I think people that have been years in the business can determine that pretty well. You know what towns are good and what are bad.

Q. There are all kinds of variations depending upon the locality as to how many theatres the town can support, but if there is a town of, say, 5,000, just a typical town with no special qualities one way or the other, and it has one theatre with 500 seats, is it likely that that town would provide a comfortable income to another theatre? A. I wouldn't think so. I would—certainly from an economic standpoint—would not want to do it myself.

Q. Are there some towns in the group that the Government read in which are in the South? A. Oh, I think, if I remember correctly—I went over the list the other day—I think a lot of them are in the South—the greater proportion of them were.

Mr. Seymour: You may examine, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Frohlich: I should like to ask a few questions.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Frohlich:

Q. Mr. Goldenson, what is the Florida Theatres, Inc.? A. Florida Theatres, Inc. is a corporation, the stock of which Paramount owns 100 per cent, in Florida.

Q. That is known as the Sparks Circuit? A. Formerly was the Sparks Circuit. Paramount bought out Sparks' interest.

Q. And did the Paramount have an interest in this Sparks Circuit as far back as 1936? A. Paramount has had an interest in that circuit since 1933, that I know, when I came into Paramount. I do not know how much before that.

Q. You testified a little while ago that down south they have colored theatres and white theatres. A. They do, sir. Not always, but sometimes.

Q. In many of the states? A. Many towns.

Q. That is true in Florida, isn't it? A. I think so.

Q. There has been put in evidence in this case a contract for the exhibition of Columbia Pictures Corporation pictures signed by the Florida Theatres, Inc. on December 1, 1943. It is Exhibit No. 267. I will show you this exhibit and ask you (1216) to be good enough to look at the list of 43 theatres which are covered by that contract, and tell us, if you please, which of those cities named in that group contain only one theatre. A. Well, Arcadia, Florida, contains one theatre; Bartow contains two; Bradentown contains two; Clearwater, two; Cocoa, one; Daytona Beach, I think about five; Deland contains one; Delray Beach contains one; Dania, one; Eau Gallie, one; Eustis, one; Fort Lauderdale, five; Fort Myers, three; Fort Pierce, one; Fort Pierce, I think, has a new theatre building—no, I think Fort Pierce has only one; Gainesville, three; Hollywood, two; Jacksonville I have already mentioned in my testimony; Jacksonville Beach, we don't have an interest in the operation, but there is one at Jacksonville Beach; Lakeland has one; Lake Worth has two; Melbourne, one; Mt. Dora, one; New Smyrna, one; Ocala, three; Orlando has about five; Lake Wales has two; Palatka, two theatres in town Palm Beach has two theatres; Palmetto has, I think, three theatres there; Plant City, two theatres; St. Augustin, two; St. Petersburg, approximately six or seven; Sanford, two; Sarasota has two; Stuart has one; Tallahassee, three; Tampa has about, I would say, ten—I am guessing on Tampa; West Palm Beach, I think, has about five; West Tampa, we don't operate there, so I couldn't (1217) tell you; Winter Haven has two; Winter Park has one; Ybor Beach, one; Ybor City, three. Paramount has no interest in Ybor City. In addition to that, there are certain colored theatres operated in these towns which I know nothing about, in the sense that we do not operate any in these towns, so I cannot answer that problem, but I am talking about the theatres here.

Q. Isn't it true that in 37 of these 43 cities you have just mentioned, Sparks Circuit owns all of the theatres in the town? A. That is not so.

Q. Well, how, in what respect am I wrong? In how many towns does the Sparks Theatres own all of the theatres? A. I would say 32.

Q. So that any distributor who wants to show his pictures in 32 of these cities would have to make a contract with the Sparks Circuit? A. In 32 of the cities, yes.

Q. Does Sparks own any theatres in Miami or Miami Beach? A. Yes, Florida Paramount Enterprises does.

Mr. Seymour: Would anybody else like to ask any questions? Otherwise I am through, Mr. Wright.

(1218)

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Goldenson, in giving this testimony about first-run theatres, how did you use the term? A. The theatres operating presently on a first-run policy.

Q. By a first-run policy you mean exhibition of what product on first-run? A. I would say pictures of all distributors that are available in the given area for the first-run showing.

Q. Did you in your testimony classify as first-run theatres which had no regular first-run of major product? A. I may have. I will go over the list and tell you specifically, sir.

Q. Can you name any particular theatres that fall in that category? A. Of course, I would like to know what you mean by first class product. The P. R. C., who release their pictures, every picture that they have is called a first class product.

Q. I said major product. A. What do you mean by major product?

Q. I take it as the term is understood in the trade, to mean product released by one or more of these defendants, does it not? A. Well, I don't know. If you will tell me what it is, then I can answer it better. Is that what you mean?

Q. What does "major product" mean as it is used in (1219) the trade in your experience? A. I would say any product that is sufficient to play in good theatres, yes, would be a major product.

Q. For the most part that is the produce released by the eight defendants in this case? A. I think so. I generally think so, although the Republic and a few other distributors have come along in recent years and, in my opinion, are making much better pictures than they ever have.

Q. How many would you say that Republic released during 1943-1944 that you exhibited in your key first-run theatres? A. Oh, I would say five or six, probably.

Q. Five or six pictures? A. I would think so.

Q. In your first-run, key first-run theatres? A. Yes.

Q. Can you name them? A. Not offhand. I will check it and give it to you, sir.

Q. And Monogram? A. Monogram has had, I would say, about four or five this last year, "Dillinger" or "These Are Your Children." I know of two others I cannot think of the title; say possibly four or five.

Q. In the 1943-1944 season? A. Oh, 1943-1944 season? No, I would have to check back for the 1943-1944 season. I gave you 1944-1945.

Q. And P. R. C.? A. I will check the records and see. Very simple.

Q. So in your classification then you have included what (1220) you call opposition first-run theatres, theatres which had no regular run on first-run product other than let us say Republic or Monogram or P.R.C., is that right? A. There may be a few included of that nature, but, generally, the opposition theatres that I set forth here played the products of—certain major companies' products.

Q. Can you give me the names of those that fall within the P.R.C., Republic and Monogram class, names and locations of those? A. When you say that you want to have the names, do you want me to pick out a theatre that is competitive theatre and eliminate the other competitive theatres?

Q. No, I just want to know the names and locations of the theatres you have described as opposition or competitive first-runs, who had only a regular first-run of the product of one or two or all three of those companies. A. I would say this, if that is what you wish, I will go back and give them to you. In Hartford, the Poli, the Palace, Strand and Regal, and E. M. Loew's operating the theatres, operates with major companies' products. The State Theatre has Monogram, P.R.C. and Republic, as I see it here.

Q. If you have them on the chart, can we just have the chart marked, and that will take care of it? A. Yes, I think that would be the simplest way.

(1221)

Mr. Wright: Would you mark that with the next plaintiff's number?

Mr. Seymour: I think it ought to be said that that chart does not include product which is playing in theatres in which Paramount has an interest. Only the product that played in the other first-run theatres.

Mr. Wright: I understand that.

Mr. Seymour: Of course, that is only in the 48 cities about which I examined Mr. Goldenson.

Mr. Wright: Surely.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 377 for identification.)

Q. This chart, I take it, also contains a statement of foreign pictures only wherever the theatre that you have treated as a first-run theatre shows only foreign pictures, is that right? A. I think they put an asterisk on the two theatres I referred to as exhibiting only foreign pictures and there may be a statement that that is so.

Q. Those are the only ones that you indicated? A. I think so. That is, the only ones that are marked, and I am talking from memory when I say that is so. They may be running other first-run pictures which at the moment I am not aware of.

Q. This chart, does this make any attempt to indicate which of the so-called competitor first-runs are independently operated and which are operated by affiliates? A. I think (1222) it does but I am not sure. I didn't notice that particularly.

Mr. Seymour: It is just a memorandum to refresh the witness's recollection.

Mr. Wright: We will offer the chart.

Mr. Caskey: Objected to as far as containing any information as to theatres operated by National. That has been put in. We have never seen this. It purports to give seating capacities and pictures played in our theatres.

(Government's exhibit 377 for identification received in evidence.)

(1223)

Q. I will hand the chart back to you and ask you to just indicate or name the first-run theatres listed on there which you regard as independently operated. A. As independently operated?

Q. Yes. A. In Birmingham, Alabama, the Empire, the Galax and the Royal are independently operated.

Q. Well, just take whatever ones there are all the way down. A. In Hollywood and Los Angeles, California, I regard the Hawaii, Hollywood Music Hall, the Tower, the Elite, the California, Esquire and Grand as independently operated.

Mr. Seymour: Let us define that term. You mean by that, Mr. Wright, operated by somebody who is not a defendant in this case or affiliated with any of the defendants?

Mr. Wright: That is right, not a defendant or affiliated with one of the defendants in the suit.

The Witness: Well, I heard here in the testimony United Artists had an interest. I thought Blumenfeld operated those four theatres, but if you mean United Artists as one, you mean to eliminate that? I don't know.

Q. Well, I really want to get your best information as to which, if any, of the first-runs that you have on the list are operated by interests which are not affiliated with one of the defendants in the suit, that is all.

(1224)

A. Well, in San Francisco, the Esquire, United Artists and Orpheum.

Q. Are these Blumenfeld theatres? A. Blumenfeld theatres.

In Hartford, Connecticut, the State and E. M. Loew's Theatre.

In New Haven—nothing in New Haven.

In Jacksonville, St. Johns.

In Miami, the Capitol and Miami.

In Tampa, the State.

In Atlanta, the Rialto, the Cameo.

In Chicago, the Wood's, the Oriental.

In Gary, Indiana, the Palace and the Gary.

Judge Bright: These are all independent?

The Witness: These are independents, no affiliation with the defendants.

In New Orleans, I understand the St. Charles is operated by Harry Brandt, which is an independent. By the way, that is not on this chart. I notice that they have left it off, but I understand that the St. Charles is operated by Harry Brandt, an independent.

Q. Is that something new that has developed? A. I think he took it over a few months ago. They must have left it off this chart.

Q. I meant you to confine your answers to what you have (1225) on the chart there so we can see from your answers what the independent theatres had in the way of product. A. All right. Now, in Boston: The Majestic, the Tremont, the Gayety; The Translux, which is, I believe, called the Park—was called the Park; they may have changed it to Translux; the Laff Movie.

Q. Who is the independent that operates those? A. I think that Lieberman and Brandt work or have some kind of an arrangement between the Majestic, the Tremont and the Normandy, but I don't know whether they are joint operators or whether they are individual operators; I don't exactly know; and the Translux is operated by Dave Stoneman and his son Harold Stoneman.

Q. Is that a newsreel theatre? A. No. It was a newsreel, but they operate on a first-run policy, what are known as action pictures.

Now, the Gayety I think is a "sensational" house that operates first-run sensational pictures. I think E. M. Loew operates that.

Q. What do you mean by sensational pictures? A. Oh, you get certain pictures that are blown up, as "Why Children Leave Home," and that type of picture, generally speaking, that by innuendo there is an inference——

Q. You mean sex pictures? A. Well, I would say that, yes.

(1226)

Q. Any others? A. That is all there.

In Cambridge, the University Theatre. That is operated by an independent.

Q. The University, I take it, has what you call a mixed policy? A. They have a mixed policy. They play Warner's, half of RKO, Universal, Columbia and United Artists first-run at Cambridge.

Q. They play some second-run? A. Yes. I think we have to once in a while in some situations where we do not have enough product. That is not unusual if there is a shortage of product.

Q. Go ahead. A. New Bedford: The Empire, the State and the New Bedford, that is operated by a Mr. Zeitz. By the way, the names of these independents are not on here. I am just reciting those by memory, you understand.

Q. I understand. A. Because you said to repeat what is on here.

Q. I merely wanted you to confine yourself to the theatres that are listed here. A. All right. Then the Broadway, the Teele Square and the Somerville theatres in Somerville.

Q. Who has those? A. Wait a minute. I will think of his name.

I can't offhand think of it, but it is an independent.

(1227)

In Springfield: The Bijou and the Court Square is E. M. Loew's; those are two.

In Worcester: The Plymouth.

In Detroit the Adams—I mean the Downtown and Adams, or maybe it is only the Downtown. I don't know if Fox has an interest in the Adams Theatre in Detroit or not.

If they do, that is excluded. If they do not, they are both independent.

In Duluth: The Granada and the Lake.

In Minneapolis I think I have already mentioned the World on foreign pictures, and in St. Paul, the same thing.

In Buffalo the Twentieth Century and the Lafayette. I think Basil operates the Twentieth Century and Max Yellen —Max Yellen operates the Century and Basil operates the Lafayette.

In New York—that is Brooklyn—no, I mean in Manhattan, I beg your pardon. In Manhattan, well, there is the Victoria, the New York, the Central, the Rialto, the Astor. —wait a minute. Would you consider Mr. Sam Goldwyn a part of these defendants?

Q. No. A. Mr. Selznick a part of these defendants?

Q. No. A. They operate this theatre. Radio City Music Hall.

(1228)

Rocester, no.

Toledo: The Granada and the Esquire.

Q. Who has those? A. As I remember, Jack Skirball has that—not Jack Skirball; his brother;—I forget his name.

In Oklahoma City, the State. Dent operates that.

In Salt Lake City, the Uptown, the Rialto, State and Lyric.

Q. Is that all there are? A. That is right.

Q. And then, I take it, wherever in your testimony you did not refer to any other first-run theatres at all, that means there are no first-runs there other than those in which Paramount has interest; is that right? A. There are no other first-run theatres that the defendants in this case are interested. You asked me that—as I understood it, what you wanted was the opposition theatres except those that the defendants were interested in.

Q. I am not referring to the testimony you just gave on cross-examination. I am referring to your testimony on direct examination where in certain instances you did not say anything about whether there was any other first-run theatres or not. Now, in those instances where you did not mention the existence of other first-run theatres, the only first-run theatres in town were those in which Paramount was interested, isn't that so? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, when you compared these theatres and compared them in groups, you meant, did you, that the theatres in which Paramount had an interest collectively considered were better than other theatres in the town? A. No. What I did was, I took the best theatre that was in the town and compared it with the best theatre that we had in the town, and on that basis made the comparison.

Q. Now, on these reports, this Exhibit P-4 of the defendants, this, as I understand it, is the report that you sent out to the theatres in which Paramount is interested as to how pictures of other distributors did in your theatres. That merely says "Sections of U.S.A. Played"; then "East", "Middlewest" and "Southwest" and it gives general areas. Those reports do not come in to you in the same general terms as that, do they? A. No. They come in from, say, five or six geographical areas. The picture opens in a theatre, and each of the managers of those theatres will send that report in without saying what theatres it played in. The report goes back out to the field showing that that particular area has played the picture.

Q. Well, the report he sends in shows what? A. Shows everything but the area, and whether it did above average or below average or fair or good business.

Q. Well, it names the theatres involved, does it? A. I presume that in some cases it does and in some cases it does not, for the reason that when it comes in the probabilities are that we know that it has only played in one spot in that area, and he would not have to say so; but generally I imagine it does, yes.

Q. Then in addition to these reports which you receive and then send out in this form marked P-4, as I understand it you receive—what is it, daily or weekly—— A. No, we get that sometimes a week or two after the picture has opened in a given house, and the manager has had a chance to talk to the patrons as to their reaction to the picture, what their reaction to the picture was; they talk to various cross-sections of people, and they get their reaction, and then assemble his advertising material so as they can see in there what type of advertising campaign he will use.

Q. Now, will you let me finish my question before you give the answer? I say, in addition to this report, the reports which come in and go out in this form P-4, you, as I understand it, receive daily or weekly reports of the actual receipts and expenses including film rental of the theatres in which Paramount is interested? Those are different reports? A. You are confusing two things. We get a daily telegraphic report, which I think was put in here this morning. In addition to that we get a weekly report, an audit report of all the items of expense in a given theatre, its gross and its P and L, which go to our theatre auditing department for verification.

Q. Have you got a copy of the form of report that you get that information on? A. It can be furnished to you. If it is not here I am sure that Mr. Seymour can take care of it.

Q. And that you get weekly? A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. From all of the theatres in which you have an interest? A. Yes.

Q. Now, as to those theatres or as to the compensation for these services that you render to those theatres in which you have an interest,—how is that handled? How is Paramount compensated for the services you rendered? A. Back in the reorganization days, at the time that the trustees decentralized these operations, they set up maybe a flat amount. I believe our New England theatres send in $200 a week, and maybe another circuit sends in $300 a week; but it is on a non-profit basis. They try to estimate what the cost of these services is in the home office, and that is what they pay for it. I mean, there is no set basis. It just happened to be arbitrary amounts at that time, I suppose what the trustees and their advisers thought could be set up, and it has been continued virtually ever since.

Q. Well, it bears in most cases, does it not, a fairly close relation to a fixed proportion of the gross receipts? A. No, it does not, sir, because all of them are flat rentals. By flat rentals I mean it is just a flat sum that the trustees agreed on at the time.

Q. Well, that is done pursuant to a contract between Paramount and these people? A. That is right.

Q. Have you got a form of that contract? A. I am sure that that can be furnished if it has not been.

Q. And all of these people that you refer to as local operators is each himself the operator of quite a substantial circuit of theatres, isn't that right? A. Not in every case. We have varying situations. In Newark we have a man by the name of Adam Adams who operates the Paramount Theatre in Newark and the U. S. Theatre in Paterson. In Ogden, Utah, we have an associate, a local theatre operator, who operates only in Ogden, Utah. He happens to operate two theatres there. In other words, it is varying. Some have larger numbers of theatres, others small. You understand in most of these situations these people grew up in the business and Paramount acquired an interest in those theatres from those people who grew up in those areas.

(1233)

Q. In most of the situations your local partner or representative, as you call him, does have a circuit of theatres, isn't that correct? A. In some cases, yes.

Q. It is true in most, isn't it? A. No, not in most. I would say there are a great number where they only operate in a given town.

Q. Well, in those cases where they do have a circuit of theatres, the operations frequently extend over quite a wide area; maybe two or three states, isn't that right? A. In some cases it may be so, yes.

Q. And the people who actually locally manage the theatres, that is, the theatre managers in the towns involved, have nothing whatsoever to do with the buying of the theatre, is that right? A. That is right, sir.

Q. The film buying in each case is handled by this local representative who has his percentage contract with you? A. That is right. In the case where the man has an interest in the corporation, by the man who has that interest in the corporation.

Q. Yes; and in some cases, such as with Mr. Richards in New Orleans, in making film deals he may include with the theatres in which you are interested a substantial number of others in which he has an interest but Paramount does not, is that right?

Mr. Seymour: I object to that as hypothetical.

(1234)

What he may do seems to me utterly hypothetical. There is no evidence on it.

Judge Hand: I will allow it.

A. I can't answer that, Mr. Wright, because we have a contract with Mr. Richards that came into effect at the time that the Paramount-Richards Theatres were in receivership under which there is specifically excluded his interest in these two corporations; so he buys specifically for Paramount-Richards' so far as we are concerned.

Q. And you don't know how many other theatres may be thrown into those deals, is that right? A. Well, certainly as far as Paramount-Richards' contract is concerned, it is only as to Paramount-Richards' theatres. That is all we are interested in and that is all we know. I have never seen anything else.

Q. And the reports you get are confined to the performance of the theatres in which Paramount itself actually has an interest? A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, these local representatives are loosely referred to in the trade as Paramount partners? A. I think sometimes they are referred to as that.

Q. Although in some cases they may be partners in that they have 50 per cent and in the others you own a hundred per cent of their corporation, but they simply have a sharing management agreement, is that right? A. I think in the trade they call them partners, whether they are a hundred per cent or 50 per cent.

Q. And in either event you have regular meetings of all of those people in which they all get together with you, is that right? A. That is right?

Q. And at those meetings you frequently have a representative of your sales department, or usually? A. We have had meetings of the sales department; we have had our production department there; we have had our advertising department; we have had a great number of executives of Paramount. We usually have our legal counsel, who wants to come down, Mr. Keough; we have a number of people.

Q. There is regular contact maintained among all of the partners and all the other departments of Paramount? A. Yes, in this sense, that if a person has a good advertising campaign on a picture and we hear about it, they send it in to us and we send it out to the field so that the others can take advantage of it if they wish. Or if one circuit happens to be making better progress, let us say, in the construction of theatres or maintenance of theatres, or doing things of that nature, and he informs us of it, we send that information out to all the partners, so to speak.

Q. Now, I believe you mentioned that one of the matters (1236) that comes before the boards of these corporations in which you always have an approval of in New York is this question of capital expenditures? A. That is right.

Q. That is a little bit wider than that, isn't it? How about if they want to acquire a theatre where there may be no capital expenditure involved? A. I stated this morning that we approve all acquisitions of fees for leases or the extensions of leases. I already stated that in my testimony.

Q. I apparently did not understand you. A. Yes.

Q. Well, in any case anywhere where there is a theatre acquisition, that has to be approved by you, is that right? A. Oh, yes, that is right, sir.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Now, at those meetings which Mr. Wright asked you about, Mr. Goldenson, is there a discussion as to the negotiations or the terms which the various theatre-operating heads are having or have made with other distributors? A. Never——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit he is in no position to answer as to what is discussed between 20 or 30 people at those meetings.

Mr. Seymour: Well, now, you developed he is there, and I think he ought to know.

(1237)

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. (Continuing) It never has been discussed.

Mr. Seymour: Now, I neglected, I am sorry to say, when I had him on direct to ask my friend, Mr. Wright, to stipulate, so that I would not have to take the time to put them to him, the same thing that we stipulated on the last witness, that if asked Mr. Goldenson would answer in the negative the questions negativing conspiracy which I put to Mr. Zukor, with the same force and effect as if they were asked.

Mr. Wright: It is so stipulated.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess until tomorrow at 10.30.

(Adjourned to October 26, 1945, at 10.30 a. m.)

(1238)

New York, October 26, 1945,
at 10:30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please. I have these two exhibits here that have been marked for identification, Government's Exhibit No. 375, the telegraphic report form referred to in the testimony of Mr. Reagan and Mr. Goldenson; and Government's Exhibit No. 376, the list of franchises which has now been corrected; and I will offer these two in evidence.

(Government's Exhibits 375 and 376 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Seymour: I now call Mr. Keough.

AUSTIN C. KEOUGH, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Paramount, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. What is your position with Paramount, Mr. Keough? A. I am a member of the board of directors, vice-president, secretary and general counsel of the corporation.

Judge Goddard: A little louder, please.

Q. Will you speak up? A. I am sorry. I am a member of the board of directors and the executive committee, vice-president, secretary, and general counsel of the corporation.
(1239)

Q. Now, how long have you been with Paramount? A. Since August 1919.

Q. Can you tell us about the various positions that you have held since you have been with the company? A. In August 1919, I joined the corporation, which was then known as Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, as a member of the legal department under Elek John Ludvigh, who was general counsel. I continued in that position until about 1925, when I also became an officer and counsel to Publix Theatres Corporation, which was then newly created, a wholly owned subsidiary of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. I continued to be a member of the legal department of the parent company and counsel for Publix Theatres Corporation until January 1932, at which time I became general counsel of the parent company, a member of the board of directors, and secretary of the company.

I continued as a member of the board of directors until sometime in 1935, when I ceased to be a director until about 1937, and I was reelected. I continued to hold the office of secretary and general counsel from 1932 to the present time.

Q. Speaking generally, what has been the nature of your duties? A. Principally, that of legal counsel; largely however, (1240) that of executive of the parent company and of its wholly owned and partly owned subsidiaries.

Q. Now, prior to coming with Paramount or Famous Players-Lasky—and I shall use the word Paramount for convenience—had you had experience in the motion picture industry? A. I had.

Q. And when did you first become connected with the industry? A. In 1916 I was in the office of the law firm of Konta & Kirchwey. That law firm was counsel to Lewis J. Selznick and Selznick enterprises, and his various moving picture companies; and a little later counsel to Select Pictures Corporation, which Mr. Selznick's companies or Mr. Selznick owned half in stock, and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation owned the other half. During the period from about the fall of 1916 until May of 1918, I spent about half of my time attending to the affairs of the Selznick group of moving picture companies——

Q. As counsel? A. As counsel.

(1241)

Q. Did there come a time in the history of Paramount when there was a change in the method of operation of the theatres in which Paramount had an interest? A. There did.

Q. And when was that, approximately? A. There were two periods of change. Orginally, Paramount acquired interest in theatres 100 per cent and also acquired interest in theatres or corporations that held and operated theatres 50 per cent or other percentages.

Q. That is in some it had acquired 100 per cent and in some 50 per cent? A. Yes. The management of the 50 per cent companies was in the hands of the local individuals who owned the stock.

Then, between 1925 and 1929 or 1930, the company began to acquire those interests, those outstanding interests, for itself, so in many cases it became the entire owner of these corporations.

Then there was a change back in about 1930, 1931, going through 1932, 1933 and 1934.

Q. Prior to 1931, as Paramount increased its interest in the companies in which it had 50 per cent interest in, was the operation of the theatres in those companies largely supervised from New York? A. It was.

Q. Then did there come a change in that regard about 1931 and following that? A. Yes, principally in 1932.

Q. What was the nature of that change? What were the reasons for it? A. The nature of the change was a sending of the management—both authority and responsibility for the theatres—to the field, whether the manager was a 100 per cent employee of a 100 per cent company, or whether he was a part owner in the corporation, and more and more during that period, and the following year, 1933, Paramount brought into co-ownership of corporations theatre men, many of whom had formerly created the theatres themselves, some of whom had been out of the business for years, and some of whom had stayed in the business. So, there was a sharp change in 1933 in what we generally called decentralization of management and operation.

(1242)

Q. From that time on have the local managers, both in connection with the 50 per cent-owned companies and the 100 per cent-owned companies, been determining the operating policies of those companies? A. They have, I think, with no exception.

Q. Can you tell us why that change was made in 1931, 1932 and 1933? A. The change was made as a result of a business decision reached that that was much the more efficient way of managing these many theatres which had local problems which ought to be solved promptly and by people that knew the local situation and not wait until facts had come to New York and gone through—among a board of people, some of whom had never seen the theatres. That was (12[illegible]) the reason why we started sending back, or decentralization of management.

There was an additional reason for that that had to do with the financial condition, the bankruptcy and receivership.

Q. We will come to that. Since that time those companies have been operated locally? A. They have.

Q. Are they operated separately by their local managers without relation to each other? A. They are operated separately unless a given company is a subsidiary of another company.

Q. Yes, of course. A. And then they are operated as a unit.

Q. What I mean is, there is no relationship between the operation of the Interstate Circuit or the Interstate Theatres in Texas and the operation of the United Detroit Theatres in Detroit? A. None whatsoever.

Q. Or between any of the other companies except as they have a subsidiary relationship? A. That is right.

Q. As they do in some particular areas? A. For example, in Texas, Interstate Circuit, which is the name of a corporation in which Paramount has a 50 per cent interest, is managed by its local officers. Also in the State of Texas there is another company in which Paramount has a 50 per cent interest in which the Interstate stockholders have no (1244) interest. That company is managed by its local officers and they have no connection with each other whatsoever—they almost don't talk to each other.

Judge Hand: What is that Interstate that was in the litigation in 306 U.S.?

The Witness: That is the corporation that I have just referred to, the Interstate Circuit, Inc., which is a Delaware corporation, operating in Texas and operates in the principal towns of Texas—has theatres in the principal Texas towns. That is the company that Paramount has a 50 per cent stock interest in.

Q. That is managed locally? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: What is the other corporation that you mentioned in which Paramount has a 50 per cent interest?

The Witness: The Jefferson Amusement Company.

Judge Bright: That is also in Texas?

The Witness: That is also in Texas. That is in East Texas.

Q. After the decentralization of the operation of these theatres, were management contracts made with the local managers of the hundred per cent companies under which they shared in the profits of the enterprise, of the company?

A. In a great many instances they were. Perhaps not in all.
(1245)

Q. But the general policy was to assign duties to the local manager and give him a share in the profits of the enterprise? A. Yes.

Q. As compensation? A. Yes.

Q. And of course, in the 50—— A. Shares in the profits of the particular enterprise that he was responsible for.

Q. Yes, the particular company. And, of course, in the other companies where Paramount had a 50 per cent interest, the other interest shared by reason of their stock ownership? A. Well, they sometimes shared by reason of management contracts because they devoted their time and energies and they were rewarded for that as anyone else acting as an employee would be rewarded in addition to their stock interest.

Q. And those contracts were made between the particular theatre-operating company and the local operator? A. They were.

Q. In the course of your duties did you participate actively and intimately in the receivership and bankruptcy proceedings of Paramount? A. I did.

Q. In those proceedings was the relationship of Paramount to theatres in which it had an interest changed in many respects? A. It was.

Q. I wish you would tell us, if you will, about the financial difficulties, the receivership proceedings and the bankruptcy proceedings, and how they affected Paramount's interests in theatres.
(1246)

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not understand the relevancy of this. I do not understand the purpose of this testimony. I do not see what the receivership difficulties have to do with any of the issues that we are trying here.

Mr. Seymour: It will be developed, if your Honors please, that many of the present relationships to theatres resulted from those proceedings; that Paramount in those proceedings lost many theatres in which it had an interest; that there were local proceedings over the United States which affected theatre interests; and at the same time, one of its competitors, at least, and perhaps more, were operating profitably, going ahead, while Paramount and some of these other companies were in great distress, a very strange form of combination in conspiracy, and I think we are entitled to develop that.

Judge Hand: Go ahead, and see what it is.

A. In January 1932 the parent company, then known as Paramount-Publix Corporation, went into equity receivership in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. It stayed in equity receivership until some time in March of—1933, I should have said was the (1247) date. In March 1933, when it went into voluntary bankruptcy, three trustees were elected. It stayed there in voluntary bankruptcy until June 1934 when, upon the passage of 77B of the bankruptcy law, it was one of the first companies to petition for reorganization.

At the beginning of Paramount's receivership, Paramount had a number of wholly-owned subsidiaries engaged in producing pictures and distributing pictures. They also had a large number of wholly and partly owned subsidiaries that owned, leased and operated theatres in various parts of the country. Some of those theatres were, financially, in good shape; most of them, due to the depression, were in bad shape.

One of the largest of the subsidiaries, Southern Enterprises, went into bankruptcy on its own voluntary petition on the very day that Paramount-Publix went into equity receivership. That company had either directly or through subsidiaries the holdings not only in the eleven or so southern states but in other states, middlewest and elsewhere.

Publix Theatres Corporation had, for several years, been a managing organization that united the operations of these wholly-owned companies, kept books for them, negotiated film contracts and whatnot. That company, while it never went into bankruptcy or receivership, was hopelessly insolvent.

Upon the going in of Paramount into receivership, the receivers found that, owing to ancillary receiverships throughout the country, they were threatened with loss of control of their film exchanges; they found that their studio, many of whose contracts were held directly by artists, writers and whatnot directly with Paramount, those contracts were being jeopardized, they were losing them—the artists were going to our competitors. Our competitors were encouraging, if not spreading, the rumor that Paramount was all through and not a good company to work for and "you had better come and work for another company," meaning themselves.

Our theatres were the subject of a series of individual bankruptcies or receiverships.
(1249)

That very chaotic condition first led to the voluntary bankruptcy to bring the management of Paramount all over the United States into the hands of this court and the three trustees; and during the period of the bankruptcy and the reorganization, which ended in 1935, the trustees in bankruptcy, their counsel, I and others of the executives who were directors and officers, counsel, of the wholly owned and even partly owned subsidiaries, tried to save for Paramount the various assets that the Paramount organization as a whole had, whether they owned them direct or whether they owned them through their subsidiaries, against the bankruptcy and receivership proceedings and attack and disintegrating influences.

In the course of that we lost theatres; we lost theatres to non-affiliated companies—I don't recall whether we lost any to so-called affiliated companies; I think we did, a few—we had to reorganize the various theatres by bringing into co-ownership individuals, because the bondholders, preferred stockholders and others of those separate corporations insisted upon it.

We had a thoroughly decentralized management. And we had a sharp business difference in the point of view between the advisers of the trustees and the management, as to whether or not the Paramount organization should get rid (1250) of theatres, because these theatres were expensive; they were geared high in overhead charges; and at that time the studio seemed to be making a little money on the product it was turning out, which we of the management felt was rather inferior product at the moment under bankruptcy conditions. I for one held the view, and expressed it, that if the theatres were not preserved to Paramount during the period when we were trying to recover and reorganize, that when we got all through there would not be very much to reorganize; other people would have the theatres and we would not have the theatres, and we would start from a very disadvantageous position in the manufacture of pictures, principally in getting talent. As a result—

Q. Will you explain why that would be so? A. Excuse me, I didn't hear that.

Q. Will you explain why that would be so? Why would you have difficulty in getting talent? A. If our competitors were not in financial difficulties, or, at least, those who were not in the courts—and most of them were not, regardless of whether they had financial difficulties or not—most of them were not in the courts. RKO was in the courts at that time, but Warner Bros. was not; Metro certaintly was not, they were very, very prosperous. Columbia was not; Universal was not; United Artists was not; Twentieth Century-Fox was not. It might well have been but it was not. It had an interest with the Chase National Bank which made it unnecessary for it to go into bankruptcy. We were sitting there in bankruptcy, and agents and others were pointing out to our artists: "this is a bankrupt concern; you have got no future; go with a solvent one."

Now we had to stem that tide of competition for our people. We had to stem the tide also of competition for the screen time that our distributing agencies were seeking in competition with the others; and the same story, certainly in the early days of Paramount's bankruptcy and receivership, was bruited about among the exchanges.

I speak of firsthand knowledge because I came right upon it in connection with these ancillary receiverships. And the fact that we were losing the theatres that we had was also an argument made.

Now if we lost the theatres, the next step was—well, that was the best proof that their argument was right; we were just on our way out.

So the whole thing in the opinion of the management, which I shared, and in which I was one of the spokesmen, was that the interest of Paramount, the reorganization, was best served and vitally served by reorganizing or having the trustees, who had no money, to allow the distributing companies that had funds, to use those funds to finance the preservation and the retention of theatres.
(1252)

We did that, and we finally in a couple of years came out and reorganized in very good shape.

Q. Where did the distributing company get the money?

A. Through the distribution of pictures, what we call film entals, which came in. We were making a profit. What as left over after we sent the weekly pay check to Holly-ood we were able to use for the purpose of making sure at we had a home.

Kansas City was one of the cases, I remember, in which ere was severe competition to try to get our Kansas City eatres away from us; and our landlord wanted a hundred nts on the dollar, and he got it.

Q. Now as a result of all those proceedings, Paramount st some theatres and also changed its relationship to its terests in some of the theatre operating companies, is that rrect? A. It did, yes.

Q. In some where it had acquired a hundred per cent, a rtion of its interest went back to the original management to others, and Paramount thereafter was only a 50 per nt stockholder, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And that happened, for example, in connection with e Comerford Circuit that was mentioned here yesterday, s it not? A. It did.

253)

Judge Bright: What circuit?

Mr. Seymour: Comerford.

Q. And did it happen in connection with others? A. Yes, happened in connection with the Comerford Circuit, the terstate Circuit, the Texas Consolidated Theatres, the A. Blank group of theatres known as Tri-State; various es. The Western Massachusetts theatres, which we owned undred per cent, we wound up with a 51 per cent stock erest.

Q. In the course of those proceedings was there conten-n that the Paramount Theatre in New York should be d or disposed of? A. Yes, there was.

Q. And was there discussion of that before the Judge in rge of the proceedings? A. Well, there was a hearing on the reorganization of the Paramount Building in this District Court, a bankruptcy proceeding or a reorganization proceeding. As a matter of a fact I had to be a witness in it.

Q. Was that before Judge Coxe? A. That was before Judge Coxe.

Q. And what were the contentions about that? A. Well, some of the creditors said that the real estate was bad; that we ought to get rid of it, because there was a big mortgage on it held by the public, and that it was a white elephant and we ought to get rid of it and sell our pictures—I don't (1254) know where we were going to sell them, but, anyway, sell them—well, anyway, get rid of the theatre and move over to Tenth Avenue and get some offices much cheaper.

We presented the evidence and the opinion that that theatre was strategically necessary for Paramount; we were not interested in the Paramount Building; that went up 29 stories; but we were interested in the Paramount Theatre. And with the change and improvement in business from the deep depression onward, why we stopped losing money, and we had better management, and we made some money. Well, the future has borne out our predictions. From that day to this it has been prosperous.

By Judge Hand:

Q. Wasn't there some litigation over that theatre? A. The Paramount Theatre?

Q. Yes, in the District Court. A. No. There was a reorganization proceeding.

Q. Oh, yes. Of course I know about all those. A. But I know of no litigation over the Paramount Theatre.

Q. There was no question of preferential payments or anything like that? A. Not of the Paramount Theatre. The trustees of Paramount-Publix brought a lot of suits into this court, under the authority of the court, against the old directors and the banks and so forth. Those were all disposed (1255)

of as part of the reorganization which was approved in this court.

Q. I didn't mean that. I think I am mixing it up with something else, but in one of those cases at that time I remember I was in a position of dissenting in the Circuit Court of Appeals. A. Well, it did not apply to Paramount; I don't remember what it was. I don't remember any dissent in the Court of Appeals in any Paramount proceeding.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Now, in the course of those proceedings, were there any developments in connection with Paramount's interest in theatres on the West Coast? A. Yes.

Q. What were they? A. The proceedings primarily had to do with the theatres Paramount owned in San Francisco, which some years before they had leased to Fox West Coast I think it was; and that situation had to be reorganized. Fox West Coast was in bankruptcy, and we had to reorganize mortgages; and in one case one of the local real estate men, a man named Lurie, stepped in; he had a ground lease; and he just grabbed it, and we had to deal with Mr. Lurie thereafter. Those proceedings, those reorganization proceedings went through the courts out there and went through this court in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Q. Were there certain agreements made with Fox West
(1256)
Coast which were approved in the course of those reorganization proceedings? A. Yes, there was.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, is there going to be any contention made here that because an agreement has been approved by a bankruptcy court, that it can't violate the Sherman Act?

Mr. Seymour: I do not think I would go that far. But I think the fact that the court dealing with the proceedings, and intimately familiar with the problems, permitted a transaction with the Fox West Coast, is some indication that the Government's attack on the transaction is as frivolous as it otherwise appears to be. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. Wright: I take it that Mr. Keough by his testimony is not going to attempt to show that any question as to the effect of those agreements from the standpoint of the antitrust laws, was even brought to the bankruptcy court's attention. Is that right?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, Mr. Wright.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Now, were various other agreements with respect to theatres and Paramount's interest in theatres, and so on, passed upon by the court in those proceedings? A. Yes.

Q. And were there arrangements made for local operation of the various theatre companies, and for the disposition (1257) by Paramount of some of its stock interest in those companies, matters which were disposed of and passed on in the course of those proceedings? A. Yes, in several cases and in the most important of the cases. They had to be. They were assets of the Paramount bankruptcy or reoganization estates, and this New York bankruptcy court had to pass upon them, give their consent to the transaction, whatever it was.

Q. You were one of those who in the course of the proceedings took the position that Paramount should retain an interest in theatres? A. I was.

Q. And you have indicated your basis for that view? A. Yes.

Q. And eventually that view prevailed, did it? A. It did.

Q. And since that time Paramount has continued to have an interest in theatres? A. Yes.

Q. Have there been some changes since that time? A. Yes.

Q. Is it still your view that Paramount needs an interest in theatres? A. It is.

Q. Will you tell us why? A. There are two reasons why Paramount—and I do not single out Paramount from any other producer or distributor of pictures—needs theatres: one purpose is to do that kind of exploiting of pictures which (1258) requires the spending of a considerable amount of money in advertising, and a process called exploitation, which goes beyond just putting advertisements in the newspaper, which has to do with running the picture as long as the public will patronize it; going through a process where perhaps the exhibition is on a dollars and cents losing basis for a time, or even throughout the entire run of the picture; a presentation of that picture in its most attractive form to the public, where a private enterpriser or exhibitor just would not want to do it, would not want to take on the risk—let somebody else do it. Now that is one purpose.

Q. Will you explain why that exploitation is important? Is it important beyond the effect in the particular theatres which exploit it? A. Oh, the whole purpose of that kind of exploitation is to make the picture favorably known to the public over the wide area not only served by that theatre, but the inhabitants of which hear about the success of the picture. Furthermore, that kind of success is an inducement to exhibitors to buy and book that picture. And when I say buy, that is a trade term. They buy nothing except a license to acquire that picture and exploit it, and give it better time if it has succeeded. Success breeds success. They want the successful.

Now, there is a bit of a gamble in that, just as there is a gamble in making the picture at all. That is one purpose of a producer or distributor having theatres that he can count upon, know that they are available when he needs them.

The other purpose grows out of the ordinary dealings between exhibitors and distributors, and that is to have the assurance that the product you make—you spend large amounts of money upon them; you risk your judgment, your showmanship judgment, and ideas of what the public will like against dire predictions to the contrary, even in your own studio or your own sales organization, to say nothing of critics and whatnot; and exhibitors, they are always skeptical about things. Now, you make these pictures at a risk. It is not one picture you make. You make a program. You have to make a program to operate a studio. A big studio has to make a considerable number of pictures; a little studio may make a few pictures; but the trade needs a lot of pictures coming regularly, steadily. In order to be sure that you have got a market for those pictures you must be protected against what we have found from experience is the desire of many exhibitors to shut a particular distributor out at a particular period of time, maybe not for just a few pictures but for a season's product in order to bid down the terms, whether the terms be flat rentals, whether the terms be percentage, whether the terms be the extent of the playing time, the effort of the distributor being to get as favorable representation as possible, and the effort of the exhibitor to buy as cheap as possible.

Now, in that conflict it has been found from time to time that over considerable areas exhibitors may say, "We don't want the product." They may be quite honest in their point of view; but since there are a considerable number of these groupings, that always have been since I have been in the industry, of exhibitors, if these various exhibitors should feel about Paramount pictures, for example, a season of Paramount pictures—if enough of them feel the same way about them, try to get them, we think, too cheaply,—well, the whole enterprise is in peril. Well, that exhibitor is not farsighted. He is not thinking of what is going to happen to Paramount, because in the meantime he has got plenty of other products competing to get that time from Paramount. He has got the product of eight, nine, ten companies, depending upon when it is. I mean, over the period I have been connected with this business, the distributors have grown from small stature, small companies, to large companies; and those that were large, like Paramount, the one back in 1918 and 1919, it was the leading company, almost so far out, it almost had no second; it went down; it went into bankruptcy; it struggled back. Today we think it is fair to say we occupy one of the foremost positions. All that has happened.

Now, these various companies, their distributors try to get that precious playing time that we would like away from us; and if an exhibitor does not take our picture, and if enough of them do not take the picture—and a studio can't always be sure that everything it is going to make, or even the majority of things it is going to make, are going to be financially successful. They make terrific efforts to make the best kind of pictures, but they don't always make money.

That is why we believe it is vital for those two purposes for our company particularly to have these theatres.

Now, one other by-product that comes from that is a knowledge of what the public at a theatre thinks about, what their reaction is; how they patronize a theatre; what little things you may do will improve the appeal. That information, if we get it very quick and can pass it on to our distributor company and our studio—and we do it through passing out among the audiences cards and ask them what they think about it,—"What is your opinion about these pictures?"—that is when they are new—all of those things are advantageous. But that, as I say, is a by-product. The two fundamental necessities, as I see it—as I see it and my associates—for having theatres are the two I mentioned.

Q. Now, as long as you have theatres and feel that you have to have them, do you also feel that you should attempt to see that they are operated at a profit to Paramount? A. I think that is obvious. We spend a great deal of our stockholder's money and we want to make a return on that money. (1263)

Q. I wish you would tell us—you have said something about it—I wish you would tell us somewhat more about the relative relationship in size, success, failure and difficulties of the various distributors through the 20s and 30s, if you can. You have told us how Paramount went into bankruptcy. A. Starting in about the year 1913,* Paramount, by concession of the trade, was preeminently first in pictures that it made and in stars that it had. There were other companies actively competing with it, the so-called Big Four, Vitagraph and Selig and a couple of other names there.

Mr. Proskauer: Will you keep your voice up? I heard the word "Vitagraph", and I want to hear it all.

A. (Continuing) There was a Big Four, which then consisted of a company called Vitagraph, and Selig, and Spoor* and Essanay. They were independent studios that marketed their products through one distributor of their own. And there was the Universal Pictures Company. There was the Fox Film Company and, of course, there were a great many state-right companies, Mutual Film Exchange, and along about that time First National was formed. I think there has been some testimony here about it and I won't go into detail. It was formed, it acquired stars of Paramount and stars of others; it took Charlie Chaplin, for example, away from Mutual.

---

*See correction made by witness at printed record page 2486, infra.

Q. That was formed by exhibitors? A. Yes, it was formed by exhibitors, the principal exhibitors in the United States, ones with the finest theatres, most desirable customers of everyone, particularly of Paramount.

Fox Film Corporation continued to be in existence and Universal continued to be in existence, and there was a company called Metro Pictures Corporation. There was a company called Goldwyn. Samuel Goldwyn, who originally was connected with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, formed his own company, produced pictures, quite early in the game, 1919, I think, and at all times he made fine, important pictures. He had some arguments with his associates and he got out of that company and that company then, well, along about 1922 or so, went in with the Metro Pictures Corporation, became Metro-Goldwyn, and a man named Louis Mayer, who was a producer, joined this group, and that company became—was acquired by Loew's, Inc.—they were theatre people.

Q. Do you remember about when that was? A. Somewhere in 1922 or '23, somewhere along there.

Q. Do you know whether Paramount had been licensing pictures to the Loew Theatres before that happened? A. Yes, sir, they had.

Q. Go ahead. A. Then along about 1923 there came—oh, there was a company called Warner Bros., Warners, which was quite a small company. It did state-right business.

(1265)

Then there was a company that was formed along about 1923 called Columbia Pictures Corporation. I forget the name of its predecessor company, but it was a small company.

Along about 1920 or '21 one of the impressive companies was formed, United Artists Corporation, which was formed by the then four greatest stars in the business, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and the great director, David Wark Griffiths. They went together to make their own pictures, produce their own pictures, and they produced them separately but they marketed them or distributed them through this corporation, United Artists Corporation. They got other stars to join the United Artists Corporation. In starting, they figured their pictures were so great, so fine, their personalities were so compelling that all they needed was the product of these four supreme artists to fill any theatre for a year. Perhaps they would have if they had continued to make pictures, but Mr. Chaplin made one picture one year and he didn't make another for two or three years—whenever he felt like it—and Mary Pickford made a few pictures, and Fairbanks hopped from one great production to another. They took a long time to make pictures. And the result was that that organization found that they needed more pictures to supply the time of their customer (1266) theatres, so they went out and got other stars. Some of them they took from Paramount. For example, they took Gloria Swanson right away from Paramount at a fantastic salary bid.

That went on during this whole period of time, and Universal, which was one of the—originally one of the great, great large companies, became less; United Artists came up; Paramount began to go down a bit and then up a bit; Metro started to climb and has been climbing ever since. And that was about the number of large companies which shifted their position during the 20s, all more or less affected by the terrible depression of the early—1932, 1933. The depression was not effective upon the moving picture industry until 1931. 1930 was the banner year of the picture business for everybody.

Those Warner brothers I mentioned, the Warner brothers in 1927 took sound. Sound had been offered by its discoverers and perfecters to Paramount and offered to Metro and offered to the other companies and they didn't see it; it was just a gadget and they weren't interested in it. Warner Bros. took it and Warner Bros. made a terrific success of it, and then everybody wanted it and Warner Bros. was a year ahead of everybody else. Warner Bros. had both sound pictures and silent pictures, so they went out and they bought First National and they bought theatres and what-not.

Q. Will you bring it down to about the time of Paramount's greatest difficulty? Were any of the other companies in difficulties and were some of the other companies prospering? A. Well, Metro definitely was prospering, Fox Film Corporation was in difficulties—its size, its theatres; Warner Brothers were in difficulties—those difficulties did not lead to the door of the bankruptcy court in either case; Universal had difficulties and the trade papers predicted bankruptcy and going out of business, and then there was a change in management. Mr. Laemmle sold out, Mr. Bob Cochrane got out, and there was new management, a new surge of blood, and now, today, Universal is one of the foremost companies in the business.

Judge Hand: I think this enormous amount of relation of the existence of these people between wind and water is not very illuminating to me. There is no doubt there was a great deal of competition and a great deal of struggle. There isn't the slightest doubt about it. The question is whether there was, in this field, a ganging up against independents. No doubt that they were competing all the time.

Mr. Seymour: And they are still competing.

Judge Hand: And that they would take anything (1268)
away from each other that they could.

Mr. Seymour: That is right.

Judge Hand: It doesn't prove your case or prove theirs.

Mr. Seymour: It is rather odd, of course, there is no indication in the Government's case as to when they claim this combination and conspiracy arose, but it would seem that it must have some relationship to the time that these companies got interests in theatres, because it is monopoly of theatres that they charge, a conspiracy to monopolize theatres.

Judge Hand: These gentlemen are so accurate that they may have attempted to appeal to a diversified mentality.

Mr. Proskauer: I might suggest I do not know what independents we are charged with ganging up on. Are we charged with ganging up on independents——

Judge Hand: I did not say you were ganging up on anybody, but that is the problem.

Mr. Proskauer: I could meet the problem better if somebody would state it to me. Whom am I charged with ganging up on, independent theatre owners or independent producers or what? I do not know at this minute, after hearing the Government's case.

(1269)

Mr. Seymour: I won't try your patience beyond a couple more questions, then I am going to turn to another topic.

Q. Can you tell us something about the growth of independent producers since the period that you have been talking about? We have had some testimony about it and I wonder if you can add anything to it? A. Over the entire period of 1919 or, rather, from 1917, when I first became acquainted with the situation down to the present time, there have been independent producers in the business, many of them active and prosperous. The independent producer usually is the best and most talented man, whether he be a producer or a director or sometimes a writer, or sometimes a star, man or woman, and for one reason or another, good to themselves, they go into independent production and nobody has any interest in their venture except as they perhaps provide financing for them.

Those people seek outlets, somebody to distribute the picture. There are eleven different national distributors today and some state rights—state righters—and the people of the kind I am speaking about, the best, look for the best facilities, the best distributing organizations. There is competition for their services, to distribute their pictures.
(1270)

Some companies have a policy that they would rather handle their own. Paramount at various times has handled a great many independent productions. It varies from time to time. Now at the present time there are as many, if not more, independent producers actually producing pictures as there have been at any time within my memory.

Q. Mr. Freeman said there were about twice as many today as there were ten years ago. Have you any impression about that? A. I don't know whether it is twice as many. Certainly a large number. Today you have prosperity. There are more people making pictures. You also have tax questions, which is an explanation why there are independent producers in greater numbers today than formerly.

Q. Can you tell us anything about the development of Republic, Monogram and P. R. C.? A. Only that over the last several years, from being originally a state-right group of organizations, they became national organizations and they have been spending more money. They used to make cheap pictures, Western pictures, little pictures, and now they are making Westerns and cheap pictures and good pictures. Republic is spending considerable sums of money in the pictures they make and in the advertising they give to them and because the pictures are better, have more substance, more appeal to them, why, they get played in theatres where they did not get them played before. That has grown in the last several years.

(1271)

Mr. Seymour: I am going to turn to the subject of film license contracts.

Q. Mr. Keough, before you came to Paramount, were you familiar, as a result of your professional work, with the general nature of film license contracts in the industry? A. I was.

Q. Have you caused a search to be made among the old contracts in the Paramount to ascertain whether certain provisions which are now included in Paramount contracts were used in film license contracts prior to 1919? A. I have.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit we ought to have those contracts. If this is going to be testimony based on what he discovered, we ought to have those contracts.

Mr. Seymour: I am asking generally, and I will give you the contracts, if you want to examine them.

Mr. Wright: I should think the best evidence would be the contracts themselves. If you have any old contracts, let us have them marked and offered. I have no objection to their going in but I do object to Mr. Keough's just characterizing them without the contract itself being before the Court.
(1272)

Judge Bright: The question now is, has he made a search.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Do you want the question, Mr. Keough?

Judge Bright: He said he has.

A. I said I had made a search or caused one to be made.

Q. As a result of your experience and as a result of the search which you have made, can you tell us whether prior to 1919 films were licensed by Paramount on runs? A. They were.

Q. Was there in the industry and in the Paramount contracts referred to what is now known as clearance? A. Yes, under the term "protection."

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I submit we ought to have, if he has them, if he was able to find any, copies of the contracts he is talking about.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please——

Mr. Raftery: Your Honor, the miners over here want to object to any interrogation until Mr. Wright points out to this Court what the provisions of these contracts are that he claims are violative of the Sherman Act. If Mr. Wright will point those out, we don't care how much more there is.

Judge Hand: Overruled. He is objecting to the fact that he is not confronted with the contract that they are talking about.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honors please, I am only going to develop now the fact that historically the various provisions that we have discussed were used, and I will make available to Mr. Wright, for purposes of cross-examination, the examples that they use, but I don't want to put them in the record because I think the record is quite sufficiently burdened and I don't think there is any objection to a general question about the use of terms.

Colloquy

Mr. Wright: I don't desire to cross-examine on the subject, if we can simply have the best evidence of the history that he is trying to offer, which I suppose is the contracts themselves.

Mr. Seymour: I am merely now showing the use of these provisions in the industry prior to 1919.

Judge Hand: Haven't you such a contract here?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, I have.

Judge Hand: There is no reason why you shouldn't show it to him, and you do not have to produce them indefinitely, and Mr. Wright won't want you to.

Mr. Seymour: I am trying to develop two things, first, the general use of these terms in the industry and, secondly, that they were used in Paramount contracts. The general use I cannot give him anything on. That is Mr. Keough's experience.

(1274)

Judge Hand: You may show him your contract.

Mr. Seymour: What is the question, Mr. Reporter?

(Question and answer read.)

Judge Hand: Do you have it there?

Mr. Seymour: I have it.

Judge Hand: You may show it to him.

Mr. Wright: Have it marked.

Judge Bright: Your first inquiry was with reference to runs?

Mr. Seymour: That is right, and he answered that question. Now I am asking him about what is now known as clearance. And does your Honor insist that we must offer the contract in order to get that question answered? I don't mind doing it, but I hate to encumber the record.

Judge Hand: If the other side wants you to do it, I think you should. I think he is making a fair preliminary objection.

Mr. Seymour: Let me just get the witness to identify it.

Judge Hand: I don't think it is very important, provided he sees it.

Mr. Wright: I agree with your Honor, but I haven't seen any yet.

Judge Hand: Haven't seen any?

(1275)

Mr. Wright: No, none of these have been offered to me for my inspection.

Q. Will you pick out any contract which contains reference to the requirements for protection which is dated prior to 1919? A. There is a contract of August 1, 1917, between a Boston exhibitor and Paramount Pictures Corporation for the run of a picture at the Exeter Street Theatre in Boston, which contains a protection clause in so many words.

Mr. Seymour: I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Wright: I think some time may be saved if you will go on to something else and give us these during the recess and give us a chance to examine them.

Mr. Seymour: I think, I must say that I think my general questions might have been answered. I offered you an opportunity to examine the contract and you refused it and press your objection.

Mr. Wright: You mean you offered it just now?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, of course.

Mr. Wright: I say, if I am going to have to examine each contract here as they are offered, it will take time. I am suggesting that if you want to save time, you have them identified and go on to something else, and we will give you the answer to the question as to whether there is any objection after we have read them.

(1276)

Mr. Seymour: I don't mind at all, if your Honors should not mark them at this time. We will have it marked for identification under an offer in evidence. Mr. Wright has forced this procedure and now apparently he wants to be prepared to play it both ways.

Mr. Wright: If the Court wishes to sit here while I examine the contracts, I suppose there is nothing else to do. I was simply suggesting a means of saving time.

Mr. Seymour: I think the way to save time is not to make the objection. Then that contract is marked for identification but is offered in evidence and if you have an objection to make, I suppose in due course you will make it?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-5 for identification.)

Q. Was protection the name then used in the business to describe what is now clearance? A. It was.

Q. Do you know what protection meant at that time? A. Protection meant what clearance means today. Identical concept. It was called protection until about 1935, then it was called clearance.

Judge Hand: What is all this to show anyway, to show an ancient custom of the ville?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

(1277)

Judge Hand: I think there is much too much fuss made about it all around. If this thing is in the agreement, why do you fuss about it, Mr. Wright? I do not see that it prejudices your case.

Mr. Wright: I don't think it does either.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: Having read it, I have no objection to it going in, but I do like to have the opportunity to see what goes in before it goes in just as a matter of course.

Judge Hand: All right, it is received.

(Defendants Paramount's Exhibit P-5 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Prior to 1919, did Paramount use a form of application for license? A. It did.

Q. And in some, at least, of those applications was there a reference to a minimum admission price by the theatre? A. There was a form provided for the insertion of that—of those terms in the printed form.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. What period is being covered here?

Mr. Seymour: Prior to 1919.

Judge Bright: Prior to 1919.

Q. I show you this agreement dated June 24, 1918, and (1278)
ask you if that contains a reference to minimum admission prices?

Mr. Wright: Again, I think the form should be identified and offered in evidence, if you want to establish what is in it.

Mr. Seymour: I am going to offer it. I first have to have it identified. I am trying to please you in every way I know how.

A. This form contains a space to be filled in with reference to minimum and maximum admission prices.

Q. That particular copy of form does not have the actual figure in it? A. It does not.

Mr. Seymour: I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-6, in evidence.)

Q. Were motion pictures licensed prior to 1919 on a percentage basis? A. They were.

Q. And since 1919, down to date, has Paramount licensed motion pictures on the basis of runs? A. It has.

Q. Has Paramount provided for clearance in license contracts? A. It has.

Q. Has Paramount had provisions in its license agreements with respect to minimum admission prices during all or most of that period?

Mr. Wright: What period is this?

(1279)

Mr. Seymour: Since 1919.

Mr. Wright: I submit, if the Court please, that is entirely too broad. He is asking for what has happened over a period of 26 years here, with respect to admission prices.

Judge Hand: Read the question.

(Record read.)

Judge Hand: I will allow the question.

A. It has.

Judge Hand: You can direct his attention to particular things on cross-examination or suggest some definite limitation in his examination, but there is no use in interrupting over these things. We are not a jury here and are not affected by unverified or unverifiable general statements.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, this gentleman has been counsel for the company since 1919.

Judge Hand: That I know. I think it is perfectly good prima facie evidence.

Q. Has Paramount since 1919 and does it today license many of its pictures on a percentage basis? A. It has and it does.

Q. And are there various varieties of percentage terms which are used? A. There are.

Q. Is one of the terms which is used a so-called percentage to a split? A. It is.
(1280)

Q. So far as you know, do all distributors in the business, and have they since the early days that you spoke of, without regard to the individual variations between the form of licenses, licensed pictures on runs with clearance, with reference to minimum admission prices and on percentage bases? A. Confining my answer to the companies which are the defendants in this case, I would say the answer is Yes to each of the questions you put. I don't remember whether I ever knew anything about every other distributor in this business, state-righters—I have seen some of them—I don't know everything about the other three, but I know something about them, I have seen some of their contracts.

Q. Do you know whether today the other distributors who are not defendants in this suit distribute their pictures and license them on the basis of run, clearance, minimum prices, sometimes on percentage contracts, sometimes on flat rental? A. They do, at least as to some of their products.

Q. I show you copy of Exhibit P-1—the actual original is out at the photostaters, and ask you, is that the license agreement which is now in use by the Paramount in licensing its pictures? A. It is, in so far as its feature motion pictures are concerned.

(1281)

Q. Of course, there are terms and sometimes riders and so on attached to particular licenses; but that is the general form used for licensing feature pictures? A. It is.

Q. Who drew it? A. I did.

Q. Does that represent any change over the form that was in use prior to the adoption of that form? A. It does.

Q. Did any other distributor have anything to do with the form of the present contract, P-1? A. No, sir.

Q. Was that drawn entirely in the Paramount legal department by you and with the aid of associates? A. No, it was not. It was drawn by me solely.

Q. I show you this document, which has in the lower left-hand corner, "Form 4440-A-1," I think, and ask you if that was the license contract which was in use just before the present contract? A. It was.

Q. Do you know for how long a period that form was used? A. About 1937 or '38, this form.

Mr. Seymour: I offer that. I will get you other copies, but I am afraid you will object if I don't——

Judge Bright: Is that form one which is in one of these exhibits for the Government?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Mr. Seymour: I do not know that there is any use of duplicating it, as a matter of fact. Let me see if (1282)

I can identify it.

Judge Bright: Has it been introduced in evidence by the Government?

Mr. Seymour: I guess it has. Will you bear with me just a moment?

Mr. Wright: That is 280.

Mr. Seymour: That is a different form.

Mr. Wright: He testified there had not been any changes since 1938. I assume this is the same as that.

Mr. Seymour: I am sure it is as to body, but the top was different.

Judge Bright: What was that number?

Mr. Seymour: The exhibit in evidence is No. 280.

Judge Bright: 280, that is in this book?

Mr. Seymour: Yes. It states at the top, printed, "Seasons, 1943-44." The one I am now offering is Season 1944-45, but I think that is the only change, and I will ask that from the witness.

Judge Bright: I understood him to say that that was the form which was in use from about 1938 until the last exhibit, P-1.

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Q. Can you tell us whether the designation of the season is the only change that was made after 1943 in that form, so far as you know? A. Without examining every form that (1283) we had for feature pictures, I can't tell whether the schedule set up and the description of the season did not vary, perhaps it did. Also, it may be that here and there, purely for styling, and not change of substance, there may have been a slight change, but the bulk of the contract, what is printed on the reverse side, has been the same in text and substance from 1937 or 1938 down to 1945.

Q. Subject to correction, based upon possible minor differences in forms, Government's Exhibit 280, which is for the season 1943-44, is the same as the one for the 1944-45 season and for seasons prior to 1943 back to about 1937, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us who prepared the form, this Exhibit 280? A. Louis Phillips and some associates under my general jurisdiction and approval.

Q. Who is Mr. Louis Phillips? A. A lawyer of this bar, a member of the legal department of Paramount Pictures, assistant general counsel of the company.

Q. That form was then prepared wholly in the Paramount legal department? A. It was.

Q. Did any other distributor have anything to do with the preparation of that form? A. I never heard of it, and I am perfectly satisfied that nobody did have anything to do with it except Mr. Phillips, his immediate associates in (1284) the department and myself.

Q. Is that form the result of any agreement or understanding between the distributors? A. Not at all.

Q. Is your present form, P-1, the result of any agreement or understanding among the distributors? A. Not at all.

Q. Can you tell us in general what the nature of the changes was between P-1 and Government's Exhibit 280, without going into details? A. In general, my effort was to throw out every word that I could possibly throw out and get it on a short piece of paper, with most of it on one side of the paper, and make it as large and readable type as I could find. I even picked out a very clear type instead of a rather blurred type formerly used, leaving in only those things which appeared to me to be standardized with us, about which some argument would be raised if they were left out, leaving out nothing that was a clause that favored or was a protection to the distributor—to the exhibitor and throwing out several things that I thought were just law and we did not need. My whole effort was not to change the contract but to simplify it and get it down to a place where both the salesmen and the exhibitors would like it and we could do business.

Q. In preparing that simplified form, which is P-1, did you have any other form which you yourself had prepared, which you used as a model? A. No, I did not. I had a form (1285) which Mr. Phillips and some of his associates had prepared as their idea of the simplification. It was not radical enough for me, so I started from scratch.

Q. Had you yourself in your early days with Paramount prepared a relatively simple license form? A. Yes, I had, back in 1922, before the first so-called uniform contract, gone through the same operation.

Q. Was this simplification that was made in the current form a simplification in the direction that your original simplification had gone? A. Yes, but it was not quite as good. My original one was much simpler. (1286)

Q. In the late '20s or the mid-'20s, were there discussions which resulted in the adoption of a uniform contract among distributors? A. There were.

Q. Will you tell us how those discussions arose and who participated, and what the upshot was? A. Prior to 1923 or 1922, while there was general similarity among the contracts used by the various distributors, each company and its lawyer used different language and they put a lot of stuff in there; whenever a new problem arose there would be a new clause written; and they got very complex; and while the subject matter of the trade was about the same, no one would know whether they were having the same yardstick for conduct, which the exhibitor wanted, without studying it very carefully and having a lawyer read it. And there were complaints from the exhibitors about that.

There was a further complaint from the exhibitors. The practice had grown up in the industry for a number of years of requiring the exhibitor to make a cash deposit upon the execution of a contract. Originally that cash deposit was to make sure that he paid for a particular picture, a particular contract; and later on it went for more contracts, and again those terms, those deposit clauses, were of infinite variety. The exhibitors did not want the cash deposits, and they sought to have the States pass laws against them, and they succeeded; and that brought about another change in contracts.

(1287)

There was considerable annoyance on the part of the exhibitors, and then they had one large national exhibitor organization, known as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. When the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America was incorporated in 1922, and Mr. Will H. Hays became its president, this exhibitor organization approached him and asked him if he would not bring about——

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think we can have what was done here; that would be sufficient, instead of all that conversation.

Judge Hand: Sustained.

Q. Leave out the conversations between the exhibitors' organization and Mr. Hays, and tell us what developed. Following such conversation something happened? A. The exhibitors' organization approached Mr. Hays. Mr. Hays did nothing but bring distributors and exhibitors together. They appointed committees; they labored over what they call a uniform contract, for many months. They produced a very long and complex document. That document eliminated completely a cash deposit clause and substituted for it a machinery for arbitration.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Have you got a copy of this thing you are talking about now?

The Witness: I have, or counsel has (1288)

Mr. Wright: Would you have that marked or let me look at that?

Mr. Seymour: I do not mind your looking at it, Mr. Wright, as you have looked at almost everything else I have had.

Mr. Wright: Well, it will make it easier to follow his testimony.

Mr. Seymour: Yes, but I do not want to put in any more of these long contracts with small type if I can help it. If you want to put it in, because your eyesight is better than mine, you can.

Judge Hand: You ought to have a typewritten rider like the insurance policies have, which would contain the main meat in the cocoanut.

Mr. Seymour: Yes. The present contract is really very simple.

Judge Hand: Do you mean it is very simple?

Mr. Seymour: Well, it seems to be.

Judge Hand: Well, may be. All these things get worse and worse and finally they get to be like trust indentures for bond issues. Nobody knows what is in them or understands them.

Mr. Davis: Swager Sherley used to say that the modern trust indenture represented all the crystallized fears of three generations of lawyers.

(1289)

Judge Hand: That is a fine definition. They are crystallized all right.

Mr. Seymour: I have now handed Mr. Wright the contract form which Mr. Keough was discussing.

Q. So will you proceed, Mr. Keough? A. That form having been formulated by committees of exhibitors and their lawyers, the distributors, eight or nine of them, and their lawyers, it was put into effect, and it was by agreement among the distributors the only form that was used by the eight principal distributors. That is the form that Judge Thacher and the Supreme Court said was illegal to use by agreement.

Q. That was primarily because of the arbitration provision? A. Primarily because of the arbitration provision and the sanction behind the arbitration——

Mr. Wright: I do not think we need——

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, I am not going to go any further about that.

Mr. Wright: I must object to a testimonial interpretation of the decision.

Judge Bright: I suppose we could read that. That is not in fine print.

Judge Hand: There were two of them, weren't there? 282 U. S. you are talking about?

The Witness: Yes. One had to do with the contract and the other had to do with a credit committee, which had nothing to do with the contract.
(1290)

Q. Now, was there a Federal Trade conference held in the '20s? A. If you will permit me to say that prior to the Federal Trade conference you are talking about, in the year 1926, there was a modification of that particular form that I have testified to of 1923, requested by the exhibitors, the net effect of which was that the form contained a warranty that it had every one of the clauses that were in the uniform contract in it, and that there were pointed out any other clauses, so that the exhibitor might clearly know what his contract was without having to read everything in there.

Q. Now, in addition to the standard or uniform form in 1926, did Paramount also have a form of its own? A. It did.

Mr. Wright: May I see that last?

Mr. Seymour: I will let you look at both of them, Mr. Wright (handing).

Q. Will you proceed chronologically with the development of that——

Judge Hand: This form you have in evidence?

Mr. Seymour: I have not offered it. I will be glad to. If your Honor would like to have it in I shall be glad to offer it.

(1291)

Judge Goddard: If you are going to discuss it, I think a copy would be helpful.

Judge Hand: This is the particular form, as I understand it, that has been declared illegal. I think we ought to have it before us.

Mr. Seymour: I shall be glad to offer it. I offer a copy of the 1923 form, and hope the Court won't have to look at it.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

Mr. Proskauer: May I suggest that when it was observed that the court held that the contract was illegal, the illegality was not in the contract, the court held; it was in the fact that it was a uniform contract arrived at—

Judge Hand: I understand.

Mr. Davis: The vice in that contract was that it provided that if any member failed to submit to arbitration, or perform his arbitral award, then the other contracting party would deny him films. In other words, they virtually boycotted the non-observers. That is what brought it down.

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-7.)

Judge Bright: What is that?

Mr. Seymour: That is the 1923 agreement. Now I offer a copy of the agreement which has been referred to as having been prepared in 1926, the standard exhibition contract.

(1292)

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-8.)

Q. Of course, Mr. Keough, these agreements were used by each company individually in dealing with the exhibitors to whom it licensed product, isn't that so?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he is not competent to give any testimony of that kind.

Mr. Seymour: Of course he is.

Judge Bright: I did not quite get the testimony as to the 1926 agreement. What was that?

The Witness: The 1926 agreement was a modification of the 1923 agreement asked for by the exhibitors in order to include a warranty by the distributor that the contract contained all of the agreed upon clauses of the 1923 contract, and that if there were any additional clauses, they must be pointed out so that the exhibitor could see what the distributor had put in a contract which he thought was the normal, usual, standard contract.

Q. And they were to be pointed out in a document annexed to the agreement? A. Part of the agreement. It says so right in the form.

Q. In the schedule? A. In the schedule. You have got to put it in the schedule.

Mr. Seymour: I also offer a copy of the non-standard form of Paramount license agreement as used in 1926, which the witness referred to.

(1293)

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-9.)

Q. Did the Federal Trade Commission have anything to do with the 1926 agreement?. A. No.

Mr. Seymour: It has been pointed out to me that there is an unanswered question. May we have the unanswered question read?

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Question referred to read as follows:)

"Q. Of course, Mr. Keough, these agreements were used by each company individually in dealing with the exhibitors to whom it licensed product, isn't that so?"

Mr. Seymour: There cannot be any doubt about that. I should think the lawyer in the official position he was should know about that.

Judge Hand: Very well. Will you answer that?

A. So far as Paramount was concerned, the contract was used by the Paramount salesmen, sales managers and so forth, to write the particular individual deal for Paramount pictures, that they negotiated with their various customers, the exhibitors, and that ended it. There was no connection with what any other company did in using the same general form. It had chiefly to do with mechanics and legal consequences, not dollars and cents terms, or anything else.

(1294)

Q. Now you have covered 1926. Will you bring us up to the next-stage? A. Following the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the so-called standard contract was discontinued as a standard contract, and all the things it had to do with were out. So until the year 1928——

Q. Mr. Keough, I think your chronology is a little confusing. You are going back now to 1928. A. I had not been to 1928. I did not think I was.

Q. All right. The Supreme Court decision was after 1928? A. There was a period of time between the banning of the uniform standard contract and the bringing into existence of a form as the result of a Federal Trade Commission conference, and during that interval Paramount—and I presume the other companies—used their own form; and you have that as an exhibit, Paramount's form which was used in the meantime.

In 1928 the Federal Trade Commission assembled a trade conference by its invitation, held here in New York City. Commissioner Abraham F. Meyers presided. Distributors, exhibitors, producers and the members of the public were represented at that meeting.

As a result of the discussions that took place in New York, a committee was appointed which—I think it was in (1295)
the year 1928, following those meetings in New York—repaired to Chicago, a committee of exhibitors and distributors. Originally the exhibitors and distributors would not allow a lawyer in the meeting, as I recall it, but they finally got in, and they produced a contract which is the longest contract known to the picture industry. Not only one page was necessary, they had to have half another page.

*Now that contract, having been worked out by this committee, was recommended for adoption by the distributors in dealing with their exhibitors. It is sometimes referred to in the trade as the 5-5-5 contract. It was, I believe, on its face, an optional contract. That is, they did not have to use it, but it was desired that they did use it. It had also an optional arbitration clause right in the face of the contract, and the arbitration clause is optional with the exhibitor. And of course it was optional with the distributor. If the exhibitor wanted it and the distributor did not want it, why it did not go in. So that contract was put into effect—I am wrong about the length of that; it was the later contract—the 1928 contract was the standard contract resulting from the Federal Trade Commission conference——

Mr. Wright: Can't we have those identified so we know which ones he is talking about? I mean by numbers.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, I will be right up with you.

(1296)

The Witness: There it is.

Mr. Seymour: I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Wright: I still don't know which ones he was talking about.

Mr. Seymour: This is the 1928 agreement.

The Witness: And on the face of it is described so.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-10.)

Q. Now, did Paramount use that standard form in licensing its pictures from time to time? A. They used that form sometimes; it used its own form sometimes during the period from 1928 to 1934.

Q. That is, there was a separate Paramount license agreement which was also used from time to time by Paramount during that period? A. That is right.

Q. Different? A. Well, it was different in some respects.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. It was different in some respects from the so-called 5-5-5 contract.

Judge Bright: The 5-5-5 contract is Exhibit P-10?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.*

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Seymour, would you ask him what 5-5-5 means?

---

*See clarification of Mr. Seymour's answer at printed record page 2487-88 infra.

Q. Mr. Caskey would like to have you tell him what 5-5-5 means, Mr. Keough? A. It was a shorthand description of the committee that was made up. There were five men representing the exhibitors, who were independent; five who represented affiliated exhibitors; and five represented distributors.
(1297)

Q. Now was there any development with respect to license contracts under NRA? A. There was.

Q. And what was that? A. Following the establishment of the Code Authority for the motion picture industry under NRA, a committee was appointed under that authority to develop a contract which was to be standard in the licensing of pictures. That contract was the longest of the contracts, and it was used by Paramount, and I think most of the companies, until the NRA was declared unconstitutional.

Q. Did the exhibitors have any part in the negotiations leading up to that form? A. They did.

Q. Was that a result of conferences under the NRA? A. it was.

Q. And was there a committee on which the exhibitors were represented which dealt with the question? A. Yes.

Mr. Seymour: I will offer that in evidence.

Mr. Wright: No objection. I notice this refers to the 1935-1936 season.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-11.)

Judge Bright: We seem to be getting into the (1298)
three generations in other theatres.

Mr. Seymour: Yes. Well, we are pretty nearly through with that.

Q. Mr. Wright calls my attention to the fact that this contract refers to the 1935-1936 season. Was it used for a brief time after the end of NRA? A. I do not know that it was used. It was printed up in this form before the Supreme Court had declared the whole NRA law unconstitutional, and therefore it had some of these forms and it might have been that it was used to contract for a few showings until they got a new start of a different contract. I think probably that is what happened.

Mr. Wright: Well, that 1935-1936 form was the one that was used during the 1933-1934 and 1934-1935 season?

The Witness: Oh, yes.

Judge Hand: What is this, the NRA form?

Mr. Seymour: The NRA form.

Q. Now, following the discontinuance of the use of the form which is in evidence as P-11, has there been any uniform contract for the distribution of motion pictures?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think that is a conclusion that this witness should not be permitted to draw. It can only be determined by an examination of the forms used as to the extent or non-extent of uniformity.

Mr. Seymour: It is a question of fact.

(1299)

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. No, there has been no uniform contract. Paramount has drawn its contract without regard to anybody else's contract. We endeavored to preserve so much of the text and substance of the prior form that the exhibitors had indicated approval of as we could. Now, if others did substantially the same thing, well I don't know it.

Q. Is there not any agreement or understanding among the defendants or with any other distributors, as to the use by Paramount, or, as far as you know, any other distributor, of a standard or uniform contract, license contract? A. There is not. I speak for Paramount. I know nothing about anybody else.

Judge Hand: Well, you must know the contracts where your theatres are exhibiting other people's pictures? A. They bear only very general relationship with each other, general similarity; because they all have to deal with the same subject matter; but the various companies, their salesmen or their counsel, decide what will be the most attractive as a sales instrument for their company, or what the company needs for its protection. They vary.

Q. Would you tell us generally, Mr. Keough, how that license form is used? A. Speaking about Paramount?

Q. Paramount. A. After the Paramount sales representative, whether he be a sales manager or divisional manager or branch manager, has reached a stage of agreement on the pictures to be licensed to the particular customer, and the terms thereof, these printed forms are generally used to put those terms down. And if the general form has not enough space on it to write all the terms that they have negotiated, they use an extra form or they use a piece of paper; or if they are dealing with perhaps a circuit, a large number of theatres, they might write it up separately, and then refer, as part of the contract, to the Paramount's form, whether it is the form that we now use that I drew, or the longer one; but that form as to the mechanical terms, I will say, the forms that represent the legal rights of the parties as distinguished from the dollars and cents terms, and pictures and clearance and what not—that forms part of their contract either by actual physical incorporation, reference; or sometimes the deal is made orally. There is such a thing in this business as spot booking. A fellow calls up and he wants a picture in a hurry. There is no contract that is executed for it. You trust him. He gets the picture, he sends in a check for it, he has got a credit, and you get no signature out of him. You may make some kind of shorthand memorandum in the exchange, but the terms on which that is done, if not articulated and expressed, as far as the exhibitor understands, because he has dealt with us, are our contract. (1301)

Q. Now, I would like to ask you about some particular provisions of the Paramount license contract which you have and with which you are familiar. First, why does the contract contain a provision for minimum admission prices? A. Are you speaking of the current contract or all the contracts that I have been testifying to——

Q. Such a provision has been in the Paramount contracts for many years, has it not? A. There used to be a—— Judge Hand: He has asked you a question. Answer it directly.

The Witness: I am trying to.

Judge Hand: He asked "has it not".

Q. Hasn't such a provision been in the Paramount contracts for many years? A. I think I can answer that yes.

Q. What is the reason for it? A. The reason is twofold: In the early contracts—and I speak of contracts that went back to 1918, 1919, 1920, which dealt with flat rentals—there was a minimum admission of 10 cents. That had nothing to do with the percentage. That had to do with the prestige of the picture. 10 cents was the very minimum admission price, and if the exhibitor wanted to have a Paramount picture he would charge at least 10 cents for it and as much more as he wanted. When Paramount entered into a percentage contract with an exhibitor, its reward for making the license depended upon the amount of money that was taken in. Now, if the exhibitor in negotiating said he could afford to pay a certain percentage but not another percentage, and he could afford a certain split but not another split, based upon what his policy was, what his admission prices were, what his take was, — that was one of the terms, one of the representations that were written down into the contract. So that after the contract was made Paramount could get an accounting of so many dollars on the basis of what the exhibitor said that he was going to produce, not some other figure that he decided to change in the middle of the engagement. So that the form of contract from the early one to the present time, whether it is percentage or flat rental, has a provision in which the exhibitor agrees to charge certain admission prices as the minimum. Sometimes those blanks are filled in; sometimes they are not filled in. Sometimes they are not filled in because—well, the exhibitor is charging, say, 25 cents, and you do not need to put in a 10-cent minimum because you know what he is doing. Usually they are filled in where you have a percentage engagement. Where you have a flat rental engagement they may or may not be filled in. Now, that is the reason for putting them in the contract.

Q. Do you consider that the provision for a minimum admission price is a necessary protection to the copyright owners? A. Absolutely.

Q. Now, reference has been made here to the fact that in the license contracts, including the license contracts of Paramount, there are provisions for auditing the exhibitor's books in connection with percentage contracts. Did you have anything to do with the inclusion of those provisions? A. I did. Those contracts I drew and passed upon and approved

Q. What was the purpose of them? A. To make sure we were getting an honest count, an honest report.

Q. Was it used for any other purpose? A. Not that I ever heard of.

Q. And is it only as to the exhibition of the distributor's own pictures? A. Yes.

Q. Have you had any experiences with exhibitors who have not returned the full amount of revenue which they should to the distributor? By "returned," I mean paid. A. Very considerable experience.

Q. Is the right of audit any protection against the exhibitor in that respect? A. That right of audit has actually disclosed, where no other means is available, the complete misstatement or misrepresentation to Paramount of the actual business done on which we should have had an accounting, and on which we did not get an accounting, or (1304)

we got a false accounting. The audits disclosed that. Sometimes the audit was one that we got because the exhibitor honored the clause and permitted it; and other times we had to go to a court of equity to get it, and did.

Q. Now, do you remember that at about 1936, Mr. Keough, there was a suit in this court entitled United States vs. Warner Bros., involving a charge with reference to St. Louis? A. Yes.

Q. In connection with the discontinuance of that suit by the United States, did the Attorney General insist that certain defendants in that case grant 10-year franchises to exhibitors?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not understand what the relevance of this line of inquiry is. The facts of the settlement, I suppose, are of record here in the court and judicially noticeable.

Mr. Proskauer: I can't hear you, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Hand: I will allow it.

A. He did.

Q. And did certain of the defendants in that case grant such 10-year franchises? A. They did.

Q. Did Paramount grant a 10-year franchise? A. It did not.

Q. Did Paramount decline to do so? A. It did.

Q. And was that suit discontinued after certain of the (1305) defendants had granted franchises as requested by the Attorney General? A. One event followed the other. It was discontinued.

Q. Mr. Keough, from time to time since your connection with Paramount began, Paramount has acquired interests in groups of theatres, sometimes known as circuits, has it not? A. It has.

Q. Now, do you know whether or not in connection with such acquisitions it has met competition from other distributors?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is a conclusion that is entirely too general for him to draw. He can state what the facts were in connection with the acquisition but not a conclusion of this sort.

Judge Hand: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Mr. Seymour: I am going to follow it with a little detail.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. I do know some instances.

Q. Now, can you mention any circuits for which Paramount negotiated sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully where other distributors were also attempting to obtain an interest in the circuit? A. I recall that in the middle '20s there was a Sachs Circuit of theatres in Mil-(1306)

waukee, and Paramount was very much interested in acquiring either an interest in the circuit, or the circuit. It had no theatres there. And we did not acquire it. A competitor—I don't remember now which one of the companies, Warner's or Fox—got it in competition. They outbid us. We wanted it and did not get it. That is one.

Q. Now, can you tell us about any others where perhaps you were able to get the circuit? A. The Comerford Circuit is another I know of. Mr. Comerford and his associates, because of old——

Judge Goddard: A little louder, please.

A. (Continuing) —because of old friendship with Mr. Zukor and Mr. Sidney R. Kent, desired in 1930 to sell their business, and they wanted to sell it to Paramount, and Paramount wanted to buy it, and Warner Bros. wanted to buy it, and we prevailed in that competition. We got the circuit. And one other instance which comes to my mind has to do with the theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul where the Fox Theatre Company, I think it was, William Fox's Theatre Company made an effort to buy the circuit of Ruben & Finkelstein, and they wanted Paramount to give up, in order to allow them to do it, to give up some management veto we had or approvals we had of the principal downtown theatre that showed Paramount pictures. We did not do it, and Fox did not get the theatre, and we did.
(1307)

Mr. Wright: May we have the date on that?

The Witness: It was around 1929. I think it was in 1929.

Q. How about the Kunsky & Trendle Circuit? A. Well, personally I have no knowledge of that. It is hearsay.

Q. How about the Blank Circuit? A. Again I was informed. I personally did not know about the Blank Circuit.

Q. Did you know anything about any of the theatres in Florida? Was there any competition there that you know of? A. Well, there was competition for the acquisition of E. J. Sparks' interest whom we bought out. He owned half of the company, and we met competition in buying that half.

Q. Competition from one of the other distributors in this case? A. Yes.

Q. How about the Saenger Circuit in New Orleans? A. Yes. There was at least one company, one of the large distributing companies, with theatres, that was eager to acquire the Saenger Circuit, when Paramount acquired it instead.

Mr. Wright: Can we have the dates on all of these?

(1308)

Mr. Seymour: The interrogatories give you the dates.

The Witness: The Sachs that I gave you was somewhere in the middle '20s, 1925 or 1926; and the other one was 1929; and the one from Mr. Sparks was about 1935 or 1936. It was at the time that—oh, wait a minute. It was after the consent decree. Sparks had been our partner at the time. It was either in 1940 or 1941 that we bought him out in competition.

Mr. Seymour: You may examine, Mr. Wright.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. That Saenger Circuit acquisition that you referred to, that was at what time? A. The year 1929.

Q. That was 1929? A. Yes.

Q. Now, this competition that you were referring to in connection with the Sparks Circuit, you say that occurred in 1940 or 1941? A. Yes.

Q. That was the situation where you owned how much? A. We owned half.

Q. You owned half of the Sparks Circuit? A. Yes.

Q. And you say there was competition between you—— A. To buy the other half.

Q. — and another distributor to buy the other half? A. Yes.

Q. That is, one of the other distributors wanted to become a partner with you in the circuit—— A. Wanted to buy Mr. Sparks' interest.
(1309)

Q. And you were in competition with him for the privilege? A. Yes.

Q. What distributor was that? A. Either Fox or Warner.

Q. Well, do you know? A. Well, I don't remember at this moment.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, you don't have any personal knowledge, do you, of the dealings between Sparks and either of them, do you? A. Well, I happened to have been intimately engaged with the whole negotiation. No, I did not talk to any Warner Bros. man who came in in my presence and said "I will offer you."

Q. What was at stake was the acquisition of an interest by another distributor in the circuit in which you already had at least a negative control, isn't that right? A. We had a negative control only as far as acquisition of theatres. We had no negative control whatsoever as to the operation of the theatre. By the very structure of that company that was in Mr. Sparks' hands, and had anybody bought that, they would have been sitting in Sparks' position.

Q. Now, that first license agreement that was offered here—I think it is identified as P-5—which is the 1918 agreement, I see the protection provision that you referred to is added there in typing. There is no agreement, is there, that you can point to in the printed provisions which provides for any protection or clearance? A. Not in the exhibit, and I don't know whether there is in any of the others. I don't know.
(1310)

Q. I take it the exhibit, the printed form, is the form of license agreement that was customarily used at the time, is that right? A. That is my information. There are tens of thousands of those papers filed in the warehouse, and that happens to be one out of several that we found. As far as that printed form is concerned, there is no provision for clearance; it does not say clearance; it does not say protection. It is written in there in type.

(1311)

Q. I say, and the printed form that you have identified here is the form of agreement that was customarily used in licensing your pictures at that time, isn't that right? A. It was the printed form that was customarily used.

Q. Yes? A. Yes.

Q. I think you referred to one form that was not marked here. You said in connection with your testimony on this P-10, which I think is—that is the agreement you were using in 1926, or would that be 1928? I see it has a rider on it relating to sound. A. May I look at it?

Q. Better look at it, yes. A. This is the 1926 form which was a modification of the 1923 form. It is still in use in 1920—whatever that date is.

Q. You referred to another form which you said Paramount also used at the same time but I don't believe it was marked. What was the difference, if any, between the other form you referred to and this one? You said you sometimes used this and you sometimes used another, which was not marked.

Mr. Davis: Will the record show which forms Mr. Wright is referring to?

A. Here is the form that I referred to as having been used and at the top of the printed form, instead of the words "Standard Exhibition Contract" are the words "Exhibition (1312)
Contract", which was intended to indicate it was not standard, and I don't know exactly, without comparing them, what the differences were. There probably weren't very many.

Q. You don't know what if any—whether any were of substance at all? Do you know what the purpose of having the two forms was? A. No, I don't. I don't remember what that was.

Q. Sometimes you used one and sometimes the other without any particular reason? A. No, I think there was a reason at that time. That 1926 contract is the one that was stricken down by the Supreme Court. Now, at some time, either immediately following that—we put this other form into use and obviously that was not in the year 1926 because in the year 1926 we were using uniform or standard forms of agreement, and we did so until the Supreme Court told us that we shouldn't do it.

Judge Hand: That is P-8?

Mr. Wright: No, the one I was just asking him about was not marked at all. He had referred to it in his testimony, and that one I have in my hand. That he said is similar to P-10, which is described as the 1926 agreement.

Q. You were not licensing sound pictures, were you, in 1926? A. No.

Q. I wonder if this form you have, marked P-10, that you referred to as the form of that date, is not actually a later form? A. No, the form P-10 is the form adopted in 1926 and continued to be used from 1926 through the years until the Supreme Court said that the use of this contract, with its arbitration clause, which is Article 8, was illegal. Now, we used exactly the same form but we dated it according to the year of the release and we printed the number of the different —this form was used in 1926, 1926-27, 1927-28, and you will find sound probably came in in 1927.
(1313)

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-12.)

Judge Bright: Which is P-12 now, this one that was used at or about the same time?

Mr. Wright: No, I had it marked so that we could know.

Q. This agreement that has just been marked for identification as P-12 is the agreement which you used following the court decision which superseded that P-10 that Judge Bright had? A. That is right. The arbitration clause is entirely different and the sanctions behind the arbitration clause were missing.

Q. Then the form that you have there, marked as P-12, continued in effect until this form P-11 was introduced during the NRA period, is that right? A. No.

(1314)

Q. Was there an intervening one there? A. The 555, which is Federal Trade Commission, succeeded this in 1928.

Q. Can you tell me which one of these followed the use of the form marked P-12? A. P-8——

Q. P-8? A. No, I am wrong. Not here. Not here. I don't see it among these papers at all.

Q. We will pass that for the moment. Can you recall when you first started to use clearance provisions which referred to the prices to be charged by theatres other than those which signed the license in question?

Mr. Seymour: I object to that as assuming something that, as far as I know, is not in evidence.

Mr. Wright: There are a very great number of them in evidence in the form of answers to the interrogatories and in actual agreements in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: I think you ought to direct the witness's attention to any particular one because I do not know of any such. Perhaps there are.

Judge Hand: Overruled, go ahead.

Q. Generally, I am referring to the situation which says the first-run shall have so many days clearance over 30-cent theatres and so many over 40-cent, that sort of thing.

Mr. Seymour: That is not what you said in your question.

(1315)

Mr. Proskauer: Not at all.

Judge Bright: Re-ask the question, will you, and then we will get it the way you want it.

(Record read.)

A. I can't fix it without some reference to something but my impression, subject to my checking up on myself, is that somewhere in, oh, around the, say, year 1924, 5 or 6, in certain places that became the nature of the clearance or protection agreement negotiated. From that it just grew. I don't remember definitely where the first instance was.

Q. You don't have any doubt, do you, that where the agreement says so many days over theatres charging a certain admission price that that refers not only to those which may belong to the first-run theatre operators but any theatres regardless of who operated by, charging this price, isn't that right? A. It certainly refers——

Mr. Seymour: May we have that question read because the distinction that Mr. Wright is blurring is important.

(Question read.)

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, I do not like to object to the question but there is obviously a difference between a situation where the contract requires a theatre to charge a certain price and where it says something will happen if it charges a certain price. Mr. Wright ought not to attempt to interpret that in his question. I do not object to his asking about the practice.

(1316)

Mr. Wright: Frankly, I was a little shocked at the suggestion of counsel that there were no agreements in evidence which referred—in which there was first-run clearance which referred——

Judge Hand: Overruled, you may answer.

The Witness: Well, would you please read the question, after all this colloquy?

Q. I say, where——

Judge Hand: You don't gain anything by so many objections and so much colloquy. It is a waste of time. It can be straightened out on direct or in some other way, and I am getting sick of it.

A. Perhaps this will answer the question, if I understand it. When Paramount writes into a contract it makes with Exhibitor A a clearance provision that says Exhibit A will have so many days clearance following the end of Exhibitor A's run on that Paramount picture over any theatre charging an admission price of less than 25 cents, to take a hypothetical case, if it is as broadly stated as that in the contract, that is typed out, written up by the salesman, not a lawyer, salesman, both the salesman and the exhibitor understand that Exhibitor A will have 30 days clearance on that Paramount picture over every theatre in the area that they regard as competitive to the first-run account which charges 25 cents. *In other words, Paramount thereby agrees that this first-run account of its choice, to whom it has granted the license, will not, after the conclusion of that run, exhibit or license the exhibition to any theatre that charges less than whatever that stated price is in an area. Now, sometimes they are meticulously careful and they describe the area; sometimes they do nothing about it, they understand what they are talking about.

Mr. Proskauer: Won't license it for the 30 days?

*The Witness: Won't license it within 30 days, within the 30 days stipulated clearance, to a tneatre which charges less than whatever the stated price is in that particular contract.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess until 2.15.

(Recess to 2.15 p. m.)

(1318)

AFTERNOON SESSION

AUSTIN C. KEOUGH, resumed the stand

Mr. Wright: We have no further cross-examination.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Seymour, are you going to give us any instances of where independents got theatres away from Paramount? You have given us instances of where some defendants did.

---

*See clarification at printed record page 2488 infra.

Mr. Seymour: Your Honor means where there was competition between Paramount for acquisition of interest in a circuit, and the competitor was an independent circuit?

Judge Goddard: Yes.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Do you know of any such, Mr. Keough? A. Well, I think I suggested one situation which was during our bankruptcy where we lost a circuit of theatres that we formerly had owned out through Indiana and Ohio, the so-called Fitzpatrick and McElroy Circuit, and we lost that and to an independent in competition with us.

Now, I will have to search my memory and records to see whether there are other instances. That occurs to me immediately.

Judge Goddard: Was that where the theatre was sold to a higher bidder?

The Witness: It was a circuit of theatres sold to a higher bidder, yes. We wanted the circuit, and we just did not have the resources to get it, and the independent who still operates it, I believe got it.

(1319)

There was another one we tried to get after it. We had a theatre in Gary, Indiana, a very fine theatre, and there that was taken away from us in competition. We later, years afterwards, went into Gary, Indiana, with a theatre, and we have been operating it competitively with that; and the fact of that competition, and the whole background and history of that is of record in the courts, litigated, and the decision described and justified the situation and the competition. We lost out in competition. That was an independent.

Q. Mr. Keough, can you think of any instances where a theatre-operating company in which Paramount had an interest lost leaseholds or leases of theatres to independent theatre operators? A. Well, I don't like to mention the most recent one, the most recent of instances, which was referred to the other day, in Taunton, where Paramount's subsidiary had been the lessee for years of a certain theatre, where an independent bought the theatre in competition right from under them. That is a recent one.

Mr. Wright: Can you name that, please, so we know what you are talking about?

The Witness: Well, the theatre that I refer to is (1320)

the State Theatre, in Taunton, Massachusetts.

Q. The Strand Theatre, Mr. Keough. A. The Strand Theatre. That was it. The Strand, not the State. And that theatre was operated in competition. An independent got it away from one of Paramount's companies.

Q. Have there been other instances of that? A. Well, it is rather dim in my memory that there have been. I would have to go back and check my records, but I am very sure that there have been, yes.

Q. Now, with respect to the matter about which Mr. Wright was inquiring of you just before we recessed—that is, certain clearance terms which he referred to—have you participated in negotiations with exhibitors at which the clearance terms have been the subject of discussion? A. I have.

Q. And have you participated in negotiations at which clearance terms, such as those you were discussing with Mr. Wright have been discussed? A. I have.

Q. Can you tell us what the nature of those negotiations has been? A. First of all, there are those negotiations in which I participated in which Paramount, the distributor, was bargaining with an exhibitor, and from time to time there had been different exhibitors, about the terms of the contract, one of the terms of the contract being the clearance which the exhibitor sought to obtain from Paramount and which Paramount argued about as to whether it should give it, whether it was reasonable and fair to Paramount and Paramount's other customers, and the factors brought out in that discussion as to the clearance requested and ultimately granted in the requested or some modified form was the relation between the admission prices of the theatre that had the prior run and the theatres that had, or would, or might receive the next run or runs, and the bearing of a time element on the value of the contract sold to the prior run, I mean, the good will that went with the license, the prior run's ability to get the most out of the showing, in order to give Paramount what Paramount was insisting should come out of that showing, whether it was on a flat rental or whether it was on a percentage or a combination of both.

The discussions concerned a request by the prior exhibitor for a longer period of time to elapse between the finish of his exhibition and the start of any other exhibition at certain admission prices. The higher the admission price, the less time they thought was necessary; the lower the admission price, the longer they thought they would get.

In those discussions, and they were discussions, arguments and negotiations in which I participated, they finally came to a conclusion that a certain thing was all right and a certain thing was not all right, and would not go for it, Paramount would not go for it. That is the way they wound up.

Q. In the course of those negotiations were the terms of the license to the prior run conditioned on Paramount exacting any particular admission price or any admission price minimum from the subsequent-run exhibitor?

Mr. Wright: It is pure argument. I don't think it is a proper question.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. No, there was no argument about what Paramount should require of any subsequent run. The whole position was that if Paramount elected to sell a second-run or a subsequent-run, where the first admission price was, say, 50 cents, or 40 cents, well then, one lapse of time seemed reasonable; if it was 25 cents, another lapse of time seemed reasonable; if it was at a great distance, the exhibitor sometimes said, "Well, we ought to have a clearance over that." And Paramount said, "No, we don't agree with you, and we won't grant it," or we did agree and we did grant it.

So it was only a question of what the time lapse would be in the event that Paramount made a sale. They were perfectly free to make a sale.

Q. After the decision of the Supreme Court in U. S. v. (1323)
Interstate came down, did you have occasion to consider whether the clearance provisions, about which you testified under examination by Mr. Wright, were proper in the light of that decision? A. I did.

Q. Did you reach a conclusion on that subject? A. I did.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please——

Judge Hand: I think I will sustain an objection to that.

Q. Did you give any instructions with respect to the clearance terms based upon the decision in U. S. v. Interstate? A. I gave some oral instructions. I don't recall whether I gave any written instructions to Paramount sales organization.

Q. Will you tell us what those instructions were.

Mr. Wright: We object to what internal instructions were given. I do not see how it has any bearing on any issue.

Judge Hand: I think that is proper. Go on.

A. I advised or instructed Paramount's sales organization that as long as Paramount, the distributor, determined by itself what it was willing to give in the way of clearance, it was perfectly proper to measure the clearance, and state it in its contract with its exhibitor, by the admission price which the exhibitor would charge, the subsequent-run exhibitor would charge, and I told them that the facts as were set forth in the Interstate case were a different set of facts, talking about Paramount itself fixing its own terms, even when they were requested, and all by itself, with an exhibitor, and I instructed them to act accordingly.
(1324)

Q. Did you instruct them that the clearance might be measured by what the subsequent-run exhibitor was charging or what he agreed to charge?

Mr. Wright: I object to what instructions were given. I object to putting any more words in his mouth.

Judge Hand: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Judge Hand: We will allow that.

A. My instructions covered both. For example, in the ordinary exhibition of a picture, an ordinary Paramount picture, the exhibitor had his own stated standard admission price which he announced to the Paramount salesman, and if it was a percentage contract, it was fitted into that contract, and a clearance was measured in time by what some subsequent competing exhibitor would charge. That was written in and that was his price. When there were specialties, pictures that were large in size, money and scope, and a peculiar kind of exploitation was planned for them, something like in former days they called a road show, where the picture was shown first in a limited number of theatres provided the exhibitor charged a higher admission price, then that was written into the contract. That price was not necessarily the price that the exhibitor then had in effect. It probably was not. If his price was 50 cents and the picture was to come to him in a limited period, say six months before the rest of all the first-run accounts, he got it, if he charged a dollar, for example, or 75 cents, or whatever it was, and if he did not want to charge that he did not get it then, and he got it later at his own admission price. Paramount then announced its policy and said, "If you want it on these terms, you contract with us to charge that admission. If you don't, why, you will have to wait until later."

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Keough, the consent decree in Section 8—the consent decree in this case—mentions the admission prices of the theatres involved as one of the elements in determining whether clearance is reasonable, does it not? A. Not only does, but, on the thing that I am speaking about, it speaks about special exhibitions, with or without the clearance terms.

Q. I neglected when you were in direct, to ask Mr. Wright to stipulate as he has in connection with the other witnesses, since Mr. Zukor, that if asked you would answer in the negative the questions negativing conspiracy which I asked Mr.
(1326)
Zukor. I assume Mr. Wright will stipulate, so I won't have to put those questions specially.

Mr. Seymour: Do you so stipulate, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: And that stipulation as the same effect as if I asked the witness on the stand?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: One question.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Keough, there is one question I want to ask you. As I understand it for some years there was included in the Paramount contracts a provision that the exhibitor will charge for admission to said theatre an actual admission fee which shall not be less than 10 cents, was there not? A. Yes. (1327)

Q. And that clause was in the so-called standard exhibition contract of May 1, 1928? A. I think it was.

Q. Now, did that clause have anything to do with clearance or protection? A. No, I think I testified this morning that that had to do with prestige. That was a minimum 10 cents admission which we had in our Paramount contracts as early as 1919 or earlier.

Q. And subsequently to 1928 in some contracts that minimum was raised from 10 cents to 15 cents, was it not? A. In some Paramount contracts?

Q. Yes, sir. A. It may have been, I don't recall. I don't remember whether Paramount ever raised it to 15 cents as a minimum as a standard practice. I doubt it.

Recross Examination by Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Keough, in giving your testimony you referred to the introduction of talking pictures by my clients, Warner Bros. Do you remember that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was in about what year? A. Around 1927. 1926 or 1927.

Q. Now, from your general knowledge of the industry I am going to try to elicit some things which I think are not controversial, but I want to have them in the record. It was necessary in order to show a sound picture to have some special equipment in the theatre, was it not? A. It was.

(1328)

Q. And practically no theatres in the country, or, indeed, no theatres in the country at that time had that equipment? A. Well, when sound flashed upon the industry there was not any equipment in the theatres.

Q. Yes. Do you remember approximately what it cost at that time to put that equipment into a theatre? A. My recollection is that the cheapest form of equipment that was furnished either by the Western Electric Company or the Radio Corporation, RCA, was about $25,000. That is, the reproducing equipment.

Q. Now, at that time Warner's was still a small company, weren't they? A. Well, when they adopted sound they were a very small company, yes.

Q. And they had no theatres? A. No, not that I ever heard of.

Q. And in order to exploit sound, which you told us they were a year ahead of their competitors with, they had to get theatres to show those pictures in, didn't they? A. Well, there had to be theatres that were equipped with this rather expensive equipment in order that Warner Bros. who had the sound pictures could get a customer for them.

Q. Exactly. And the theatres that were owned by their producing competitors, like your company, they were not available for the exhibition of those sound pictures, were they? A. With a very few exceptions the theatres that Paramount was interested in, as well as the other theatres of the same quality and standing, had no such equipment, because at that time they did not believe that the thing was permanent. There was an exception, however, in the case of E. J.

Sparks' theatres in Florida, in which Mr. Sparks was the managing principal partner with Paramount. He had a vision. He rushed out and he got as many equipments he could in a few theatres—there were not very many of them—and he, I think, was the only one who had that vision that this was going to be something he could spend money on, and he did.

Q. Sparks had just a few theatres locally in Florida? A. He had a few theatres, but he was the only one I can think of who really was interested in sound at that time.

Q. And do you recall that it was at that time that Warner's went through with their transaction with First National and Stanley by which they acquired theatres? A. That was the time at which they got the theatres, yes; started to get them.

Mr. Proskauer: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: Are there any further questions of Mr. Keough?

Mr. Wright: I have some.

(1330)

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. This situation that you spoke about at Taunton, Massachusetts, do you recall when you lost the lease on that Strand Theatre? A. Yes, some time back in the beginning of 1945.

Q. It was before that, was it not? It was the Fall of 1944, was it not? A. It may have been.

Q. And that was a theatre in which Paramount had been serving pictures to? A. That was one of two theatres in Taunton, Massachusetts, where Paramount's partly owned subsidiary had been the lessee of for a long number of years.

Q. Well, can you answer the question? A. Yes, I will answer the question. Paramount had shown in that theatre the less attractive of its pictures year after year in that Strand Theatre.

Q. First-run? A. First-run, yes.

Q. By the way, who was the lessee that took it over after you got it? A. Well, it probably has some corporate name, which I don't recall. Mr. Donald Jaycox was the personality, the owner, probably the stockholder.

Q. And then after he took over that theatre, did Paramount make any of its pictures available to him for first-run exhibition in that theatre? A. I don't think we did.

(1331)

Q. You know you did not, don't you? A. No, I don't know that we did not. I told Mr. Jaycox's counsel that he could hardly expect Paramount to supply him with pictures when he went in and took the theatre that we had a lease on and were perfectly anxious to renew on terms as good if not better than he offered——

Q. Well—— A. Please——

Q. I did not ask you for the conversation you had with counsel. If you will just listen to the question and then give the answer we will get along faster. The theatre then remained closed, did it not, for a substantial period of time after the lease had been acquired by Mr. Jaycox? A. The theatre was closed and repaired or redecorated or reconstructed, opened with one picture for about a week, then closed for some months.

Q. And that was when, when it was opened for a week and then closed? A. Well, in the Spring of 1945, and thereafter it was closed. I mean, don't hold me to a precise date. It might have been April, March, May; whatever it was.

Q. And do you know the reason why it was closed? A. I know the reason that was described to me by Mr. Jaycox's counsel, and that was that he could not get pictures.

Q. And you know, as a matter of fact, that it was not offered any pictures on first-run by the other major distributors whose product had played there when Mullin & Pinanski had it, is that right? A. My information is quite to the contrary.
(1332)

Q. In any event, the theatre stayed closed. Then there was a lawsuit filed in which you were a defendant? A. That is right.

Q. And that suit named as parties your company and Mullin & Pinanski and the other major distributors. A. That is right.

Q. And then that suit was settled? A. It was.

Q. And under the terms of the settlement Mr. Jaycox was to have certain major product first-run in that Strand Theatre? A. As far as the immediate contracting for pictures was concerned, that is true. I don't remember just what product is being sold to him. Some of the product that is being sold to him as the result of that settlement was product that was offered to him before he even began his suit.

Q. In any event, as the result of the settlement he is now entitled to play certain product on first-run that was not available to him before? A. Well, he has contracts to them. I don't know whether he is entitled to play them. He is entitled to play what he has got contracts for.
(1333)

Q. Then I think you referred to this Gary situation where you say a Mr. Young obtained certain theatres which you had formerly operated. A. I did not name the man, but Mr. Young is the exhibitor in question.

Q. And then at a later time you, or, rather, Balaban & Katz went back into Gary, is that right? A. Balaban & Katz went into Gary and built a theatre or had a theatre built for it.

Q. And when was that? A. Oh, 1934, 1935; somewhere along there.

Q. And then do you recall that Mr. Young had a conversation with you and Mr. Barney Balaban as to what was going to be done with reference to a Paramount product in the town which he had been playing after you had the theatre there? A. I remember, yes.

Q. And do you remember that in that conference Mr. Young asked Mr. Balaban whether he could get the Paramount pictures, and that Mr. Balaban said he did not know, but probably not; that that was up to the theatre department in the distribution of pictures? A. Mr. Balaban——

Q. Just answer the question. A. Well, the answer is no.

Q. I call your attention to what purports to be a transcript of testimony or a page of the proceedings Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al. v. William Langer, et al., of June 18, (1334) 1938, and ask you to read page 997, and call your particular attention to the testimony near the bottom of the page.

Mr. Seymour: Whose testimony is it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: That is Mr. Keough's testimony.

A. I read what purports to be my testimony, transcribed in the so-called North Dakota case.

Q. That is what that is you have in your hands, yes. A. Yes, I recognize it. Where do you want me to start reading?

Q. I just want to call your attention to the part I just read to you; that is down the lower part of the page there; see if you still adhere to your testimony that that is not a correct version of the conversation you then testified to. A. (Reading.) "Again Mr. Young asked about the Paramount pictures, and he said he felt that Paramount shouldn't have come into the town and taken an interest in the other theatre"——

Mr. Wright: No. Let me have this.

The Witness: I am sorry.

Q. Is it not a fact that in that proceeding you testified as follows:

"The conference then broke up, and as it was breaking up, Mr. Young again asked Mr. Balaban whether he could get the Paramount pictures, and Mr. Balaban said he didn't know, but probably not, that that was up to the theatre department in the distribution of pictures."

(1335)

A. It is not so that I so testified.

Q. That is not your testimony? A. That is not my testimony; and where "the theatre department" is transcribed in this record, it should have read—and I did so testify—"the distribution department."

Q. Other than that is that a correct statement as to what transpired at the meeting? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Young get the pictures? A. He did not.

Q. And they played at the Balaban & Katz house, is that right? A. They played at the house in which Balaban & Katz and an independent were the operators.

Mr. Wright: Will you read that last answer?

(Answer read.)

A. (Continuing) It was some Greek name, a man who was in the town already and who built this theatre, and who asked Balaban & Katz to take an interest with him. They did. That is the theatre.

Q. Balaban & Katz operated the theatre and he had an interest in it, is that right? A. No, I think he managed and

Q. What was the nature of the Balaban & Katz interest? A. A stock interest.

Q. Of how much? A. Maybe half. I don't remember what it was.

(1336)

Q. You don't remember what it was? A. Maybe two-thirds. It was a material interest.

Q. But after Balaban & Katz acquired the interest, whatever it was, from that time on the Paramount pictures were served to that theatre and not to Mr. Young, is that right? A. Oh yes, that is perfectly true.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Recross Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Keough, when you talked to Mr. Jaycox's counsel about this Taunton situation, did not his counsel tell you that Twentieth Century-Fox had offered to license to Mr. Jaycox exactly the same type of product for the Strand that had theretofore been licensed to the Paramount subsidiary?

Mr. Wright: That is objectionable. It is not competent for him to say what Mr. Jaycox's counsel said to him.

(1337)

Mr. Caskey: You brought it out, sir.

Mr. Wright: I brought out the fact of the terms of the settlement. That has nothing to do with prior conversation.

Judge Hand: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Judge Hand: You may answer.

A. Mr. Jaycox's counsel did tell me that.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: I have no further questions.

Judge Bright: Which theatre was it that was referred to in Gary?

The Witness: I think the name of the theatre was the Palace Theatre in Gary, Indiana.

Judge Bright: Was there some litigation about it?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Bright: In the Federal Court?

The Witness: In the Federal Court, yes. There were two different lawsuits.

Mr. Seymour: In which the defendants prevailed, is that right?

The Witness: In both of them the defendants prevailed in the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Recross Examination by Mr. Davis:

Q. May I ask you a question, Mr. Keough: Do you know (1338)
whether or not before this conversation with counsel for Mr. Jaycox to which you just referred, Loew's, Inc. had already licensed Mr. Jaycox and contracts had been signed? A. No, I do not know that of my own knowledge.

Q. You do not know that? A. No, not of my own knowledge.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Seymour: I will call Mr. Mullin.

MARTIN J. MULLIN, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Paramount Pictures, Inc., being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. Seymour: If the Court please, before I examine this witness, would it be agreeable to your Honors to recess at 4 today?

Judge Hand: Yes. I forgot to make an announcement. We are going to recess today at 3:20.

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Mullin, are you vice-president and general manager of M. & P. Theatres? A. I am.

Q. Are you also vice-president of New England Theatres? A. I am.

Q. And are you an officer of a company known as Publix Notoco and president of its subsidiaries? A. I am.

Q. What is the business of M. & P. Theatres? A. It is a management company that manages a group of theatres in (1339)
New England.

Q. And New England Theatres is a company which owns theatres? A. It is.

Q. And is the stock of New England Theatres wholly owned by Paramount? A. It is.

Q. And does Public Notoco also own theatres? A. It does.

Q. And does Paramount have a 50 per cent interest in Publix Notoco? A. It does.

Q. And are the remaining stockholders of Publix-Notoco, with the exception of yourself and Mr. Pinanski people who have no connection with Paramount? A. They are.

Q. And then there are also subsidiaries of Publix-Notoco which own theatres, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in those subsidiary companies Notoco has 50 per cent of the stock, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the remaining 50 per cent is held by the people with no connection with M. & P. or with Paramount? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And New England also has certain subsidiaries in which there are stockholders with no connection with Paramount, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does M. & P. stand for? A. Mullin and Pinanski.

Q. And does Mullin and Pinanski or M. & P. operate all the theatres in the group that I have just mentioned? (1340)

A. They do.

Q. Now, how are Messrs. Mullin and Pinanski compensated for their operating activities? A. Messrs. Mullin and Pinanski have a management contract, and their compensation is out of the profits of the theatres in which they operate.

Mr. Wright: Have you got a copy of the contract? Can't we have it identified?

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, you are the most contract conscious man I ever saw. I will get it for you if you would like to see it.

Mr. Wright: It seems to me it would save time.

Mr. Seymour: I am just going to develop the fact that the upshot of all that is that Messrs. Mullin and Pinanski have an interest in the profits of the operation of those theatres.

Q. Is that right? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: We haven't the faintest idea what the upshot of it all was without seeing the document.

Mr. Seymour: I will make it available to you, if you like.

Judge Hand: Well, he is going to make it available to you. Go on.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. Now, how many theatres are there in the group (1341) operated by M. & P.? A. There are 94 theatres, 37 of them that are owned 100 per cent by Paramount, and the balance in partnerships.

Q. In what states are those theatres located? A. The so-called New England States, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Q. And how long have you been engaged with Mr. Pinanski in managing theatres in New England? A. I went to New England in 1931, and I have been there ever since; the latter part of 1931.

Q. When did you first become employed in the motion picture industry? A. I started in the Triangle Distributing Corporation in 1916; stayed there until 1919, when I went to Atlanta, Georgia, with Mr. S. A. Lynch, who organized the Southern Enterprises. I stayed there until 1925 when I came back to the New York office of the then Publix Theatres Corporation.

Q. That was a subsidiary of Paramount? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you stayed there until—— A. I stayed there until 1929, when I went to Minneapolis to operate the circuit of theatres there; and from Minneapolis to Boston, where I have been ever since.

Q. Now, do you know where the negotiations for and the licensing of film for the theatres in the group which you have referred to was done prior to 1931 or 1932? A. It was done in the New York office of Publix Theatres Corporation.

Q. And did there come a change in that practice in 1931 or 1932? A. Yes, sir. In 1932 when Mr. Pinanski and I took over the operation of those theatres in New England, we started to do our buying and handle all our own records and so forth, in Boston; and have been doing so ever since.

Q. Now, were some of the larger theatres in New England in receivership up there? A. The largest circuit of theatres; the Olympia Theatre was in receivership or went into receivership in 1932. It remained in receivership for several years.

Q. That was a receivership proceeding in the State Court? A. In the Superior Court of Massachusetts, yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Pinanski was one of the receivers? A. He was.

Q. Where are the negotiations for licenses for films from distributors other than Paramount conducted on behalf of the theatres which you operate? A. 60 Scollay Square, Boston.

Q. Whose office is that? A. That is the office of M. & P. Theatres Corporation.

(1342a)

Q. And with whom are the negotiations for the licensing of film conducted? A. The licensing of pictures is started by Mr. Stoddard, who is the chief film buyer for M. & P. Theatres, and who is in daily consultation with me on all film deals.

(1343)

Q. Before any film deal is closed, do you become familiar with it? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Do you participate from time to time in the negotiations? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you license film from all the distributors? A. We do.

Q. With whom are your negotiations for the licensing of Paramount pictures conducted? A. Mr. Charles Reagan, general sales manager of Paramount.

Q. At the time you negotiate with representatives of Loew's, Fox, Warner or RKO, do you have any knowledge or information as to negotiations for, or film deals arranged for, the exhibition of Paramount pictures in theatres in which any of those distributors have an interest? A. We do not.

Q. Do you have any knowledge or information as to arrangements with distributors of pictures who do not have any interest in theatres may have conducted for the exhibition of pictures in the theatres in which defendants are interested? A. We do not.

Q. Is there any relationship whatever so far as you are concerned, between the terms of film deals negotiated for the theatres which you operate and any negotiations and/or arrangements which are made for the licensing or exhibition of Paramount films in theatres of any other defendant in (1344) this case? A. Mullin & Pinanski are only interested in our own circuit. We have no knowledge of that.

Q. Does the Paramount theatre department supply you with any information as to the negotiations or film license contracts made by any other theatre operating company in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Does the distribution department of Paramount furnish you with any information as to the negotiations or arrangements for the licensing or exhibition of Paramount pictures in the theatres in which any distributor has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Does the Paramount theatre department or any other part of the Paramount organization participate in your negotiations with representatives of distributors? A. They do not.

Q. Other than Paramount? A. Other than Paramount.

Q. And I think you have told us that the negotiations for Paramount films are not with the theatre department but with the distribution department? A. Mr. Reagan, general sales manager, yes, sir.

Q. Do you transmit to the Paramount theatre department the details of the contracts or arrangements which you have for the exhibition or licensing of the films of any other distributor? A. No, sir; those records are all kept in Boston.
(1345)

Q. Does any official or employee of Paramount instruct, dictate or advise the terms of any film license contracts that you make or are to make with any other distributor? A. No, sir.

Q. Or as to who you are to deal with? A. No, sir.

Q. Or as to what pictures you are to license? A. No, sir.

Q. We have heard something about the way a film deal is negotiated from the point of view of a distributor. Are you an exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us, from the exhibitor's point of view, whether the negotiation of a film deal is a simple or complicated matter? A. Very complicated matter.

Q. Can you give us some idea of how long those negotiations take sometimes? A. Sometimes they take weeks.

Q. Do they take weeks with representatives of the distributors who are defendants in this case sometimes? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any difference in the nature or quality or ardor of the negotiations for film licenses which you have with representatives of Loew's, Fox, Warner or RKO, and that with representatives of other distributors? A. No differences.

Q. Do you make a deal more quickly and more acquiescently when representatives of a distributor who is a defendant in this case is dealing with you? A. No, sir.
(1346)

Q. Do you license the pictures of Loew's, Fox, Warner and RKO for all your theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Are there theatres which are in the group you operate in which you would like to license Loew, Fox, RKO and Warner pictures, where you are unable to do so? A. A great many.

Q. In such cases do those products go to competitors of your theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are there cities in your territory in which you have a theatre and a defendant in this case has a theatre? A. Yes, sir, many of them.

Q. Do you operate some first-run theatres, so-called first-run theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you also operate some subsequent-run theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where Loew's has theatres in towns where you operate, are Metro pictures ordinarily shown in Loew's theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where they do not have theatres, do they license those pictures to independent competitors of yours—— A. They do.

Q. —sometimes? A. In some situations. Some spots they split the product.

Q. Who determines the admission prices which you (1347)
charge in your theatres? A. Mr. Pinanski and myself.

Q. When you negotiate a film license contract with a distributor, who tells the distributor what admission price is to be included in the contract as the minimum admission price for that theatre license? A. Generally that price is carried along. It is generally the same price that has been inserted from contract to contract. The distributor knows the price of the theatre that you are talking about and he generally has that inserted.

Q. Does the distributor tell you what price you are to charge? A. No, sir.

Q. Generally speaking, do you negotiate the clearance terms of your license contracts every time you make one? A. No, sir.

Q. Are they carried along from year to year? A. Carried along and generally understood.

Q. Once they are established? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And originally were they established as the result of individual negotiations with the individual theatres? A. I imagine so, before our time that they followed along the same lines.

Q. The clearance provisions were just continued as they were, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Have there been some changes in them? A. There were considerable changes during the period of NRA, during (1348)
the arbitration and clearance committee set-ups.

Q. Have there been some changes since? A. Several changes due to arbitration, yes, under the consent decree.

Q. Do you change the admission price of your theatres regularly? A. We do not.

Q. Do you adhere to the same admission price over a considerable period of time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from the exhibitor's viewpoint, why do you do that? A. We think that the admission price is an established part of the theatre and we prefer to have that policy kept in force than constantly changing it. We think the constant changing of it confuses the public, confuses our patrons.

Q. What, if any, problems would it create in your business to change your admission price regularly? A. Well, we think that if you constantly change your admission price that people who come downtown might come to your theatre this week and find that the price is 50 cents. They may count on just spending 50 cents and may only have 50 cents, and if they come down and find the price is 75, they may take exception to the theatre and not come back again. They may go to one of our competitors, may like it over there a lot better than they do one of our houses. We keep our established price. We don't like the constant changing of it. (1349)

Q. Is that in your experience generally so of exhibitors? A. That is generally so, yes, sir.

Q. Do you find in your business that the various distributors seek to license their pictures on what is called the preferred playing time? A. Yes, sir. It is one of constant arguing in the negotiation of a film deal, is the preferred playing time, and especially where you have theatre that has a policy of a Saturday-Sunday-Monday-Tuesday, which are the four big days of the week, and the so-called seven-tenths of a week on a tenths basis, the distributor is constantly striving for that playing time.

Q. Is that so of the distributors who are defendants in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do they attempt as against each other to get the preferred playing time in your theatres? A. They certainly do, yes, sir.

Q. Is that also true of distributors who are not involved in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much does M & P spend for advertising annually? A. We spend about $500,000 a year on the M & P Circuit.

Q. Is a substantial part of that spent in advertising the first-run theatres? A. In our first-run situations, a house like the Metropolitan Theatre, we spend an average of $2000 on a picture. When the same picture moves into Paramount (1350)
Fenway, which is a carry-over house, you would spend another thousand dollars; and if it was moved into the Modern and Scollay Square, you might have another $750 or $1000; and you would have about $4000 on that particular picture in the downtown first-run situation.

Q. As it moves into later runs, does your advertising on a particular picture tend to decrease? A. That same picture, if it goes into one of our 28-day houses, which is the clearance of downtown first-run against subsequent runs, we may spend as high as $200 in advertising it.

Q. How about later runs? A. If it gets down to one of the smaller, last runs, it might be $20, which might be the budget for that particular house.

Q. Why is there that great difference in the amount spent for advertising? A. We feel that the suburban house advertising is more of an informative nature because we feel the amount of money that we spend in downtown Boston has prematurely sold that picture, so when it gets to the 28-day suburban house, your advertising, such as trailers and one inch in the newspaper and in window cards and so forth, is an informative sort of advertising.

Q. That is, the people know all about the picture and you just tell them where it is playing? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by a 28-day house?

The Witness: For instance, the Metropolitan, Boston, which is our first-run, by this clearance on the subsequent houses on 28 days, when it becomes available not only to our suburban house but to our opposition suburban houses in certain sections of Boston.
(1351)

Q. 28 days is the clearance period? A. Yes, sir, 28 days is the clearance period.

Q. Are your license contracts with most of the distributors so-called master contracts? A. We have adopted on our circuit a policy of an individual contract for each individual picture for each individual theatre. We have that in effect at the present time with the exception of Warner Bros., from whom, last year, we bought on the so-called master contract. We used the one contract and deal sheets as we went along.

Q. That is, with other distributors you have an individual contract for each theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You buy your films from all these defendants in this case? A. Yes, sir. We use everybody's pictures, independents' also.

Q. Do you license the pictures of distributors who are not defendants in this case? A. A great many.

Q. What distributors do you license from? A. P.R.C., Republic, Monogram, sometimes smaller independents or State right pictures. Anybody that has a picture we can use, we buy it.
(1352)

Q. Turning to Boston, how many theatres operated on a first-run policy are there there? A. Well, there is the Metropolitan, Paramount-Fenway, Modern and Scollay, M & P operated; the Memorial and Boston, which are operated by RKO; the State and the Orpheum, which are operated by Loew's, Inc.; and there are some independently operated theatres, such as the Majestic, the Tremont, the Old South and the Normandy, that work under a vacillating policy, that is, a policy of both first-runs and subsequent-runs, revival pictures and, in the case of the Normandy Theatre, they have a policy where they use, as they call it, the laugh movie policy, with an occasional first-run going in with that.

Q. Which is the largest first-run theatre in Boston? A. The Metropolitan Theatre is the largest.

Q. How does that compare, aside from size—that is an M & P operated theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How does it compare in general quality and size with the first-run theatres there? A. I think it is generally conceded in Boston that the Metropolitan Theatre is the finest and most expensive operation of theatre in New England.

Q. What product does the Metropolitan play on a first-run policy? A. Licenses Paramount, Warner, two-thirds of Fox, some Republic, some Monogram, and occasionally (1353) whatever other picture we can buy that is open on the market. Last year we were able to buy three Columbias and one United Artists.

Q. Do you have in Boston some subsequent-run houses in which M & P is interested? A. Yes.

Q. Dealing with Boston generally, do you license the product of as many distributors as you can get in your theatres? A. Yes, sir. I think it is safe to say in our suburban houses we use practically everybody's product regardless of whether we get it downtown or not.

Q. Do you license the product of Republic, Monogram and P. R. C.? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the basis on which you license the pictures of so many distributors? Why do you have to do that? A. Well, last year we used 64 pictures at the Metropolitan Theatre. We have in addition to the Metropolitan Theatre the Paramount and Fenway, which many times have open weeks on account of not being able to carry over a picture—a picture does not pay the justifiable business on the carry-over—and we need pictures for those houses. It sometimes becomes necessary to take revival pictures and put them in those houses, with the shortage of product. We had two revival shows in the last eight weeks in the Paramount and Fenway, playing pictures that had been played before.

Judge Bright: Played before in the same theatre?

(1354)

The Witness: In the same theatre and around in other theatres. We bring them back. They had been pictures that had been shown all over before.

Q. Is it the general policy of most of the theatres in New England to play double features? A. New England is acknowledged as a general double feature situation. There are very few single features. There will be exceptions occasionally in situations like downtown Boston, where a picture may be so long that you are unable to put another picture with it, but it is generally a double feature situation.

Q. Do you use Monogram, Republic and P. R. C. pictures in many theatres outside of Boston? A. We use them in a great many situations, Hartford, Worcester; any place we can buy them we use them.

Mr. Seymour: I don't want to hold your Honors beyond the time you want to recess.

Judge Hand: How much more have you?

Mr. Seymour: Quite a good deal. I cannot finish.

Judge Hand: All right. We will adjourn until Monday morning at ten-thirty.

(Adjourned until Monday, October 29, 1945, at 10:30 a.m.)

(1355)

New York, October 29, 1945,
10:30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

MARTIN J. MULLIN resumed the stand.

Direct Examination Continued by Mr. Seymour:

Q. I had asked you before we adjourned, Mr. Mullin, whether the theatres which you operated licensed the pictures of Republic, Monogram and P. R. C. I think you said they did. A. Yes, sir.

Q. In some situations do you license that product first-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in some situations do you license it subsequent-run? A. Yes, sir.

And do you use it in a number of theatres? A. A number of situations, yes.

Q. You told us on Friday that with the exception of Warner Bros., where you had a master contract, the film license contracts were made individually for each theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And can you tell us why that is? A. Well, we have various corporations, various individual companies, and we prefer the individual contracts in the file of that individual company rather than having him on a master sheet.

(1356)

Q. Is that because in many of the theatre situations there are stockholders who have no connection with Paramount? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you have any knowledge or information in connection with your film deals with distributors as to what film deals are negotiated or are made by other theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any interest in that subject? A Not interested in any way.

Q. Why not? A. My compensation is derived entirely from the theatres that we operate, and I am interested in no other theatre and what any other theatres can afford to pay for film. We get our results from our own theatres and we are interested only in those theatres in so far as it applies to the individual film deals.

Q. I asked you on Friday whether there were theatres under your operation which were unable to license the product of Loew? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there theatres under your operation which are unable to license the product of other distributors? A. In many situations product is sold either to other theatres or operated by circuit theatres, or by individual, independent operators.

(1357)

Q. Is that true with respect to product of Fox? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there a number of theatres operated in competition to theatres which you operate which have the Fox product and you are unable to get it? A. Yes, sir; there are situations like Newport and Pawtucket and Woonsocket, Brookline, where the independent buys Fox pictures and we are unable to get them in those situations.

Q. Are there similar situations with respect to the product of Warner Bros.? A. Yes, sir, there are.

Q. And are there a number of those situations where independent competitors are able to get Warner and you are not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that also true as to the product of RKO? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are there a number of independent competitors in various cities who are able to obtain RKO product when you are not?

The Witness: I did not get that.

Mr. Seymour: Would you read that, Mr. Reporter?

(Question read.)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that also true of Universal? A. It is.

Q. Is it also true of United Artists? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it also true of Columbia? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, are there situations in New England where you operate theatres where your theatre or the theatre in which you operate play second-run after an independent theatre? A. Yes, sir. We have a situation like—we have a second-run theatre in Portland, Maine, that plays product after the first-run theatre, which is independently operated. The first-run independent takes 30 days clearance over our house, which is the same clearance that we take over our own theatre. We have a situation like—Portland—in Quincy, we have two theatres in Quincy, and one in East Milton, both which takes its clearance of 14 days after Quincy, which is independently operated. We have a situation in Brookline where we have two theatres, the Circle Theatre in Brighton, and the Egyptian theatre, Brighton, which obtains its availability after Brookline. The independent theatre in Brookline takes a 7-day clearance over our theatres, which is the same clearance that we take over our own theatres.
(1358)
(1359)

Q. Are these other examples? A. There are many other situations similar to that.

Q. Is it the fact that where a theatre which you operate plays second-run on a product which is exhibited on first-run in an independent theatre, the independent theatre takes clearance over your second-run theatre? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Generally speaking, is that clearance similar or the same as the clearance which your first-run theatre takes on the product which it plays over second-run theatres? A. That is true. Another situation is New Bedford, where we have one suburban theatre, independent has three, and they have downtown first-runs and we have one, they all take the same clearance over the subsequent-run.

Q. Does that apply to the product of all the defendants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that wherever you play subsequent-run or second-run following the independent exhibition, all pictures distributed by any defendant to independent first-run take clearance over your second-run? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to ask you whether there are situations in which you play second-run on the product of distributors who are not defendants in this case which are played first-run in independent theatres? A. Yes, sir, they take the same clearance. Same clearance as set up, generally, for everybody. If we play a Republic picture in downtown (1360)
Boston, at the Metropolitan Theatre, Republic grants the same clearance of 28 days, the same as the other companies do.

Q. In other words, where a product of a distributor not a defendant in this case is exhibited first-run in an independent theatre, that theatre takes the same clearance over a second-run theatre in which you are interested as on the product of any other distributor, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find in negotiating film licenses with various distributors that they compete with each other for playing time in your theatres? A. Yes, sir, very substantially.

Q. Can you tell just how that works out and how you observe it in action? A. Well, it comes to the forefront many times on holidays when pictures are available for booking and all the companies that you buy pictures from try to get that holiday date, to get the additional revenue that the holiday brings. That same thing is true in situations where you have a theatre that operates on what we call a long-half policy of Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, and then Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the companies are always trying to get in the long-half time because it means a larger return in revenue.

Q. Do they try collectively to get into that? A. No, sir.

Q. Or is it individual? A. It is always an individual problem. I don't think, when the Fox man is trying to get a holiday from me in Boston at the Metropolitan Theatre, that he thinks about anybody else but himself.
(1361)

Q. When the Fox man is trying to get it, is somebody else also trying to get it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that apply to distributors who are defendants as well as distributors who are not defendants? A. It applies to all of them. Republic is just as bad, as far as playing date time is concerned as some of the other companies.

Q. What do you mean by "just as bad"? A. Well, if Mr. Grainger of Republic has a picture that he thinks is entitled to the Metropolitan Theatre, he is on the phone constantly, trying to get that picture booked into the Metropolitan Theatre.

Q. Do you find the same enthusiastic desire for that preferred playing time among the various defendants. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Speaking generally, are the theatres which are operating under your management on a first-run policy in the various cities of New England, the best or comparable with the best theatres in those localities? A. We think so, yes, sir.

Q. Do you make an effort to keep your theatres up? A. We do.

(1362)

Q. When Mr. Goldenson was testifying Mr. Wright asked him about meetings of the operating heads of all companies in which Paramount has an interest. Have you attended such meetings? A. I have.

Q. When there are such meetings, do you go? A. I do.

Q. Can you tell us the general subjects that are discussed at those meetings? A. Yes, sir. We discuss at the so-called partners' meetings the problems that have been confronting our industry in the last four or five years; the matter of types of pictures that we were getting; personalities that were coming to the forefront; the matter of personnel in our theatres during wartime. A circuit like ours, for instance, we have about 350 men in the armed services. We discussed the problems of maintenance with the limited amount of maintenance equipment and supplies that were coming to us. We discussed television, the effect of it upon our business. We discussed unusual advertising campaigns that may arise from time to time. We discussed the proper merchandising of candy in our theatres. And I think that covers, in general, about the things that generally were discussed.

Q. How about war activities, such as bond drives? A. Various war activities, the bond drives, the March of Dimes, the Red Cross, and all the other drives, and the War Activities Committee, the booking of War Activities Films in all our theatres, the type and kind of film that was coming to us through the War Activities Committee, the length of it that we could work into our shows. Those were all subjects that were discussed at these various meetings that we had.

Q. At any meeting which you attended did you ever hear any discussion or mention of the negotiations or arrangements made by companies in which Paramount had an interest for the licensing of films of any defendant in this case? A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever hear any discussion or mention of the terms upon which, or the arrangements made by which theatre operating companies in which Paramount has an interest is licensing Paramount film? A. I did not.

Q. Are all those matters, matters which have never been discussed at any meeting which you have attended? A. They are. As I said, Mr. Seymour, we are not interested, insofar as our companies are concerned, in what any other partner of Paramount, or affiliates, pays to film companies for its film. We have in our circuit up there many, many people who are not interested in the film industry, and we therefore buy our film for the individual theatre based on the individual theatre's ability to pay, and I don't think that has any bearing on what a picture might cost in Texas or out in Chicago, and we have worked along on that basis. We feel if we did anything else we would be not true to the people that we represent in these various companies.

Q. Does that include the minority stockholders? A. Yes, sir, that does.

Mr. Seymour: You may examine.

Mr. Wright: Are there any other defendants who wish to question? I suppose we might as well have them, if there are.

Are there any other questions?

Mr. Proskauer: I would like to ask one question.

By Mr. Proskauer:

Q. Mr. Mullin, you described that in your area up there in New England that the clearance was not affected by the circumstance that a theatre was affiliated or unaffiliated. From your general knowledge and your other employments that you testified about, is that your observation as a general situation throughout the country?

Mr. Wright: That is objected to, if the Court please.

Judge Hand: You may answer.

A. Yes.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Mullin, you operate a first-run theatre in Providence? A. No, sir, we do not.

Q. In New Bedford? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you get Fox product there? A. We do not. The (1365) independent opposition gets it.

Q. Do you play it second-run? A. Yes.

Judge Goddard: New Bedford?

The Witness: New Bedford, Massachusetts.

Q. I want to ask two questions about geography. How far is it from the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston to the Central Square Theatre in Cambridge? A. Oh, I would say it is from three to four miles.

Q. You operate two theatres first-run in Somerville? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which of those is closer to Cambridge? A. Somerville is adjacent to Cambridge. You just go from one street to another in Cambridge and you are in Somerville. Somerville theatres get their clearance seven days after first-run Cambridge.

Q. Which theatre is closest to the Central Square? A. Which theatre? You mean of the Somerville theatres?

Q. Yes. A. I would say the Ball Square is the closest.

Q. How far is that? A. Less than two miles.

Q. The theatres in Somerville compete for part of the same patronage that the Metropolitan competes? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Leisure: I have no questions.

Cross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Mullin, in your testimony about runs and clearance, you did not mean to suggest that there were no situations in which there were differences between the clearance that your theatres got and that independents got, is that right? A. I think, Mr. Wright, that the clearance is pretty generally set up on all getting the same availability. There are some differences. For instance, Lynn, the theatres in Lynn get the availability 21 days after Boston on all product except Metro, who gives us 28 days, but I think generally that in New England, around Boston, where our clearance was set up, that the clearance is pretty much the same for everybody.
(1366)

Q. Let me call your attention to Middleboro, Massachusetts. Are you familiar with that situation? A. I understand that was in the arbitration.

Q. Do you remember that the question of clearance was arbitrated there, that is, Middleboro was being subjected to clearance 28 days after Boston, and had an arbitration proceeding, and then got a cut to 14 days as a result of an award? A. I think Middleboro's clearance was set up on Brockton and Taunton, and the objectio. of the man in Middleboro, Mr. Hudson, was that he was getting his clearance from two points and he only wanted his clearance from one point, which he was entitled to.

Q. In any event, after the award he got 14 days after Boston on all distributors except Paramount, isn't that right? A. I don't know just—I cannot remember just what the arbitration case was set up as.

Q. You remember that Paramount was excused because of its interest in the M & P theatres? A. Having a theatre in downtown Boston, I imagine so.

Q. And then after the award was made, although he plays all the other major product 14 days after Boston, he continues to get Paramount 28 days after Boston? A. I think that is probably so. That would be a similar case to the Lynn, where Loew had a theatre in Boston and got 28 days instead of 21.

Q. Do you recall that the same thing occurred, or there was a similar situation in Ayer, Massachusetts, where the independent there brought an arbitration proceeding, he gets his pictures seven days after Lowell from everybody except Paramount? A. I think that was an account of Paramount having theatres in Lowell.

Q. Yes, and then Paramount continues to serve him fourteen days after Lowell? A. I don't remember exactly what the judgment was but that was another case where Ayer was getting its clearance from two points, from Fitchburg and Lowell.

Q. I am not asking you, I am directing to not what the judgment was but to the fact that Paramount continued to serve him 14 days after Lowell while the other major distributors served him seven days, in accordance with the (1368) award? A. I am not familiar with that.

Q. Mr. Mullin, what standards have you used in determining whether or not you are paying too much film rental in any particular situation? A. Where you have standards of periods of years of operation in that individual theatre, and if you are not making any money in the theatre, you know there is something wrong. It may not be film rental, it may be something else, but I think your experience in the business, and the deals that have been built up over a period of years, give you a pretty good yardstick as to what you should pay or should not pay.

Q. You don't think what comparable theatres pay would have anything to do with it? A. No, sir. I don't think so in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Wright: That is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. In these cases that Mr. Wright asked you about, where theatres in which Paramount had an interest were involved, the award did not run in connection with those theatres because of the provisions of Section 8 and Section 17 of the Consent Decree, isn't that so? A. I would imagine so, yes. (1369)

Judge Goddard: Mr. Seymour, just what did you mean by that question?

Mr. Seymour: Section 17 stems from the Arbitration Award under Section 8, the exhibition of Paramount or any other defendant's product in theatres in which that defendant has an interest; and I wanted to make it clear that there was such an exemption in these particular cases about which Mr. Wright inquired, which was a result of the terms of the decree which the Government participated in.

Judge Goddard: Article 17?

Mr. Seymour: Section 8 and Section 17. Of course, that is only the product of the particular company. If, for example, that theatre in which Paramount had an interest was playing the product of another distributor, who was a party to the decree, that product would be subject to the consequences of the award but not by express exemption consented to by the Government, but not Paramount product in theatres in which Paramount had an interest.

Judge Bright: I do not see that in Section 17, as you call it. What is the clause you refer to?

Mr. Seymour: I will call your Honor's attention to it.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, there is no question about the exemption and the fact that Paramount was not subject to the awards and was excused because it played the exemption. I thought I brought that out on the examination. I did not mean to suggest otherwise. I simply wanted to point out that although the clearance of the other distributors was cut by the award, Paramount continued to have longer clearance.

(1370)

Mr. Seymour: Is that sufficient for your Honor's purpose, Judge Bright?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: Has your Honor before you Appendix C to the Government's brief?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Caskey says that that provision is on page 12.

Now, my colleagues say that my description of the consequences of those provisions was unhappy; that rather than being exempted from the award the decree expressly provides that the clearance of such pictures are not arbitrable, which is perhaps the same thing in another form.

All right, Mr. Mullin. No further questions.

(Witness excused.)

(1371)

JOHN J. FRIEDL, called as a witness on behalf of the defendant Paramount, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Friedl, are you president of Minnesota Amusement Company? A. I am.

Q. And are you also its general manager? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are your headquarters? A. In Minneapolis.

Q. Now, will you give us a brief outline of your experience in the motion picture industry? A. I entered the motion picture industry in the year 1916 and served in various capacities, as operator, doorman and assistant manager at various theatres until 1923, when I went to Dallas, Texas, and became manager of the Palace Theatre.

I served in that capacity for a year and a half, and then was appointed district manager of the theatres in Texas operated by Publix Theatres.

In 1929 I was transferred to New York and given supervision over the DeLuxe Theatres operated by Publix in the northeast. These included New Haven, Boston, Rochester, Buffalo and Toledo.

After about six or eight months in that position, I moved into New York and took over the supervision of the theatres operated by Publix Theatres in the southeast. Those were the theatres located in the States of Georgia, and Alabama, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Florida.

(1372)

In 1931 I returned to Dallas as division manager for the DeLuxe Theatres operated by Publix in the southwest; and in April 1932 I was transferred to Minneapolis as division manager of the Publix Northwest Theatres. These were operated by me under the supervision of Publix Theatres in New York.

On January 28, 1933, the Minnesota Amusement Company went into receivership, and at that point the entire authority for operating the theatres was transferred to Minneapolis, and I continued in charge of the theatres from that date through the receivership and up until the present time.

Q. That is the decentralized program which has been testified to went into effect with respect to the Minnesota

Theatres some time in early 1933, is that right? A. That is correct, yes.

Q. And since that time you have been in charge of the operation of those theatres, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, during the receivership what part did you play in their operation? A. I operated theatres for the receiver.

Q. Was that a Federal Court receivership? A. It was a Federal Court receivership, and ancillary receivers were (1373) appointed in Wisconsin, North and South Dakota.

Q. And the receivers were under the jurisdiction of the District Court of Minnesota? A. Yes, sir. The Federal Court of Minnesota.

Q. Yes. Now, when did the receivership terminate? A. The receivership terminated in July 1935.

Q. In the course of that receivership did Minnesota Theatres lose some of its theatres? A Yes, it lost a considerable number of theatres.

Q. And were there some cities where it had theatres where it lost all the theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is Paramount's interest in Minnesota Amusement Company? A. Paramount owns all the stock of the Minnesota Amusement Company.

Q. And how many theatres are operated today by Minnesota Amusement Company? A. At the present time Minnesota Amusement Company is operating 94 theatres. Of that number six of them are closed and seven are operated by partners. So actually Minnesota is operating 81 theatres.

Q. Now, when you say operated by partners, do you mean that Minnesota has an interest in some theatres along with some outside stockholders? A. In several cases Minnesota owns a half interest in the operation in certain towns, and in those particular towns the partner handles the operation. (1374)

Q. And is the so-called partner there an independent stockholder having no connection either with Minnesota or with Paramount or any other distributor? A. None other than the partnership we have in that particular town.

Q. Now, how does the number of theatres in which Minnesota Amusement Company is now interested compare with the number in which it was interested at the time of the receivership? Is it smaller? A. At the time of the receivership, which was in January 1933, Minnesota operated in about five towns which they are not operating in at the present time. I think there would probably be 23 or possibly 25 less theatres today than there were when the company went into receivership.

Q. Now, do you know when Paramount acquired its interest in Minnesota Theatres? A. Paramount bought the theatres operated by Finkelstein & Ruben in 1929.

Q. And prior to that time that group of theatres had been independently operated by Finkelstein & Ruben, is that right. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Speaking generally, was the number and location of theatres in 1929 at the time Paramount acquired its interest in Finkelstein & Ruben about the same as it was in 1933 at the time Minnesota went into receivership? A. No. I believe that Finkelstein & Ruben in 1929 were operating in a few more towns, and I believe they had a few more theatres than (1375)

Minnesota had in 1933.

Q. But certainly Finkelstein & Ruben had at least as many, if not more? A. Yes, I believe there were more because at the present time there are substantially less towns and less theatres than there were in 1929 when Paramount took the interest.

Q. Now, are you employed by Minnesota Amusement Company under a contract which gives you an interest in the successful operation of that company? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we would again like to have the contract.

Mr. Seymour: Just as in the case of Mr. Mullin, I shall be glad to make it available to you.

Q. And your compensation therefore depends at least in part and whether or not that company is operated successfully, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is there an operating agreement between Minnesota Amusement Company and RKO with respect to a theatre in Minneapolis and St. Paul? A. There is.

Q. And how many theatres in which RKO is interested are involved in that operating arrangement? There is one RKO theatre in each town.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the making of the operating arrangement originally? A. Yes.

Q. And when was it made? A. It was made in St. Paul (1376)
in May of 1936 and in Minneapolis in December of 1936.

Q. And in one case that was within less than a year of Minnesota's coming out of receivership, and in the other case just slightly over a year, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the economic condition of the motion picture theatre business in the Twin Cities at the time those agreements were made?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not see that that has the slightest relevance, what the economic condition was when those agreements were made.

Mr. Seymour: I think it is perfectly plain. I am going to establish that this operating arrangement was made because of the terrible economic conditions affecting motion picture theatres at that time; and the Government makes some undisclosed claim as to these arrangements, and I propose to establish that they are quite reasonable.

Mr. Wright: The agreement is still in effect today. What possible justification could there be in——

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Reporter, will you read the pending question.

(Question read.)

A. We emerged from receivership in July 1935, and following that the conditions, particularly in the Twin Cities, were very, very bad. In both St. Paul and Minneapolis during the period 1935, the theatres, our theatres in those situations lost over $100,000 apiece. The condition continued to get worse, and it appeared that having emerged from receivership we were heading right back into it again, and possibly into bankruptcy and disintegration, and something had to be done. And it occurred to me that possibly some kind of an operating agreement might be developed with the Orpheum Theatres in the two towns which would enable us to meet this problem. The problem was aggravated because of the intense desire of each of us to correct the situation, we resorted to what might be called even hysterical efforts. In the instance of Minneapolis the Orpheum inaugurated stage shows. We, on the other hand, did the same thing. And here were two large theatres battling day in and day out with stage entertainment and losing substantial amounts of money. And as we continued it occurred to me and to the RKO people also that if this thing could be put on a sane basis, possibly we could solve the problem.
(1377)

So an operating agreement was developed, and it anticipated these things, that first the terrific cost of these stage shows in two theatres week in and week out could be eliminated, and in place of that the quality of the stage entertainment could be improved, because under the new arrangement only occasional shows were booked, and those were shows with big and important names instead of the usual vaudeville type of show that had been running in the two theatres.
(1378)

It also brought about a flexibility in booking so that the pictures could be booked in the proper theatres.

Then, in addition, it brought about a tremendous cut in expense. Unheard of sums had been spent for advertising by both the Orpheum and our theatre, and under the new arrangement that advertising was tremendously reduced, particularly with respect to the newspapers and radio, and also possibly outdoor billing. And all in all it was the one and only solution that kept us in business in the Twin Cities during that very bad period.

(1379)

Q. Now, did those observations that you made apply generally to the operating arrangements both with respect to the Orpheum in Minneapolis and also with respect to the Orpheum in St. Paul? A. Yes.

Q. And as a result of the arrangements have the theatres subject to the arrangements been operated profitably whereas they formerly were operated at a loss? A. It brought about an immediate improvement.

Q. Now, as a result of the operating agreement, was there an increase in admission prices? A. No.

Judge Bright: What was this operating agreement? I do not know anything about its terms other than what he has just explained here.

Q. Would you explain somewhat more fully, Mr. Friedl, the nature of the arrangement?

Mr. Wright: I think it is in evidence, if the Court please.

Judge Bright: Yes, but there are 300 exhibits in evidence and we do not even know what is in them except as you have detailed them in the brief.

Mr. Seymour: The agreement is in evidence, and I was just inquiring generally as to the background.

Judge Bright: I should like to know something about the general features of it.

Judge Goddard: I would be interested too in knowing what that agreement provided for.

(1380)

Judge Bright: We have got a blind plaintiff's case here, with 300 exhibits that we have not had a chance to look at and have not been told what is in them. Tell us something about this agreement, will you?

The Witness: This agreement was made between the Minnesota Amusement Company and the RKO Theatres in St. Paul, and between the Minnesota Amusement Company and the Singer Minneapolis Corporation in Minneapolis.

Judge Hand: What is the Singer? Is that part of RKO?

The Witness: The Singer was a company in which an individual named Mort Singer owned a certain amount of stock, and the rest was owned by the RKO people.

Under the condition prior to the development of the agreement, the RKO Theatres had the product of RKO pictures, one-half of Warner First National pictures, all of Columbia, and a selection of Universal. We had the product of MGM, Paramount, Fox and half of Warner First National. We also had United Artists. And under that condition pictures played as they were purchased. The pictures under contract to RKO would all play the Orpheum, and the pictures under contract to us would all play our theatres. It was a difficult manner of booking, because with commitments to as many as three major producers, the (1381)

Orpheum would find many pictures playing in the theatre which really did not belong there, and we had such a condition but it was not quite as aggravated.

And so under this arrangement the pictures were booked in the theatres operated by both the Orpheum and our company; and also the supervision of the theatres, the operating policies, were considered from the standpoint of the theatres as a group, and as a result of that expenses were reduced.

Q. And who actually supervised the management of the Orpheum and the other theatres? A. The Orpheum retained its identity as a Singer operation in Minneapolis and as an RKO oporation in St. Paul, but they did it in concert or in cooperation with our office and our district manager.

Judge Bright: Was there any pooling of the receipts or expenses?

The Witness: The arrangement was this: First, that all of the expenses would be paid for all of the theatres with the exception of rent and fixed charges. Over and above that the amount left was split, in Minneapolis, 28 per cent to the Orpheum, 72 per cent to Minnesota Amusement Company; and in St. Paul it was split 30 per cent to RKO and 70 per cent to Minnesota Amusement Company.

Q. How were these percentages determined? A. Sir? (1382)

Q. How were these percentages arrived at? A. Those percentages were arrived at by a calculation of figures which preceded the development of this operating agreement, which showed the return to each theatre over a period of time. I did not work out the figures, but that was the principle used.

Judge Bright: Now, did both of those circuits or those two companies own the theatres in both cities?

The Witness: Well, not all of them. In Minneapolis there is an independent operation, the Pantages. There is another one, the World Theatre; and in St. Paul there was the World, the Lyceum and the Garrick.

Q. Now, are there a number of independently-operated subsequent-run theatres in both cities? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, following the making of the operating agreement, and a result of that agreement, were the admission prices in the Orpheum and other cities raised? A. They were not at that time, but they have been raised at one or two periods since then.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Seymour, would you tell me the exhibit number that this has reference to?

Mr. Seymour: Nos. 205 and 206.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. There have been certain increases in admission prices some time after those agreements were made? A. Yes; and (1383)
they were based on business conditions generally throughout the country. It occurred about the same time everywhere that theatre admission prices increased.

Q. Now, as a result of that agreement did the theatres involved play less pictures than before? A. No, they played approximately the same number of pictures.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I object to the form of this—"as a result of that agreement." He can say what happened, but I suppose the Court is just as competent as he is to judge.

Judge Hand: Yes. That may be stricken out.

Q. Following the agreement did the theatres play less pictures than before? A. No, I believe not.

Q. They played about the same number? A. About the same number.

Q. And since that time has the quality of the stage shows which are exhibited been improved? A. Considerably.

Q. Now, following that agreement has there been any change in the playing position of exhibitors? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, leaving the subject, where are the negotiations for licensing of films in the theatres operated by Minnesota Amusement Company, conducted? A Generally in my office in Minneapolis.

Q. And do you either participate or supervise those negotiations? A. I conduct most of the negotiations.
(1384)

Q. And do you finally approve any film license agreement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you operate under master agreements from most of the distributors or under individual agreements? A. Well, both. We have master agreements with a number of companies.

Q. And you also have individual agreements for particular theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And do you license the pictures of all distributors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that include distributors who are not defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. Now, at the time you negotiate with representatives of the defendants in this case who have an interest in theatres, do you have any knowledge or information as to negotiations or film deals which those distributors are arranging or have arranged with theatres in other companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any knowledge or information as to negotiations or arrangements made for the licensing of Paramount pictures in the theatres in which those defendants have an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any knowledge or information as to the negotiations or arrangements of distributors not interested in theatres as to what negotiations or arrangements they may have with other companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. I do not.
(1385)

Q. Is there any relationship whatever between your negotiations with the representatives of distributors and any negotiations or arrangements which may be made by Paramount or the other distributors with respect to other theatres? A. No.

Q. Does the Paramount Theatre Department supply you with any information as to the negotiations on license agreements of other theatre companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. They do not.

Q. Does the distribution department of Paramount furnish you with any information as to negotiations or arrangements which it is conducting or has made with theatres in which other distributors have an interest? A. No, sir.

Judge Bright: Do you know whether Paramount licenses independent theatres in the same circuits where you operate?

The Witness: Yes, they do.

Q. Does the Paramount Theatre Department aid or assist you in connection with your negotiations with any other distributor? A. No, sir.

(1386)

Q. Do you send to the theatre department extracts or abstracts of your film contracts with other distributors? A. No, I do not. I send to Paramount a weekly report of the weekly result.

Q. Of the operation of the theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the report which Mr. Goldenson referred to when he was here, is it not? A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Does any official or employee of Paramount give you any instructions at all with respect to the film deals which you are to negotiate with other distributors? A. No.

Q. Does Paramount tell you who you shall deal with or who you shall not deal with, or as to what terms on which you should deal? A. Never.

Q. Does RKO interfere or give you any instructions with respect to the distributors whom you are to deal with or the terms upon which you are to deal? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you get from the Paramount theatre department reports as to the grosses on certain pictures in key theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you also get from time to time reports as to public reaction to certain pictures? A. Yes, I get that from New York.

Q. Those are the reports which Mr. Goldenson referred to? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is similar information, not in the same form, but (1387)
somewhat similar information, available in the trade press? A. Yes, it is.

Q. What importance, or value to you, is that information? A. Well, it enables us, first, to determine at least in some measure whether the pictures are worth what the distributor is asking for them and also enables us to book them with greater intelligence than we could did we not have such information. It gives us the reaction to certain pictures that play in the large metropolitan centers early, and on the basis of that we can buy and book with greater effectiveness.

Q. Is the film negotiation, that is, the negotiation of the film license contract with the distributor, a simple or a complicated matter? A. It is a complicated, very complicated matter.

Q. Will you tell us some of the complications that may arise? A. Well, I believe you start at the point where the distributor makes every conceivable effort to get the maximum amount of money and the best possible playing time and the greatest amount of advertising for his picture. On the other hand, I believe that the exhibitor wants to buy the pictures as economically as he possibly can. And the conflict between the two is usually a very tedious proceeding and it is very tiresome and it sometimes takes quite a long time to settle.
(1388)

Q. Does it sometimes take weeks to work out a deal? A. There have been occasions where it has taken three or four weeks and sometimes longer.

Q. Is there any difference between the relative heat and intensity of the negotiations with distributors who have an interest in theatres and those who do not have an interest in theatres? A. No, they are all tough and they are all very difficult.

Q. Are all the distributors trying to get the best playing time for their pictures they can in the theatres you manage? A. Each and every one of them, yes.

Judge Bright: What effect has that desire on the negotiations between you and the distributor?

The Witness: Well, we sometimes don't always agree with the distributor on the terms he is asking for his pictures or the time he is asking for it.

Judge Bright: Why not?

The Witness: Because he may take the position that a certain picture is entitled to preferred or extended playing time, which means that it shall play in the better theatres over a Saturday and a Sunday and we may feel that it should play at the last half of the week, and that causes considerable discussion and argument.

Judge Bright: In other words, you have a dispute with him about the merits of the picture?

(1389)

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. Does that affect the terms which he will ask you to pay and which you are willing to pay, as well as playing time? A. It is very definitely a matter of terms, I believe, in all negotiations. It is my observation that the distributor expects to get the maximum amount for all of his pictures, and it is quite necessary for the theatre operator to combat that, if he intends to stay in business.

Q. Is the final negotiation ordinarily a result of compromise of those respective views? A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Do you license the pictures of Loew, Fox, Warner and RKO for all your theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, you have them in all the theatres? A. We have them in all of the towns. The pictures that we buy, some of them play in the A Theatre, so-called, the large theatre in town; some of them play in the second theatre.

Q. But there are theatres in which you are unable to license the product of some of those distributors, is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. And in those theatres would you like to license the product of some of those distributors? A. Yes, in several instances I should.

Q. In those instances does the product go to your competitors? A. Yes, sir.

(1390)

Q. Are your competitors in some of these localities independent theatre operators? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you operate some first-run theatres and also some subsequent-run theatres? A. Yes.

Q. Who determines the admission prices which you charge in your theatres? A. Well, I believe I do.

Q. There is a provision in the license contract that you have with all distributors as to a minimum admission price? A. That is correct.

Q. Is that the price which the distributor tells you you must charge? A. No, it is—the price that is entered into the contract is in there as a matter of precedent. The prices have been generally established over a period of years. From time to time they have been increased and as that has taken place, all of the distributors have been notified, and the prices that are listed in the contracts are the established price of the theatre, and when those prices are changed, why, the distributors are notified.

Q. And the prices are established by you and your company and changed by you and your company? A. Yes.

Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture "Woodrow Wilson," and (1391)
several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibitions? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to understand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs would get the maximum price for the protection of the distributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct.

Q. And do some of the admission prices in your localities, where you are operating theatres, go down to as low as fifteen cents? A. Yes.

Q. Does it ever occur that theatres with a minimum admission price in their contracts, actually charge a somewhat higher price? A. That frequently happens, yes.

Q. Do your license agreements with distributors contain provisions for clearance? A. They do.

Q. Is that true both of first-run and also the subsequent-run showings? A. It applies almost entirely to first-run, and particularly to the A theatre operation.

Q. Is there any reference in the clearance provisions in your agreements to the admission price to be charged by the theatre over which your theatre takes clearance? A. Well, we believe——

Mr. Wright: Obviously, the agreements speak for themselves.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

A. We believe that price is one factor in clearance but it is not entirely the determining factor. There are other considerations that must be considered. For example, there must be considered the size of the theatre, the operating cost of the theatre, the capacity, the location and the ability of that theatre to deliver the maximum amount of return to the distributor and producer.
(1393)

Q. I did not make myself clear to you. Your answer applies to the theatre which gets clearance? A. That is right.

Q. What I am asking you is whether there is any reference in your clearance provisions of your license contracts with distributors as to the admission price to be charged by the theatre over which the theatre licensed has clearance. A. I am afraid I don't understand.

Q. In other words, where a first-run theatre has a clearance over a second-run theatre, do your clearance provisions of your license contracts contain a reference as to the admission price to be charged by the second-run theatre? A. No, sir, definitely not.

Q. Is the admission price to be charged by the second-run theatre a part of any understanding or agreement with the distributors? A. Between him and the distributor or—

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, that is a pure conclusion and argument. The clearance on the first-run theatre is in evidence in the form of answers to interrogatories, asking to have it set forth. I submit the argument as to the significance of those can be (1394) made by counsel.

Mr. Seymour: I am not asking for the significance. I am asking the question of fact. My first question is as to whether there is any reference to it in the agreement, and, second, is it a part of any understanding or agreement, if it is not in the agreement. Those are questions of fact.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Q. Let me be sure I make my question clear to you: Is it a part of any understanding or agreement between your company and the distributor which is licensing your theatres first-run, as to what the second-run is to charge by way of admission price? A. No.

Q. Mr. Phillips say that that question should be expanded. Where you license second-run, is there any agreement or understanding as to the admission price to be charged by the subsequent-run exhibitor? A. There are no such references in the contracts at any point.

Q. Is there any such reference in any understanding or agreement that is not embodied in the contract? A. No, sir.

Q. Is the clearance that you get from various distributors generally the same for the particular theatre that you are licensing for? A. Generally, yes.

Q. Do you negotiate clearance every time you negotiate a license contract? A. That is correct.
(1395)

Q. Is there an actual negotiation or does the clearance remain the same? A. Since clearance generally remains the same, then in such cases the usual clearance applies, but clearance is definitely a part of the negotiation at one point or another.

Q. Do you license the pictures of distributors who are not defendants in this case, like Republic, Monogram and P. R. C.? A. Yes.

Q. Do the clearances granted by those companies to the theatres in which you license amount to about the same or are they the same clearances as those granted by other distributors? A. Same clearance.

Q. Do you have situations among the theatres which you operate where independent operators play on an earlier run, pictures which you license on a run subsequent to theirs? A. Yes, that is true in the Twin Cities, where we have subsequent-run theatres and the independents and other circuit operators have subsequent run theatres, some of our theatres play ahead of the others, and some of the others play ahead of ours.

Q. Are there situations where an independent exhibitor plays product first-run which you play on subsequent-run, as in Duluth, for example? A. No, I don't believe so. There is a situation in Superior, Wisconsin, where a subsequent-run theatre plays ahead of—a subsequent-run independent theatre plays ahead of a subsequent-run downtown theatre operated by us.

Q. Where you play after an independent exhibitor, on whatever run you do play on, does the independent theatre take clearance over your theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us an example of that? How about St. Louis Park in Minneapolis? A. Well, the Minneapolis clearance is set on the basis of the picture playing in the Uptown Theatre 28 days after the close of its engagement in the original downtown theatre. I mean by that, that if a picture goes into Radio City and plays two weeks, 28 days after that two weeks it goes into the Uptown, even though it may be moved from Radio City to another theatre. Then the Uptown holds clearance of 14 days over St. Louis Park; St. Louis Park in turn holds clearance of a certain number of days over subsequent theatres which follow it; and so it moves on down the line, certain theatres have clearance over others, ours as well as the independents.

Q. In that situation there are some independents that hold clearance over your theatres? A. Yes.

Q. And there are also situations in which you take clearance over independent theatres? A. That is correct.

Q. Does the length of the clearance depend upon whether (1397) the theatre having clearance is an independent theatre or one of your theatres? A. No, it has nothing whatever to do with whether it is a circuit theatre or an independent theatre.

Q. It is a question of the area, really, rather than—— A. Question of area, and the different factors that enter into it, and the ability of distributors to provide prints, because that is sometimes a very difficult problem where an area as large as Twin Cities subsequent-run area, is.

Judge Goddard: You say that there are independent theatres who have clearance prior to yours?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Goddard: Is St. Louis one of them?

The Witness: St. Louis Park theatre. That is an independent operation.

Judge Goddard: Do you recall any other theatre, independent theatres, that have prior clearance to yours?

The Witness: Well, as the pictures play in the various clearance practice, the theatres like the Avalon, the Boulevard, the Nile, I believe, play ahead of our Nokomis Theatre and our Loring Theatre. Without consulting the record I can't tell you exactly how those things fit in, but the situation is that certain independent theatres play ahead of our theatres, and our theatres in many cases play ahead of the independents. In the case of the Uptown, which is first suburban run in Minneapolis, that plays first, and that has clearance over St. Louis Park, an independent operation, and that in turn has clearance over the others, both independent and ours.

Judge Bright: Those are subsequent-run theatres?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Goddard: But you did refer to some first-run theatres, independent, which had prior clearance, did you not?

The Witness: No, I don't believe so.

(1399)

Q. There are several cities, like Duluth, where there is an independent first-run theatre? A. That is correct.

Q. Do you have subsequent-run theatres there? A. Yes, we have one subsequent-run house. I see; I understand what you mean. In those cases, yes, that is so, they have clearance over the theatres where we run subsequent-run.

Q. Let us see about that and make it clear. In Duluth there is a first-run independently-operated theatre? A. That is correct.

Q. And what is the product that that theatre plays first-run? A. That theatre plays the product of RKO and Columbia first-run.

Q. Do you play those products or some of them subsequent-run in Duluth? A. That is correct. We play them in the Strand Theatre.

Q. Does the theatre, that independent theatre which plays them first-run, take clearance over your Strand? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you in your first-run theatre, on the product played second-run, take a similar clearance over whatever second-run theatres there are? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that happen elsewhere? A. Yes, that condition exists in Superior, Wisconsin. It exists also in Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

(1399a)

Q. In Sioux Falls, South Dakota, is there an independent operator playing RKO product? A. There is an independent operator playing RKO product, Columbia product and Universal product, first-run.

Q. Do you play some of that product second-run? A. We play it in all theatres, Sioux Falls, second-run, and this house has clearance over us.

Q. Does your first-run house, on that product it plays, take the same clearance over the second-run which plays that product? A. Precisely same clearance.

Q. So, generally speaking, whether it is first-run, second-run or later run, independents take the same clearance over the later runs as theatres affiliated with Minnesota Amusement Company, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. There is no difference in clearance based upon the fact of affiliation? A. That is right, no difference at all.

Q. From your general experience in the business, elsewhere in the United States, is that also true? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does your company spend a substantial amount on advertising? A. We spend approximately $400,000 a year on advertising.

Q. Generally speaking, does the amount spent for advertising first-run prove to be more substantial than the amount spent on later runs? A. The majority of the money spent is confined to the first-run engagements, not only in the Twin Cities, but in the out-of-town situations.

Q. Why is it that so much more is spent on first-run? A. Well, the first-run engagement is, of course, in the theatre—is presented in the theatre that is the most expensive to operate. It pays the highest possible film rental and it reaches the greatest number of people. Therefore, the selling is geared to the first-run on the theory that after it has been sold to the public for the first-run, it is then presold for all subsequent-runs, and it requires nothing more than an announcement in the subsequent-runs to refresh the minds of the public that this picture is coming back.

Q. Where your company has first-run theatres, would you say generally that they are the best or comparable to the best theatres in those localities? A. In all of our situations our theatres are not only the largest in practically every city but they are by far the best theatres. They are well operated. They are operated in accordance with all the local laws and regulations and the regulations of the State. They are air conditioned, and we make it a very definite policy to keep our theatres, to use the phrase that we use, as clean as a battleship, and that is true up and down the line in the theatres that we operate.
(1401)

Q. Do you make constant improvements in your theatres? A. We make as many improvements as are necessary. We try to carry out a policy of improvements that at all times is in the interest of the public, not only from the standpoint of comfort, but from the standpoint of safety.

Q. In Minnesota and Wisconsin and North Dakota, are there a number of circuits or theatres which are independently operated? A. There are quite few independent circuits. The Bennie Berger Circuit, I believe they operate, I would say, from 12 to 15 theatres; the Franklin Amusement Company, I should say, operates 16 or 18 theatres; Welworth Amusement Company, I believe they operate 15 or 16; the Baehr Circuit is an important operation—I imagine they have probably 18 theatres in probably 8 or 9 towns. They are fine properties.

Q. Do the theatres of some of those circuits operate in some of the localities where your company has theatres? A. Well, that is true. In the case of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, Welworth operates the opposition theatre.

Mr. Seymour: Any questions from the defendants?

Cross-Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Friedl, you license the Twentieth Century-Fox product first-run in Minneapolis and St. Paul? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Duluth? A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom do you negotiate? A. I negotiate with (1402)

Moe Levy, the district manager of Twentieth Century-Fox in Minneapolis.

Q. Where do you negotiate? A. Generally in my office.

Q. In Minneapolis? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of those negotiations, has Mr. Levy ever refused to license you Twentieth Century-Fox product unless the Paramount Distributing Company should license that product to theatres operated by National Theatres? A. Never.

Q. Have you ever refused to license Twentieth Century-Fox pictures unless Twentieth Century-Fox—unless National Theatres would buy Paramount pictures in some of its theatres? A. I have not.

Q. Was the subject ever discussed? A. Never to my knowledge.

Q. You operate in Minneapolis a number of first run theatres, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It appears from the evidence already in this case that during the 1943-44 season you played the picture "Holy Matrimony" in the Century Theatre? A. That is right.

Q. Why was it booked to that theatre? A. Well, as I recall the circumstances, we felt that the Century, because of its location and background, was the proper theatre in which to play the picture.

Q. It appears from the evidence that the picture "Heaven
(1403)
Can Wait" played in the State Theatre first and then was moved over to the Century. Why was that picture so booked? A. What was the picture?

Q. "Heaven Can Wait." A. "Heaven Can Wait," as I recall, was previewed in the State Theatre and at a later date the picture was booked in that theatre and because of the business it did in its first week, it was moved to the Century for a second week.

Q. It appears that the picture "Bombers Moon" was played in the World Theatre. That is a much smaller theatre, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the reason for that? A. I don't recall the particular reason. I don't believe that I ever saw "Bombers Moon", and I believe it was handled by our booking department and the Fox office and it was played in the World Theatre.

Q. It was not considered one of the top grossing pictures? A. No, it was not.

Q. It appears that the picture "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn" was played first in Radio City for a week and then moved over for a week to the State Theatre and then for a week at the Century Theatre. Why was that booking made? A. Because of the size of the picture, its importance, and the business that it did. It played one week in Radio City and we felt that the picture was of such importance and was doing such an outstanding business that we would establish a new precedent, which we did, by moving it to the State Theatre. That puts the picture in a better location and it enjoyed a fine week at the State, so we moved it to the Century for an additional week.

(1404)

Q. Is the distributor, Twentieth Century-Fox, benefitted by the fact that you have a number of theatres in Minneapolis with different seating capacities? A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Not all the Twentieth Century-Fox pictures are suitable for exhibition in the Radio City Theatre? A. No, they are not all suitable.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright, they all yield to you, I believe.

Do you want this contract, by the way?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I want a chance to look at it.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Friedl, this agreement that you had with RKO in St. Paul and Minneapolis, is that still in effect? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The pooling operation?

Mr. Seymour: I object to the characterization of it.

Q. That agreement that you have with them is what is known in the trade as a first-run theatre pool, is it not? A.
(1405)
Well, we have always termed it an operating agreement.

Q. Can you answer the question? A. I believe it has been so referred to, yes.

Q. The agreement covered at the time it was made, and still covers, all of the first-run theatres in those two towns, isn't that right? A. That is correct.

Q. You were referring to these situations where you say you follow independents in, I believe, Superior and Duluth. I call your attention specifically to Duluth, where you say there is an independent theatre that has RKO and Columbia Pictures first-run. Do you have a first-run theatre there, too? A. Yes, we have several first-run theatres.

Q. How many? A. We have the North Shore and the Garrick, they are both first-run, and the Lyric, which is a move-over theatre.

Q. And you play the product of all the other distributors first-run and on move-overs in those three theatres of yours? A. We do.

Q. Then you say you also operate a subsequent-run theatre? A. That is correct, the Strand.

Q. The Strand; and is there any independent subsequent-run in the town? A. Any independent subsequent-run?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, there are either three or four subsequent-run theatres in Duluth.

(1406)

Q. When does this subsequent-run of yours play with reference to first-run? A. It plays, I believe, 45 days after first-run I am not absolutely sure of that.

Q. And it plays, does it not, all of the product that you play first-run there and on move-overs? A. Most of it, yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, it plays almost none of the product that plays first-run at the independent theatre, isn't that right? A. Well, I believe from time to time we play some pictures from the Granada Theatre, but that policy in Duluth has been changed from time to time because we have been in trouble in the Strand, and, if I might use the expression, we have kicked the policy around a little bit, and over a period of time, why, we have done one thing for a while and then changed, and that would naturally affect the product.

Q. As a matter of fact, you know very well, don't you, that you don't play any regular second-run on RKO or Columbia in that subsequent-run house in Duluth and have never have—— A. Well,——

Q. (Continuing) ——while the independent has had the first-run, isn't that right? A. I don't believe it is.

Q. Do you know what the facts are? A. No, I don't. I don't know unless I check very carefully, but it seems to me that there have been occasions where we have played repeat (1407) runs on the Granada from RKO and also Columbia.

Q. Do you have any knowledge as to what the clearance provisions are in the contracts that the first-run theatre has there with reference to subsequent showings in any other theatres in Duluth? A. Which theatre?

Q. The independent opposition first-run, the one that plays RKO and Columbia. Do you know? A. I presume they have the same clearance that we do.

Q. I say, do you know? A. No, I do not know.

Q. Is your testimony the same with respect to Superior, that is, do you know what product the first-run in Superior has, the independent? A. Yes.

Q. What are those? A. They have Columbia and RKO.

Q. And you have all the rest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many first-run theatres do you have there? A. We have two.

Q. Then you say you also operate a subsequent-run theatre in Superior? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is an independent subsequent-run? A. That is correct.

Q. As a matter of fact, you don't play there any regular subsequent-run of the product that plays the independent house first-run, do you? A. No, I don't suppose we play so much—play those pictures.

Q. Maybe an occasional picture? A. The pictures that (1408)
are played in the East Superior theatre play ahead of the Capitol Theatre—the Princess Theatre, rather, downtown, and the Princess is our subsequent-run.

Q. What is the name of the independent first-run? A. The Beacon Theatre.

Q. Do you know what the clearance provisions are in the first-run contracts that the Beacon Theatre makes? A. As I said in the case of Duluth, I presume it is practically the same clearance that we have, but I don't know. I have never seen their contract.

Judge Bright: When you play a picture subsequent-run in your theatre, that has been played first-run in an independent, aren't you informed of the clearance provision in the first-run theatre?

The Witness: The clearance is pretty well established and it is pretty definitely followed in all those cases, and we do not pay a great deal of attention to what the other fellow's clearance is. We assume it is on the same basis as ours, because, in the case of the large cities, they couldn't very well have a certain length of clearance in one theatre and a different clearance in the other, because they have the problem of serving the subsequent-run theatres, and a great deal of confusion would result if the clearances were not the same in all instances.

(1409)

Q. Of course, I take it, Mr. Friedl, when you play a regular subsequent run of pictures you know from the times at which they are made available approximately what the clearance is, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. But where you just pick up a picture occasionally, or spot book, you would not know what, of any, regular clearance arrangements had been made by that distributor with the first-run theatre you were following, is that correct? A. That is correct, but I imagine if the distributor had any clearance existing which would be affected by our purchase of that particular picture, he would advise us of it.

Q. Now, in the situation in Minneapolis, St. Louis Park, is that a suburb of Minneapolis or St. Paul? A. Minneapolis.

Q. And then you say after the picture has finished the first-run or the first engagement in a first-run theatre, then 28 days later they go into your Uptown? A. Yes.

Q. And that is true even though it may be moved over two or three times, is that right? A. No, that is not right. The clearance dates from the conclusion of the engagement in the first theatre. If it closes on a Thursday night in Radio City, 28 days from that time it opens in the Uptown regardless of where it may be carried over.

(1410)

Q. Yes, that is what I understood the situation was. So that no matter how many times they may be moved over, it still goes into your Uptown 28 days after the conclusion of the first engagement? A. That is right.

By Judge Bright:

Q. Is that generally so in all of the theatres in your circuit? A. Well, this is the only situation that I can think of that is set up just exactly in that way. In St. Paul the situation is different. It goes into a first suburban run 49 days after the close of the engagement down there.

Q. I mean the second showing, it starts to date from the end of the original showing? A. That is correct.

Q. And the move-overs have nothing to do with extending the period of clearance? A. That is correct in our situation. I do not know how that works elsewhere in the country, but that is the way it is handled in our territory.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Then after the picture plays at the Uptown you say it has 14 days over an independent in St. Louis Park? A. That is what the clearance calls for.

Q. Do you have any theatres in St. Louis Park? A. No.

Q. And the other situations that you referred to where you said there were some independents that played ahead of (1411)
your theatres,—now, were you referring to situations where there is open booking, where there is no clearance one over another; one may play first and then the other; or were you referring to definite clearance? A. Well, the clearance that is set up covers the city, and in that particular instance St. Louis Park has clearance over all of the——

Q. I am not referring to St. Louis Park; I am referring to the other situations you referred to on your direct testimony. You just named several theatres as sometimes playing pictures ahead of some theatres of yours. I am asking you if you were referring to situations where open booking prevailed or where there was actual clearance? A. Well, there is actual clearance because the theatres play the pictures on a given clearance break, and regardless of where they are located they have clearance over other theatres that follow them.

Q. Well, let me clear it up specifically: What were these other theatres that you named specifically as playing with or ahead of theatres which you operated in Minneapolis? A. Well, I will have to start with St. Louis Park because the clearance is dated from St. Louis Park.

Q. I say, apart from St. Louis Park. A. Well, the Nile Theatre, the Boulevard Theatre, the Edina Theatre played ahead of our operations. The Nokomis and the Loring, they also play ahead of a lot of other theatres.

Q. Where are those theatres that you named? A. Where are they? They are subsequent-run theatres in Minneapolis.

Q. Are they in one section or several sections? A. They are in several sections.

Q. Are the theatres that you operate that they play ahead of in the same section or different sections? A. One of them is in the same section and one of them is not.

Q. Which is the one that is in the same section as the theatres you say play ahead? A. The Nokomis.

Q. And what is the independent theatre or theatres that is in the same section there? A. The Nile.

Q. And you say the Nile takes clearance over the Nokomis? A. That is right.

Q. And do you know how much that is? A. No, offhand I don't know.

Q. Are you sure that there is any actual clearance there as distinguished from just—— A. I don't know that it is written clearance, but on the basis of the existing clearance that is the way it works out.

Q. You know that they do play some pictures ahead of your Nile, is that right? A. They play them all ahead of the Nile.

Q. And what the contract provisions are that determine that, you don't know, is that right? A. I don't know anything about the contract provisions of the Nile Theatre's negotiations except that I do know that a clearance is set up in the town and that is the way it works.
(1413)

Q. How far down is that run? A. Which run?

Q. That Nile run. A. I think it is 56 days after downtown, it may be dated from the Uptown. It would then be 38-48—it would be 24 days after the Uptown.

Q. Now, in this operating agreement that you referred to with respect to Minneapolis—I believe that is in evidence here as Exhibit 206—there is a reference to an operating committee consisting of yourself and a Mr. Ludwig representing Minnesota, and a Mr. Singer and Mr. Ames, representing Singer Amusement. Who is Mr. Ludwig? A. Mr. Ludwig was at one time my associate in the operation of the Minnesota Amusement Company theatres, and he left our employ some time back in 1936 or 1937.

Q. He was an employee of Minnesota Amusement Company at the time this was made? A. That is correct.

Q. And Mr. Morgan Ames: who is he? A. Morgan Ames was the general manager of the theatres operated by Mort Singer.

Q. Now, the agreement, I note, says at page 3—this is in the form of a letter from Singer, Minneapolis, to you, do you recall that? The form of the original agreement was a letter from Singer, Minneapolis, to Minnesota Amusement Company?. A. Yes.
(1414)

Q. And do you recall that at page 3 it says:

> "Both you and the undersigned shall submit to each other at this time complete information as to all motion picture product which has been contracted for exhibition in the aforesaid theatres during the 1936-1937 playing season ending August 31, 1937, and the terms and conditions of all agreements with respect to the same."

Do you recall that? A. Yes.

Q. That was done, of course? A. Yes, it was.

Q. And do you also recall this provision that says:

> "The product of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. shall be acquired through the undersigned for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms as such product shall be acquired by the companies affiliated with RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., subject, however, in the case of each specific commitment to the approval of the operating committee."

Do you recall that provision? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was carried out? A. That was carried out for a brief period of time; and that reference was apparently put in there so that we would be protected and not be burdened with unreasonable film costs for RKO pictures. (1415)

Shortly after the operating agreement was set up, however, RKO requested that we take over the negotiation for all film, including that which they had previously contracted for as an individual situation.

Q. Well, you recall the next sentence there says:

"The product of Paramount Pictures, Inc. shall be acquired through you for use in the aforesaid theatres on the same terms that such product shall be acquired by companies affiliated through so-called partnership deals with Paramount Pictures."

Do you recall that provision? A. Yes.

Q. And that, I take it, was carried out? A. Just as the other was for our protection, that was for the protection of RKO.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, when I can locate the clearance agreements that are in evidence which relate to his theatres there will be some further cross-examination. I do not know whether we can recess now, or perhaps if we adjourned for lunch and came back earlier there would not be any loss of time.

Judge Hand: Have you got those papers?

Mr. Wright: They can be gotten together. They are in evidence.

Judge Bright: A non-competitive area?

Judge Hand: What are the exhibit numbers, 205 and 206?

Mr. Wright: Oh, these agreements? I have these (1416)
here. I was referring to answers to interrogatories which were also in evidence which set forth——

Mr. Seymour: If it would equally suit your Honors and Government counsel, if we could recess for a few minutes it would suit us better. Our problem is that we have great difficulty getting luncheon, and if we recess early and have to come back early, I am afraid we would be very much handicapped on our side of the table. So if your Honors would take a brief recess until Mr. Wright finds it, it would suit our convenience.

Mr. Wright: I think this could have been avoided were we told within a reasonable time that the witness would be called.

Mr. Seymour: Well, I only decided this morning that he would be a witness, Mr. Wright.

Judge Hand: All right. We shall take a short recess, five minutes.

(Short recess.)

Mr. Wright: Shall I proceed?

Judge Hand: Yes.

By Mr. Wright:

Q. Mr. Friedl, I call your attention to the clearance agreement entered into between your company and Loew's, Inc. with reference to certain pictures distributed during the 1943-44 season, which is in evidence here, in answer to an (1417)
interrogatory——

Mr. Seymour: What is the exhibit number, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: This is Exhibit 57-24; and the schedule of clearance I am referring to appears in typewriting on the second page.

Q. (Continuing) Now, this schedule of theatres up at the left hand there, those are your first-run theatres in Duluth? A. That is correct.

Q. Norshor and Garrick? A. Yes.

Q. And then that notation "Cloquet, Two Harbors" at the right of the phrase "14 days over," that refers to a couple of towns rather than to a specific theatre? A. Yes.

Q. And then the notation "When 25 cents clearance to be increased when price is less." Now, that means, does it not, that your theatres in Duluth take 14 days over them if they charge 25 cents admission price, is that right? A. Yes, I believe that this——

Q. A minimum price of 25 cents? A. Yes. I believe, however, that this was set up at the suggestion of the distributor.

Q. I am not asking you at whose suggestion it was set up; I am merely trying to find out what the agreement is. A. There it is.

(1418)

Q. There is no question, is there, in your mind but what if those theatres in Cloquet and Two Harbors charged less than 25 cents, then your clearance is automatically increased over them; is that right? A. That is right.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Friedl, would you please talk up.

The Witness: Yes, that is correct.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, the same criticism was made of me, that when I am so close to the witness we get confidential; and the same situation exists when you get too close to him.

Mr. Wright: It is a little hard for me to question him without having him look at the exhibit. That is the difficulty. But I shall try to speak up.

Q. Now, I notice over there, further on on the list, you have a statement "56 days over," and then the names Dorick, Star, West, with a notation "When 25 cents." Those are subsequent-run independent theatres in Duluth are they not? A. Yes.

Q. And the phrase "When 25 cents" means, does it not, that they are only entitled to play within 56 days of your first run when they charge an admission of at least 25 cents? A. That is correct, in these particular instances.

Q. And then the following phrases there which state, "70 days over" those same theatres "when 20 cents" and "112 (1419) days over" over those same theatres "when 15 cents", mean, do they do, that if they charge those lower prices of 20 or 15 cents they cannot then play prior to either 70 days after first-run or 112 days, as the case may be? A. That is right.

Judge Bright: Are they the same named theatres, on those three?

Mr. Wright: Yes, there is a schedule of the three prices and three clearances for those three theatres.

Q. Now, could you tell me the theatres on the schedule there that are operated by you other than "Norshor and Garrick"? A. The Lyric?

Q. The Lyric? What else? A. Well, we operate in Superior.

Judge Bright: Keep your voice up, Mr. Friedl.

The Witness: We operate in Superior, and we operate the Strand.

Q. So that the four theatres that you operate are the Norshor, Garrick, Lyric and Strand, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. And the Lyric is what, the move-over house that you are referring to? A. Yes.

Q. That has the same clearance over subsequent-runs as the Norshor or Garrick? A. Yes.

Q. 35 days? A. Yes.

(1420)

Q. Then the Strand— A. You see, Mr. Wright, there are occasions where the Lyric instead of playing a carry-over picture will play a first-run picture, and this clearance is set up so that is taken into consideration when that happens.

Q. Now, the Lyric, as I read the schedule there, follows the first-run— A. No.

Q. —the Strand, rather, follows first-run by 49 days, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And the earliest independent, however, which may play the picture follows by 56 days, does it not? A. That is correct.

Q. So the pictures, then, are played at all of your four theatres before they are permitted to be played in any of the independent subsequent-runs; that is, the pictures which you play in those theatres? A. That is correct. The Strand is a downtown theatre, and all of the factors of clearance indicate the soundness of that 56-day break.

Mr. Wright: I think that is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. Mr. Wright has directed your attention to what appear to be a few exceptions in and around Duluth to your testimony that your clearance contracts did not contain a reference to admission price of the subsequent-run. Now, do you know whether there are any other exceptions? A. I know of no others. In some cases our clearance with Metro pictures differs from the clearance with other companies, and in this particular instance the admission price is mentioned, I believe, for the reason that under difficult competitive conditions price-cutting has resulted in the past, and a lot of the tricks that have been used by smaller theatres have been inaugurated, and I believe that the distributor was principally concerned in getting this in so that the situation just did not get out of hand so far as the subsequent-run theatres were concerned.

(1421)

Q. So far as you know does that apply only to Metro in that area? A. To the best of my knowledge it does. I do not believe it is in the other—in the setup for clearance with the other companies.

Q. Now, you were asked by Mr. Wright with respect to the availability following a move-over in the Twin Cities; and if I understood you correctly, you said that the picture was available subsequent-run dating from the conclusion of the original engagement rather than the move-over, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, does that availability apply both to theatres operated subsequent-run by Minnesota Amusement and to theatres operated by independent operators? A. Yes, it does.

Q. So that the availability in connection with pictures which are moved over into other theatres of Minnesota Amusement dates from the conclusion of the first-run of the engagement as to all subsequent-run theatres, whether affiliated or not, is that right? A. That is correct, yes.
(1422)

Q. Now, I think you said something about the need for booking by theatres on an availability which is the same for various distributors; and I wish you would explain that to us. Is it the desire of the exhibitor, and is it important from the point of view of the operation of his business to be able to book pictures of all distributors upon a common or similar availability? A. Yes, it is. It is quite necessary. The clearance calls for the pictures to break at a certain date for the different theatres in the Twin Cities area, and this——

Q. When you say "break", do you mean that makes them available? A. It is important—they become available on the date set up in the clearance—and it is important that the exhibitor play the pictures on the date, the date of the clearance break, for his own benefit; and it is vitally important from the distributor's standpoint because he has a limited number of prints, and he has got to clear those prints and book them on the dates that are set up in the clearance so that he can use them elsewhere and get the utmost out of the prints in the various situations.

Q. Now, there is a booker that operates for the exhibitor, is there? A. Well, the distributor maintains or has a booking department.

Q. That is in the distributor's own exchange? A. That is in the distributor's own exchange.

Q. And each distributor maintains a separate exchange? A. That is correct; and the manner in which they book the pictures—the independent theatres see the booker in each film exchange and set the dates on which these pictures are going to play and have those dates confirmed to them. In our case our booking department handles it for all of the theatres which we operate, but the confirmation comes from the booker in the film exchange.

Q. Now, is there any difference in the interest of the exhibitor whether he is affiliated or not in having the pictures of different distributors available to him at the same time or on the same availability date? A. Well, those pictures become available on the date of the setup in the clearance, and they become available not only for the affiliated theatres for all of the other theatres who happen to be in that particular bracket.

Q. If an exhibitor had different availabilities on the pictures of different distributors, would that create any problems in the operation of his theatre? A. It would create a very difficult problem in the distribution of pictures. If (1424)
clearance was set up on anything but an organized basis, and dates would be breaking at different times for different theatres, it would be an almost impossible situation from the standpoint of the distributors to distribute prints.

Q. How about the exhibitor? Would it create problems for him? A. Well, the exhibitor is naturally interested in adhering strictly to the clearance break that he gets. Because if he does not, if he falls behind his competition are playing ahead of him; so he has the very vital interest in it.

Q. When you say "clearance set up on an organized basis," do you mean simply the similarity of clearance? A. That is right, the clearance in the Twin Cities situations is the same with all distributing companies, and it has got to be that way in order for the pictures to flow properly.

Q. So far as you know does that result from any agreement or understanding among the distributors?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, he has been offered here as a witness who knows nothing about what the distributors do for each other. I do not see how this advances the case.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

(1425)

A. Well, the clearance, so far as we are concerned, is negotiated individually with each distributor. This clearance, however, is a pattern that has developed over a period of years. It is discussed and it is agreed, and sometimes changes come about, but it is, after all, the development of an arrangement that has existed for some time. It is based on precedent more than anything else.

Q. When you say it is discussed and agreed, are you talking about the operation of your company? A. Yes.

Q. And with whom is it discussed and agreed? A. With each individual distributor.

Q. Now, Mr. Wright asked you about some provisions in the agreement relating to the operation of the Orpheum theatres, and the provisions were those which dealt with the price of RKO pictures and the price of Paramount pictures. Now I should like to ask you this: In negotiating with RKO for RKO pictures, since the date of that agreement have you received any information as to the terms on which RKO pictures are played in other theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you ask RKO for that information? A. No, sir. Under this operating agreement and operating committee, it requires the approval of each party for any film negotiations conducted by the other. Originally when it was set up (1426)

RKO negotiated for the pictures of RKO, Columbia, Universal, and half of Warner's, and we negotiated for the balance of the pictures. Each at that time would submit the terms to the other. They would submit them to me and I would submit them to them for approval; and then later they requested that we take over the entire booking; and the only thing that happens there, when the deal is made I submit to them for their approval the terms agreed upon for the various pictures.

Q. And whom do you submit to, to the local theatre man? A. No, I submit it to the present members of the operating committee. Those which Mr. Wright read from the original agreement are different now.

Q. Now, with respect to the licensing of Paramount pictures, do you obtain any information or knowledge as to the terms on which Paramount pictures are licensed in RKO theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. So that as a practical matter each of those film deals is negotiated on its own merits for your theatres or the theatres involved without regard to what is being done in any other operating company, is that right? A. That is absolutely so.

Mr. Wright: Pure argument, if the Court please.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Friedl, you have referred to the fact that the limited number of prints had some (1427) relation to clearance; but it has no relation, has it, or, if it has any, it is little in connection with the length of the clearance, because I assume that during that clearance period the print is not used by anyone?

The Witness: Well, perhaps I can explain to you what happens in the Minneapolis area: When a picture is released and plays in the first-run downtown, and from the close of that period until 28 days later the prints are then booked by the distributor into some of the surrounding towns; and then when the surrounding towns have played those pictures during that 28-day period the prints then come back to Minneapolis where they are used for the various subsequent-run.

Judge Goddard: But during this 28 days the print is not used by anyone, is it?

The Witness: Yes, it is booked by the distributor to some of the theatres in the out-of-town situations.

Judge Bright: Some other area?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Goddard: Some other area?

The Witness: Yes.

The Witness: I believe so; but I do not know to what extent or how far they go with those prints, but I do know they play them out of town and then bring them back.

(1428)

Judge Goddard: Beyond the limits of that area?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Goddard: Thank you.

By Mr. Seymour:

Q. That is, they are not played in the area to which clearance applies? A. No, sir, they are not; they are played outside of that area.

Q. But the prints are not idle during that period? A. No, they are not.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. They are played first-run in the other Minnesota and North Dakota and South Dakota towns during those 28 days? A. That is correct.

Q. Like Rochester, for example? A. Possibly; could be.

Mr. Caskey: That is all.

Mr. Seymour: Any further questions, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes, one or two.

Recross Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. As to the print supply, of course, you exchange prints even between one exchange and another in order to fill certain dates. That is, you may bring in prints from some other area? A. That has happened a number of times where there is a shortage of prints, they borrow prints from other distributing branches.

Q. Now, this history of that clearance setup in Minneapolis, which I believe you said was uniform—do you recall that at one time there you had a six months clearance over every subsequent-run theatre there that charged 10 cents admission, didn't you? A. I believe there was some such arrangement. I don't recall distinctly what it was.

(1429)

Q. And do you remember when it was that the clearance over the 25-cent theatres in Minneapolis was moved up from 28 to 56 days? A. No, I don't recall that.

Q. Well, you know it did happen? A. I don't remember that it happened.

Q. It happened before you went there—when was it that you went out there? A. In 1932.

Q. 1932? A. Yes. I don't recall what clearance prevailed when all of the subsequent-run theatres were charging 10 cents, but it was a situation that had no parallel anywhere in America, where all of the subsequent-run independent theatres charged 10 cents admission for pictures that were playing in first-runs for 40 and 50 cents.

Q. In any event, you don't have that 10-cent problem now, is that right? A. No.

Mr. Davis: I did not hear that last question.

(Last question and answer read.)

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Seymour: I have another witness. Would your Honors like to start with him now or would you like to recess?

Judge Hand: We will adjourn to 2.10.

(Recess to 2.10 p. m.)

(1430)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Seymour: If the Court please, I now have a copy of each of the Paramount exhibits for each member of the Court—I did not have them available the other day—and I would be glad to hand them to the clerk to distribute them to your Honors.

EDWARD C. BEATTY, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Paramount, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Seymour:

Q. What are your present business connections? A. I am president and treasurer of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. and Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company.

Q. Where are your headquarters? A. Detroit.

Q. How long have you been connected with those companies? A. Since 1927.

Q. When did you first have any connection with the motion picture industry? A. 1910.

Q. Between 1910 and your connection with these companies would you describe generally your experience in the business. A. In 1910 I started in small theatres, doing most everything around a theatre, serving in the capacity of treasurer, also doorkeeper and other odd jobs, and with the exception of one year I continued in that position until 1913, at which time I moved to Michigan, Saginaw, Michigan, and acted as assistant manager in Saginaw; then moved to Bay City for a year or so, and back to Saginaw. I then moved to Battle Creek in the general offices of the company then running those theatres.

(1431)

Judge Goddard: A little louder, please.

Q. When was it you first became connected with the general office of the Butterfield Circuit? A. 1915.

Q. You remained with that circuit until the organization of the present companies in 1927? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the Butterfield Circuit operating a number of theatres in 1927? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were those theatres which Mr. Butterfield, or the Butterfield Circuit, had built or acquired prior to 1927? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they include a number of vaudeville theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they include some legitimate theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those theatres gradually or eventually converted for the primary purpose of motion picture exhibition? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the vaudeville theatres, did the Keith vaudeville play? A. Yes, sir, the Western office of Keith Vaudeville. (1432)

Q. In 1927 the new company was formed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the name of that company? A. W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.

Q. That is the company of which you are still president, of which you are now president? A. Yes.

Q. When did you become president? A. 1936.

Q. That company operates theatres in Michigan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In addition to the theatres which it has a complete interest in, does it also operate some theatres where there are other stockholders having an interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those other stockholders persons unconnected with Butterfield or with any distributor of motion pictures? A. Yes.

Q. Was there another Butterfield Company formed in 1928? A. Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company.

Q. You are president of that company as well? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that company also operate theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it have an interest in a theatre in which there are other stockholders? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Unconnected with the Butterfield interests or any distributor? A. That is right.

Q. When did Paramount first acquire an interest in W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc? A. January 1, 1927.

(1433)

Q. What was the extent of the interest which it acquired? A. 25 per cent.

Q. Does it still have that interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At or about the same time did B. F. Keith acquire an interest in that company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the extent of its interest? A. 10 per cent.

Q. Is that interest still retained? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time was Mr. Butterfield friendly with the Keith interests? A. Very friendly.

Q. They were the same interests that had supplied his vaudeville acts? A. Yes.

(1434)

Q. Now, who owns the other 65 per cent of the W. S. Butterfield Theatres? A. Mr. Butterfield had a company called the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises Company, operating the theatres prior to the formation of the W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. They own about 60 per cent, and 5 per cent is owned by various small stockholders connected with the organization.

Q. As to Bijou Theatrical Enterprises and the other small stockholders that you referred to, they are wholly unconnected with any distributor, is that right? A. That is right, yes, sir.

Q. And are you one of the stockholders? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Paramount acquire an interest in Butterfield-Michigan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what was the extent of that interest? A. 33⅓ per cent.

Q. And did B. F. Keith also acquire an interest in Butterfield-Michigan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the extent of that interest? A. 33⅓ per cent.

Q. And who owns the remaining interest in Butterfield-Michigan? A. Bijou Theatrical Enterprises Company.

Mr. Wright: Did he give the dates when those were acquired?

Q. Were those interests acquired in 1928? A. Yes, sir. (1435)

Now, dealing with Butterfield Theatres, Inc., W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., what representation does Paramount have on its board of directors? A. Two members of the board.

Q. Out of how many? A. Six.

Q. And has it had that same amount of representation since the beginning? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what representation, if any, does the Keith interest have on this board? A. One member.

Q. Now dealing with Butterfield-Michigan, what representation does Paramount have on the board? A. Two members.

Q. And what representation does Keith have? A. One member.

Q. So that in both companies the remaining stock interests have 50 per cent of the board? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has that been so since the beginning of those corporations? A. It has.

Q. Who manages and operates the affairs of the companies? A. I do.

Q. Who determines the operating policies of the companies? A. I do.

Q. Does that include determination as to the film licenses which are to be obtained and the terms on which they are to be obtained from the various distributors? A. Yes, sir.

(1436)

Q. Does Paramount interfere in any way with your decisions in that regard? A. No, sir.

Q. Does Keith or RKO interfere in any way with your decisions? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you play Paramount pictures in all the theatres? A. In all the towns but not in all the theatres.

Q. Do you play RKO pictures in all the theatres? A. I play RKO in all the towns but not in all the theatres.

Q. Now do you license the pictures of other distributors for the theatres under your supervision? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you license the pictures of all the distributors? A. Practically all of them, yes.

Q. Do you license the pictures of the distributors who are defendants in this suit? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you also license the pictures of distributors who are not defendants in this suit? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you license, for example, the pictures of Republic? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Monogram? A. Yes, sir.

Q. P.R.C.? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are the negotiations for the licensing of pictures of these distributors conducted? That is, all the distributors? A. The Detroit office.

Q. And are they conducted by you or under your supervision? A. Yes, sir.

(1437)

Mr. Davis: Where did he say they were conducted?

Mr. Seymour: Detroit.

Q. And is that at the office of the Butterfield Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you receive any instructions from Paramount or RKO as to what distributors you are to deal with? A. No, sir.

Q. Or as to the terms on which you are to license pictures? A. No, sir.

Q. Or as to the pictures you are to license? A. No.

Q. Do you receive from Paramount or anyone else any information as to the film deals it is negotiating or has arranged with the theatres in which any distributor has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you receive any information as to what film deals are negotiated or arranged between any distributor and any other theatres in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Or do you receive any information as to negotiations or arrangements made with other distributors for RKO theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any relationship whatever, as far as you are concerned, between the film deals you arrange for exhibition in the theatres under your supervision and the film deals made by other distributors elsewhere? A. No, sir.
(1438)

Q. How many theatres in all are the several Butterfield companies interested in? A. 116.

Judge Goddard: 116?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Goddard: Will you speak a little louder, please.

Q. Now do your license contracts generally provide for clearance over theatres playing subsequent to yours? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any license contract, or at least do you think of one now, which contains any reference to the admission price at which the subsequent-run theatres are to exhibit pictures subsequent-run following clearance in your theatres? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any master contracts with distributors? A. No, sir.

Q. Are each of the theatres generally licensed on individual contracts? A. Usually the contracts are made covering certain pictures for each town.

Q. But at least the contracts do not cover all the theatres in all the towns? A. No, sir.

Q. And they are limited generally to the theatres in a particular town, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any franchise agreements? A. We have no franchise agreements at the present time. We have been (1439) negotiating with one of the companies, Columbia I believe, for a two-year agreement; but there is no other agreement like that. They are bought from time to time.

Q. Now, prior to the time that Paramount had any interest in the Butterfield circuits, were the theatres in those circuits Paramount customers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are they showing Paramount pictures? A. For the most part, yes, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the making of an operating agreement with respect to certain theatres in Grand Rapids, Michigan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when was that agreement made? A. 1933, the fall of 1933.

Q. Did it involve certain theatres in which RKO-Midwest was interested? A. Yes.

Q. How many? A. Two.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Are you talking about an agreement that is in evidence now?

Mr. Seymour: I think it is, Mr. Wright. It is one of yours.

Mr. Wright: Well, can we have it referred to by exhibit number?

Mr. Seymour: I will get the exhibit number, if I may proceed.

Q. And what theatres that Butterfield was interested in (1440) were involved? A. Three.

Q. And they were all in Grand Rapids? A. Yes.

Q. At the time of the agreement were both the RKO theatres in operation? A. No; one of them was closed.

Q. And at that time what was the general economic situation in Grand Rapids? A. Very bad.

Q. Did it differ from the economic situation generally, or was there any particular reason why it was bad in Grand Rapids? A. Well, the situation generally through Michigan was bad, and in Grand Rapids particularly. Grand Rapids is largely a furniture city, and the furniture business was down.

Q. Now, do you know what the status of the operation of the RKO theatres was in Grand Rapids at that time? A. Well, inasmuch as one theatre was closed, I think it was very poor.

Q. Do you know why it had been closed? A. A lack of business, I believe.

Q. And do you know how successfully the other theatre was operating? A. Apparently not very successful.

Q. Well, now, had both of them been operated as first-run theatres? A. The Regent Theatre had been operating as a first-run theatre, and the Keith Empress had been operating with various policies.

Q. Was the Keith Empress one that was closed? A. Yes.
(1441)

Q. It had been operating occasionally as a first-run theatre? A. I am not so sure, but it had vaudeville in it and it had had various types of picture programs, but I am not sure whether it ever operated first-run or not.

Q. How did the size of those two theatres compare with the size of the theatres in which Butterfield was interested? A. They were larger.

Q. Now, what was the reason for making the operating agreement? A. Well, to meet economic conditions, reduce expenses, and accomplish a much better operating set-up for the community, and generally for economy purposes.

Q. What economies were effected as a result of the operating agreement? A. Well, we were able to cut down the organization necessary to run the theatres; reduce advertising considerably; place the top pictures in a large house which accommodated the business to a better advantage, and generally to accomplish a more effective operation.

Q. Did you change the management of those theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And manage them locally? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were any changes made in the larger theatre as far as improvements were concerned? A. I believe we reduced the price and changed the equipment, brought it up to date; new projection equipment; new sound; and generally improved the entire equipment of the theatre.

(1442)

Q. And how about the other theatre? Were any changes made in that? A. We did practically the same thing in the other theatre, although not to such an extent.

Q. Was the upshot of that arrangement that the public got better facilities for seeing pictures in Grand Rapids? A. Very much better, yes.

Mr. Wright: That is objected to, if the Court please. I do not suppose we are convened here to determine whether it is rational or whether there are business savings in the elimination of competition. There is not any question about that. I do not think this is a proper subject for testimony at all.

Judge Hand: Overruled.

Mr. Seymour: I think it is. I think the question is whether or not there is any reasonableness——

Judge Hand: I have overruled the objection.

Mr. Seymour: My colleagues say, Mr. Wright, that the operating arrangement here is not in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Well, could we have it?

Mr. Seymour: If there is a written agreement, as I assume there is, we will get it for you.

(1443)

Mr. Seymour: I think I am through with my direct examination of this witness, but I would like to say this: I am prepared to call, if necessary, the operating heads of many of these companies in which Paramount has an interest. I have now called three, Mr. Mullin, Mr. Friedl and Mr. Beatty. If the Government will stipulate with me, on the details we will work out with them, that the other operating heads of these other companies would testify in accordance with the testimony that these gentlemen have given, that there is no relationship at all between the film deals made by their companies and film deals made either by the other distributors or by Paramount, I will dispense with burdening the Court with further testimony in that respect. I should be glad to have Mr. Wright tell us whether he is willing to make that stipulation.

Mr. Wright: I think there has been some variation here. I would suggest that if he has specific testimony he wants from these gentlemen, if he will just put it in affidavit form, as we told him before, we will be glad to stipulate they will testify in accordance with the affidavit. I would like to see precisely what he expects to elicit from them before I make any general stipulation.

Mr. Seymour: I said I would submit to Mr. Wright the precise form. These fellows are scattered all over the country, it isn't very practical to get affidavits, but I will submit statements of what they will testify. If Mr. Wright is agreeable, we will do that rather than call the rest of these gentlemen in from all over the United States to testify, when the substance of their testimony will be the same. I had assumed it would save the Court's time, and that was one of the things the Government was interested in, too, to have a stipulation as to their testimony, and I will submit to Mr. Wright the form of stipulation as to their testimony which I have in mind.

Mr. Wright: I see no occasion for having called any of them. We can do with these what I think we could have done with the others.

Mr. Seymour: As long as we can do it with these, that is what I am interested in now. Is that agreeable to the Court, if we can work that out with Government counsel?

Judge Hand: Yes, if you can.

Mr. Seymour: If we cannot, I will have a great many of them, and I hope to save your Honors that burden.

Judge Bright: He said something, that he saw no occasion for your calling any of them. That won't go in the stipulation, will it?

Mr. Seymour: No, no, that will not be in the stipulation.

Are there any questions from other defendants?

(1445)

Cross-Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Beatty, do you license Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in most of the towns in which Butterfield operates? A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom do you currently negotiate those license agreements? A. The exchange manager in Detroit.

Q. What is his name? A. Joseph Lee.

Q. In the course of those negotiations have you ever conditioned the licensing of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in your theatres upon Twentieth Century-Fox licensing its pictures to other corporations in which Paramount has an interest? A. No, sir.

Q. Has Mr. Lee ever conditioned the licensing of the Fox pictures to you upon the condition that other corporations in which Paramount has an interest license the same pictures? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you discuss at the time of these negotiations whether or not the subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation have licensed Paramount pictures? A. The only thing we discuss is the theatres in the towns under consideration.

Q. In Michigan? A. In Michigan.

Q. Is there any part of those discussions whether or not subsidiaries of National Theatres on the West Coast are buying Paramount pictures? A. No, sir.

(1446)

Mr. Wright: That is not testimony, if the Court please. He is just putting argument in his mouth.

Mr. Caskey: Sir?

Mr. Wright: I say that you are putting an argument in his mouth. That question didn't call for any testimony. Is there any part of those discussions?

Mr. Caskey: By "Is there any part of those discussions," I mean, any words said about the subject. It seems to me that is a question of fact.

Judge Hand: Go ahead, he may answer.

The Witness: Will you repeat the question, please?

(Question and answer read.)

Q. In the fixing of the prices which you will pay for Fox pictures, say, in Grand Rapids, is there any effort on your part to secure the same terms as the subsidiaries of National Theatres obtain Paramount pictures for? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any knowledge of that subject? A. No, sir.

Judge Hand: Any more questions on direct?

(No response.)

Judge Hand: Any questions, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Wright:

Q. I understand you to testify that with reference to (1447) these two corporations of the W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. in which Paramount owns only 25 per cent and B. F. Keith owns 10 per cent, those two corporations had half of the directors, is that right, although between them they own only 35 per cent? A. One has two directors and one has one.

Q. And there are only six? A. That is right.

Q. Is there some agreement that covers that distribution of directorships there? A. I think so, yes, sir.

Q. Have you got a copy of that agreement or do you know what the agreement is? A. I am not very familiar with the agreement today because I haven't looked at it in ten years.

Q. There was an agreement made at the time the stock interest of Paramount and Keith were acquired? A. Yes, sir, I think so.

Q. Could you give us a copy of it? A. I think the counsel can secure a copy.

Mr. Seymour: I will endeavor to get a copy, Mr. Wright, if there is such an agreement.

Mr. Wright: After we have seen that agreement and the pooling agreement, which has been referred to, we might have some questions we would want to ask him. We have nothing more at this time.

Mr. Seymour: I will endeavor to get them for you and make them available as promptly as I can.

(1448)

Then, Mr. Beatty, you are excused provisionally subject to Mr. Wright's perhaps asking you something else after he has seen the agreements.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Seymour: Subject to the stipulation which I mentioned, at the conclusion of my direct of Mr. Beatty and subject to certain other stipulations which I am going to try to work out with Mr. Wright, to relieve the Court of the testimony of other witnesses, including division managers in the distribution department, where Mr. Wright has been good enough to say he would stipulate, I am going to submit a form, and perhaps another stipulation or two, I am going to turn the further presentation of evidence over to counsel for one of the other companies. It is possible that before the case for the defense closes I may want to call another witness or two, but these stipulations I think will make that unnecessary. So your Honors will have a change in the direct examining. I am not quite sure who is going to follow me, but I guess he knows.

(1449)

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, I have stipulated with the attorneys for the plaintiff as to the testimony of Spyros P. Skouras and I should like to read at this time three pages of it:

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED between the attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, that if called, Spyros P. Skouras would testify as follows:"——

Judge Hand: What is his name?

Mr. Caskey: Spyros P. Skouras.

Mr. Wright: Of course, if the Court wants it done this way, we have no objection, but the purpose of course in stipulating on our part was to save time, so it wouldn't be necessary to go through this procedure. If we are going to have this, I suppose we might as well have the witness on the stand.

Mr. Caskey: This has been put into question and answer form.

"Q. What is your name and address? A. Spyros P. Skouras. I reside at 2 Shore Road, Greenhaven, Rye, New York.

"Q. What is your occupation? A. I am president of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and have been since April, 1942.

"Q. How long have you been engaged in the motion picture business? A. For more than 25 years.
(1450)

"Q. What was your position immediately preceding your election as president of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation? A. From 1935 to 1943, I was president of National Theatre Amusement Co., Inc., which performed supervisory services in the operation of the theatres operated by subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation. I was also vice-president and principal executive officer of National Theatres Corporation.

"Q. State your experience in the motion picture industry. A. I commenced as an operator of a small theatre in St.

Louis with my brothers. By 1928, we had developed a number of first-run and neighborhood theatres in St. Louis and we sold our interests to Warner Bros. I came to New York as general manager of its theatre department, and continued as such until early in January, 1931. At that time, I left and formed a corporation in which a subsidiary of Paramount was to have the largest interest and which proposed to acquire and operate theatres along the Atlantic seaboard. Financial conditions in the country made that impossible, and in the fall of 1931, my brothers and I formed Skouras Theatres Corporation and leased or sub-leased from Fox Metropolitan Playhouses certain theatres in metropolitan New York. At that time, Fox Metropolitan was on (1451)

the verge of insolvency and its theatres were losing a great deal of money. In the early spring of 1932, I was employed by Wesco Corporation, with my brother Charles, to operate its theatres. During the spring of 1933, the principal subsidiary of Wesco went into bankruptcy and I continued on as an officer of Wesco Corporation, participating in the reorganization of the affairs of its subsidiaries until the company was reorganized and its name changed to National Theatres Corporation, about 1935.

"Q. Is Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation affiliated with United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.? A. No, sir. Twentieth Century-Fox has no financial interest of any kind in United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. It does not participate in the management of that company. The only possible connection is that Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, a subsidiary of National Theatres Corporation, owns 70% of the stock of United West Coast Theatres Corporation, and a subsidiary of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., owns the remaining 30%. United West Coast Theatres Corporation leases and operates a number of theatres in California. These theatres have been operated by affiliates of Fox West Coast

Theatres Corporation since the fall of 1931. They are now being operated by Fox West Coast Agency Corporation under a standard form of service agreement made between the subsidiaries of Fox West Coast and Fox West Coast Agency, a (1452) service corporation providing various services incident to the supervision and management of operating theatres. The executive officers of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., do not participate in the management of United West Coast Theatres Corporation.

"Q. Do you own stock in Skouras Theatres Corporation? A. I do. My brother Charles, who is now president of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, and my brother George, who is president of Skouras Theatres Corporation, and I own 50 per cent of the stock of Skouras Theatres Corporation. My brother George and I are directors. I am not an officer.

"Q. Who owns the balance? A. Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc.

"Q. Is Skouras Theatres Corporation affiliated with Twentieth Century-Fox? A. No, sir. The only connection is that Skouras Theatres Corporation has been, since 1931, licensed under a franchise to exhibit Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in the various theatres it operates in metropolitan New York. At the time this franchise was granted to Skouras Theatres Corporation, I was not an officer or employee of Twentieth Century-Fox or of National Theatres Corporation or any of its subsidiaries. This franchise will expire in 1948.

"Q. Do you own any stock in Randforce Amusement Corporation? A. No; and I may say, neither do my brothers. (1453)

"Q. Who owns the stock of Randforce Amusement Corporation, if you know? A. I do know. One-half of the stock of Randforce Amusement Corporation is owned by Samuel Rinzler and his associates. The other half is owned by Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc.

"Q. What interest does Twentieth Century-Fox have in Randforce Amusement Corporation? A. None—except, again, that Randforce has a similar franchise requiring it to play Twentieth Century-Fox pictures. In this connection it should be observed that many of the theatres operated by Skouras Theatres and Randforce were operated by Fox Theatres Corporation, and, in 1931, when the franchises were made, these theatres were the first neighborhood customers of Fox Film in metropolitan New York."

Mr. Caskey: And then, if your Honors please, there follows several questions paralleling those which were put to Mr. Zukor, denying explicitly the charges of the complaint, and with your leave I will simply have them copied into the stenographic record.

(The balance of the stipulated matter referred to is as follows:)

(1454)
and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to aid and assist one another in the loaning and exchanging of production personnel and to deal with one another on uniform, non-competitive basis? A. No.

"Q. Has there been any agreement or understanding to your knowledge to withhold any of the production personnel and equipment from any producer of motion pictures? A. No.

of them to exclude independent producers from access to production personnel and to withhold production equipment owned by the defendants or any of them on the same terms on which they are made available to the defendants in this case? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to fix the terms upon which motion pictures would be licensed for exhibition to any exhibitor in the United States? A. No.

any pictures for exhibition in any theatre before the pictures have been produced and before any exhibitor has had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films have been completed or trade shown? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to condition the licensing of one or more films or group of films upon licensing of another film or group of films? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to condition the licensing of film in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of film in another theatre or group of theatres? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to enter into long term franchises with circuits of theatres or to suppress competition offered by competing theatres during the terms of such long term franchises or to preclude independent distributors from licensing their pictures to those circuit theatres? A. No.

(1456)
them to discriminate with respect to the license terms granted to circuit theatres because such theatres are part of the circuit? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them in licensing their pictures to favor the theatres in which the defendants or any of them had an interest against the theatres of exhibitors not affiliated with any producer-exhibitor with respect to run, clearance, license fees or any other terms of licensing? A. No, sir.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any two or more of them to license pictures for exhibition in the theatres in which one of the defendants had an interest, on condition or in consideration of another licensing its pictures with respect to the pictures disturbed by the other? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude independently produced motion pictures from theatres in which the defendants or any of them had an interest? A. No.

of competing first-run theatres in cities and towns where theatres affiliated with defendants or any of them are located? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude unaffiliated exhibitors from operating competing theatres on the same run as the subsequent-run affiliated theatres in the cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to use the first and early run affiliated theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance and admission price of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in the cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located, or elsewhere? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to deprive any theatre operator of the supply of film or to withhold film from any unaffiliated exhibitor or to limit the terms and conditions on which licenses would be made to any unaffiliated exhibitor? A. No.

(1458)

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to divide the available films among the affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them not to compete with one another in the licensing of motion pictures to be exhibited in cities or towns where two or more of them had interests in theatres? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to enter into joint agreements with respect to a theatre whereby the film buying control or proceeds from the operation thereof is divided between two or more exhibitor defendants for the purpose of restraining competition unreasonably or monopolizing exhibition or distribution with respect to such theatre? A. No.

"Q. Has there been or is there to your knowledge any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to refrain from building, buying or offering to lease (1458a) theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres? A. No.

(1459)

WILLIAM J. KUPPER, called as a witness on behalf of defendant Twentieth Century-Fox, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Kupper? A. 36 Sutton Place, Lawrence, Long Island.

Q. What is your occupation? A. I am employed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation as their general sales manager.

Q. What are your duties as such? A. I am in charge of and responsible for the sales of our merchandise in the United States and Canada to the theatres, and the operation of our distribution organization of 31 branch offices in the United States.

Q. Who are your superior officers, if any? A. Mr. Thomas J. Connors, who is vice-president of the company in charge of distribution, world-wide distribution, Mr. Spyros Skouras, who is president, and also an executive vice-president, Mr. Michel.

Q. And another officer of the company has the supervision or distribution outside of the United States and Canada? A. That is correct.

Q. How long have you been engaged in the motion picture business? A. I was employed by Fox Film Corporation—if I may look back—on October 7, 1919, and I have been with (1460) that corporation ever since through various positions.

Q. And you have not been employed by any other company in the motion picture business? A. No, this has been continuous service.

Q. Briefly, will you state the nature of that service? A. When I was employed on October 7, 1919, I was employed as a clerk in their contract department; and on June 12, 1920, I went to Dallas, Texas, as their assistant branch manager; on October 8, 1921, I became branch manager of our Washington, D. C., office; on January 14, 1922, I became manager at the Albany, New York, office at our branch office there; on June 10, 1922, I went to Charlotte, as branch manager there; on January 27, 1923, I became the branch manager at the Fox office in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; on January 19, 1924, I was transferred to the home office as assistant to the general sales manager at that time, who was R. A. White; on May 31, 1924, I went to Chicago and became the branch manager there; November 29, 1924, I went back to Pittsburgh as branch manager; on December 29, 1928, I was transferred to the home office again here in New York as special field representative, assisting the then sales manager, Mr. James R. Grainger; on January 26, 1929, I became assistant general sales manager; and on November 7, 1931, I became Western Division manager under Mr. John D. Clark, who was then the sales manager; on May 28, 1942,

(1461)

I was made assistant to Mr. Connors, who is the vice-president of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and on August 2, 1943, I was made general sales manager for this company, which position I occupy today.

Q. What does Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation distribute? A. It distributes feature motion pictures; it distributes newsreels; it distributes short subjects; and it distributes the March of Time, which is a two-reel subject. It is all photographic film.

Q. Is the latter produced by it? A. No, it is not. Some of our short subjects are not produced by us either. They are produced by independent producers.

Q. Now, how many exchanges does Twentieth Century-Fox have in the United States? A. 31.

Q. In what cities are they located? A. Do you want the list of them?

Q. No; I don't mean by name, but what type of city? A. Well, New York City—well, the type of city is generally the most important distribution center in that State or area.

Q. And how was the number of exchanges fixed or determined? A. Well, they gradually grew; I mean they increased; a few of them were put on because the territory expanded and developed, and we thought it was important and necessary when we had more theatres come into an area, so we could properly service these accounts.

Q. Have the cities in which Twentieth Century-Fox's exchanges are now located been determined by any agreement with any other distributors? A. I don't know of any such agreement.

Q. And these cities in which you now have exchanges are the same ones that there were exchanges in when you came with the company? A. Not when I came. There are some additional ones than when I came with the company.

Q. Such as Oklahoma City? A. Oklahoma City, Charlotte, Memphis, Portland.

Q. Now, describe very briefly but clearly to the Court what an exchange is? A. Well, an exchange is our branch office from which we distribute our motion pictures for a given area or set-up area, and it handles all the physical work, the inspection, the shipping, and the selling for the area in which it operates.

Q. Who has the supervision of the exchange? A. Well, there is a branch manager who is directly responsible for the local operation.

Q. Now under him is a sales organization? A. Yes; and they vary in the size of the office from two men up to five, six or eight men.

Q. And then there are bookers? A. And there are bookers. (1463)

Q. And what does a booker do? A. Well, a booker is the man responsible for the work of definitely setting up the playing time that is agreed to between the exhibitor and the book. He is responsible to see that the pictures are booked and supplied to the account that licenses the film.

Q. Why do you use that word "book"? A. Well, he works from a big book, and I suppose it was just through custom that the name has developed; he has a master book that shows every day in the week, and the days of the month, and it goes on, and he works down from the number of prints he has, and it all runs in an order as the time is filled or it is booked up; and that is why they call it booked; that time is booked. And there is the time for shipping or reshipping of the film, and it all goes in there.

Q. That is, taking a specific picture like Nob Hill in an exchange like New Haven, there is a line for each print that the New Haven exchange has? A. That is correct.

Q. And across the page is a space for every day? A. Every day.

Q. And when the booker for the Bijou Theatre, the exhibitor, comes in, he agrees with the date on your book, is that right? A. That is right, and that is inserted in the book from thereon, and the billing and the shipping is made. (1464)

Q. Now, do you have a cashier department? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you have a shipping department? A. Shipping department.

Q. And an inspection department? A. And an inspection department.

Q. What authority in the licensing of motion pictures does a salesman have? A. Well, he has no authority to license them. He has the authority to go out and he does go out and solicits the license.

Q. Does each salesman in the Twentieth Century-Fox organization have a definite territory? A. Yes, pretty definite.

Q. And he calls upon the exhibitors in that territory? A. He does.

Q. He has the duty to negotiate for applications for license? A. That is correct.

Q. And when he has arrived at an agreement with an exhibitor, what does he do? A. He submits it to his branch manager for his approval or recommendation and whether or not he is satisfied with the negotiation.

Q. Now, assuming that the branch manager is not satisfied, what happens? A. Well, he is liable to reject the application and we never see it.

Q. Then what happens? A. Then the exhibitor would be resolicited again by the salesman or possibly by the branch (1465) manager to get the terms that they want.

Q. They both get in a car and drive over to see him? A. They go by car or they could go by train, too, I suppose.

Q. But they do; I mean they renegotiate? A. Yes, they renegotiate.

Q. And then when there comes an arrangement that is satisfactory to the salesman and to the branch manager, what is done? A. He in turn submits it to his district manager, who will look the contract over and weigh it according to how he sees it. If he is satisfied with it, he will send it out to his sales manager. If he is not, he will reject it again.

Q. And assuming that he is satisfied and sends it to his sales manager, what is the procedure then? A. Then the sales manager will analyze it and study it and decide whether or not it is the right kind of a contract that we should accept in that situation.

Q. And if he is satisfied, what is done? A. He automatically accepts it and it is approved to the exchange or to the district office. It goes back through that route that I brought you up through.

Q. And in due course a signed copy is sent to the exhibitor? A. To the exhibitor. An executed copy is signed by an official of the company, or an officer of the company, I should say.

(1466)

Q. Now, has that general practice of negotiation and examination, renegotiation, submission, been carried on since you have been in the motion picture business? A. Generally; but when I started with Fox we did not have such a great organization. We did not have a lot of district managers or sales managers. It was done direct by the branch manager through the general sales manager.

Q. You say you have 31 exchanges. How many districts are there? A. I believe I have eleven.

Q. And have you some memorandum of it? A. Yes, I have a record of it here. Yes, I think it is eleven (consulting paper). Eleven.

Q. And how many division sales managers are there? A. I have four.

Q. Who are they? A. Well, in the East we have Mr. A. W. Smith; in the South we have Mr.—oh, Mr. Smith, incidentally, operates out of New York—we have Mr. Harry Ballance, who covers the six Southern offices and operates out of Atlanta; Mr. W. C. Gehring, who has the Central offices; he also operates out of New York. Mr. Herman Wobber, who has the six Coast offices, and he operates out of San Francisco.

Q. Mr. Gehring has been with the company how long? A. Well, I think Mr. Gehring was with the company when I came with the company, and worked in the Buffalo exchange. (1467)

Q. He was discharged earlier than you from the Army? A. I guess a few days, or a month maybe.

Q. And how long has Mr. Wobber been with the company? A. I think Mr. Wobber came with the company in 1932, about the time Mr. Kent came with the company.

Q. And for a period of ten years he was general sales manager? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Ballance has been with the company how long? A. Since about 1932 or 1933; I am not sure whether it is late 1932 or early 1933.

Q. And how long has Mr. Smith been with the company? A. Mr. Smith has not been there so long. I think it is going on four years.

Q. Now, do you and Mr. Connors and these four sales managers know personally a great many of the exhibitors of the country? A. Well, we know a lot of them. Whether you would call them a great many—we have met a lot of them.

Q. Sold a lot of them? A. Sold a lot of them.

Q. Been in their theatres? A. Been in a lot of theatres.

Q. What kind of a building is an exchange in? A. It is supposed to be a fireproof building, and they try to get a fireproof building. Generally it is an independent building. I know that our exchanges, buildings that we built or had built, had specially designed features that would protect our merchandise, good places to operate and work from.

(1468)

Mr. Caskey: Would you mark this please for identification?

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Exhibit F-5 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Kupper, I show you a document marked F-5 for identification, and ask you if that contains a number of features which the company has released since 1929? A. I believe it is exactly the number; I have not checked it. It looks like it to me, like they are the exact numbers in each season.

Q. Now I notice that during the 1944-1945 season the number of releases was but 25, whereas in 1941-1942 it was 54. What is the reason for that decline in the number of pictures released? A. There are a lot of reasons; several of them anyway.

Q. Will you give them? A. In my opinion one was the fact that we had a war and we lost a lot of our talent, lost a lot of our technicians, plus the fact that there was a reduction in available negative that you could use to make positive prints of. Those are some of the reasons for it.

Q. Did the War Production Board impose restrictions on the amount of raw stock that could be used? A. Yes, sir.

(1469)

Q. And that directly affected the number of pictures which could be produced? A. I would say it did to some extent.

Q. Was there any agreement by you or by any officer of the company to your knowledge in fixing the number of pictures which would be released during any of these seasons with any other distributor? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. You did not make any such agreements? A. I never did, no, sir.

Q. Now, in addition to the exchanges and the function of its representatives that you told us about, you have an advertising department, do you not? A. Advertising and exploitation department, yes, sir.

Q. What is their function? A. Their function is to build up the material, the advertising material; also work out these press books, and work out the advertising campaigns so the exhibitor can exploit and sell the pictures to the public.

Q. Now you have a certain amount of advertising to the exhibitors? A. Do we have a certain amount to the exhibitors?

Q. That is directed to the exhibitors primarily? A. Yes, directed to all the exhibitors.

Q. Where does that advertising appear? A. Well, it is made or at least worked out or through our exploitation (1470) department and sent to our exchanges, and they in turn send it to all exhibitors who license our merchandise. It is done to help them sell the merchandise to the public.

Q. And when you release a picture like Nob Hill, you prepare a press book containing various appropriate advertisement to be inserted in the newspapers? A. They are all prepared in advance of our release, the sale and the licensing of the picture.

Q. Those press books are sent to the exhibitors? A. Sent to our exchange and given to the exhibitors.

Q. Do you also prepare sheets to be used in the lobbies? A. You mean lithographs?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, we do, and photographs as well.

Q. So-called stills? A. Stills.

Q. And those are sold to the various exhibitors? A. Sold at a very nominal price so they can sell and exploit the picture.

Q. And you also advertise in the trade papers? A. Yes, extensive.

Q. And do you advertise also directly to the theatre-going public? A. Either advertise or exploit, or at least we get it in various magazines so that it gets to the public in some way. We want the public to know we have got that picture.

(1470-A)

Q. There are a number of so-called fan-magazines in the country? A. Yes, quite a few.

Q. Are these some of those (indicating)? A. Yes, sir, I recognize all of them as such.

(1471)

Q. And do they have an extensive circulation? A. Great circulation. I am told that, at least, by our publicity department that they have a wide circulation.

Q. And you advertise in those magazines? A. We do.

Q. And you also attempt to have synopses of the forthcoming motion pictures printed in those magazines? A. Yes, sir, we like to have a very good story with pictures and everything else so they know what kind of a picture we have got. I mean the public.

Q. Now, do you also advertise in weekly magazines like Time or Life or Saturday Evening Post or Collier's? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you advertise on the radio? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the purpose of this is not apparent to me. It seems to me it is completely irrelevant to any issue that is being tried.

Judge Hand: What is the purpose?

Mr. Caskey: The purpose of it is to show competition in the distribution of motion pictures to induce people to come to see our pictures in preference to somebody else's, which I suppose is competition.

Judge Hand: All right.

Q. Now, in addition to this type of advertising, do you have exploitation representatives in the field? A. Yes, we do.
(1472)

Q. Tell the Court about that. A. Well, in each district we try to maintain one or sometimes two or more men that would circulate around. I mean after we have licensed a picture for exhibition and the picture was dated and set in the theatre, our men went out and helped and try to exploit that piece of merchandise of ours and see that it was given all the exploitation possible so they could return the greatest gross in that theatre; and we thereby get a good and substantial film rental.

Q. Does the company participate in the advertising expense of the theatres? A. In some of them it does.

Q. How is that done? A. Well, generally through our exploitation, we have what we call a cooperative advertising campaign in which they were worked out—let us say a theatre has a budget of $500 to spend on a picture, and we think they ought to spend more. Well, they work it out and try to show him and convince him that he ought to spend $200 or $300 more, half of which we probably will participate in, or a third, and so on; and he will work out that additional campaign over and above what the theatre budget will allow or require.

Q. I now turn to the method of sales prior to the consent decree: Previous witnesses have testified to the practice in their companies of holding conventions. Did Twentieth Century-Fox hold conventions? A. As far back as I can recall they had a convention every year; sometimes two, but generally one.
(1473)

Q. Aside from what Mr. Seymour referred to as the social activities, what occurs at those conventions? A. Well, there was a lot more than social activities with Fox. You would go there and you would listen to Mr. Fox or Sheehan or whoever was in charge of production at the time tell you what we were going to make; and you sat there for days and argued about whether it was going to be good or bad, and what prices you thought you could get for it. And if they had something finished they would show it to you at the conventions.

Q. Now, at the time of these conventions did the publicity department have illustrated booklets referring to the coming year's product? A. Yes, sir. They generally had for each year, each season, a big book. Some were pretty expensive too, and some were very elaborate; and they were made, and that is when they were first put out; at least, they were put out simultaneous with our convention.

Q. I show you this book and ask you if that is the book that was used at the 1932 convention? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Hand: I fail to see what this is all about. I do not understand that Mr. Wright disputes that there was competition about those things you are talking about.

(1474)

Mr. Wright: There is not any question about that. In so far as pictures themselves are concerned, I suppose every picture that plays, whether it plays in theatres owned by the same exhibitor or in others, it is in competition for public patronage with every other picture, and that each distributor wants to get the most that he possibly can out of every picture that is exhibited, wherever it is exhibit d. I do not think there can be any question about that

Mr. Caskey: Well, is it also conceded that we are in competition with each other for the exhibitor's playing time?

Mr. Wright: No. When it comes to playing time, within very definite limits. There is no question, of course, but what each distributor of these defendants would again like to have as much playing time in every theatre in the country as he can get; but when it comes to determine how that playing time is going to be allotted in the theatres in which they are interested, we say that that is a matter in which there are artificial restraints imposed.

Mr. Caskey: It is very difficult to get any concession except the most general one, and whenever we get to a specific problem we are met with this type of (1475)
reply.

Mr. Wright: Well, why don't you take him into the playing time situation and develop what you want to develop?

Mr. Caskey: I am going to.

Then I will finish this with one or two questions:

Q. After the convention were these booklets sent to the exhibitors of the country? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And carried by the salesmen as they called upon the exhibitors? A. Until they wore them out, I guess.

Mr. Caskey: Now, will you mark this, please, for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibits F-6, F-7 and F-8 for identification.)

Q. I show you Defendants' Exhibits F-6, F-7 and F-8 for identification and ask you what they are. A. That is the form of contract which we used in our licensing of pictures, or the application of it, and later became the contract, for each of those seasons.

Q. What were those seasons? A. Well, one was the season 1929-30——

Mr. Wright: Could we have it hooked up with the number so we will know what he is talking about?

A. (Continuing) —F-6 this is. That is the 1929-30 contract (1476) form; F-7 is the 1930-31 season, a copy of it at least; F-8 is the 1931-32 season.

Q. Now, were these all forms which were generally used in licensing motion pictures in those years? A. By our company, yes.

Mr. Caskey: I offer them.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibits F-6, F-7 and F-8 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Now, during those years, Mr. Kupper, the names of the pictures which you were licensing were specified on the contract, were they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. With some slight description of either the star or the source of the projected motion picture? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a definite program of pictures was licensed to the exhibitor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of the solicitation of the exhibitor, had those pictures been produced? A. All of them?

Q. Yes, sir. A. Very few in the early license agreements. They might have all been made by the time the license was made for the later ones. For some of the smallest license agreements they might have been made, because you run your pictures at least two years—at least that long—and you certainly license them by that time, and they would have been finished; but for the first early months there would be very few made.

(1477)

Q. And those contracts which were negotiated, say, in the summer preceding the beginning of the season, only a few pictures had been manufactured? A. That is correct.

Q. And did you find it possible to deliver the specific pictures which were enumerated in the contract? A. Well, I doubt whether you could tell yourself whether it was the same thing there or not.

Q. Now, when did Mr. Kent, come with the company? A. I believe it was in 1932.

Q. And what year's production did he first have responsibility for? A. Well, I am not sure. I think it was 1933.

Q. 1933-34 season? A. Yes.

Q. That is the so-called K-1 season? A. We designated that to officially stamp the first year he had something to do with the setting up of the production and the production budget.

Mr. Caskey: Now will you mark this for identification.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-9 for identification.)

Q. Is this contract F-9 for identification the form which was used in the 1933-34 season? A. It is a photostat of that contract, yes.

Q. And under that form there is no specification of the pictures to be released? A. That is correct.

(1478)

Mr. Caskey: I offer it.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-9 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, in the 1941 season you began to sell under the consent decree? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a new form of contract was prepared in that year? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who prepared it? A. I suppose it was prepared by the legal department. I think you had a hand in it, didn't you?

Q. And recently the contract has been shortened and improved? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And both the shortening and the improvement was as the result of a suggestion of a salesman, was it not? A. That is correct, a salesman in Salt Lake City.

Q. And as the result of his suggestion you gave him a war bond as a prize? A. I did not. Mr. Connors did.

Q. I show you this magazine and ask you what it is.

Mr. Wright: Have you got the improvement there as distinguished from the publicity?

Mr. Caskey: It is right there, Mr. Wright, in the same size type that you use.

A. This is a house organ of our Twentieth Century-Fox
(1479)
Company. It is called the Dynamo. It goes out and keeps the boys advised of what we have got, and keeps our enthusiasm alive and tells the record of what they are doing generally.

Q. And this issue of April 21, 1945 contains a reference to Mr. Dugan's suggestion and the new form of contract? A. That is right.

Mr. Wright: Is the contract reprinted in full in here?

Mr. Caskey: The first page, and we will get you a copy of the other.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-10.)

Q. F-10 is the 1945-46 contract, is it not, Mr. Kupper? A. That is correct.

Q. That is the one currently in use? A. That is the one currently in use.

(1480).

Q. Mr. Kupper, will you tell the Court——

Judge Bright: Are they marked for identification or are they marked in evidence?

Mr. Caskey: It was marked in evidence, I understood.

Judge Hand: As to these forms, the pictures are not listed?

The Witness: Well, when we—during the specific time—right after those long forms, where they had all the pictures on, we did much the same thing as to publicizing the pictures before we sold the exhibitors, and we would go out and sell them, but we would sell so many pictures, say a number in a group, we had maybe seven, we had maybe eight, and this one group had certain specified terms, and ten in the next group had certain specified terms and so on.

Judge Hand: Somewhere the names of the pictures appeared.

The Witness: Yes, they knew the names of the pictures. We gave them a list in the publication that we put out, but it was never definite, we could change the pictures where we wanted, and then later, when you came to the Consent Decree, after, we showed the pictures.

Judge Hand: Yes, that was block booking and you were limited by the consent decree to five.

(1481)

The Witness: That is right, sale of five. Then we showed those pictures and sold people, and the names of those pictures were given, at least those pictures that were licensed.

Q. Referring to F-9 in evidence, would this be filled out? Just give the Court an example of how a contract for a season's product would be filled out. A. Well, of course, the name would go up here and the date and so forth, and then we had——.

Judge Hand: This is before the consent decree?

The Witness: This is the one prior to the consent decree, yes, and we, at the same time—there would be eight pictures at such and such terms, right there, and then there would be another block.

Q. Such as what? A. Well, they would generally be our better and higher-priced and more attractive pictures.

Judge Bright: With the names of the eight pictures?

The Witness: No, just the numbers.

Q. Eight at 35 per cent? Is that high enough? A. We have had higher, too, and less, and then there would be ten varying prices, the prices were perhaps a little lower than that, and so on, until the whole contract was completed, and then the last group, we will say, remained there. We never knew definitely how many might be in there, because it would depend upon his selection. We offered so many pictures. That was for him. That is the general front of the contract.

(1482)

Q. The exhibitor knew what he was going to get from the sales advertising material, such as this booklet that I am holding and from your past performance? A. That is right, he had confidence in us. We made pictures for a number of years and we developed and we were growing all the time, we were making finer pictures all the time. He believed in us, and that is what we tried to do, to live up to that, what we put out.

Q. And if you told him that you were going to make three Will Rogers pictures in a year, you were able to convince him that those pictures should have the highest term? A. Yes. In those years, talking about Rogers, he was a pretty good star for us, so was Shirley Temple and other stars, too, but they were generally accepted as our top stars at that particular time.

Q. Referring to the present form, which I had marked as Exhibit F-10, when the application is taken from the salesman, these blanks are filled in, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the names of specific pictures? A. Definite name of the picture that he selects out of that group, or all the groups that he so elects.

Q. From time to time you would have this form of contract printed up with the names of the pictures in print instead of being typewritten? A. That is right, have them by the thousands and sent them out in advance, and they can use them for any block, just inserting which block it is.
(1483)

Q. You used this form, as I understand it, for the first sale in each season? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the exhibitor? A. Yes.

Q. And the subsequent sales of the subsequent blocks is done by even shorter and simpler form? A. Much shorter form. It refers back to this form, where generally all the terms as to clearance and things of that nature are embodied in the first contract.

Q. Mr. Kupper, I wish you would tell——

Mr. Wright: Have you got the other form he is talking about, that he just testified about?

Mr. Caskey: I will get you one.

Q. I wish you would tell the Court when and how it is determined what pictures Twentieth Century-Fox will release? A. Generally,—last few years I have been associated in New York,—generally, the head of our company goes out to the studio, probably in December, January or February, and he would hold conferences with our production department, and they would discuss the budgets and what the production department has lined up in general as to what (1484) they thought they should make or were making, and then it was determined whether that program would be suitable or whether it was what we wanted, and if there were any additions or changes made they were made there in those conferences.

Q. Do you participate in those? A. I have, but—in those particular ones, I did not participate very much. They were later ones in which I participated.

Q. You currently participate in these discussions? A. They ask for our opinion and advice as to what we think about future production.

Q. One of the duties of the sales manager is to estimate the expected revenue from the expected picture? A. We try to give them what we believe a picture can earn—at least keep the production department advised of what the possible, potential box office revenue will be from that type of picture.

Q. Am I correct that since the fall of 1941 all of the Twentieth Century-Fox pictures have been trade-shown-before they were licensed? A. Well, they were instructed, our branches were instructed, to trade-show every one, and I am quite sure that they did, because they had to report to us that they did.

Q. As a matter of fact, you built up a system whereby they were required to report each trade showing, the number of people who attended, and so forth? A. That is correct.

Q. What number of pictures do you sell in the blocks? (1485)

A. Never more than five. As low as one. Sold individually, two and three.

Q. What is the current practice as to the number of pictures in a block? A. We have been running along pretty consistent with two and three.

Q. That requires a separate sale for each two or three pictures? A. It does.

Q. Do you know how many blocks you had in the 1944-45 season product? A. I think we had 11.

Q. That requires 11 separate negotiations with the exhibitors? A. Every block requires a separate negotiation. The salesman may get a small account that doesn't buy early in the season, he may sell two or three blocks, but he has to negotiate each block individually. He may negotiate for two, three or four blocks that are available for sale, that have been trade-shown—he may negotiate it with one sales talk.

Q. That of necessity is in the subsequent-run theatres? A. Subsequent-run, small towns, very small.

Q. How many operating theatres are there in the United States? A. According to the report I have seen from my contract department only this morning, there are over 18,400-some odd.

Q. 18,400 theatres today? A. That is what I believe to be the figure. I have it here, if I may use it.

(1486)

Q. Certainly. A. 18,468 active operating motion picture theatres.

Q. Does that include Canada? A. It does not include Canada.

Q. How many accounts does Twentieth Century-Fox sell? A. Sold as high as 15, almost 16 thousand, on some pictures.

Q. And as low as how many? A. Run pretty low, 5,000.

Q. Have you a schedule for the week ended October 13th or 20th? A. I haven't got it here.

Q. I will hand you this. For the 1943-44 season what pictures had the highest number of exhibitions? A. Well, in that year "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" was one of the high ones, 15,000.

Q. You may proceed. A. You want me to give you that?

Q. Yes. A. 15,527 actual bookings. "Heaven Can Wait" —of course, these pictures are not finished yet. That particular week, "Sweet Rosie O'Grady", first playing, was 22 more. It has been in release 104 weeks, that is, two years. Still playing.

"Heaven Can Wait" is released 112 weeks. As of this week, October 6th, we had played 15,004 contracts.

Q. And the same—— A. There is another picture, "The Sullivans", only released 83 weeks. Had played 15,640 contracts. Here is a picture called "Buffalo Bill," 72 weeks released, and has played about 15,582.

(1487)

Q. With respect to those four pictures were they generally licensed on percentage? A. Yes, generally.

Q. Just give us for those four pictures the number of bookings and the number that were on percentage. A. In "Rosie O'Grady's" case, I stated 15,527 played. Out of that there were 12,203 played on percentage, or a guarantee and a percentage, a participating amount.

In the case of "The Sullivans" played 15,640, 7,980 were played on percentage or participating arrangements; on "Buffalo Bill" it was 15,582 bookings to date, as of this date, and we had played 11,404 on percentage or a guarantee and a percentage.

Q. Did you also release during that season a picture called "Dancing Masters"? A. I don't know whether that year. I don't see it on here.

Q. Have you got "Ladies in Washington"? A. "Ladies in Washington," yes, sir.

Q. How many bookings has that had? A. That had 9,651 bookings as of the week ended October 6, 1945, and at that time was released 69 weeks.

Q. How many on percentage? A. 1,145.

Q. What was the comparative quality of that picture? A. There was no comparison. This is not a picture in the category that I read off to you before. This was a smaller picture, and, I suppose, in the trade the term that would be used in the trade, it is a B picture.

(1488)

Q. The better the picture the more accounts it plays, generally speaking? A. Generally, yes.

Q. And the more percentage accounts it plays? A. Yes.

Q. Speaking of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," did you have prepared a list showing the total number of bookings in the cities of the United States which have a population of 25,000 or more? A. I did.

Q. And did you have the film rental broken down by $100 classifications? A. Yes, sir.

(Marked Twentieth Century-Fox Exhibit F-11 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Kupper, what was the cost of one positive print of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady"? A. I think in the neighborhood of $300. It is a technicolor picture.

Q. Look at the exhibit. A. Oh, $344.29.

Q. And in those 412 cities, how many was the total number of exhibitions? A. 4,063.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Just a minute. These figures are already in evidence in the interrogatory answers. Are these supposed to contradict the figures you gave us in the interrogatory answers or expand them in any way, or are they just the same?

Mr. Caskey: Just the same, except I hope they are more understandable.

Mr. Wright: Have you a copy of it, so we can see what you are doing?

(1489)

Mr. Caskey: Let me ask him another question.

Q. How many of the engagements paid a film rental of $99.99 or less? A. Looks like 2,800-and-some-odd—out of the 4,000 you are talking about?

Q. Yes. And this list shows a classification by $100 amount of the film rental that we received? A. That is right.

Mr. Caskey: I will offer it.

Mr. Wright: We object to it until we have had a chance to look at it, and perhaps we may want to cross-examine on it.

Mr. Caskey: Seems hardly a valid objection.

Judge Hand: You object to it?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: Have they already stipulated what it is?

Mr. Wright: There are certain data of the same character that was furnished us in the form of answers to interrogatories. It isn't clear to me just, without further examination, exactly what has been offered here, what it is supposed to show.

Judge Bright: Isn't it offered to show the rental does not pay for the cost of the print in some 2,000 houses?

Mr. Caskey: That is entirely correct, your Honor.

(1490)

This was prepared, I might say, by the International Business Machines Company.

Judge Bright: That makes it authentic?

Mr. Caskey: Tends to.

Mr. Seymour. We are all going to have some statistical material to offer at some time and I should think —I don't know about this particular one—we should offer them subject to correction. Let them go in and if there are any corrections to be made, let them be made.

Mr. Wright: Obviously it does not seem to me there is anything here which makes one difference one way or the other, but I do think, inasmuch as we have taken great pains to furnish the defendants with all the statistical material long in advance of offering any, as a matter of common courtesy, we should be able to receive in advance of an offer such statistical material as they want to put in.

Judge Bright: How does that prove——

Mr. Proskauer: It is very difficult for us to do that. In my case, I have had to request a vast amount of statistical material in the light of the way the Government's case went in, and we are doing the best we can. We are going to give them to Mr. Wright, but they are all practically just statistics, which are not controversial on that basis.

(1491)

Mr. Wright: I did not hear your comment, Judge Bright.

Judge Bright: What proof is that of the absence or presence of combination or conspiracy?

Mr. Wright: I do not see that it affords any. It seems to me to be completely irrelevant, but I would object to it on that ground also.

Judge Hand: You have it already in in some form?

Mr. Wright: What we have in, as I understand it, is the total rental and the total number of exhibitions in these towns of this picture. We do not have in, as I understand it, the figure that he testified to as to the total number of those bookings which called for a film rental of less than $100. As I gather it, that is what it is supposed to contribute that wasn't in the record before.

Mr. Caskey: Shows the necessity for the staggering of runs and for clearance among a large number of accounts.

Judge Hand: We will admit the thing and you can correct it, Mr. Wright. I am not at all sure that it has any bearing on anything.

Mr. Wright: I do not think we have any interest in it, but it is a little difficult to say without seeing it.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Exhibit (1492) F-11 for identification received in evidence.)

Q. Mr. Kupper, what does the term first-run in Baltimore mean? A. It means the showing of our picture, first exhibition to the public in a theatre of our picture in that area, in that city.

Q. What does the term "second-run" mean? A. It means second showing of our picture in a theatre, showing it to the public.

Mr. Wright: May I have that last answer read?

(Answer read.)

Q. "A theatre"? A. "A theatre," yes, second-run. Second run is the second-run and follows the first one.

Q. Not the same theatre? A. Not the same theatre, no.

Judge Bright: Are there first-run showings simultaneously throughout the different parts of the United States?

The Witness: Very often, your Honor. First-run in this city, first-run in that city. Generally a first-run in every city, even small towns, like, there is a first-run in that town.

Judge Bright: When there is a first running of a picture in Radio City here in New York, are there other first-runs showing in other places?

The Witness: There have been, but, generally,
(1493)
Radio City would be the first run in the United States, but there have been pictures. If we take a picture in, like, the Roxy, which is a similar fine theatre as the Music Hall, we sometimes have the same picture, not the same print, a print of that same picture playing in Los Angeles, in Chicago, and playing in New York, too.

Mr. Caskey: I think I can clear that up for you.

Q. "State Fair" during the fourth week of release, Mr. Kupper, played in how many theatres? A. 318.

Q. Those were all over the United States?

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Fourth week of release where?

The Witness: Well, it is from the time we tabulate and set it up as a released picture in our books. That would be the United States.

Judge Bright: They are also called first-runs, those 318 houses?

The Witness: I would assume that early in the game they would all the first-run bookings, yes, sir, in that particular week.

Judge Hand: When you talk about first run that run is the first that there is in a particular locality?

The Witness: That is correct, sir.

Q. And simultaneously with the showing in the Roxy in New York a picture may show in the Fox theatre in (1494)
Michigan, Fox theatre in Philadelphia and the New theatre in Baltimore, some theatre in Atlanta, and another in Kansas City? A. That is right, but it doesn't always follow that way. Sometimes we play—hold a picture and open it at the Roxy and nobody will get it until we sell it to the public, exploit it and let the world know what a great attraction it is.

Judge Hand: You don't call that first-run?

The Witness: Yes, sir, that is first-run. Might be a pre-release or advance.

Judge Hand: That is what you call it.

The Witness: Generally, but it is the first-run showing.

Q. Let us take an exchange area like New Haven, when the picture is released in New Haven Exchange Area, where is it shown first? A. Generally shown in the best theatre in New Haven or Bridgeport. Generally in New Haven is where they start.

Q. Where else? A. Then the other larger towns. May show simultaneously in Bridgeport, Hartford, towns like that, the larger cities. Only have three or four prints in the area and can only show in that many cities.

Q. At the same time that the picture is showing in New Haven and Bridgeport and Hartford, it may be showing in Denver and Pueblo and Colorado Springs? A. That is right.
(1494a)

Q. Tell Judge Bright under the pre-consent decree selling, you had a so-called national release date, did you not?

A. Yes, we had what is termed a national release. It is a fixed date on which we released the picture generally.

Q. And in those days you attempted to have a picture released, generally speaking, simultaneously all over the country? A. In each exchange area, yes, sir.

(1495)

Judge Hand: How can you have a pre-release in New York, Chicago and San Francisco at the same time?

The Witness: You may have it—well, you may have one generally pre-release showing.

Judge Bright: In how many theatres do you give pre-release showings?

The Witness: Well, you can't determine that. For instance, your Honor, we opened up our picture, this State Fair, we opened it up in Des Moines, Iowa, because the picture suited that locality. As a matter of fact, the author of the story, Phil Strong, came from out there. And we had a simultaneous showing in two theatres out there which was long before any other city in the United States—I mean, any general area, got it. Right on top of that, the very next day, what we did in that area, because of its suitability, we sent in and had 65 towns lined up. Well, there are no 65 big towns in Iowa, in the whole State of Iowa, or of the area of Nebraska, which adjoined it, but they played, as far as we could, down the line in the towns so they could get the benefit of all the ballyhoo, as we call it, exploitation. That, to me, would be a pre-release of that particular picture. We started that off, we launched it there. You take another picture, some of ours, the picture we are playing at the Roxy Theatre now. We opened it at the Roxy Theatre. It is now in its fifth week, and that did not play anywhere in the United States. We opened it there; we wanted to exploit it, we wanted to sell it by radio and campaign it throughout, so the public would know what a great attraction it was, and the other theatres would know, and that is termed a pre-release sometimes.

Q. What did you do with "Captain Eddie"? A. We took it out to Columbus, Ohio, and opened it out there with a great big outdoor show, I mean we had Rickenbacker there, and a lot of exploitation, and had a lot of newspaper publicity, and we played a lot of towns out in that territory because it was suitable out there, he was well known out there, went through there. It was a pre-release. Happened to be in that area. That played even before New York, and a lot of cities more important and bigger and larger.

Judge Hand: It is beyond me to understand the difference between pre-release and first-run. I don't know that it is important. They seem, when they feel like it, to have an indefinite number of either at the same time.

Mr. Caskey: I think that is correct, sir, and I think that the only difference between pre-release and first-run is the amount of exploitation and fanfare that accompanies it.

Q. Mr. Kupper, how long has the system of successive runs been familiar to you? A. Since I have been with Fox. When I came with them there were still runs. That is 27 years now, I think.
(1497)

Q. Were they—— A. 26.

Q. — in the larger cities selling first-runs, second-runs, third-runs, and so on down the line? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were those runs separated by an interval of time? A. Most of them always are.

Q. And the interval of time in those days was called protection? A. That is right.

Q. Today it is called clearance? A. That is right.

Q. How long has the industry practice of granting clearance to the prior run existed? A. I believe currently with the run idea. When that was set up, it automatically went hand in hand with it.

Q. Let us have a specific example, New York. Where do you play your Fox pictures first? A. Well, we play most of them, important ones, in the Roxy Theatre. They haven't the time to play them all so we sell them to various theatres. The last three years we sold some, three to the Music Hall, which is an independent operation, we also sold several to the Rialto Theatre, and we sold several to the Globe and the Columbia Theatre, the Victoria Theatre on Broadway.

Q. After they have their first engagement in the Roxy or some other Broadway theatre, where do they next play in the five Boroughs of New York? A. We play at the Albee Theatre in Brooklyn, is the next showing of our picture (1498) from the Roxy or from most any other house that it mght be played first-run.

Q. How long a period of time elapses between the close of the Roxy or the other Broadway house and the Albee? A. About seven days, I think. Maybe fourteen, but generally seven.

Q. Following the exhibition at the Albee Theatre in Brooklyn, where are the pictures played? A. We then play a number of engagements simultaneously here in New York with the RKO Circuit.

Q. That is in Manhattan? A. In Manhattan, New York.

Q. And the Bronx? A. And the Bronx.

Q. And then the next exhibitions? A. They play subsequent-run houses, RKO houses, and I think in Brooklyn and Staten Island, possibly Long Island—Staten Island anyhow.

Q. Brooklyn and Queens? A. That is right.

Q. After the picture commenced to play in the RKO neighborhood houses first week in Manhattan, how long then is the picture exhibited in the various theatres in New York? A. How long is it exhibited?

Q. How many weeks? A. You mean following that?

Q. That is right. A. Generally seven days. Generally run seven days down the line. All runs generally go that way in New York. That is not true everywhere.

Q. About how long does it take to clear pictures through all the various theatres that play them in New York? A. They clear New York faster than they do most territories. I would say maybe seven or eight weeks.

(1499)

Q. Referring to Exhibit F-10, I notice a space under the schedule headed, "Admission Prices Per Person, Excluding Taxes." In licensing motion pictures to exhibitors is it customary to have those spaces filled in? A. Our instructions are to the salesmen that they must fill it in. Sure, it is customary. Have had a clause for the admission price in contracts away back—I don't know, as far as I can recall. May not be in the same order, in the same set-up, but I remember the admission prices being on contracts for years.

Q. You license, you have already testified, a considerable proportion of your better pictures on percentage? A. Yes, we sell quite a few pictures on percentage. In fact we like to sell every theatre we do business with some pictures on percentage.

Q. Why is that? A. We like to know—we have a right under our contract, to get the box office statement. Know what the theatres can bring in on various types of pictures and we have a pretty good gauge on the business the theatre can do.

Q. Does the information you get when you license the picture on percentage help you in pricing the so-called flat rental pictures? A. Naturally, your better pictures are accustomed to earning, let us say, hypothetically, two thousand dollars. Well, as you graduate down, that is what your best pictures can earn, there is certainly some relationship between the box office value down to the next group, down to your last flat film rental, and you cannot expect a cheap B picture, like Ladies in Washington, to get $2000 if your fine pictures can only earn $2000 on percentage.

(1500)

Q. Does the knowledge that the best pictures will earn $2000 on percentage aid you in the pricing of your pictures? A. I would say it does.

Q. When you negotiate a license with a first-run exhibitor, say in Baltimore, how is the admission price that is to be inserted in the contract to be agreed upon? A. Well, admission price, you generally know what the man is charging, he generally establishes his own admission price, and unless you are selling a picture that you are going to insist on getting an advance admission price for, you usually accept what he generally charges because he has established that as the best price that that area or that theatre can sell the merchandise to the public at, and we usually let his judgment guide us, his knowledge.

Q. You have an interest in that price? A. Oh, definitely.

Q. And an interest that it shall be the price which will attract the largest patronage? A. Yes, sir.

(1501)

Q. One of my associates says the largest number of patrons at the largest price they will pay? A. Yes, sir, that is right.

Q. What exactly that figure is is ordinarily left to the judgment of the exhibitor? A. I would say in most every case it is that—most cases.

Q. In each of those cases the salesman and usually the branch manager, at least in the more important situations, is familiar with the price which is being charged? A. I would say he is, yes.

Q. At the time the agreement is made with the first-run exhibitor, let us say for example Baltimore, as to the admission price that he will charge during the engagement of the pictures which are licensed to him, what agreement is reached with him as to what other exhibitors will have to charge when they play your pictures? A. I don't believe any.

Q. When you go to the second-run exhibitor in Baltimore, do you negotiate as to what admission price he will charge? A. No, sir—I mean that he will charge?

Q. Yes. A. Of course, you know it is the same thing as the first-run, you are interested in what he is going to charge you for your pictures, I mean, what he is going to sell them to the public for. It is the same situation right on down the line, on third, fourth and seventh runs.

Q. With each succeeding run you make that contract as to the admission price which that exhibitor will charge? A. Well, that is, you take the price that he has set up and established in his theatre, and that is what you agree is the admission price generally for what you are going to sell your merchandise in that theatre for.

Q. But at each level, at each run, you have an interest in the price which he will charge? A. Yes, sir, definite interest.

(1503)

Q. Because, obviously, 40 percent of 30 cents is greater than 40 per cent of 20 cents? A. Right.

Q. At each one of these negotiations is there any agreement reached as to what price you will require the succeeding run, the following run to charge? A. No, not that I know of.

Q. You haven't made any such agreement? A. No, sir.

Q. It appears in the evidence that in some of the cities of the United States the clearance provision will read something like this, 21 days over houses charging 35 cents, 35 days over houses charging 30 cents, 42 days over houses charging 25 cents, 73 days over houses charging 20 cents. You know of such contracts? A. Yes.

Q. And you enter into those contracts with the first-run exhibitor, do you? A. That is what you agree that you are going to grant him, that clearance, that much between those specific price houses, which are less admission than you get from him.

Q. When you go to the second-run, having made such a contract with the first-run exhibitor, is there any maximum, is there any limit on the maximum price which that second-run exhibitor may charge? A. No. If he is playing my pictures on percentage, I would like him to charge even more than we agree to in the contract. We can get more.

Q. Taking my specific case, where the clearance with the first-run exhibitor reads 21 days over 35-cent houses, now, you go to negotiate with your first choice for a second-run exhibition? A. Yes.

(1504)

Q. Is there any limitation on the maximum price he may charge? A. No.

Q. Charge 35 cents or any other price he wants to charge? A. If he can charge more, he may charge more. I wouldn't object.

Q. So far as you know, the first-run exhibitor wouldn't object? A. I don't believe he would. I think he would be very happy.

Q. But if the exhibitor wants to charge less than 35 cents, then you have to move his clearance back? A. If he reduced it, I would certainly move him back. You would have to move him back.

Q. If he wants to play 21 days after first-run he has to charge a minimum of 35 cents? A. That is right.

Q. And if he is not willing to charge that price and wants to charge 30 cents, then, in my example, he would play 42 days after? A. That is right.

Q. And if he wanted to charge only 20 cents, he would play 70 days after? A. 70 or 80, depending on what the figure is.

Q. In many other cities of the country the clearance simply reads, in the favor of the first-run, a specified number (1505) of days over all other runs in the city, is it not? A. That is right.

Q. In granting clearance to the first-run theatre, is there any difference between the theatres which are operated by some one of the defendants in this case and theatres which are operated by what have been called independents? A. I missed the first couple of words of your question.

Q. (Read.) A. Oh, we treat them all alike, whether independent or an affiliated. The clearance has got to be worked out and settled and solved. There is no rule of thumb for any clearance anywhere and depends on the locality. Matter of negotiation.

Q. I show you several sheets which are in evidence as a part of Exhibit 41 and Exhibit 42. Calling your attention now to the City of Akron, Ohio, the first-run pictures are sold to an independent? A. Yes, sir, Shea Theatres. Used to be Pfeiffer & Shea.

Q. What clearance do you grant the first-run there? A. 42 days over subsequent-run, 30 days over Cuyahoga Falls, Barberton, Kenmore, and 14 days over Kent and Ravenna.

Q. Next sheet. A. This is Washington.

Q. Baltimore, Maryland. A. Baltimore, Maryland.

Q. Sell independent there? A. We do. Mr. Marcus Mechanic, who operates the New theatre.
(1506)

Q. You grant clearance? A. Yes.

Q. What is the clearance? A. First run in Baltimore, Maryland, 21 days over all subsequent run. Within 30 days of availability.

William J. Kupper—By Defendant—Direct

Q. And the next city? A. Camden, New Jersey.

Q. Whom do you sell there? A. Mr. John Varbalow.

Q. Is he an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the clearance there? A. 14 days after—wait a minute. This is first-run Camden. Exhibitor to play pictures 14 days after first-run Philadelphia, 14 days clearance on all theatres situated at Camden, Gloucester, Cumberland, Burlington and Salem Counties, and the town of Hammonton, New Jersey.

Mr. Caskey: I have selected out of the exhibit, but I will not have read, but I would like the stenographer to copy it, the clearance in Canton, Ohio; Elizabeth, New Jersey; Erie, Pennsylvania; Fall River, Massachusetts; Fort Wayne, Indiana; Jersey City; Louisville; New Bedford; Providence; Reading, Pennsylvania; Richmond; Utica, Wilmington, Delaware; Nashville, Tennessee.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. Is there anything you are asking him to copy that is not already in evidence in the interrogatory answers?

Mr. Caskey: I am asking him to copy from the interrogatory just the clearance so that it will be in the stenographic minutes and not buried in those enormous books where it is utterly inaccessible to anybody.

(1507)

Mr. Wright: It seems to me it is hardly necessary for him to have them copied in the record. If he wants to use them in the briefs, he may call them to the Court's attention. They are right in evidence.

Mr. Caskey: I want examples in the stenographic minutes. I can either ask the witness specifically about them or I can have them copied, whichever you prefer, Mr. Wright. It is a matter of indifference to me.

Mr. Wright: I have no objection to having them copied. I am just making the suggestion to try to keep the record within bounds.

(The matter referred to is as follows:)

"Canton, Ohio. First run Canton, Ohio—Thirty (30) days clearance over second run Canton, Ohio.

Elizabeth, New Jersey. 14 days after first run Newark. First run in Elizabeth. 21 days clearance on all theatres in Elizabeth and Elizabethport. 14 days clearance on all theatres in the towns of Hillside, Westfield and Elmora. 7 days clearance on all theatres in the towns of Cranford, Lindon and Rahway.

Erie, Pennsylvania. First run, Erie, Pa. (28) days ahead of subsequent runs and Yesleyville 14 days ahead of Northeast, Girard, North Girard, Albion, (1508)
Union City, Cambridge Springs.

Fall River, Mass. First run on release. 28 days clearance over Capitol. 35 days over Park and Strand. 90 days over Plaza and Royal.

Fort Wayne, Indiana. 1st run. 60 days clearance over 2nd run. 14 days clearance over Churubusco, Huntington, New Haven, Kendallville, Decatur, Columbia City, Garrett, Auburn, Bluffton, Albion, South Whitley and Hicksville, Ohio, providing played within 30 days after National release date. To be played at the rate of one per week as and if available starting approximatey September 1943.

Jersey City, New Jersey. Pictures to become available 7 days after completion of the first run New York City engagement. First run in Hudson County. 14 days clearance on all theatres in Jersey City.

Louisville, Ky. 1st run. 56 days clearance over subsequent runs. 14 days clearance over all towns within a radius of 25 miles. To be played at the rate of one per week, as and if available starting approximately 9/1/43.

New Bedford, Mass. 60 days over second run. 30 days over Fairhaven.

Providence, R. I. On release 21 days clearance over 1st run Pawtucket & Woonsocket; 30 days clearance over Empire, Columbia, Uptown and Liberty Theatres, Providence, also Centerdale, E. Providence, Mt. Pleasant, Riverside, Auburn and 50 days over Olympia Theatre, Olneyville, 30 days clearance over Hope Street Theatre, 1 day clearance over Wakefield, 14 days clearance over Palace-Arctic, Bristol, Warren, E. Greenwich, Foxboro, Mansfield and Attleboro.
(1509)

Reading, Pa. 28 days clearance on all theatres in Reading. 7 days clearance on Pottstown, to play when and as available.

Richmond, Va. 1st run Richmond, Va. 45 days protection from last playdate, over all theatres in City of Richmond, Va., as available.

Utica, N. Y. 1st run—30 days clearance over subsequent runs in Utica, and within a radius of 15 miles of the Olympic Theatre.

Wilmington, Del. 1st run Wilmington, Del.—21 days clearance over all subsequent runs after second week.

Nashville, Tenn. 60-day clearance over second run."

Q. Now, in granting clearance to first-run exhibitors in the United States is there any distinction made by you between affiliated and independent exhibitors? A. No, sir.

Q. So far as you know, does every so-called first-run exhibitor take clearance over the theatres in his competitive area? A. They do.

(1509a)

Q. When you come to the second-run theatres, is there any distinction made as to affiliated or independent theatres in the granting of clearance? A. No, sir.

Q. So far as you know, do all the second-run theatres take clearance over subsequent-run theatres? A. I believe they do.

(1510)

Q. And in those towns where there are four runs, does the third run take clearance over the fourth run? A. Generally; and if you would go on to the seventh or eighth, it would be the same story. The fellow ahead wants his protection, he wants his clearance before the next fellow was going to play it.

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, I want a word about the area over which clearance is granted. Do you know what the area of clearance is for the Music Hall or the Roxy? A. Well, the area varies. The Roxy and the Music Hall take a larger area than another theatre might take. They are palaces, they are show places, palaces, and by virtue of that alone they attract a greater attention and a greater public interest, and it naturally would spread out further than a small theatre.

Q. Now, the Roxy takes clearance directly or indirectly over all of New Jersey, does it not? A. I am not so sure that it takes all of New Jersey, but it takes it over a considerable part of New Jersey.

Q. It takes clearance over Newark? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it gets clearance over all of the cities that Newark takes clearance over? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. It takes clearance to the east as far as Stamford? A. Yes, sir, it does, and out in Long Island, out through there; way out in Long Island it takes clearance over.

(1511)

Q. Do you know whether it takes it even over Suffolk County? A. I do not think it goes in through Suffolk County, but it does for Nassau County; I know definitely about that.

Q. Now, what is the justification for that extensive area of clearance? A. Well, first of all, they get a pretty good admission price, a much higher admission price than is generally paid by any other theatres in the country; and as I say, they are tremendous institutions, and they have been developed as such, just their appointments alone, and they generally have the first showing of a picture in there, they are entitled to that, and to get that; that is another means by which they can maintain that terrific high admission price, so we, in turn, can get a proper film rental, a film rental in keeping with the terrific costs that we have in production. Without being able to get that kind of revenue you would not be able to have that kind of pictures.

Q. Now, as to the extent in time of clearance, you testified, I believe, that the Roxy takes only 7 or 14 days clearance as far as time is concerned? A. That is what the contract specifies.

Q. I noticed in examining Exhibit 41 and 42 that in Baltimore the clearance is 21 days between first-run and second-run. A. Yes.

Q. Why should it be larger than it is between the Roxy and the Albee Theatre in Brooklyn? A. I will tell you, there is no rule of thumb on any of this clearance. It has all been worked out locally, and all these local conditions and the competitive situation have a lot to do with it; and each one is a separate problem of its own.

(1512)

Q. It is also true, is it not, that generally speaking the periods of clearance are longer in the smaller cities than they are in the larger cities? A. That is correct.

Q. Is it true that the clearances in the middlewest, southwest, tend to be longer than they are in the east? A. Yes, much more.

Q. Why is that? A. Well, you know, the population isn't so great out there, and it is nothing uncommon for somebody in Oklahoma who lives maybe 40 or 50 miles away from Tulsa, Oklahoma, to drive in to see a picture. The form of amusement and entertainment is not like it is in a city like New York, or something of that nature; so they draw from a great area. They may be sparsely settled and may be small population, and the theatres that generally follow those are not such good theatres either, in those little communities, and they draw from them, naturally.

Q. Mr. Kupper, is it the practice in the motion picture industry for the distributor to grant clearance to a large town over theatres in a smaller town within a reasonable geographical area? A. Yes, especially if they are considered (1513) competitive. And they generally are competitive.

Q. The theatre, the first-run theatre in the county seat down in Ohio or Missouri takes clearance over theatres in the smaller towns? A. Around that area, yes. It does not have to be a county seat. It can be a more important, a bigger situation, and it is going to take clearance over a smaller situation.

Q. Even though it is a separate political subdivision? A. Yes.

Q. A separate city? A. Yes.

Q. So you have the large showcase windows, like Roxy, taking clearance over a wide metropolitan area? A. Yes.

Q. Then you have clearance in each competitive area of the theatres over the other? A. Yes.

Q. And you also have clearance of the larger towns over the smaller towns? A. That is right.

Q. And was it the purpose of your company in 1940 in agreeing to Section 8 of the consent decree to create a machinery whereby disputes as to the width of the area or the length of the time of the clearance could be settled by an outsider?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, the decree speaks for itself. It is in the record. I do not think this witness's testimony as to its purpose adds anything.

Judge Hand: All right, I will sustain the objection.

(1514)

Q. Now I come to the problem of the selection of a customer: I believe you testified that in 1922 you went to Albany as branch manager? A. Yes.

Q. That was in the days of silent pictures? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you got there was there a customer for Fox pictures already in existence? A. There was.

Q. Who was it? A. I think the man's name was Elliott, John Elliott. He had what was called the Clinton Square Theatre; it was an old church, renovated; an upstairs house, as a matter of fact. You had to walk up quite a flight of stairs, which is unusual for a theatre.

Q. How many first-run theatres were there in Albany in 1922? A. Well, I think there were three; maybe four. Four. I guess there were four.

Q. Now, what happened to Mr. Elliott's theatre? A. It was obvious it could not go on. It had to be torn down and rebuilt. He went out of business. He sold it and walked away from it.

Q. Then what happened? A. You mean with our product?

Q. That is right, Fox's product. A. We tried to get a new customer, and we did succeed in getting a new customer.

Q. Who was that? A. I believe we sold an independent fellow called Buckley, Chris Buckley. He had one and he acquired another theatre, Harmonis Bleecker Hall, and a theatre called Leland.

(1515)

Q. How do they compare with the other theatres in the town? A. Well, the two houses were better, I would say, in those days that were owned by Moe Mark, the Strand, and I believe RKO or Proctor's had a theatre in there in those days, vaudeville and pictures.

Q. That was before RKO was formed? A. Well, before RKO; but Proctor's.

Q. Why didn't you sell your pictures to Proctor's or the Strand Theatre? A. I don't think we could. We tried, I know we tried to sell Moe Mark. I know I sold him my newsreels but I could not sell him my feature. I tried.

Q. He did not want to buy? A. No; he had enough product, product he liked better than mine.

Q. So you sold to Buckley and the Leland? A. That is right.

Q. Then what happened, if you recall? A. Well, later on Buckley, he sold his theatres to RKO—I think they were back in existence then—I think he sold them or made some sort of a pooling arrangement, and we continued supplying our product to them; and then—do you want me to go right on up to date?

Q. Yes. A. Then they made some sort of arrangement with a man called Fabian, who now operates the two theatres up there, and I think he has got some arrangement with the two Warner houses; but the picture kept flowing right there, from the same customer, you might say, from the beginning, who just either pooled or sold it; but they went through those theatres; and we eventually got into better theatres by virtue of the development.

(1516)

Q. And the customer whom you now offer your pictures to in Albany is the successor of Chris Buckley's operation? A. Well, we have a split of our product in Albany.

Q. Yes, I understand. A. I think we sell two-thirds to Mr. Fabian, who has the best house, incidentally, and one-third Warner's.

Q. But am I correct in saying that the customer that you now serve, at least the Fabian that you now serve, is the development right straight through from Chris Buckley? A. I would say that is the historical development right up to date.

Q. And generally speaking, has there been some such historical development in every city in the country? A. I would say so, yes, sir. I know as far as our company's pictures and product is concerned that is so.

Q. Now, without disparaging the product at all, in the early 1920s what was the relative standing of the Fox product? A. Well, it was not as good as some others and some were better than others. It was just one of those things. (1517)
We made a different type of merchandise. We made more of the action type, melodramatic type. We did not go in for the serious dramas in those days, although we had some. We did not have the star value that some of the other companies had. It might have been considered perhaps inferior than other products.

Q. And as you sold your product throughout the country were you able always to license it to the best theatre in the town? A. No, we were not.

Q. Or to get the highest terms from that theatre? A. No, sir, though we tried.

Q. Then what did you do with it? A. Sold it to the next best one we could sell, get our revenue back and make a profit for our company.

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, it has appeared that many of these theatres in these larger cities play for at least one week. Are there any weeks of the year that are better than others in the motion picture business? A. Yes, sir, certainly there are. Any week that has got a holiday is better than any other week or some other weeks that have not got a holiday:

Q. And is the week that contains Columbus Day better than the succeeding week? A. If it does not have a holiday, yes, certainly.

Q. And if you have a picture of high quality, do you (1518) attempt to secure bookings for that holiday? A. If it is released then, I do. I attempt to get the best time for every picture, but particularly when there are holidays I go out to get that, plenty of time in advance. I want to be protected. In other words, I want now to be set up for Christmas, not only Thanksgiving but Christmas. I am looking ahead for that week.

Q. There are none of your rivals in the courtroom, are there? A. Well, they are doing the same thing.

Q. Are there certain weeks in the year to be avoided? A. Yes, sir, definitely. Holy Week and the week before Christmas. They are two outstanding weeks to keep away from.

Q. And do you try not to have your better pictures shown those weeks? A. I try to and I avoid it if possible.

Q. Now, in the theatres which change twice a week, is there such a thing as preference as to what part of the week you will play? A. I have a preference.

Q. What is that preference? A. It is the weekend playing time, Saturday and Sunday playing time.

Judge Hand: We have had this and had this. What good does it do to keep repeating this?

Mr. Caskey: Well, the purpose of repeating it is that the charge is conspiracy and a combination to restrain trade; and each of us in the absence of some (1519) concession from the plaintiff is under a duty to show that far from restraining trade we compete for it. I realize that it must have a very familiar sound by now.

Judge Hand: It certainly does.

Mr. Caskey: It is third-run, I realize, but it is equally true. And if you will recall just a few moments ago when I tried to get a concession, Mr. Wright too refused to make it as to the affiliated theatres. He still contended that the playing time instead of being competed for was divided or arranged in some manner that I do not quite comprehend. That is the reason and the only reason for the inquiry. If we have any limitation of issues, why, we can limit the examination.

Judge Hand: Go ahead.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, does this competition or this seeking of preferred time apply in the cities in which National Theatres operates as to Fox product? A. Certainly it does.

Q. Do you attempt to get from the theatres of National preferred playing time? A. I attempt and I fight for it.

Q. And you get it? A. Not always. Sometimes. But I fight for it.

Q. Now, does the effort to get preferred playing time occur in the cities in which one of these defendants has all (1530) of the theatres? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it occur in the cities in which more than one of the defendants operate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any distinction? A. No distinction whatever.

Q. And does it apply in theatres where your customers are so-called independents? A. It certainly does apply. It applies everywhere. I want important playing time and preferred playing time every time I can get it and as often as I can get it.

Q. And does the amount of preferred playing time that Mr. Friedl will give you in Minneapolis have any relation to the amount of preferred playing time that Mr. Fitzgerald will give the Paramount in Milwaukee? A. I would say none whatever.

Q. Did you ever hear of the suggestion before? A. No.

Q. In seeking preferred playing time from the Loew theatres in Columbus, is it measured by the preferred playing time which a subsidiary of National gives the Loew product in Los Angeles? A. I never heard of it being and never thought it was, and never knew it could be.

Q. It has never been discussed? A. Never.

Judge Hand: How much more have you got for this witness?

Mr. Caskey: Oh, considerable.

Judge Hand: All right. We will adjourn until tomorrow at 10.30.

(Adjourned to October 30, 1945, at 10.30 a.m.)

(1521)

New York, October 30, 1945, 10:30 a.m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Whittlesey: If your Honors please, before Mr. Caskey continues with his witnesses, there is a development in the case of the RKO defendant which I felt I should advise the Court about at the opening of court. We are scheduled to go on with our witnesses immediately following the conclusion of the testimony for Fox. I understand that Mr. Caskey expects to finish some time today with his witnesses. Mr. Leisure, who is to conduct the defense for RKO, advises me this morning that he is in bed with a fever of 101 and will not be in a position to go ahead today, but hopes to be by tomorrow. So if it becomes necessary for us to go ahead today, I am afraid we will have to ask the Court's indulgence for a little more time.

WILLIAM J. KUPPER, resumed the stand.

Direct Examination Continued by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Kupper, I want to dwell for a moment on this subject of simultaneous first-run exhibitions throughout the country.

(1522)

(Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-12 for identification marked.)

Q. I hand you a schedule which is marked Defendant's Exhibit F-12 for identification, and ask you what that contains? A. It is the film rental that we earned on a picture called a Tree Grows in Brooklyn, which played first-run and extended engagements in the 92 cities with a population of more than 100,000. It shows the exact revenue, it shows the percentage of the revenue.

Q. Does it show for each city the exact play dates when the picture played first-run in those cities? A. Yes, it does.

Q. If there was a move-over or carry-over, does it show the dates of that exhibition? A. It does.

Q. And the name of the theatre? A. The name of the theatre.

Q. Then it shows the precise film rental received? A. Right.

Judge Bright: Is this all first-run?

Q. Mr. Kupper, this is first-run only? A. First-run showing only.

Q. In the 92 cities with a population of 100,000 or more? A. That is correct.

Q. On the front of it is there a recapitulation of the revenue? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much do you anticipate the total revenue from (1523) all exhibitions in the United States in all theatres will be? A. $3,375,000—slightly better.

Q. How much has actually been received? A. As of the week ending October 13th—15th, I think it is.

Q. 13. A. 13, we have received $3,175,554.

Q. In the regular course of your business are you able to estimate the amount of additional revenue which will be received after October 13th? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you estimate that as how much additional? A. About $200,000 more.

Q. In the aggregate, how much revenue was received from the first-run theatres in the 92 cities? A. $966,894.45.

Q. That is what percentage of the total anticipated domestic revenue? A. 28.62 per cent.

Q. That is slightly more than one-quarter of the total revenue you expect to receive? A. That is correct.

Q. Turn over to New York, and tell me how much revenue came from the Roxy Theatre? A. The Roxy Theatre opened its engagement on February 28th and played through April 10th, a period of six weeks. Our total film rental for that engagement was $175,300.

Q. Lumping the exhibition at the Roxy Theatre with the exhibition in those theatres operated by National, which played first-run, what was the total revenue received? It is on the recapitulation. A. I think it says it here, $416,704.15. (1524)

Q. What percentage of the National anticipated revenue is that? A. 12.34.

Q. The Roxy is sold separate from the subsidiaries of National, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much of the revenue was derived from the first-run theatres operated by Loew? A. $72,919.18.

Q. That is what percentage of the National anticipated gross? A. 2.16 per cent.

Q. How much of it was received from theatres which are affiliated with RKO? A. $40,192.43.

Q. What percentage of the national anticipated revenue is that? A. 1.19.

Q. Treating together the various theatres in which Paramount has an interest, except those located in Oklahoma City, how much revenue was derived from those theatres? A. I think you also want to exclude Butterfield, too.

Q. Excluding the Butterfield circuit? A. $191,178.58. (1525)

Q. And treating that together for the purpose of this discussion, what percentage is that of the national revenue? A. 5.66 per cent.

Q. Now, what did you receive from the theatres in Oklahoma City? A. You are referring to Standard Theatres?

Q. Yes. A. $4,230.45.

Q. Who operates those theatres? A. Joseph Cooper. Standard Theatres Company.

Q. And what percentage of the national revenue was that? A. Less than one per cent, .12.

Q. 12/100ths of 1 per cent? A. That is right.

Q. Now, what did you receive from the Butterfield Circuit? A. $6,813.46.

Q. And what percentage of the national revenue was that? A. .20.

Q. 21/100ths of 1 per cent? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, what revenue did you receive from the Skouras Theatres that operate first-run in the 92 cities? A. $19,467.14.

Q. And that is what percentage? A. 57/100ths of 1 per cent.

Q. And then the Warner Theatres? What amount of revenue? A. $56,172.58.

Q. And what percentage is that? A. 1.66.

Q. And how much did you receive from first-run theatres (1526) in which the defendants have no interest? A. $159,216.48.

Q. And what percentage was that? A. 4.72.

Mr. Caskey: I offer the schedule.

Judge Bright: Mr. Caskey, may I inquire just what the point of that particular exhibit is?

Mr. Caskey: As I understand it, sir, there is a charge of monopolization of the first-run theatres in these 92 cities, and the point of this exhibit is that the first-run revenue which we received from the theatres operated by the four co-defendants is only 11 per cent of our total revenue, the minimum.

Mr. Wright: We have no objection, providing, I take it, the whole exhibit here is being offered, not just the items you are questioning him about?

Mr. Caskey: The whole exhibit, yes.

Mr. Wright: No objection.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-12 for identification received in evidence.)

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this for identification, please.

(Marked Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-13 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: May I have your Honors' leave to have the stenographer copy the recapitulation into (1527)
the stenographic minutes?

Judge Hand: Yes.

(Recapitulation referred to is as follows:)

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Kupper, have you caused to be made up a chart showing the days when "Tree Grows in Brooklyn" played first-run in the 92 cities? A. That is right.

Q. And that was made up from the data which is contained on Exhibit F-12? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you these four sheets marked Defendant's Exhibit F-13 for identification, and explain to the Court what it is. Just stand up and explain it. A. Well, it shows, as I mentioned, the opening date at the Roxy Theatre, which was March 28——

Q. February. A. It says March—I beg your pardon, February 28; and runs through the period to April 10th. Now, that was the first engagement we had, that opening date; and, incidentally, on every one of these sheets it will show all the other towns, giving their opening date. For example, the next line here following New York, the New York engagement, shows that in Chicago we opened the picture on March 17th and ran through April 25th.

Incidentally, in Boston it shows we opened the picture on March 15 and played through the 28th.

The next town shows New Orleans, we opened the 12th of April and played through the 20th. But what this shows is that while New York had started on the 28th of February, while it was showing there it also opened in Chicago, as I mentioned, on the 17th; and while it was playing in New York it also opened in Boston. It did not open on the exact same opening date as it did in New York, but it opened a few days later, or a week or so later. In Minneapolis it opened on the 16th, and so on down; in each town it shows the opening date; and a great many towns were playing it while it was being played in New York.

(1530)

Q. And wherever you draw a straight line down, each one of the red spaces it hits it shows a sumultaneous exhibition? A. Yes.

Judge Bright: These were all first-run?

The Witness: Yes. There are 92 towns that are mentioned in this complaint; and it is the history of the opening date and the sequences in which it played in those towns.

Judge Bright: Is that particular picture, Tree Grows in Brooklyn, a typical picture?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Bright: Ilustrative of this situation?

The Witness: I would say so, yes. And that is an important picture.

Q. And by the first week of April 30 or 40 cities were playing the picture simultaneously? A. I did not count them up, but I can quickly. I would say so; about that many.

(1531)

Q. And some of the theatres which were exhibiting the picture at the same time that it was playing in New York were affiliated with the defendant Paramount on the first list? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some with Loew's? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And some with independents? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Have you marked those that were played with independents?

The Witness: It is very easy. It can be marked.

Mr. Caskey: Well, let us do it right now.

Q. Pittsburgh. A. Independent. I will just put it alongside the name of the town.

Judge Bright: Put "Ind."

The Witness: Yes.

Q. Richmond. A. Independent.

Q. Miami. A. Independent.

Q. Norfolk. A. Independent.

Q. Trenton. A. Independent.

Q. Camden. A. Independent.

Q. Erie. A. Independent.

Q. Wilmington. A. Independent.

Q. Reading. A. Independent.

Q. Utica. A. Independent.

Q. New Bedford. A. Independent.

(1532)

Q. Fall River. A. Independent.

Q. St. Louis. A. Independent.

Q. Akron. A. Independent.

Q. Canton. A. Independent.

Q. Tulsa. A. Independent.

Q. Louisville. A. Independent.

Q. Indianapolis. A. Independent.

Q. Gary. A. That is not shown here. It is not specified. I do not know what the date is. It is left blank.

Q. Fort Wayne. A. Independent.

Q. Baltimore. A. Independent.

Q. Providence. A. Independent.

Q. Tacoma. A. Independent—independent, definitely.

Mr. Caskey: I offer Exhibit F-13 for identification in evidence.

Mr. Wright: I have no objection.

(Defendant Twentieth Century-Fox's Exhibit F-13 for identification received in evidence.)

Judge Hand: There was no such chart offered for Paramount, was there?

Mr. Caskey: Showing the Paramount theatres?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: Yes——

Judge Hand: No, I mean by Paramount.

(1533)

Mr. Seymour: No.

Judge Hand: Mr. Seymour says no.

Mr. Seymour: There was no such chart. But you will remember the testimony which was based upon an exhibit not showing the simultaneous first-runs, but the fact that Paramount Pictures were furnishing first-runs in a number of cities to independent exhibitors.

Judge Hand: Oh yes. I remember that. I should think it would be a good thing for the different defendants to have such a chart. It would be easy enough to get it up.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor is interested in that we will do that.

Judge Hand: Mr. Caskey has got it here, and we can compare them.

Mr. Proskauer: I did not exactly get your Honor's suggestion.

Judge Hand: Well, I thought it might be well to compare these first-runs with independents and with the defendants. Mr. Caskey has introduced this chart. Nothing was introduced of that sort—that is, no chart like that—by Paramount. I suggest that it might aid us to have such charts introduced by the various defendants.

Mr. Davis: May I see Mr. Caskey's chart there, please?

(1534)

Mr. Davis: Your Honor will remember that Loew's introduced a chart showing the derivation of revenue on the typical film "As Thousands Cheer" showing how much of the first-run came from the defendants and the independents, and so on; but this chart, I take it, is a chart of time, not revenue; isn't it, Mr. Caskey?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

Mr. Davis: We shall be very glad to duplicate this.

Judge Hand: Of course, it is up to you whether you think it is worthwhile. I cannot remember very much of the details in this case. It is a complicated sort of case as to what has passed, and I certainly cannot foresee what is coming. I merely made this suggestion.

Mr. Davis: This is very easily done. We would be glad to do it.

Judge Hand: If you all made similar charts we could compare them.

Mr. Davis: I can see how that might save some confusion here. I may say that for our side—and I do not say this by contrast with any of my brothers—I am studiously endeavoring to compress the case I want to present into the smallest possible compass.

Judge Hand: Yes. Are you going on when Mr.
(1535)
Caskey finishes.

Mr. Davis: I won't be ready to go on immediately; but I will say that at the moment it is not my intention to call any other witnesses, but I have some documentary matters which I shall want to present. While, as I say, I do not expect to call any witnesses, I have a stipulation which I shall offer to Mr. Wright when I have completed it as to the testimony of a witness if he were called.

Judge Hand: Yes.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Kupper, returning for a moment to the subject of clearance, who determines the length of the clearance to be granted a prior-run exhibitor? A. Well, we determine that.

Q. And who determines the length to be granted to each succeeding run? A. We determine that.

Q. Who determines the area of the clearance? A. We determine that.

Q. Is clearance something that is sold? A. It is part of your negotiations; a definite part.

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, it appears in evidence that subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation licensed pictures from the defendants in this case. What are the National Theatres? A. The National Theatres are a company operating a lot of theatres that I assume belong to our company, (1536)
Twentieth Century-Fox.

Q. At one time it was known as Wesco? A. As Wesco.

Q. And one of its principal subsidiaries is Fox West Coast Theatres? A. Yes.

Q. The president of National Theatres is who? A. I thought Charles Skouras was president.

Q. Now, it appears in evidence that National Theatres licensed pictures, or its subsidaries do, for exhibition in their theatres from Loew's. Do you have any knowledge of the terms upon which those subsidiaries license pictures from Loew's? A. No, I do not.

Q. It appears that subsidiaries of National license pictures for exhibition in their theatres from Warner's. Do you have any knowledge of the terms under which those pictures are licensed? A. I do not have.

(1537)

Q. Likewise it appears that they negotiate and license pictures from RKO. Do you have any knowledge of the terms of those agreements? A. I do not have.

Q. Likewise it appears that those subsidiaries license and exhibit pictures of Paramount. Do you have any knowledge of the terms upon which those pictures are licensed? A. I do not have. However, it has been inferred to me that Paramount makes a different kind of deal than I make.

Q. In the course of the preparation for this performance, you have read Mr. Reagan's testimony? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you negotiate a license of Fox pictures to Loew's, to the Loew's theatres, do you attempt to secure the same term as subsidiaries of Loew's pay Fox? A. I don't know what their terms are. How could I attempt? I attempt to sell my merchandise for the best price I think it is possible to get, not only with Loew, but with anybody else.

Q. It appears in evidence, Mr. Kupper, that you license the Fox pictures to Loew's for first-run exhibition in Worcester, and it appears in evidence that Loew's licenses to a subsidiary of National the Loew pictures for first-run exhibition in Milwaukee. Do you attempt to match those deals? A. No, sir. How can I match them, if I don't know what they are.

Q. Do you trade screen time in Milwaukee, which National gives Loew's, for screen time in Worcester, which Loew's gives you? A. No, sir.

Q. Is the length of time which a picture will play in a first-run theatre of Loew's in Worcester conditioned upon the length of time which National will play a Loew picture? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Have you ever conditioned it? A. I have never, no.

Q. Have you ever discussed the subject with any buyer of motion pictures for Loew? A. No, sir. In fact, I don't know how long many of Loew's pictures play, or any of them. I don't watch how they book their pictures. I only watch how we book ours and see that I get as much playing time as possible in all situations.

Q. It has been suggested here that there is an exchange of screen time between the defendants. Have you made any such exchange? A. Never.

Q. Have you ever made any attempt to secure from Loew's for exhibition of the Fox pictures, approximately the same number of dollars that National subsidiaries pay to Loew's for the exhibition of Loew pictures? A. No, sir, and again, I never knew what they do. I don't know the dollars. All I was concerned about was getting as much revenue for my pictures as those theatres could afford to pay.

Q. Turning to Warner Bros., it appears in evidence that (1539) you license the first-run of your pictures for exhibition in Cleveland to Warner Bros., and it appears in evidence that a subsidiary of National licenses Warner Bros. pictures for exhibition in its theatres in San Francisco. Are those two deals traded off against each other? A. No, sir.

Q. Is the screen time which you will receive from Warner in Cleveland matched by the screen time which National will give Warners in San Francisco? A. No, sir.

Q. Warners have a picture, I think, called Christmas in Connecticut. Do you attempt to sell a picture like A Tree Grows in Brooklyn to Warners for the same dollars, same terms that National buys the picture from Warners? A. No, I do not. We sell our pictures to Warners, they are on percentage, and I don't know what dollars it is going to bring until the engagement is over, and I don't know how Warners sell their pictures to the other people.

Q. Do you match off top grossing pictures against top grossing pictures? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you say to Warners, "If you will buy A Tree Grows in Brooklyn at 40 per cent of the gross, National will buy a Bette Davis at 40 per cent of the gross"? A. No, sir.

Q. Any such conversation occur? A. No.

Judge Hand: What is the use? This is nothing (1540)
but reiteration of his generalizations.

Mr. Caskey: I think I can condense it then.

Q. If I ask you the same questions with regard to RKO and Paramount, would your answer be the same? A. It would.

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, who negotiates license agreements on behalf of Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Well, our salesmen, our managers, our sales managers, our district managers.

Q. General sales manager? A. General sales manager.

Q. Mr. Connors? A. Mr. Connors.

Q. Are the customers allocated among those various individuals? A. Well, I wouldn't say they are allocated. Each salesman—let us review it from the salesmen on—each salesman has a given geographical territory in his branch and he is responsible for the negotiation and sale of our product there. I would say this, that beyond that point we would try to have the salesman or the sales manager or the branch manager, who is best fitted and perhaps has the best standing or acquaintance with an individual account, to negotiate. He has the better prospect and probably could do better. He lives with the situation, probably more intimate.

Q. Is it your endeavor to have the particular sales representative, whatever his position in the hierarchy, deal with the exhibitor whom you think can accomplish the best results? A. That is the general rule.
(1541)

Q. I wish you would turn to the weekly schedule of revenue. Have you got the one there for the week ended October 13th? A. No, not with me. I got one over there (indicating).

Mr. Wright: Is this a proposed exhibit?
Mr. Caskey: No.

Q. During the week ended October 13th, what number of billings did you have in the aggregate on the 1945-46 product? A. 1,642.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by billings?
The Witness: You want me to answer that?
Judge Bright: Yes.
The Witness: Well, a billing is made from a booking or a run that has played that picture during the week. In other words, on the first picture there, there were 293 runs that played the picture, and they were billed. The billings come through and they are tabulated by our tabulating department which gives us an analysis of where this revenue comes from.

Q. During the same week, how many billings were there on the 1944-1945 product? A. 4,547.

Q. How many during that same week on the 1943-1944 product? A. 492.

(1542)

Q. The aggregate of those three figures is the number of theatres in the United States that played a Twentieth Century-Fox picture during that week? A. May not be all. There may be some more, some prior products, which we could have in our branches, which accumulated and work out. We don't take every picture out of release until it is worn out.

Q. But at least that number of theatres played a Fox picture during the week? A. That is correct.

Q. Turn to the 1944-1945 sheet and take the pictures that have been in release for about twenty weeks, and give us the number of billings during the week? A. Well, that is one, 22 weeks, say, a picture called Bullfighter; it is a comedy with Laurel and Hardy. 314 bookings.

Q. That means that 314 theatres played that picture during that week? A. That is what it means. The next one is 21 weeks, picture called Diamond Horseshoe, 402 bookings.

The next one is a picture called Where Do We Go From Here, 17 weeks in release, that particular week played 419 bookings.

Q. Turn to the 1945-1946 season. How long has A Bell for Adano been out? A. A Bell for Adano has been out for ten weeks. This is a little blurred, but I think it is ten weeks. It played during that week 293 bookings.

Another picture came out simultaneously with that (1543) called Junior Miss, ten weeks of release, played 281 bookings.

Q. Just to emphasize it again, each one of these billings is the number of theatres in the country playing that picture during that week? A. That is right.

Q. Approximately what is the cost of a black and white print? A. You mean positive print?

Q. Positive print. A. Oh, around $150, somewhere in that neighborhood. It depends a lot on the length of all pictures what the cost will be, but somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q. Are war restrictions off now on the number you can print? A. Yes.

Q. How many do you print of a top picture? A. Right now I believe we are printing close to 350, if not 350, but not of all pictures. That is top pictures.

Q. What did you get down to during the war? A. Well, I think 285.

Q. That was the maximum on any picture? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the cost of a sepia print? A. That costs more. You are talking about technicolor?

Q. No, I am talking about brown. A. That costs more. I don't know the exact cost but it is a greater cost than the plain black and white.

Q. What is the cost of the Technicolor print? A. Well, (1544) it runs, as I testified yesterday—a picture costs $344 and some odd cents to as high as—depending on the length again —$750, $800.

Q. Technicolor prints are produced by a corporation in which Fox has no interest? A. That is right.

Q. The laboratory is in—— A. In California.

Q. And it is operated by people with whom you have no interest? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are the prints allocated among the country? A. You want me to give it to you by branch?

Q. Have you got that allocation there? A. Well, I have the approximate allocation in various degrees. I can give it to you roughly.

Q. Will you give us the allocation? A. Yes. I have here an allocation of when we had 329 prints, which were top subjects, making a few more now, we allocated originally for New York 22 prints; Philadelphia 14 prints; Pittsburgh 10 prints; Washington 9 prints; Albany 5 prints; Boston 14; Buffalo 6; New Haven 4; Atlanta 15; Charlotte 8; New Orleans 7; Dallas 14; Memphis 5; Oklahoma City 5; Chicago 11; Detroit 7; Milwaukee 6; Cincinnati 9; Cleveland 8; Indianapolis 7; Des Moines 6; Minneapolis 11; Omaha 5; Kansas City 10; St. Louis 10; Denver 6; Salt Lake 6; Los Angeles 14; Portland 4; San Francisco 10; Seattle 4.

(1545)

Q. How do you determine what number to allocate to each exchange? A. Well, we know what the prospects are in each situation. We have had these exchanges in operation a long time. We know what contracts we have had in the past. And we figure out and know about how many bookings a print can take, which generally averages I think with us around 45. That is not showings, that is bookings. Some bookings are a week, three days, two days, some two or three weeks, but we average them out as that many bookings. We also keep a number of prints as we call, in the home office in reserve, which we send around and use where they are needed in an emergency, or to start getting things rolling. For instance, New York, after you play your first-run, and then plays its run at the Albee Theatre, a great number of theatres then come in what we call New York City, then RKO theatres play simultaneously, so we have to have prints in reserve, so we call them in from branches to take care of those bookings in addition to the regular allotment of 22 that New York has. So let us assume they got all those 55 prints, or, approximately, say 40, if they only got 40, then they would be operating 62 or 65 prints, something like that at that particular time, and that would go on for a period of a few weeks. Of course, Brooklyn, the next place after New York plays, they start off the same way and so on. There are other cities like that too. When the product comes after the first-run, that is, clearance for the subsequent runs following, there may be some cities that may have five or six houses that might play seven-day runs. They all have to be supplied. Well, that branch's particular allotment there may not be able to take care of it, because they may play pictures out in the country, in the country area, I mean important towns but they are in the country area, so we have to be able to draw on our supply and help them during those periods, and that goes on in many cities.

Q. How do you determine the number of prints that you will manufacture? A. Well, that is, as I say—years ago we did not make this many, but as our business grew and our product grew, and we have studied the situation, we have come to the conclusion that this is enough prints for us to handle our business, and I mean enough to be profitable to handle the business.

Q. I am reminded that when I asked you yesterday about the clearance which the Roxy Theatre took over metropolitan New York, I forgot to ask you whether on those pictures which you licensed the Music Hall, you granted the Music Hall the same clearance? A. I believe it is the same.

Q. Prior to the Consent Decree, did Fox license its pictures under franchises? A. We had some franchises, yes. (1547)

Q. What is a franchise? A. A franchise is a—after the negotiation is made, it is reduced to a franchise term and it is for a period of more than one year—some franchises for two, three, five years, some higher, ten years. It is a contract for a period beyond one year.

Q. Are many franchises in existence today? A. No, sir.

Q. For Fox? A. No, sir, not today.

Q. It is in evidence that Fox made a franchise in 1932 with the operator of the Capitol Theatre in Washington at or about—I have forgotten. What were the circumstances of the making of that franchise, if you remember? A. Fox had that at one time, in fact they built it, or had it built, or leased it from some company, or an affiliate of theirs, and we were in difficulty, at least our company, our theatre company was in difficulty, and they decided to lease it to Loew. In fact they were very bad times and we weren't doing good, the company was in trouble, and I think we had a lot of money, perhaps, up on lease, as I have been told, probably a quarter of a million dollars, and a quarter of a million dollars in times when we were having trouble, in difficult times, was a lot of money to help pay the help, so they made a lease with the Loew people to take over and operate the theatre. They were—they got the theatre, let us put it that way, and in making that lease we worked out a franchise that our pictures would continue to play in that theatre.

(1548)

Q. That franchise insured Fox that its better pictures would continue to play in that theatre? A. That is correct.

Q. It has been testified here that that is the best theatre in Washington. A. I think it is the largest and one of the best, if not the best.

Q. It is a very large, de luxe theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Did your company also make master agreements? A. We have had some master agrements.

Q. What is a master agreement? A. Well, a master agreement is a written document of a lot of the negotiations that were made in a deal that were reduced to writing and became part of the contract—became a contract.

(1549)

Q. Was the uniform or standard printed contract made a part of those master agreements? A. I believe they were in all cases.

Judge Goddard: I don't quite understand what a master agreement is.

Q. Describe it, Mr. Kupper.

Judge Bright: When was the first one made?

Q. (Continuing) Give us some specific example.

The Witness: The first one I ever made, your Honor, was with the buyer or the agent for Warner Bros. Circuit, and that took in quite a number of theatres, we negotiated over quite a period of time, and it was their idea that we ought to have something more than just what we had on our printed form and have it all reduced, so it was understandable. I remember we argued over points sometimes weeks before it was reduced to writing, so there would be no misundertanding. And that was the part of the whole contract. As I say, it was all written up. It was a deviation and they would not accept just the regular form, I suppose, and they wanted something different, but, by the same token we also included and had it as a part of this that wherever there is any difference, I suppose, the master agreement would prevail or be the thing that was worked from.

Judge Goddard: Was there a master agreement in all cases or only in exceptional cases?

(1550)

The Witness: No, they were exceptional cases.

Judge Goddard: What is the reason for a master agreement?

The Witness: I could never understand any reason for it. Some buyers for some theatres, particularly Warner—I remember the man, Lakinson. I think it was his brain child, some new idea that he wanted to be built up. That is the first I ever came in——

Q. It is an agreement relating to a number of theatres, is it not? A. That is correct.

Q. Where the exhibitor has a number of theatres? A. That is right.

Q. And where you agree upon certain uniform terms for each of those theatres? A. That is right.

Q. For example, you agreed that the cost of a double feature not to exceed some specific amount may be deducted before computing the percentage? A. Those matters were all in there, yes.

Q. Or that the exhibitor might preview the picture on Saturday nights? A. That is correct, and beyond that it was used—then we made a deal sheet of what we agreed to on each individual situation, and rather than go through all of that for each house and put it up on each individual separate blank form, it was decided to put all these forms on these few, four or five, sheets of paper, whatever it was, that was to govern all of them. That is the principal thing beyond what the actual negotiated terms were for the picture in each house.

Q. Did you make those with independents? A. I think we did. I think we had a couple, but I am not positive. We had very few master agreements.

Q. Do you still make master agreements? A. No, I do not believe we do. In fact, I am sure we do not.

Q. Mr. Kupper, you have told us on several occasions about the New York situation. The Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest in Roxy Theatre? A. Yes, I understand they have a definite interest.

Q. And since 1937 you have licensed Fox pictures to it? A. That is right.

Q. What advantage has there come to Twentieth Century-Fox from exhibiting its pictures in the Roxy Theatre? A. Well, a great deal. It is a definite home for our pictures. It is our show window in this particular area and sometimes it reflects itself throughout the country, depending on when the picture plays.

Q. What picture are you currently playing? A. We are playing "The House on 92nd Street," in its fifth week. It terminates tonight, close of today's exhibition.

Q. Has that picture any nationally known stars in it?

(1552)

A. No, sir, it has not.

Q. Is it a picture made from any—— A. I would say there are names that are known nationally, but they aren't what you would term great box office stars.

Q. Betty Grable isn't in it? A. Oh, no.

Q. Is it made from any nationally known book or magazine article? A. No.

Q. What will the benefit be to Twentieth Century-Fox from the exhibition of that picture for five weeks in Roxy's? A. Well, first of all, I know it is definitely throwing off a terrific rental right from that theatre. Secondly, I know that the exploitation that was given it has gone clean around through this country. It has been surprising, the newspaper campaigns and the radio campaigns; and all the columnists have taken it up, they have studied it and have seen it. And it has sold that picture not only in New York but throughout the country not only to the exhibitors, but also to the public. They have heard of it, in other words.

Judge Bright: The appeal of that picture is not based on the stars that are in it?

The Witness: No, sir.

Judge Bright: Is it on the subject matter?

The Witness: On the story, yes, sir. It is intriguing and it holds you.

Judge Bright: That is about F. B. I. work?

(1553)

The Witness: It is a story about something——

Q. Is five weeks a long engagement in Roxy's? A. Yes, it is. Pictures don't all play five weeks there. Five weeks, I would say, is a good engagement at the Roxy, very good.

Q. In Kansas City, Missouri, where do the Twentieth Century-Fox pictures play first-run? A. Well, we play in two theatres day and date in Kansas City, Missouri, one theatre the Esquire, which is a downtown house, and it is a bandbox type of house, it is a small theatre, but it is well appointed, and we also play at the Uptown Theatre, which is a fine theatre, but it is in more of a residential district, it is away from the downtown business area. That is a large theatre.

Q. Simultaneously with those two theatres do you also play a third theatre? A. Yes, we do, but that is not in Kansas City. You asked me Kansas City, Missouri.

Q. Where is that located? A. It is right outside of Kansas City, across the border from Kansas City, out of the city environs.

Mr. Wright: May we have the name of that one?

The Witness: Fairview.

Q. Fairway, isn't it? A. Yes, Fairway.

Q. In the 14 cities other than Kansas City in which National has first-run theatres, and that is Spokane, Seattle, (1554)
Portland, San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento, Los Angeles, Long Beach, San Diego, Wichita, Denver, Kansas City, Kansas, Milwaukee and Detroit, do you license Twentieth Century-Fox pictures first-run to the National Theatre subsidiary? A. We do.

Q. And is the theatre in each of those cities in which the Twentieth Century-Fox pictures play either the best theatre in the city or comparable to the best? A. I would say yes in all cases, possibly with the exception of Kansas City, which I explained to you a minute ago. Downtown Kansas City we haven't got as large a theatre but it is a well appointed house, but between the two, the combination, I mean, the simultaneous run and showing, we have good representation. However, I don't believe it could throw off as much money as Paramount Theatre downtown, as an example, not as much, but the combined thing is not as good, but we have a very satisfactory engagement, arrangement for our product in Kansas City, I believe.
(1555)

Q. Now, in the other 14 cities that I read off, what is the situation? A. Well, in my opinion they are as good if not better than any of the opposition. Certainly in most of them they are much larger.

Mr. Caskey: During the examination of Mr. Rodgers I had marked for identification and offered these beautiful photographs. They were objected to by Mr. Wright, and I have no desire to go contrary to your Honors' desires in the matter. We can illustrate the case by putting in pictures of the theatres in the 16 cities; but if Mr. Wright objects why, we will abide by the ruling.

Mr. Wright: It is just as objectionable now as they ever were.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Caskey: I shall make the formal offer, and I shall ask the clerk to change the markings from F-A, F-B, F-C and F-3 to F-1, 2, 3 and 4 for identification.

(Markings changed as indicated.)

Q. Now, Mr. Kupper, whom do you license first-run in Boston? A. We split our product in Boston. We license two-thirds to what is known as the M. & P. Circuit, which is an affiliate of Paramount, and one-third to RKO's theatres.

Q. What is the character of the Metropolitan theatre? (1556)

A. Oh, it is a very beautiful, large theatre, well appointed. It is a palace, you might say, one of the best in the country.

Q. Of the pictures which you license to M. & P., are the best pictures played in the Metropolitan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from the Metropolitan are they moved over? A. They are moved over to the Paramount and Fenway; and also the Paramount and Fenway play some first-runs that are perhaps not suitable for the Metropolitan.

Q. Where is the Fenway? A. The Fenway is in Boston; not downtown. It is outside, the suburban area.

Q. One-third of your product you license to RKO? A. Yes.

Q. What theatres do they have? A. They have two theatres. They have the Memorial and the Boston Theatre. They are both large theatres. The Boston Theatre plays stage attractions a lot, but the Memorial Theatre is an out-and-out picture theatre, and we play there the better pictures that are on the license agreement.

Q. The Memorial is a memorial that the bondholders erected to Mr. Keith? A. I understood so.

Q. Where did you play the picture "Song of Bernadette"? A. In Boston we played "Song of Bernadette" in the Majestic Theatre which is now being operated by Mr. Harry Brandt, an independent; and I think we negotiated directly —I am sure we did—with the Shubert Enterprises who own (1557) the theatre. We sort of leased the theatre, you might say.

Q. And showed the picture yourself? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long did it run? A. 26 weeks.

Judge Bright: That was what you call a road show?

The Witness: That was on a road show basis, yes, sir. We were licensing the picture on a road show basis; that means an advanced admission over and above the general run.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, I want to inpolate there; I do not think it is a matter of controversy. Until quite recently road show also connoted reserved seats or a restricted number of engagements; that is, one in the afternoon or one at night. Now, I think that since "Gone With The Wind" these pictures which have been exhibited at advanced admission prices have not had reserved seats, and they have usually been a continuous operation. I think that has been the cause for some of the hesitancy in the definition.

Q. The "Song of Bernadette" showed at advanced admission prices, did it not? A. It did.

Judge Bright: Most of those pictures shown as road shows take up a whole session, don't they? They are longer than the average feature?

(1558)

Q. How long was "Song of Bernadette", Mr. Kupper? A. I do not recall the exact time. It was a long feature; more than the general.

Q. It was about 150 minutes, wasn't it? A. Something like that; close to two hours.

Q. How long was "Wilson"? A. That was over two hours.

Q. And that also was shown at an advanced admission? A. Yes.

Q. But it was shown on a continuous operating policy? A. Yes, sir, it was.

Q. No reserved seats? A. I don't recall any theatre having reserved seats, a reserved seat section where they played the picture.

Mr. Caskey: At page 26 of the Appendix C, in answer to Judge Bright's questions, a footnote to Section 14 of the consent decree, which is printed at page 26 of Appendix C, reads: "Road show is an exhibition at a theatre where a majority of the main floor seats for each evening performance are reserved and sold at admission price of not less than one dollar."

Now, within the meaning of that definition neither the engagement of "Wilson" or "Song of Bernadette" was a road show.

Mr. Wright: Why can't we have the witness say what a road show is now?

(1559)

Mr. Caskey: He said so.

Judge Bright: I think he has defined it, hasn't he? It is a picture showing at an advanced price over ordinary admission.

The Witness: Well, it is a considerable advance over the ordinary admission price. I say that, your Honor, because very often we would have a contract, let us say, for 50 cents admission, but the exhibitor may charge 5 or 10 cents more; like we had some pictures, Rosie O'Grady, I know it played for more than what was stipulated in our license agreement. Well, that would not be construed as a road show; but that is an advance of the regular admission to the theatre. But generally, what he was talking about, the Song of Bernadette and Wilson, where we sold it, I would construe that as what we term road show engagements. We only showed to around 3000, I think, the first time with Song of Bernadette, at that advanced admission, $1.10; and Wilson I think we played to a little better than that; we played to around 4000; whereas a general run of the picture would go into 15,000. By that I do not mean we are not going to play to 15,000 or 16,000 on Bernadette and Wilson. We are going to do that on a second time around at the regular admission. In fact, we are well on our way with both of them with that accomplishment.

(1560)

Judge Hand: Mr. Caskey, what is the point of all this?

Mr. Caskey: On the admission price?

Judge Hand: Well, all this talk about road shows which is defined here in the consent decree. I do not know that the witness is so clear about it. I sometimes wonder who gets up these terms, because they do not seem to be even understood by highly experienced men in the business.

Mr. Caskey: Oh, I am sure we attribute this definition to Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: I am equally sure that this definition that is in the decree has absolutely no relevance to the way they treat a road show now, and that they have changed the term to suit their own convenience.

Judge Hand: Well, equally it has no relevance to the case.

Mr. Wright: Only this, if the Court please: I think it is important to get it straight, because what it actually is, is simply another device for exhausting revenue from the picture before you put it into general release. What happens is that after the road show it does not become available to subsequent-run houses. They have a road show, and then they have the first-run, and then a kind of regular release.

Judge Hand: It would seem to me to be a shifting thing that nobody could define in any firm way that could be a continuous enduring definition.

(1561)

Mr. Wright: I think it can be defined, but I will reserve that for cross-examination.

By Mr. Caskey:

Q. Well, in licensing the Metropolitan and Paramount and Fenway theatres in Boston, with whom do you deal? A. Mr. Marty Mullins, and he has an associate that handles his booking and buying department named Stoddard.

Q. And in licensing the pictures to Boston and Keith's Memorial with whom do you deal? A. We deal with Mr. Harold Mirisch.

Q. Now, Cambridge is a suburb of Boston? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to whom do you license your pictures first-run in Cambridge? A. M. & P. Circuit.

Q. And do you know what theatre that is? A. Well——

Q. You can refer to your notes. A. Can I refer to them?

Q. Yes. A. I didn't know I could.

Q. Page 19. A. What page?

Q. 19. A. I will tell you quick (examining). Central Square Theatre in Cambridge.

Mr. Wright: If he has got his testimony written out, why can't we just have it read in?

(1562)

Mr. Caskey: What I would like to do, Mr. Wright, is to hand you a copy of the notes; and I shall bring out the highlights, which I must insist upon doing; and then I shall offer the remainder and let you cross-examine on the total.

Mr. Wright: An excellent idea.

Q. In Somerville whom do you license first-run? A. M. & P. Theatres.

Q. How long have they had those theatres? A. I do not think they have had them so long. I think there was an independent man at one time, and they leased it from him; I am not sure.

Q. And prior to the leasing of the theatre to M. & P., you licensed the same theatres for the same run? A. Yes.

Q. Was there any change in the run after M. & P. negotiated for it? A. No, sir.

Q. Where is Somerville? A. It is a suburb of the City of Boston. It follows Cambridge, I believe. Cambridge follows Boston first-run.

Q. And whom do you license in Lowell? A. Well, there are three theatres in Lowell. We license M. & P.

Q. Now, in Cambridge and Somerville and Lowell with whom do you deal in negotiating the license agreement? A. Mr. Mullins and Mr. Stoddard. We do it in Boston, at their office or our office.

(1563)

Q. Where are the payments for film rental made? A. To our Boston office from their office.

Q. And these four situations, Boston, Cambridge, Somerville and Lowell, are the only theatres among the 92 that are operated by Mullins & Pinanski, are they not? A. I think so, yes, sir. Of the 92 cities?

Q. Of the 92 cities, yes, sir. Lowell plays after Boston also, does it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in Fall River, Massachusetts, whom do you license first-run? A. Mr. Nathaniel Yamins, who is an independent operator. He has been there for a great many years.

Q. Has he all the first-run theatres in Fall River? A. Yes, he has three, I believe.

Q. Are there subsequent-run theatres in Fall River? A. No, I do not believe there are. I think he has all the theatres.

Q. In New Bedford, Massachusetts, whom do you license first-run? A. A man named Zeitz. He has been our account. He has three theatres, one very good one, one not so good as the first one, and another, smaller house; but he has been an account of ours since the first time I went to Boston; I met him some 20 years ago; he was an account then and still it.

Q. Is there an M. & P.-operated theatre in New Bedford?

(1564)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you license it? A. No, sir, we do not.

Q. In Providence, Rhode Island, whom do you license? A. We license our product to a man named Edward Fay. He is an independent operator. He has the Majestic Theatre, which is his best theatre, and in which we play all our important pictures; and he has another house which we moved over to. He has been an account of ours for more than 20 years too, incidentally.

Q. What is the name of that move-over house? A. I am trying to think of it.

Q. It was named for him, wasn't it? A. Fay's Theatre, that is it.

Q. What other first-run theatres are there in Providence? A. I know Loew's have a theatre up there; I believe Warner's have a theatre, or some other defendant here has a theatre.

Q. Do you license them? A. No, we do not. We license Mr. Fay.

Q. Whom do you license in Albany? A. I think I testified to that yesterday. We license our product to Mr. Fabian, and also to the Warner Bros. Mr. Fabian, I think has two-thirds and Warner's has one-third. That was the result of a historical background which I gave yesterday, from the Clinton Square to the Leland to the Fabian.

(1565)

Q. And as to the pictures that Fabian plays, with whom do you negotiate? A. We negotiate with Mr. Fabian. They have an office here in New York, and they have an office up in Albany too; but I think it is all done in New York.

Q. Mr. Fabian has his own office here? A. Yes.

Q. From which he negotiates license agreements? A. Yes.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me. On a situation like Albany, it is going to be the testimony rather than what is on here, is that right? You are not offering these printed sheets where you take him over it, or is he supposed to supplement that?

Mr. Caskey: This is the full text.

Mr. Wright: I see; but all you propose to put in the record——

Mr. Caskey: No, I am going to offer the full text too.

Mr. Wright: That goes in in addition?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in Utica whom do you license first-run?

Judge Hand: That seems pretty odd. What do you do that for?

Mr. Caskey: Well, in order to save your Honors' time. There is a certain amount of background material which we think important to have in the record in view of the charge of combination, but the relating of which is not particularly interesting. We can go through it in detail, but I had hoped to shorten the Court's time some.
(1566)

Q. Utica? A. At the present time we sell our product to Mr. Gordon who operates the Olympic Theatre. He is an independent exhibitor. Prior to that, years ago, we sold Mr. Nate Robbins. We had two theatres up there, and he was an independent exhibitor. And he sold to Warner's. And we sold Warner's subsequent to that for quite a while until—well, we had a disagreement; we couldn't get together as to terms; and we went out and solicited and worked up Mr. Gordon as an account. I think we gave him a franchise for a period of years, and he has had our product ever since.

Q. He has had the product for at least 12 years? A. Yes, at least that.

Q. And he plays all the Fox product first-run in Utica? A. That is right.

Q. Now, in Syracuse whom do you license first-run? A. Well, today it is the RKO people. That is licensed through the RKO booking office here in New York. Mr. Mirisch handles that. That is, he is the one we negotiate with. That started a long time ago. Schine was in there a long time ago, and we served him; and he, in turn, I think sold to Warner's, and they dropped the house, and somebody else got it back; but in the course of history it is the same houses we originally started with.
(1567)

Q. Do you sell to Loew's in Syracuse? A. No, we do not, nor Warner's.

Q. Now, in Rochester whom do you license first-run? A. In Rochester it is RKO again; but here is a case where Comerford was there for many years; he was an independent operator; and he later became some sort of affiliate, or Paramount bought some interest in their circuit; but, anyway, they operated independently until they made some sort of an arrangement with RKO, but it is the same houses we originally sold our product to when we sold Comerford.

Q. Do you sell any theatres of Loew's in Rochester? A. No, we do not, though they are in opposition.

Q. In Buffalo whom do you sell first-run? A. Well, for years—right now we sell the Loew organization. They operate first-run theatres which we license. That is another case. For years we never had a very satisfactory outlet, and a man named Shea—it is not the same Shea we have been referring to in Pittsburgh; it is another man, Mike Shea, who was there for years, and he had some theatres, and Fox finally built a big theatre in there. Though he never operated it, he built the theatre; and I think we had Comerford take it over from the day it was completed until it was subsequently sold, or arranged a pool, and taken over by Loew; and we kept our product there ever since.

Q. The theatre that Mr. Fox built, or one of his companies, was the Great Lakes? A. Yes. In fact, they have got three big theatres up there. They have got the Buffalo, the Great Lakes and the Hippodrome, which is used for move-over and first-run, but the better pictures go into the Great Lakes and the Buffalo.

(1569)

Q. And is the Great Lakes comparable to the Buffalo? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in addition to that, in Buffalo Basil Bros. operate there, do they not? A. Yes. They have a theatre—they have two theatres there. A man named Yellen also operates a theatre. One is the Lafayette and the other is—oh, I can't think of it right now.

Q. The 20th Century? A. Yes, the 20th Century. And we serve Yellen. As matter of fact, we licensed Yellen the picture Wilson there.

Q. Now in Worcester, Massachusetts. A. In Worcester, Massachusetts, for years and years we sold Mr. Poli, who is an independent operator all over the State of Connecticut, and Massachusetts too. He is quite an independent, very aggressive, a very up-to-the minute exhibitor. He built a lot of fine theatres there. We sold Mr. Poli. And then Fox bought those theatres. That is my understanding, my belief, anyway. And, in turn, Loew got the theatres, or we lost them. Poli got them back, and then I think Poli made a deal with Loew; but we have always played in that theatre. We played it before we were associated with it.

Then there is opposition there. Hoffman, incidentally, is opposition, too, a lot of these towns; he was an independent exhibitor; and he sold to Warner Bros. He sold his theatres to Warner Bros. But we don't sell Warners in this situation. We sell the Loew people, and we do the negotiations with Mr. Vogel in his office here in New York.

Q. And the Fox Company which purchased these theatres from Mr. Poli was Fox Theatres Corporation, was it not? A. Yes, that is right. I believe that was the corporate name.

Q. It is not the present defendant? A. No, sir.

Q. It is a company that went into equity receivership in 1932. Do you know that, Mr. Kupper? A. I understand that is right.

Q. Now, the same situation as to Worcester applies in Springfield, Massachusetts, Hartford—— A. No, there is a little difference in Springfield. Years ago we had a theatre in Springfield and we did not have one in Worcester. It was called the Fox-Nelson Theatre. Fox operated it a long time. It is not as good a house as Mr. Poli finally built in there and which eventually Fox bought. So after we bought the Poli theatre, we naturally would transfer our product to the Poli theatre; and it is now in the Loew's organization. But we played our pictures there for a great many years. We sell Loew in the situation.

Q. In Springfield? A. Yes.

(1571)

Q. And do you sell Loew in Hartford? A. Yes.

Q. And in New Haven? A. Yes, the same situation, the same story in Hartford and New Haven. We never had theatres there, but they were Poli, and then became Fox and then became Loew's. And again, I must say we played them before we ever had any interest in those theatres; and they are all fine theatres, all big theatres. Poli never built anything but good, fine, big theatres, to my knowledge.

Q. The same in Bridgeport? A. Yes; and in a number of these situations Warner is opposition, which I stated before, which we do not sell.

Q. So that is five of the cities where today you license to Loew's, the theaters are a part of the Poli Circuit? A. Yes.

Q. That is out of the nine cities having a population of 25,000 and more which you license, five of the cities are Poli towns? A. That is right.

Q. Now, whom do you license in Yonkers? A. At the present time RKO. There is also another interesting history to that town. We sold to two theatres which were independently operated. They were the Strand and the Hamilton theatres. I can't recall the man's name. It is probably on here—oh, yes, his name was Hamilton, and he, in turn, sold the theatres to a man named Walsh; and Walsh, incidentally, happened to be the mayor at one time of Yonkers, or the mayor at the time he bought them; and we continued to supply our product there; and then RKO made a deal and took the theatres from Walsh; and we have continued to supply our pictures there. Loew is in opposition to us there, but we never sold Loew.

(1572)

Q. In any of these situations where the theatre was operated by an independent and subsequently transferred to one of these defendants, did Twentieth Century-Fox have anything to do with the sale? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Now, in Newark, whom do we serve first-run? A. Let us see. We serve RKO today and Skouras Theatres. Originally we had a theatre there, too, the Terminal Theatre; and—I don't know what the year was, in the 1930s somewhere—a lease was made, or a deal was made with Skouras; he took them from the Fox Metropolitan Theatres—he took the Terminal Theatre, and he worked out some sort of a deal with RKO or Proctor Theatres that was operating, and our franchise gave him our pictures for the Terminal; but this Proctor's was a better theatre; and after he made his negotiations we were able to move our better pictures into the Proctor's and finally all of them, because the Terminal closed.

Now, Loew is also in that situation, and we don't sell them. Paramount and Warners, too.

(1573)

Q. Our customer has been the Terminal Theatre? A. Originally, yes.

Q. And that is the theatre in which Mr. William Fox has had an interest for many, many years? A. Yes. I think before he had a Fox Film Company he had a vaudeville circuit of theatres, and that was one of them.

Q. In Jersey City whom do you license first-run? A. The Skouras Theatres. That is George Skouras operation.

Q. Do some of the pictures play in the Stanley Theatre? A. Yes. I believe Skouras did make a deal there also with the Stanley Company so that they had a theatre whereby they could put our better pictures in there, too, but originally it was with the Skouras Theatre, and he had a franchise for a number of years after he took the theatres over.

Q. In fact, that franchise is still in existence? A. Yes. I believe he has got seven or eight more years to go. Warner is in that situation and Loew's, too, but we don't license our products to them.

Q. Now, in Paterson, New Jersey, whom do you license? A. Well, three theatres, the Fabian, the Rivoli and the Garden. Those theatres were built and operated by Mr. Fabian, but it is the same family Fabian that we have been talking about here, but this was his father that originally built these theatres, and we sold him. Later on he sold them to—(1574)
I guess the Stanley Company, or, at least, Warner Bros. finally got them; but we have been selling those theatres right along.

Q. That is, those theatres were built by Mr. Fabian, Senior? A. Yes.

Q. And the Fabian is named after him, and not after Si Fabian? A. That is right.

Q. And he sold the theatres to the Stanley Company? A. Well, I am not sure whether he sold them to Stanley, but I think they sold their theatres to Stanley, and then, in turn, Stanley sold to Warners'; but it is that period when they were out buying theatres and acquiring theatres. There is opposition in here, incidentally. Adam Adams has got a theatre there, in which Paramount has an interest; but we sell what is known as the Fabian theatres. We sell Warners.

Q. And we sold those Fabian theatres for a long time before Warners had any interest in them? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in Elizabeth, New Jersey, whom do you sell first-run? A. The Skouras Theatres, and they have an arrangement also, I think, with the Stanley Company. He made an arrangement with the Stanley Company that we put our better product in the better theatre there. Originally it was a Fox theatre all the time, something like the Newark situation, it went way back in the history of our company.

(1575)

Q. And has it been of advantage to Twentieth Century-Fox, to Jersey City, Newark and Elizabeth, to have the pictures played in those theatres? A. Certainly. They were better pictures.

Q. Produced greater revenue? A. Produced greater revenue.

Q. Now, whom do you license in Trenton, New Jersey? A. Well, we have a split on the product there at present. There is a man named Hildinger who has got a theatre, and we also have RKO as a customer down there. Before RKO got in there there were two independent theatres, two independent people, exhibitors. One was named Hershfield and the other was Hildinger, and they had three theatres, I think, between them. The best theatre was the Lincoln Theatre; and there was the Stacy, and another house I don't recall. Anyhow, they had these three theatres. The State was the third theatre. And the better product of ours back in those days played in the Lincoln Theatre, and the other product, the Stacy and the State. Well, Hershfield died, and Hildinger took over the whole operation himself, and he, in turn, made some sort of arrangement and sold—let us say sold the Lincoln Theatre to RKO. Well, we, in turn, sold the product—we licensed the product that we were accustomed to license in the theatre to the RKO house. So we have got a split in the situation; but they are still the same theatres that we dealt with.

Q. And the independent that is left still has the pictures which he originally had in his theatre? A. Yes. He has what we consider his share of them.

Judge Goddard: They are first-runs, too?
The Witness: Yes, they are all first-runs.

Q. Do you know how that split is made? A. Well, they generally make them themselves, these exhibitors. They know what pictures we have, the pictures they are going to license, and one of them makes the split-up one time, and he offers it to the other one to select from; and the next time it comes around, he lets the other fellow make the selection and he gives the opposite man the first choice. It is a more satisfactory way and easier way. They try to be pretty fair about it, pretty honest.

Q. Now, in Camden, New Jersey, whom do you license first-run? A. We license Mr. Varbalow; he has got the Savar Theatre. He has been our account there for quite a while; but prior to that we sold the Stanley Company in Camden, and the Stanley Company sold their theatres to Warners some years ago. I think it was in 1933. We could not have a meeting of the minds with the Warner buyers—I know about this, because I was in on the negotiations, definitely; we could not get together with Warners, not only here but a lot of places—and we went to Mr. Varbalow. He had this Tower Theatre, a theatre that was not in downtown Camden; and we licensed our product to him and gave him a franchise; and when we gave him the franchise we had an understanding with him that he would build a downtown theatre, which he did; and we licensed our product there, and have continued to license it to this day.

Q. And he did build a new theatre? A. He did build a new theatre. That is the Savar.

Q. How does it compare with the other theatres in Camden? A. It is a very fine theatre. I think it compares equally with any of them.

Q. In Philadelphia whom do you license first-run? A. Well, right to this minute it is now National Theatres. We had licensed the Fox Theatre there which Mr. Fox built years ago. Prior to that time we shopped around, I guess you would say, from pillar to post. We never could get a satisfactory first-run there, and I know when I was in New York in the early days with the company we tried to work out some arrangements with the Stanley people to take the theatre over, so he could license and show his pictures in there, but it never worked out, and I think Fox decided to build a theatre, and he built a big theatre in Philadelphia and operated it. I guess the Fox Theatre Company operated (1578)
it. That went on for quite a period of time. We licensed our pictures there. And they got in trouble; they got in difficulty, and the house was then leased, I believe, to Warner Bros. And with this lease, however, we protected ourselves that our product would play there in that theatre; and we also played in other theatres of Warners, equally as good as Fox's depending on which picture was suitable to which house; but our product played there continuously; and, as I say, it is only recently that the theatre is back in our hands; and we play our pictures there. We did play four or five pictures last year in the Karlton Theatre despite the fact that we have a license with the other theatre.

Q. Who operates the Karlton Theatre? A. That is an independent operation. Goldman, I believe.

Q. Now, in Scranton, Pennsylvania, whom do we license? A. As long as I can remember, in Scranton we licensed the Comerford Theatres. They have been there a great many years. In fact, they are the only theatres there, I think, and we licensed to John Nolan. He is their buyer.

Q. John Nolan used to be a Fox employee? A. Yes, he worked for us a long time ago. He was a branch manager for us in Buffalo. We had him in New York for a while, as a special representative, and then we sent him to Australia, but he got sick out there, and when he came back he took a long time to recover, and he did not come back. He went with the Comerford Circuit.

(1579)

Q. Those pictures were licensed to Comerford before Paramount had any interest in them? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in Reading, Pennsylvania, whom do you license? A. Well, we licensed Wilmer & Vincent, who was an independent operation. At one time we split our product there, when we had a lot of pictures, sixty-odd. We sold part to Wilmer & Vincent and part to Warners, and now we sell them all to Wilmer & Vincent. That came a little later on, when we had a little friction there which I was telling you about; we could not have a meeting of the minds; but today we sell all our product there. We also have sold some pictures to the Astor, which is an independent operation; but we sell them to Wilmer & Vincent who is in opposition to both Loew's and Warner and another independent.
(1580)

Q. Is Wilmer & Vincent's Embassy the best theatre in town? A. I would think so. I would say 24 or 25 hundred seats. And the other theatres are pretty good size theatres too.

Q. Is it as good a theatre as the Loew's Theatre? A. Well, I would say so.

Q. And Wilmer & Vincent is or was an independent circuit? A. Always has been to my knowledge.

Q. Did one of them die recently? A. Yes, a few years ago. Walter Vincent is still alive. Wilmer died. I knew him pretty well.

Q. And according to trade repute they have sold out some interest—— A. Just recently to Fabian.

Q. Do you know the details? A. No, I do not.

Q. Now, in Pittsburgh whom do you license first-run? A. Well, we have our product licensed to two independent accounts. The Shea interests have the Fulton Theatre, one theatre, and they get one-third of our product; and John Harris, who operates two theatres, the J. P. Harris Theatre, and another house called the Senator. Harris is the better of the two, and he plays our product. They both play our product on an extended run basis. The Senator is used as a move-over and also for the lesser product that we might supply them with or license them. There is a long history to (1581)
that though. Am I supposed to recite it?

Q. I think we need not go into it. Now, this Shea, just again for the sake of the record, is no relation to the Shea in Buffalo? A. Not to my knowledge. This is a different Shea, Mort Shea.

Q. Mort Shea? A. Yes. He is dead too, incidentally. The circuit is operated by Grainger, Edward Grainger.

Q. And Edward Grainger at one time was eastern sales manager of Fox? A. Yes.

Q. And his brother was the general sales manager? A. Yes.

Q. The Fulton Theatre is no move-over theatre? A. No, it is not, but they play extended engagements, usually three or four or five or six weeks. They play them as long as the picture shows good strength.

Q. And J. P. Harris is likewise an independent? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in Erie, Pennsylvania, whom do you license? A. Well, we sell the Shea theatres. That is the same Shea we are talking about who has the Fulton Theatre in Pittsburgh. They are in opposition to Warner's out there. We have sold these theatres for a great many years. He is an independent. I know that definitely because I looked it up.
(1582)

Q. In Pittsburgh Warner's and Loew's both have theatres? A. In Pittsburgh?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. Now, down in Wilmington, Delaware, whom do you license first-run? A. We license the Rialto Theatre. A fellow named Belair has that theatre. Prior to that we used to sell the Stanley Company down there. They are all better theatres, incidentally, down there. Then when Warner got them, why, the time I am talking about when we had difficulty, we went to John Harris who had a theatre there, the same Harris who has got the Harris in Pittsburgh; and then he sold to Warner's; and we continued supplying Warner's—that is, the house that Harris had, which was formerly the Stanley house—until the time we had another disagreement and could not get together and could not have a meeting of the minds on the price; and we went out and solicited and worked up this account, the Rialto Theatre, run by Mr. Belair, and he plays our product exclusively in the town. We get long runs there. There is no question in my mind but that the Warner house there could throw off greater revenue, but we so elect to continue doing business with Mr. Belair.

Q. Mr. Belair plays Twentieth Century-Fox product almost exclusively? A. Yes. We license him all our product. I do not know of any other product that he has. I would (1583) say that we consume all of his playing time.

Q. Now, that theatre takes clearance, I understand, over the whole State of Delaware. Do you know whether that is true or not? A. It would not surprise me. It is an important outlet, an important theatre, the same as the other companies do, I suppose, with their theatres for the same protection. I know what they do—Belair told me that—I would grant Belair that.

Q. As a matter of fact, there was an arbitration about that, wasn't there? A. Yes, I believe so, now that you call it to my attention.

Q. Now, in Baltimore who do you serve first-run? A. We serve the New Theatre; we license our product to them. It has been our account for a great many years. I remember when the theatre was operated by Charlie Whitehurst.

Q. How old is the New Theatre? A. The New Theatre, to my knowledge, is 25 years old or more.

Q. Where is it located? A. It is located on the main street in Baltimore, a very fine location. It is not the best house by any means, but it is a good house for our product; and we have got Loew there as opposition, and we have got two independents there as opposition too; but we have done business in this house for a great many years. Morris Mechanic is the owner and operator of it.

(1584)

Q. And he plays all Fox product? A. Well, he has been playing it all. Sometimes he can't absorb it all, but he has been playing—we consider him our first-run account there. Right now we are playing a picture with Loew because Mechanic is closing his theatre after our engagement of State Fair, which I think is in its fourth or fifth week by now, and rather than let our product back up, we made an arrangement with Loew's to play a few pictures which we are licensing now, and Mechanic is going to remodel his theatre. In fact, he told me he is going to put a considerable amount of money into it, because it has not been remodeled for a great number of years. He expects to make it the finest house in Baltimore.

Q. A quarter of a million dollars? A. That is what he told me.

Q. And he is independent? A. Yes.

Q. Of everybody? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in Baltimore there are very fine neighborhood second-run houses, are there not? A. Oh yes.

Q. And who are they operated by? A. There is the Durkee Circuit and some others.

Q. And, at least, the Ambassador Theatre and the Senator Theatre which Mr. Durkee has are two of the finest neighborhood houses in the country? A. I would think so.

(1585)

Q. Do you grant Mechanic clearance? A. We do.

Q. Over the Durkee Circuit? A. Yes.

Q. And, in turn, do you grant the theatres that you sell Durkee, license Durkee, clearance over other theatres in Baltimore? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is Durkee an independent? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in Washington I think you adverted to the fact that you license most of your product to what theatre? A. The Capitol and the Palace, right today operated by Loew's. Our better pictures will go into the Palace Theatre, and the Capitol today has an operation policy of some stage shows; and though we play important pictures in there, they only have the two houses, and you have to split your time up a little bit between both of them. At least we have two between both of them. As I say, we try to play our most important pictures in the Palace, and the others in the Capitol. That is where we play our pictures. The Capitol, of course, is the house that Fox had.

Q. That is in the National Press Club Building? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In Richmond, Virginia, whom do you license first-run? A. A man named Thalheimer. He has got a few theatres, and a few subsequent-run theatres too. Before he had these houses there was a man named Colter—Colter and (1586)

Mrs. Thorpe owned the Bluebird Theatre. Thalheimer is a real estate man or a lawyer, or something——

Q. There is quite a difference. Which is it? A. Well, real estate. Anyway, he acquired this Bluebird from Colter & Thorpe, and that started him in the picture business; and then he has got some other theatres; the Byrd Theatre is one of them; and we have supplied him right along. There was opposition right along even when we were selling the Bluebird. I think Wilmer & Vincent were in there. They took the theatre over from Wells, a fellow named Jake Wells, which was operated a long time ago by Harry Burnstein. Loew had a theatre there too. But ours is a very good outlet and is an independent account, and we do not sell Loew.

Q. Norfolk, Virginia. A. In Norfolk, Virginia, we sell the Granby Theatre. We have sold the Granby Theatre a long time. It is now operated by the Fabian, who just took it over from Wilmer & Vincent; but that has a history that dates back a long time. But we could not sell Wells, who later became Wilmer & Vincent; I sold his brother, who was Otto Wells; I sold him in Norfolk, Virginia, for a great many years; they, in turn, sold to Wilmer & Vincent; but it is the same house we had done business with. And then there is Loew's and there is an independent named Wilder, which we do not sell him.

Q. Wilder has two or three theatres? A. Yes. And we do not sell him. At least, we don't sell him first-run.

Q. Now, in Charlotte, North Carolina, whom do you license first-run? A. We license the Kincey Circuit of theatres. They have three or four first-run theatres. When I first opened the Charlotte office for Fox they were there. It was not exactly Kincey in those days, but it was an affiliate down there, the Southern Enterprises, S. A. Lynch & Company, and they had opposition. We supplied our product around between them, and also a man named Craver had the Broadway Theatre, and it gradually became—both of them became the Kincey theatres, which is still the same theatres we licensed back in the early 1920's.

Q. With whom do you negotiate in licensing? A. That is done in Charlotte with Mike Kincey.

Q. Where are the license fees paid? A. In Charlotte.

Q. And that is the only theatre in these 92 that you negotiate with Mr. Kincey? A. In these 92 cities.

Q. Yes. Now, in Atlanta, Georgia, whom do you license first-run? A. Well, we sell Lucas and Jenkins who operate the Fox Theatre and the Paramount Theatre and the Roxy Theatre and the Capitol Theatre. They have opposition there. Loew's have a theatre there, the Grand. Years ago we never were so happy with our outlet in Atlanta. That is, we could not get along so well with Lynch, and we had to shop around and do the best we could until Fox finally built a big theatre there, the largest theatre in Atlanta, one of the largest in the whole south, the Southeast; and as I say, they got in difficulty and lost the house, and I guess Paramount wanted to have it; and Lucas and Jenkins have it; they are affiliated with Paramount—they are not affiliated—they operate for Paramount, but I always consider them an affiliate. But you might say our pictures went to the Fox when Lucas and Jenkins got it, and they are still there. I do not think we ever sold Loew a picture.

Q. And despite any protest by Mr. Rodgers, the Fox is the best theatre in Atlanta? A. Yes, in my opinion, yes.

Q. Whom do you negotiate with in licensing these pictures in Atlanta? A. Bill Jenkins. He has some other buyers, but Bill Jenkins is the man we do business with.

Q. Colonel Lucas is dead? A. Yes; he died a few years ago.

Q. And is Atlanta the only city among the 92 concerning which you negotiate with Mr. Jenkins? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I want to take the three cities of Jacksonville, Tampa—the two cities of Jacksonville and Tampa. Whom do you license there? A. We license—I think it is called the Florida Theatres Company. It is an affiliate of Paramount, and we licensed those theatres long before Paramount was affiliated. They were operated and owned by Sparks, the same theatres. It was an independent account. He later sold some interest to Paramount, and it was operated by Frank Rogers. He was an old friend of mine. He was a salesman who grew up with Sparks. But they were always Sparks with me. And talking about this thing, I never considered him as Paramount, although they are affiliated, they were Sparks' theatres to me, as long as I can recall.

Q. And Frank Rogers? A. He is the general manager and his office is in Jacksonville, and we do our business with him down there.

Q. Now, in Miami whom do you negotiate with? A. We sell our pictures to an independent account, Wolfson and Meyer, Wometco Theatres. Here is another situation that goes back a long time where we never could get a satisfactory run there; I think it was Lynch again who had those theatres, the first-run outlet there, and Sidney Meyer went down there and opened up a theatre, the Capitol Theatre, and we supported him ever since. In fact, we gave him a franchise and encouraged him down there, so today he has got quite a few theatres. Meyers at one time worked for us as a branch manager, a salesman and a branch manager. This is going back a long time ago, even before the last war. I think he started with us before or during the last war. And he grew up, as salesman in Omaha, and finally became salesman in Chicago, and sales manager of our company, and left, and went into business for himself, and went into Miami and opened up a first-run theatre there, and from there he has developed his interest down there. But our position is still there. There is Paramount down there, which we do not sell.

(1590)

Q. In Birmingham, Knoxville and Chattanooga, whom do you license? A. We license the Wilby Theatres, which

R. B. Wilby operates, and an affiliate of Paramount, but we have licensed these theatres a long time. As a matter of fact in Birmingham we used to sell Hoblitzelle, who is an independent exhibitor, and Wilby was an independent at one time too. Hoblitzelle, he had an interstate circuit of theatres, he called it, vaudeville houses, and he had his house in Birmingham, which he turned into a motion picture-vaudeville and picture house, and I think Paramount tried that along with Wilby, and it has been Paramount-Wilby affiliation in all three towns, but we served these houses even before that, as I say, when they were independent operators. Wilby has been an exhibitor down there as long as I can remember.

Q. With whom do you negotiate for these three cities? A. Wilby.

Q. Where are the license fees paid? A. Atlanta, Ga.

Q. Are these the only three cities that you negotiate for with Mr. Wilby? A. Of the 92?

Q. Of the 92. A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think I didn't ask you that question about Tampa and Jacksonville. Those are the only two you negotiate for with Mr. Rogers? A. Yes.

Q. Of the 92? A. Of the 92.

(1591)

Q. In Nashville, whom do you license first-run? A. Sudekum theatres. They have opposition. Loew's theatre, Orpheum theatre. We have served the Sudekum theatre for a great many years, Paramount Palace.

Q. You license no pictures to Loew's? A. No, sir.

Q. Sudekum, or Crescent Amusement Company, is an independent? A. To my knowledge, it is.

Q. Whom did you negotiate licenses with? A. I haven't done business with Sudekum in a little while, since the consent decree, but that is where our pictures played, but they were worked out down in Nashville.

Q. In New Orleans, whom do you license? A. We license our product to Saenger Amusement Company—Publix-Saenger, I suppose—which is headed by E. V. Richards, and we have done so for a great many years. We did it before, I guess, Richards became affiliated with Paramount, although they go back for quite a while, but they had the Saenger theatre—the Tudor Theatre and Globe Theatre. They have opposition down there. Loew's have a house. I think I heard some testimony that Paramount has an interest in it. And RKO operate two theatres down there. We have done business with Richards, Saenger & Company—Saenger-Richards it was years ago—we have done business with them a great many years, not only first-run New Orleans, but throughout their territory.

Q. What kind of theatre is the Saenger Theatre? A. One of the finest theatres down there.

Q. Most of your product plays in the Saenger Theatre? A. Practically all our better products play there. We do play some pictures—we have played some pictures over in the Center Theatre, which is an independent operation, smaller pictures, but we always offer them, if we have them available. Saenger sometimes move over some of their pictures but they generally play first-run and complete their engagement in the Saenger Theatre.

By the way, we have sold a few pictures to Loew's when we had—not Loew's; I mean we didn't sell Loew's; we sold some, because we couldn't get together with Mr. Richards, to, I think, his competitor, Mr. Gaston Dureau. They played the picture at advanced admission. And we sold RKO a few pictures at the time we were licensing these pictures in groups, and they couldn't see the value of it, and we sold them away from them, but we generally go back, right back with the next block and offer it to Mr. Richards for the Saenger Theatre, because that is the better outlet for us.*

*See p. 1229 for corrections.

Q. Mr. Richards would not play at advanced admission prices? A. Would not play them from us. I don't know whether he has done it with anybody else, but he wouldn't do it from us.

(1593)

Q. And said so? A. Definitely.

Q. Is New Orleans the only city among the 92 in which you deal with Mr. Richards? A. Yes.

Q. Of course, Mr. Kupper, you deal with these various buyers for other cities under a hundred thousand population? A. Various buyers for other cities? Sure.

Q. In Memphis, whom do you license first-run? A. We license Loew's. They have two theatres there, the Palace and the State, and we play all our product there in the Palace and the State. You have opposition down there. You have Warner affiliation operating a theatre, we have Paramount, which is the Paramount Lightman. Before Loew's had it all, both the Palace and the State, Lightman I think had a Palace Theatre with Loew's and they had some sort of arrangement, and then Lightman gave it up and he took another house, the Orpheum, down in Memphis, and he has two houses, incidentally. When Lightman gave it up and Loew's got it, we just kept our product in both houses, State and Palace, and we have occasionally sold Lightman a few smaller pictures. He has a house that is suitable and adapted for them.

Q. Has Warner a house? A. Warner has a theatre. I don't think we have played in there. If we have, I don't recall it. I don't think we have played in there a long time.

(1594)

Q. You said the Loew's theatre had opposition. What do you mean by that phrase? A. Well, they have other first-run houses comparable to theirs that play their merchandise.

Q. In competition with them? A. In competition to them, yes, sir.

Q. In Louisville whom do you license first-run? A. Well, Fred Dolle is an independent operator and has been there as long as I can recall. We have served him a great many years, both there and in Indianapolis, incidentally. He has opposition there. He has got Loew's in opposition, and Warners I think. I think Warner has got an interest in a theatre there. At least they play their product in one theatre. I always thought they had. But Fred Dolle, he has been there. And there was another man there, Ike Libson. He was a good friend and account of ours in Cincinnati. But we sold Dolle there all the time and he has been sold there for years.

Q. In the evidence already there has been some reference made to the National Theatre in Louisville. Do you know it? A. Yes, I know the theatre. I have been there. I went out to see it. It has been a theatre that has changed hands a lot of times. In fact I was telling you about Ike Libson. He had it at one time and he paid the people he leased it from $20,000 to walk away from it. He couldn't operate it and he was a big, important exhibitor, operated a lot of theatres in Cincinnati. I know Fred Dolle, our present customer, an old customer, had it one time for a few weeks, and he walked away quick. It is in a bad location and the house is not in good shape. It is very close to the colored area in the town. In fact there are two first-run colored houses right within a block or so of this theatre, and I doubt whether anybody could operate it as a first-run theatre.

Q. Do you consider it a suitable outlet for Fox pictures? A. No, sir. I consider the outlet we have as good an outlet as we could get in Louisville. That is why they have been a customer and we have sold them so many years.

Q. In Cincinnati, to whom do you license? A. RKO, operating theatres there, but there again we have theatres that Ike Libson had for a good many years, whom we sold, and just through the course of events we have continued to sell. They own the theatres they operate; that is, the first-run theatres. The Albee Theatre is the best but we try to play our pictures in the Keith following that, and then they have other houses they move over to, like the Lyric and so on, but that has been an old established account for a good many years down there.

Q. You knew Mr. Libson? A. I know him very well.

Q. Dealt with him before you ever sold to RKO? A. Yes, sir.

(1596)

Q. Youngstown, Ohio. A. In Youngstown, Ohio, we sell Shea—M. A. Shea. That is the same Shea that has the Fulton in Pittsburgh and the Opera House and so on, been an account for many years, and had the Park Theatre there. Then Warners went in there and they have a house there, which Shea operates with Warner, and their theatre, the Park; also another theatre there, Harry Cathone owns; I think somebody else has got it now. It is a good house but we have always dealt with Shea, which was our account a long long time ago, and we continued on through him.

Q. In Exhibit 12, which has been offered in evidence, we classified Youngstown as a Warner town. Do you consider that Warner Bros. is your customer in Youngstown? A. I never did, no, sir. I always considered it an independent operation which Shea operated, which Eddie Grainger operates today.

Q. You don't license your pictures in Youngstown to the Warner and Park theatres because Warners have an interest in the theatre? A. No, sir. We license them to Shea and Eddie Grainger, and, as I say, they have some pooling arrangement they make and we play our pictures in both theatres, but——

Q. You had no part in making the pooling arrangement? A. Nothing.

Q. In Cleveland, Ohio, whom do you license? A. We license to RKO.

Q. Cleveland? A. In Cleveland, RKO operate the—well, they have the Hippodrome and the Palace. They are the two better first-runs. And they have a move-over theatre, the Lake Theatre. And they also have the Allen Theatre, which they operate. And Loew's have two or three theatres there. We sold a good many years ago the Hippodrome before they became a part of RKO—was an independent operation—we licensed our product. I think the name was Doty, the man that operated it, and there was a first-run theatre——

Q. He sold out to Warner Bros.? A. No, I don't think he sold to Warners. He sold to RKO, I think. It was RKO. In fact Warners have another in there—I think Warners have some interest in the theatres. In fact they operated the theatres for a time back, two theatres. They acquired it from RKO with some arrangement somehow. We have continued to supply these houses.

Q. Is the Hippodrome one of the best theatres in town? A. It has been for us for years. We have taken out a lot of film rental in that situation in the Hippodrome.

Q. That is Doty's original theatre? A. Yes.

Q. Canton, Ohio, whom do you license first-run? A. An independent exhibitor named Constant, who has got Warners in there as opposition. In fact, we used to do business with Warners in this situation, and we couldn't see eye to eye one particular year and, well, we are out in the cold, you might say, there. Warner dropped one of the theatres, and Constant went in, this independent, and he opened a theatre and from then on we have been supplying Mr. Constant. We don't sell or license Warner; and Loew's have a theatre there, too.
(1598)

Q. What is the comparative quality of the theatres? A. I think they are pretty equal.

Q. In Columbus whom do you license first-run? A.

Columbus we license our product to both Loew's and RKO.

Q. Do you split your product? A. Yes, we split our product.

Q. On the RKO split, where do the pictures play? A. They play in, I think it is the Palace theatre. Loew's play the Ohio and the Broad; RKO have two theatres. Here again is an old story, goes way back. I could bring you back to 1919, I guess, or 1920, right on up through. They were small accounts. In fact Neff was finally the last one that had been before he sold to RKO. Warner, I think, or somebody got him out, and RKO put the Palace theatre in there and we went and sold RKO because we could not get along very good with Neff, he could not see—he did not progress and advance with the times, keep abreast of the times at least, and he wouldn't give us the kind of runs we thought our product was entitled to. We made a deal with RKO in the Palace theatre. In fact, Neff didn't need it; he got plenty of product; he practically had an exclusive contract with Warner and he got along pretty well, but that is the history of Columbus. We split our product between the two of them.

Q. These are the only four first-run theatres in Columbus? A. That is right.

Q. Akron, Ohio. A. Well, Akron, Ohio, we sold our product there for a good many years to Shea, been our account, the only account. Loew's is in there with a theatre. This fellow Katz, Sam Katz, I think Sam Katz, he sold some theatres down there. He doesn't operate them. Somebody else operates them for him. Warner is in there, too. But we sell Shea, and have for the last seventeen or eighteen years, the Colonial theatre. I think we do just as well as they could do for us, I mean with Shea.

Q. In Dayton, Ohio, who is your customer for first-run product? A. Our customer is RKO, a subsidiary of this defendant here, I guess you would call it. We have done business there a good many years with RKO.

Q. Don't cover your mouth. A. With RKO. I think Ike Libson was in the town at one time and he was our account and he sold RKO. That is how it became RKO, I mean I am not quite sure, but that is the story.
(1600)

Q. Mr. Keyes has a theatre there called the Victory? A. He has a Victory theatre. I forgot that for the moment. He has the Victory theatre. We have sold him some pictures in there—two, in fact—only recently. We sold him two pictures but the revenue was not very much to speak of. Would not be a good desirable outlet for our pictures. That is, we could not get the revenue that the town should throw off, a town of that size, first-run.

Q. In Toledo, Ohio, whom do you license? A. In Toledo, Ohio, we sell a Paramount affiliation, Balaban & Katz, but it is operated independently and all our negotiations are made with the local manager down there, and our branch manager in Cleveland, but here is a situation, that for years we had an account that was a little ways out of town, we could not get downtown, did not have a desirable account down there, and we stayed with him until he just couldn't stand the gaff, let us say, and about 1929 we went and sold —they put in a theatre and we sold them. We have been selling them ever since.

Valentine is the Loew operation there. There is another independent there too, Skirball. We tried to sell Skirball but we couldn't do it, couldn't get the proper price. That was an independent. But we do sell Balaban & Katz, which is a single operation in that territory.
(1601)

Q. As far as negotiations of license are concerned, this theatre is separate from all other Balaban & Katz operations? A. Yes, and it is done with our local manager in Cleveland and their representative down there. I have never negotiated with the theatre. I know that is the history of it. It is done locally.

Q. Not in Chicago? A. Not in Chicago or New York, but right there in Cleveland, or Toledo, which ever they elect.

Q. In St. Louis whom do we license first-run? A. We license Fanchon & Marco. That is an independent operation, headed by Harry Arthur. I think it is Fanchon & Marco Theatres Corporation. They operate the Fox theatre and the Ambassador theatre, and they also have several houses, the Missouri theatre, which they use as a move-over, and Detroit, a move-over. I believe they still operate the St. Louis. Loew's is also in opposition in that town. They have two theatres.

Q. Mr. Harry Arthur has all the first-run theatres except the Loew theatres? A. That is correct. One of those theatres, incidentally, is a Fox—a house that Fox built—I mean William Fox—but we were in the town a great many years. We had a theatre there. I recall it distinctly. I think it was called the Liberty theatre, and, of course, that was in the early days when Fox went in there. It is away back in the 1900's. It couldn't develop into anything like what you have there today. But Paramount put in a theatre—Kopler is the fellow who put in the St. Louis theatre. He is an independent operator. And I know Skouras put in a theatre, when they were operating down there, the Ambassador theatre; Loew's had one; Fox had one, too, the biggest and best of them all. So we kept playing there, and I guess the only reason Fox went in was he did not think we were getting the proper representation or outlet.

Q. Mr. Kupper, you have mentioned that several times in the licensing of your pictures. It is from time to time necessary to have a controlled outlet for your pictures? A. Well, frankly, I would like to see Fox have one in every key city in the United States. That is my personal opinion about it. To me it is very important.

Q. Do you think that you would get a better exploitation of your pictures if you did have one in every key city? A. I know where we have them we do, so I assume you would there, too.

Q. Was it true that in the late '20s, when Mr. Fox was building these large theatres, that you were having difficulty licensing pictures to the established theatres? A. Yes, (1603) sir.

Q. In St. Louis, you grant Harry Arthur clearance? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has, incidentally, he has a lot of subsequent-run theatres in St. Louis, and the first-run houses grant a clearance over those houses, who in turn are granted clearance over other houses that follow him.

Q. Is there any difference in the way that Fox pictures play in St. Louis from the way they play in Boston? A. You mean as to clearance?

Q. Clearance, run, admission price? A. Clearance may vary, that is the only difference, but there is still the same principle and the same way that they are licensed. We license them all with the clearance. And their admission prices may vary. I don't know just what the admission price is in each of these houses you are talking about, Boston, New York. They may vary, but there is still an admission price and it is always taken into consideration, and the clearance is always a matter of consideration and a matter in the license.

Q. As I understand it, in St. Louis, aside from one theatre operated by Loew's, every other theatre in the city is an independently operated theatre? A. I think Loew had two theatres, Mr. Caskey. Yes, outside of those two, they are operated by Harry Arthur, or the Fanchon—I don't know the company name. I think it is Fanchon & Marco Theatre Company, or something, but Harry Arthur operates those theatres.

(1604)

Q. The first-runs? A. The first-runs.

Q. Then on the second-run he has some first-runs, and Mr. Warrenberg has some second-runs? A. Yes, and Kineman follows him too. He has opposition too, as a matter of fact, in some second-runs, some sections.

Q. But aside from these two Loew's theatres in this great city of St. Louis, all the other theatres are independently operated and owned? A. They are independently operated by Harry Arthur. I don't know whether he owns them. He owns, he leases them, but operates them.

Q. That is first-run. I mean subsequent-run, there are also no affiliated theatres? A. No, there are not—not to my knowledge. I don't know of any.

Q. And the same pattern of clearance? A. Let us get that question correct. Affiliates—you mean of any of the defendants?

Q. The five defendants? A. They are affiliated with Arthur.

Q. That is right. A. He has got them.

Q. But not with any of the five defendants? A. No, sir.

Q. To your knowledge? A. That is right.

(1604a)

Q. Is the same method of distribution, as far as prior run, clearance and admission price, followed in St. Louis as is followed in say Boston? A. Yes, sir.

(1605)

Q. In Indianapolis, whom do you license first-run? A. An old established account, Fred Dolle, who operates the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. He has the Circle and the Indiana—— I should put it the other way, Indiana and Circle. The Indiana is a little better theatre than the Circle, although they are both fine houses, and there is opposition. He also has the Lyric Theatre. But prior to that, having the Circle or the Indiana; he had a house called the Apollo, where we served him for a great many years, and he acquired these theatres, Fred Dolle acquired this Circle and the Indiana, and which are better houses, I say, than the Apollo, that was torn down. Loew has an opposition out there.

Q. How long have we served Mr. Dolle? A. As far back as I can recall, in Indianapolis.

Q. In Indianapolis do you grant Mr. Dolle clearance? A. Of course we grant him clearance.

Q. And he has a prior-run to the other theatres in town? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Same pattern of distribution as in Boston? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Kansas City? A. Yes.

Q. Fort Wayne, Indiana, who is your first-run customer? A. Same customer we had for a great many years, an independent operation for a long time, I think the Quimby (1606) Estate. Fred Quimby used to head the company, Quimby Enterprises. He died. His widow still maintains the business. But there at one time I think he made some kind of deal with RKO, I think it was, but he got the theatres back, and we have stayed and played with his theatres for a great many years.

Q. You licensed the theatres before he sold any interest to any of these defendants? A. Yes.

Q. Thereafter he got the theatres back and you continued to license him? A. Yes; and when he didn't have them, we continued to license them.

Q. There is another theatre operates first-run in Fort Wayne, is there not? A. Yes, a small theatre, very small theatre. It plays westerns and anything like that. I would not consider it a comparable first-run theatre, five or six hundred seats against theatres of 2,000, 2,800 or 1,800, things of that kind.

Q. South Bend, Indiana, whom do you license first-run? A. It is a Publix affiliate in South Bend, Indiana, been all along, as far as I can recall, and as far back as I can think, we have sold them.

Q. How far is South Bend from Chicago? A. Oh, not very far. Short ride on the train, short ride in an automobile, but I don't know exactly the mileage.

Q. Whom do you negotiate your license with for this (1607.)
theatre? A. That is done in Chicago with Immerman, who is the local manager, but generally, I think it is done with Frank Dromey, who is the head of the booking and buying department. That is done with our Chicago office.

Q. Gary, Indiana, whom do you license? A. Gary, Indiana, we have an independent account there. That has been for a good many years, as long as I can recall. In fact, when I was in Chicago, I think he operated a theatre there, I mean, when I was a manager in Chicago. A fellow by the name of Young has been operating there. And we have operated and sold our product up there all these years. They have opposition. Publix is in opposition. It is a Paramount affiliate.

Q. In Gary, are the theatres in Gary subject to the Chicago clearance or are they not? A. Yes, sir, they have been. I know they are now.

Q. In Chicago whom do you serve? A. Balaban & Katz theatres today, and they, of course, have some opposition in there. RKO is in the situation. But B. & K. operate, I think, the four theatres, the Chicago Theatre, to me, is one of the outstanding theatres in the country; they also have another house, State-Lake, which is not as large as the Chicago, but it is a very fine house and it is operated generally on a long-run policy. They had two other similar houses, the Roosevelt and the United Artists theatres, and I think that they have several other houses. They have the Apollo and the Garrick theatres. They were legitimate theatres that had been converted into picture houses. They have opposition. There is an independent house there, the Woods Theatre, operated by a man named Silverman, and that is right next door, I think, right close to the Garrick Theatre—Publix operation. As I say, RKO have two houses. They have one good-sized house and one smaller house. But we have been selling RKO for a long time. However, there was a period when we didn't. I mean, probably that was due to the quality of our product, I don't know, but we did not. We had a theatre there Fox was going to go into at that time, and to open; there was a theatre called the Monroe Theatre which was in a very poor location, in the financial district. Why they ever opened it there, I don't know. At night you can imagine how many people there would be, just like down in Wall Street, you can imagine how many people you are going to get downtown at night. In any event, that is where we had a theatre, and years later, when Grainger came in, about his time, we began to get proper representation from B. & K., who have been our account ever since.

(1608)

Q. That proper representation with B & K was before Paramount acquired any interest in it? A. Yes, it was, I am quite sure it was.

(1609)

Q. The Balaban brothers built the Chicago Theatre before Paramount acquired any interest in it? A. Yes. I think that Balaban & Katz, they are the same Katz, but it is an old firm, they had the smaller theatre before they had the Chicago Theatre. Just three or four brothers, Balaban brothers, and they were all in together. In fact, they had First National at that time for a long time before Paramount had any part of it.

Q. They were one of the large franchise holders of First National? A. I would say so, yes, very important part of First National.

Q. The Chicago Theatre was built right after the last war? A. Yes.

Q. Opened in 19—— A. Was built when I got there, and I can tell you when that was, to give you an idea when it was built. That was 1924. I know it was built quite a while before that. I am sure it was around 1920, 1921, perhaps.

Q. In Peoria whom do you license? A. We license an affiliate of Paramount, Central States Theatres, and a man Rubin operates that circuit. In fact, he was a customer of ours not only there but several other towns long before he became affiliated with Paramount. Just one of the old stories, Rubin is a customer—the Rubin family.

Q. In Chicago do you negotiate for Chicago, South Bend and Peoria, among these 92 cities? A. Yes, sir.

(1610)

Q. With whom are those negotiations conducted? A. South Bend?

Q. South Bend. Mr. Dromey? A. Mr. Dromey or Mr. Immerman in the B & K office in Chicago.

Q. In Chicago? A. In Chicago. Mr. Immerman and Mr. Dromey. John Balaban at times was in on it, but the other two are generally the ones in Chicago, and Mr. Rubin for the Central States in Chicago.

Q. Mr. Immerman? A. I don't think he has anything to do with the Central States, Rubin and his brother operate them. He has another brother, too, who is out in the field, district manager out there, but they still maintain their operation of those theatres. I don't think they are a partner of B. & K. and Paramount.

Q. They operate themselves? A. To my knowledge they do. To my knowledge, I always figured they did, always believed they were doing it.

Q. You, in licensing to Peoria, deal with Mr. Rubin? A. That is right.

Q. For his theatre? A. That is right.

Q. The cities in Michigan which are operated by Butterfield in Grand Rapids and Flint, with whom do you deal? A. With Ed Beatty, who is the head of the Butterfield Circuit. He has a man named Lee Brooks, another fellow that used to work for us a great many years ago. This is the same story here. I have sold Beatty, and when he was—when Butterfield was alive and before Butterfield ever had any interest in it, when they were an independent operation, I always sort of considered the Butterfield Circuit operated by Ed Beatty a Butterfield circuit. I never think of it as Paramount or anybody else, or RKO or anybody else. I heard it testified here before I went on the stand that they had these interests. I am not surprised, I had heard it, but I never knew it to be so direct as I got yesterday, but together they were always Butterfield theatres and Ed Beatty operated them and he still operates them.

Q. In licensing your pictures to these first-run theatres in Flint and Grand Rapids, do you negotiate with any representative of RKO? A. Do we? No, sir. Done with Butterfield in the First National Bank Building in Detroit. That is their offices.

Q. And he is the boss? A. He is the boss. He is the president. He runs it and has been running it—ran it before Butterfield died; he is still running them.

Q. Taking the theatres in Minnesota, Minneapolis and St. Paul and Duluth, who is your first-run customer there? A. An affiliate of Paramount, Minnesota Amusement Company—I think that is the name—and John Friedl is in charge of the operation. They are our account in those situations.

(1612)

Q. Does Mr. Friedl buy for these three theatres separate from any other so-called Paramount theatre? A. Buys our product separate and apart from anybody else, yes.

Q. There is opposition in Duluth? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the Granada Theatre? A. No, sir, I don't know it, sir. I haven't—I don't recall it, but I am sure it is not as big. It could not pay the rental we get there from the other people. I know the Norshor because I went up to see it open a long time ago. I don't recall it exactly. I know it is a beautiful theatre. I know it cannot compete in Minneapolis with the deals that these theatres make. We have two customers in Minneapolis. Let us take Minneapolis first. Years ago Pantages was our customer in the theatre there and Pantages was quite a theatre operator—he operated a chain of theatres—and then there was also Finkelstein & Rubin, they were an independent operation. They were the First National franchise holders out there, and well, we sold both of them, one time Pantages, another time Finkelstein & Rubin. Later on Pantages went out of the business, he got in personal difficulties of some kind, and, anyway, his circuit has evaporated. His son is still in business, I think he has a theatre out on the West (1613)
Coast somewhere, but the old man, he is gone; and now these theatres, which were Finkelstein & Rubin's——

Judge Hand: I think this is an awful lot of personal chatter mixed up with other things. Why can't you boil it down and not have whatever everybody was doing?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, your Honor.

Judge Hand: What became of people's fathers and all that kind of stuff.

Mr. Caskey: I do think this very directly tends to show why it is we license the theatres we do.

Judge Hand: I know, but it is too much.

Mr. Caskey: We will go along.

Q. In Des Moines who is your first-run customer? A. We sell the Paramount affiliated Tri-State Theatres, operated by A. H. Blank and Ralph Branton.

Q. What is the opposition there? A. They have opposition. RKO has opposition there. They have the Orpheum Theatre there. It is an affiliate of RKO. We sold Blank for a good many years.

Q. Whom do you deal with in licensing pictures there? A. Generally with Ralph Branton, or Mr. Blank, but Branton is generally the one that we negotiate most of our negotiations with.

Q. Where does he have his office? A. Des Moines, Iowa.

Q. In Omaha? A. We deal with the same outfit, Blank (1614) and Tri-State Theatres and do our business with Branton out there, but it is done in Des Moines.

Q. What is the opposition? A. They have RKO in opposition there. I think there is another house in town operated —I know there is another house operated by a fellow named Goldberg. We don't sell him, we haven't sold him, but we have sold Blank a long time.

Q. Is the Town in your judgment a satisfactory theatre in Omaha, first-run? A. I think it is a very good theatre, but I don't think it can compare with the theatres we sell.

Q. As a matter of fact, you do license the Town subsequent-run at the present time? A. That is right.

Q. Des Moines and Omaha are the only two of these 92 cities in which Mr. Blank and Mr. Branton operate? A. Yes.

Q. Tulsa, Oklahoma, to whom do you license? A. We license Ralph Talbot, an independent.

Q. How long have you been dealing with him? A. A great many years. A great many years. In fact, he is the only one there. He has two fine theatres, I mean first-run. He is the only first-run theatre operator there. He has two fine theatres, the Orpheum and Ritz; and he has the Majestic and Rialto, which he moves over to. The Majestic, he generally moves over to; the Rialto he generally plays lesser quality product. He has no subsequent-runs, but there are subsequent-runs in town. There is no opposition to him first-run.

(1615)

Q. In Oklahoma City to whom do you license? A. We sell Joe Cooper's theatres there. That is Standard Theatres.

Q. That is the corporate name, but with whom do you deal? A. Generally with Joe Cooper, or he has got a manager now, who is back out of the Army, Pat McGee. He also has an office in Oklahoma City, and our boys transact a lot of business with them down there, but Cooper is the last word, as far as that is concerned; they have to take everything up with him, but he has been our account for quite a while.

Q. Was he the original account? A. No. The original account down there was the Liberty Theatre, which, incidentally, Cooper has got now, but that was a theatre that a fellow named John Sinopoulo owns, or owned in those days. I know it well because we served it out of Dallas. We did not have an office in Oklahoma City. There were three men in town you could sell, that were available for sale, if you could sell them. Sinopoulo had two theatres, he had one, the Liberty Theatre, which I remember, and another house; and then there was a fellow had the Empress Theatre, Tom Boland, who isn't there any longer. Sinopoulo then built what is now the Midwest. I guess it is as good as the Criterion. They are pretty much on a par, I know, in the revenue they pay on the pictures, and the Criterion was always Joe Cooper's theatre. And Sinopoulo, when he built this Warner Theatre, Warners doing business with him, I mean, the Midwest Theatre, he lost it to Warner Bros., and I think he sold his interest to Warner Bros., and being our account, we continued to sell Warner Bros. until sometime that we couldn't see eye to eye, and then we sold it to Cooper. Incidentally he had two theatres way back in those days, the Capitol and the Criterion. The Capitol went out of business and became a commercial institution. So did the Empress, our affiliate. So today you have Cooper operating four or five theatres. He has the Criterion, the Midwest, which is a definite first-run for quality merchandise that he licenses. Then he has the Liberty Theatre and the Tower Theatre, which is a move-over from the Criterion or the Midwest. Then there is an opposition house there, the State Theatre, that I think a fellow named Dent put in there, which I don't sell. It is almost directly across from the Liberty, but it does not compare with either the Midwest or the Criterion, nor do I think the Tower, which is out in the suburban area.
(1616)

Q. You have been in that theatre very recently? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Saw Mr. Wright there? A. I don't know whether I (1617) saw Mr. Wright there. I saw a picture called G.I. Joe.

Q. In the Texas towns of Dallas, Houston, San Antonio and Fort Worth, whom do you license? A. We license our merchandise to what I call the Interstate Amusement Company, the head of which circuit is Karl Hoblitzelle, and the operating manager or general manager Bob O'Donnell. They are affiliated with Paramount.

Q. Were they always affiliated with Paramount? A. No. In fact, we sold them long before they were affiliated with Paramount. As a matter of fact, we came near acquiring those theatres way back, but they have been an account of ours; they have been an account of ours for a good many years. Prior, as I say, they were sold incidentally to RKO at one time, and then they got the houses back and then operated them again for a while. Then they made some arrangement with Paramount. Paramount was in the town; I remember they were there, incidentally. They had the Palace, the Queen and another old theatre, and Interstate had the Majestic all the time. So today Hoblitzelle is in charge of the operation, is a partner with Paramount, as I heard, and they operate these theatres first-run. There aren't any other first-run theatres in Dallas, but he has opposition in Houston. Loew is in Houston. We have never sold them, incidentally. We sold these, which were an account, as I say, for years prior to Paramount becoming a partner. Now, of course, the product is used in both the A-houses, the Palace in Dallas, the Majestic in Dallas, the same way in Houston, and in the other towns.

Q. For years Paramount had theatres in these towns through a Southern Enterprise or some subsidiary? A. Yes, they had interests in the theatres, that were owned or operated there.

Q. And Hoblitzelle operated in opposition to them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in 1929 he made a contract to sell his interests to Fox? A. Around that date, I don't remember the exact date, but I know he was to do it and I know they had the papers drawn up, and I think they were signed, and then something happened and they were burned up and Fox got into difficulty—there was trouble, anyway. I was under the impression we were going to take him over. I was off on a trip.

Q. Subsequently he sold an interest to RKO? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And later to Paramount? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is another circuit I am told operating in Texas called the Robb & Rowley. Do you know that? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They operate where? A. They operate in other towns in the State of Texas, quite a few towns, as a matter of fact.

(1619)

Q. Also in Arkansas? A. Yes, sir. I know he has—they have a partnership with Paramount in Little Rock, first-run theatres in Little Rock.

Q. With whom do you deal in licensing your pictures to Robb & Rowley? A. We sell them to Ed Rowley, who is operating head of the circuit, and he has a general manager named Jones. We do all our negotiation with them down in Dallas—you are talking about the Little Rock operation?

Q. No, I am talking about their whole operation. A. Their whole operation is done in Dallas with our local representative there.

Q. As far as you are concerned, is the Robb & Rowley Circuit any part of Twentieth Century-Fox? A. Never was, to my knowledge.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess now until 2.15.

AFTERNOON SESSION

WILLIAM J. KUPPER, resumed the stand.

Direct Examination continued by Mr. Caskey:

Q. Mr. Kupper, who is your first-run account in Salt Lake City? A. It is called Intermountain Amusement Company. It is an affiliate of Paramount.

Q. What theatres do they have? A. Well, they have the Senate Theatre, the Utah Theatre, the Capitol Theatre, Lyric Theatre and Studio Theatre. There is first-run operation and move-over operation.

Q. Who is the operator in competition? A. I think it is Tracy Barham?

Q. Tracy Barham is the Intermountain representative? A. Yes.

Q. And who is the operator of the Uptown Theatre? A. Joe Lawrence. He is an independent operator. The house was formerly named the Paramount, which Paramount lost the lease on, and he picked it up and changed it to the Uptown.

Q. Does Mr. Barham negotiate or deal for any other of these 92 cities? A. No, sir.

Q. Only for Salt Lake City? A. Only for Salt Lake City, but he deals—well, not of these 92. That is the only one.

Q. Now, in Tacoma who is your first-run customer? A. (1621)
That is an independent operation. John Hamrick, and a man named Edress, who is partner, or something; and they have several first-run theatres there. They have been an account of ours for a great many years; they are the Roxy and the Music Box. They are both about the same, I think, in seating and appointments.

Q. Mr. Kupper, we have been discussing these 92 cities. When did you first become aware of the fact that there were 92 cities having a population of 100,000 or more? A. The last couple of weeks when you asked me to check it. I did not know the exact number; I knew there was a lot of them but I did not know there was 92.

Q. Do these 92 cities constitute any special or unique market in the motion picture business? A. Well, they are the largest cities in the United States. I think they would stand up as very unique and very important.

Q. And are the cities of 100,000 or 50,000 in their turn important? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so on down the line? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in selecting the first-run customer in all the cities in the United States from 100,000 down, do you follow the same general principles that you have discussed with regard to these 92 cities? A. I would say so, yes, sir.

Q. Many of the customers are old accounts of yours? (1622)

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Operated by people who have grown up with you in the business? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Many of the theatres which are owned by one of these defendants are theatres which you served before any one of the defendants acquired an interest in them? A. I am sure there are some.

Q. In general, they are the best theatres in the town? A. I would say so, yes, sir.

Q. And in those situations where they are not the best theatres, they are theatres which have produced a satisfactory revenue for the company? A. I would say so, yes.

Q. Now, in each of these 92 cities, with the exception of Somerville, Massachusetts, do you sell other runs besides first-run? A. Yes, we do.

Q. Do you sell any operator in these 91 cities who wishes to license your pictures at fair terms and on a run which is available to him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have excluded Somerville because I understand that suburb has only two theatres, and they both play together first-run. A. Yes. You might say there is only one run in the town; no subsequent run.

Q. But there are many theatres in that area which are competitive? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you serve those? A. Yes, sir. (1623)

Q. Now, in licensing your pictures how do you determine the amount to be charged to the exhibitor? A. Well, in the main our important pictures are played on percentage, and we have a pretty fair value. We know what the actual cost of the production was; we have previewed the picture ourselves, and from our knowledge of what a picture can do, or what we believe it can do nationally, we set—that is, Mr.

Connors and myself and our sales managers discuss and decide at about what level in our sales we should sell the picture, whether it be percentage to a split or whether it be flat rental.

Q. When you use the term "flat rental" what do you mean? A. Well, generally they are the smaller calibre pictures, and they don't throw off as great a revenue. They have not got the box office draw.

Q. I know it is obvious, but I want it for the record: What is a flat rental price? A. A negotiated, stipulated, definite rental.

Q. $100? $500? A. $100, $500, whatever it is agreed upon, it is definite and positive and that is all you are going to get.

Q. And what is a straight percentage deal? A. Well, a percentage of the gross receipts that comes into the box office of the theatre that is paid by the public.

Q. Regardless of how much or how little is taken in? (1624)

A. That is correct.

Q. And what is a sale on a percentage to a guarantee or against a guarantee? A. Well, that is where we have $100 guarantee against 35 per cent of the gross, for instance. That is a guaranteed film rental that we are going to get, again, irrespective of what goes in. Of course, if it goes over, you are going to get more; and if it does—well, take another example, a hundred dollar guarantee against a percentage to a splitting figure. Well, let us take 35 per cent of a thousand dollars, so that is the splitting figure; well, when it hits that you are going to get $350, and the guarantee didn't mean anything. But it is a protective measure for you; at least you know the least you are going to get.

Q. And you use these four methods of pricing your pictures throughout the country? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any distinction whether the particular exhibitor you are negotiating with is affiliated with one of these defendants or is not? A. No.

Q. Now, there is some confusion in my mind about three terms: World premiere; pre-release; first-run. Will you clear them up for me? A. I will try to. A world premiere—and as an example I can cite one that is going on right now in Chicago—we have a very fine and very important picture, a very expensive picture, a picture which we know and believe—at least we believe—will be a great box office attraction. Incidentally, it is a picture involving two very prominent and artistic young ladies, the Dolly Sisters. One of the girls happened to marry a man named Netcher, which was quite a department store operated out there in Chicago, and we thought it would lend itself and have some advantage in the publicity, because, after all, she is more or less socially prominent, or, at least, the family is socially prominent, and it builds itself in Chicago. So we decided we would like to have a world premiere in Chicago, having these things in mind, and thought we could get, and did get, and secured the Chicago Theatre to operate—to release it, and licensed this picture for the world premiere. Now, we did not exhibit it or try to exhibit it in any other theatre before we established—we may have tried to negotiate for license, but we did not offer it or give a play date on it until after we had opened in Chicago.
(1625)

Q. Now, did you have a band and parade, and the mayor throwing out a baseball? A. We had a tremendous campaign. We had some stars come in there, a number of them; one of the girls, particularly June Haver, who was in the picture, a very important part—she was one of the Dolly sisters; and we had the producer of the picture come there, who was a well known producer and theatrical man, George
Jessel, and a number of other stars; and as they were met we paraded them through the town, and the whole town turned out for them, even the mayor welcoming them to the city. Why, you could not get through State Street. They jammed them up and down. They had to have a motorcycle and a police escort to take care of these people. And, naturally, a lot of publicity emanated from there over the wires of the Associated Press to all corners of the country, and they all knew about it, and it was on the radio, and all of that, and that built it up. Now, that was a world premiere. That is show business.

Q. Now, this picture The House on 92nd Street, the exhibition at the Roxy, is, as a matter of fact, the first presentation anywhere in the world, is it not? A. Yes; but we did not do like we did in Chicago. We did not ballyhoo it to that extent. We did not advertise it as a world premiere.

Q. So that is just first-run? A. That is first-run.
